and leads, guides, and controls over all the Secretariat departments. He is generally the senior-most

66% MATCHING BLOCK 139/219 SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

civil servant of a state. He is head of the civil servants in the state, their mentor and conscience- keeper. In accordance with

84% MATCHING BLOCK 140/219 SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

the Andhra Pradesh Administrative Reforms Committee (1964- 65), "he is the chief of the civil services and all governmental servants look to him to deal with all and every problems concerning their conditions of service and work."

96%	MATCHING BLOCK 142/219	SA	118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

The office of the Chief Secretary is considered so important that it has been excluded from the operation of the tenure system. In practice, generally the Chief Secretary either retires as the Chief Secretary or moves to the Central Government to take up a more important position.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 97 According to Mangat Rai, "The Chief Secretary's job is not a

90%	MATCHING BLOCK 141/219	W

technician's or even a professional's, he is not a knowledgeable engineer, nor even a first class magistrate, he is part of the process of government and in a democratic republic, part of the human process." The Chief Secretary takes an important role regarding appointment, transfer and promotion of the senior civil servants. The Maharashtra Reorganisation Commission (1962- 68) recommended that the Chief Secretary should "be concerned only with matters relating to transfers, appointments and promotions of Heads of Departments and senior gazetted officers".

88%	MATCHING BLOCK 143/219	SA	118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

The Rajasthan Administrative Reforms Committee (1963) has also recognised the importance of the office of the Chief Secretary. According to this Committee, "

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 144/219	SA	118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

By virtue of his unique position as head of the official machinery and adviser to the Council of Ministers, the Chief Secretary has an extremely important role to play in the State administration.

Apart from attending to the work of the departments which are directly under him, he should be in a position to effectively co-ordinate the work of different secretariat departments and ensure that there is a certain degree of uniformity in the policies adopted by State Government with respect to different departments." 4.4

90%	MATCHING BLOCK 147/219	SA	118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

The Role of the Chief Secretary Though the Chief Secretary is at the apex of the administrative hierarchy of a state, the Indian Constitution does not list his powers and functions. His functions are defined in the Rules of Business, which each state government frames for itself. These are amended from time to time. Some of the functions, however, have also evolved through custom and conventions. Role in Policy Formulation: The Chief Secretary of a state acts as the ex-officio Secretary to the Council of Ministers and, in that capacity, he is known as the Secretary to the Cabinet.

75%	MATCHING BLOCK 145/219	W

His role in this capacity may be studied under the following heads: Head of the Cabinet Secretariat Department: The Cabinet Secretariat Department works under the overall control of the Chief Secretary with the Chief Minister acting as the political head.

98 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04

83% MATCHING BLOCK 146/219 W

The functions of the Cabinet Secretariat are also prescribed by the Rules of Business of each state. But, in broad terms, its functions are: providing secretarial assistance to the cabinet, ensuring the implementation of decisions, acting as the policy coordination centre, serving as a data bank of information, organizing conferences etc. Each state government specifies certain matters, which have to be sent to the Chief Secretary for his endorsement or approval. For instance, the standing orders of the Cabinet Secretariat Department of Rajasthan provide that the following matters be sent to the Chief Secretary for his approval: (a) All papers relating to cabinet meetings. (b) Matters which affect centre-state and intra-state relations and the conduct of Zonal Council oil meetings. (c) Establishment matters, relating to Governor, C.M., ministers etc. (d) Matters relating to senior officers, conferences and regional meetings. (e) Parliamentary and Assembly questions relating to the Chief Minister /ministers. (f) Functions relating to census. (g) Approval of incentives to civil servants. (h) Medical aid to be given outside the state. Work Pertaining to Cabinet Meetings: The Chief Secretary decides whether the memo submitted by a particular department regarding the case to be discussed is adequately furnished with required facts and data. He is also responsible for the preparation of the agenda papers. In his capacity as the ex-officio Secretary to the Council, he attends all the cabinet meetings and also of the sub-committees of the cabinet. He arranges for the recording of the decisions taken in the cabinet meetings and forwards a copy to the Governor, the C.M. and the council of ministers. Participation in the Policy Formulation Process: The Chief Secretary, while attending the meetings of the cabinet, may be asked to express his view on important matters. He acts as the main source of information and advice to the C.M. and other ministers. As the Secretary to the Council, he attends all the meetings of the cabinet.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 99 His presence in the cabinet meetings becomes crucial because the ministers present are elected by the masses and, they are prone to be easily swayed by the winds of public opinion and, sometimes, only to please their constituency, they pressurize the C.M. to take decisions that might not be proper in the long run. Here, the Chief Secretary, with his long administrative experience, "may be in a position to strike a balance between the policy preferences of the politicians and their implementation ramifications." Role in the Follow-up of the Implementation of Cabinet Decisions: When a decision is arrived at by the cabinet, it is the task of the secretary of the concerned department to implement that particular decision. Here, the Chief Secretary plays an effective supervisory role, as the most important cases of the various departments are sent to the Chief Secretary for final decision or for onward transmission to the C.M. or the concerned ministers. All-important cases involving adoption of new schemes have to be approved by the Chief Secretary. He is also empowered to ask for any paper relating to any case of any department and such a request has to be complied with by the secretary of the department concerned.

75% MATCHING BLOCK 148/219 SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

In the Central Government, although the Prime Minister has a few ministries and departments under him, the convention regarding the Cabinet Secretary has been otherwise. The Cabinet Secretary is not the administrative head of any specific executive departments except, of course, the Cabinet Secretariat. On the other hand, at the state level, the Chief Secretary is generally the administrative head of a few departments, the most important among them being General Administration, Personnel, Administrative Reforms and Planning. There is no uniformity among the various states in regard to the administrative departments directly under the charge of the Chief Secretary. However, as a rule, only those departments, which have a crucial role in the coordination and supervision of state administrative departments/agencies, are given this status when a department works directly under the Chief Secretary, its overall influence increases substantially. Concomitantly, with a view to enhancing the status and influence of a department, it is brought under the charge of the Chief Secretary. Traditionally, the Planning Department is placed under the Chief Secretary. In Rajasthan, for about four decades, the Chief Secretary functioned-.as the Planning Secretary and it

100 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 was only in 1992 that a separate post of Planning Secretary was created in the state. Even after the introduction of this change the overall responsibility of the Chief Secretary in matters of planning remains. He represents the state at the national level consultations concerning the annual and the five-year plans. Besides, he continues to be the chairman of the Planning and Development Coordination Committees, which are instrumental in effecting interdepartmental/agency coordination for undertaking associated developmental activities. In several states, the Chief Secretary continues to be the Planning Secretary and, in that capacity, he has to supervise the formulation and monitor the implementation of the plans and effect close collaboration of the Planning Department with the Finance Department and other executive agencies. Another department that is generally placed under the charge of a state Chief Secretary is the Department of Personnel. It may be recalled that the Administrative Reforms Commission of India had recommended that the Department of Personnel of each state should be put under the charge of the Chief Secretary. Accordingly, in a number of states, the Chief Secretary functions today as the Personnel Secretary. In that capacity, his role involves the following functions: (a) He is responsible for personnel matters of the state cadre officers of the IAS, the highest state service, and any other service described in the Rules of Business of the state. He deals with all matters relating to vacancies, appointments, transfers, placements, seniority, promotions and retirement of personnel of the higher civil services. He also plays a crucial role in the promotion of state service officers to the IAS. All matters pertaining to determination of seniority of the above-mentioned officers are sent to him for consideration. (b) His approval is sought for amendments in service rules. (c) He is also generally consulted by the Chief Minister while making appointments

84%	MATCHING BLOCK 149/219	SA	118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

to the posts of chairman and members of the State Public Service Commission. (

d) As personnel Secretary, the Chief Secretary has to ensure that conduct rules are followed strictly by the state civil servants. Hence, cases regarding disciplinary NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 101 action against all the service mentioned under his charge are brought up before him. The decisions of the Chief Secretary on disciplinary proceedings against all-India service officers, heads of departments and other state civil service officers are generally endorsed by the Chief Minister. (e) He also writes the Annual Confidential Reports (ACRs) or performance appraisal reports (APRs) of the officers of all-India services posted in his state. (f) Some states have the office of the Lok Ayukta to examine complaints made by citizens against defaulting officers. The C.M. may consult the Chief Secretary while appointing the Lok Ayukta. The annual reports of the Lok Ayukta are routed through the Chief Secretary, before being sent through proper channel to the legislative assembly of the state. (g) He can intervene in matters involving staff welfare and service conditions of state government officials. (h) He is the overall in charge of training and career management of the Civil servants of the state. In Rajasthan, he also works as the chairman of the State Advisory Committee on Training and the Training Coordination Committee. In certain states, a separate post of Personnel Secretary has been created. However, by virtue of being the head of the civil service, the Chief Secretary continues to be directly involved in the regulation of personnel administrative matters. A number of important cases relating to personnel matters are routed through the Chief Secretary before being sent to the Chief Minister, who generally happens to be the Minister for Personnel in the state government. Another department, which in some states is directly under the Chief Secretary, is the Administrative Reforms Department that deals with the reorganization of the administrative machinery and revamping of procedures in government. Even when a separate secretary is in charge of this subject, the role of the Chief Secretary in matters of guiding, directing and monitoring administrative reforms remains crucial. It may be mentioned that in most of the states in India, the Chief Secretary functions as the Secretary, General Administration. This department is responsible for taking care of the general administrative matters of different state government departments and provides miscellaneous facilities to the departments and officers. 102 ?

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 156/219	SA	MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

67% MATCHING BLOCK 150/219 W

91% MATCHING BLOCK 151/219 W

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 This can be done effectively under the leadership of the senior most civil servants, whose judgment and controlling authority are trusted and accepted. The role of the Chief Secretary regarding general administration involves a number of tasks. (a) During visits of dignitaries to the state, he looks after all the necessary arrangements. (b) He chairs an expert body, which decides matters of awarding honours and distinctions. (c) He deals with matters relating to inter-state disputes. (d) The Chief Secretary can initiate changes in Rules of Business but, the final decision in this respect rests with the cabinet (e) Cases concerning grants-in-aid to NGOs engaged in social and cultural development are routed through him to the C.M. (f)
All

98% MATCHING BLOCK 152/219 W

matters of housing accommodation and government buildings and circuit house fall under his jurisdiction. These responsibilities of the Chief Secretary affect all the departments and, therefore, the role of the Chief Secretary as head of the General Administration Department remains of substantial significance. The last but, by far the most important, function of the Chief Secretary is to coordinate the activities of the entire state government machinery. 4.5 Conclusion Every State has a Chief Secretary who is the executive

68% MATCHING BLOCK 153/219 W

head of the entire State Secretariat, whose political head is the Chief Minister himself. The Chief Minister selects

68% MATCHING BLOCK 154/219 W

the Chief Secretary from the senior IAS officers of the state cadre. The Chief Secretary takes a crucial role in the state administration. He is the chief advisor to the Chief Minister and also acts as the Secretary to the State Cabinet. He is the king pin of the State Secretariat. He leads, guides, and controls over all the Secretariat departments. He is generally the senior-most civil servant of a state.

57% MATCHING BLOCK 155/219 W

90% MATCHING BLOCK 160/219 SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

He is head of the civil servants in the state, their mentor and conscience- keeper.

56% MATCHING BLOCK 157/219 W

He is the principal communicator between his Government and Central Government and other state Governments. He also plays an NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 103 important role in the administration of law and order and planning.

As a Crisis Administrator the Chief Secretary plays a very significant role. At the end we can say that the position of the Chief Secretary depends on his personality, capability, efficiency, political sagacity and relation with the Chief Minister. 4.6 Summary ? This unit focuses on the role and functions of the Chief Secretary ? The uniqueness of the position of the Chief Secretary in state administration has been discussed 4.7 Glossary ? Crisis: A time of intense difficulty ? Uniqueness: The quality of being the only one of its kind 4.8 Model Questions ? Explain the functions of the Chief Secretary. ? Evaluate the position of the Chief Secretary in state administration. ? Write a note on Chief Secretary. ? Why is the position of Chief Secretary unique? Explain. ? What are the residuary functions performed by the Chief Secretary? Discuss. ? Examine the significance of the position of the Chief Secretary's office. ? Why is the Chief Secretary considered the principal channel of communication? ? Explain the 'crisis-administrator' role of the Chief Secretary. ?

75% MATCHING BLOCK 158/219 W

How does the imposition of the President's rule on a state affect the Chief Secretary's office? 104 ?

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 4.9 References ? Indian Administration - S. R. Maheshwari (2022) Laxmi Publications Pvt. Ltd. ? Indian Administration – Hoshiar Singh, Pankaj Singh (2011) Pearson ? Public Administration in India – Siuli Sarkar (2018) PHI Learning ? Report of the First Administrative Reforms Commission (ARC) of India (1966- 70), Chapter III ? S. Srivastava, Role and Functions of Chief Secretary of a State (2005).
NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 105 Unit V C.M.'s Secretariat Structure 5.0 Objectives 5.1 Introduction 5.2 Composition of the Chief Minister's Secretariat 5.3 Functions of the Chief Minister's Secretariat 5.4 Evaluation of the Role of C.M.'s Secretariat 5.5 Emerging patterns of relationship between the secretariat and non- secretariat organizations 5.5.1

90% MATCHING BLOCK 159/219 W

The Status-quo Approach 5.5.2 The Bridging The Gulf Approach 5.5.3 The De-amalgamation Approach 5.6 Conclusion 5.7 Summary 5.8 Glossary 5.9

Model Questions 5.10 References 5.0 Objectives In this unit we will ? Describe the composition of the Chief Minister's office of a state in India. ? Explain the role of the Chief Minister's office under the parliamentary form of government. 5.1 Introduction
The
Chief Minister is the real executive of the state under the Parliamentary system of government. As a real executive authority, the Chief Minister plays a very significant 106 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 and crucial role in administrative and legislative system of the state. To fulfil these activities the Chief Minister has some helping hands -
Chief Minister's Office (CMO) is one of them. Chief Minister's Office (CMO) is a staff agency which provides institutional support to the Chief Minister in his official and policy making functions. It is an extra-constitutional body. It does not have any constitutional base. But this office holds prime position in every state's political set up in India. As Chief Minister occupies a pivotal position in state's political system and this office is attached to Chief Minister, it automatically increases in its power and stature.

It is an official link between the Chief Minister and his Ministers, Governor and other departments of state administration. 5.2 Composition of the Chief Minister's Secretariat The structure of Chief Minister's Office (CMO) is not same for all states in India. The structure of the CMO differs from state to state. Whatever be the structure of the CMO, politically Chief Minister is the head of the CMO and administratively the Chief Secretary. Additionally it consists of some Additional Chief Secretaries, Additional Secretaries, Principal Secretaries, some Joint Secretaries, Under Secretaries, Private Secretaries and so on. The personnel are generally drawn from the Civil Service. 5.3 Functions of the Chief Minister's Secretariat The CMO is the most important part of every State administration in India. It plays a crucial role and performs different functions, such as – i. The CMO assists the Chief Minister in respect of his all responsibility as the head of the State government.
ii.
Dealing with the public relations of the Chief Minister is one of the most important functions of the Chief Minister's Office (CMO). Such as – the press, public etc. iii. It plays an important role in the process of decision-making at the top level of the State Government. iv. The CMO deals with all references that have, under the Rules of Business, come to the Chief Minister.
NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 107 v. The CMO also helps the Chief Minister in the examination of cases submitted to him for orders under prescribed rules.
vi. It maintains the connection with the Governor, other Ministers and different departments in state administration, different state governments and Central Government. vii.
It also prepares answers of different questions raised in the State Legislature on general subjects. viii. The CMO acts as the 'think-tank' of the Chief Minister. ix. The CMO works as the main advisor on all important domestic matters.
After discussing the above mentioned powers and functions of the CMO, we can say that the CMO takes a very crucial role and has grown into a high profile body of a State Government. But, the role of the CMO is not static. It varies from Chief Minister to Chief Minister and State to State. 5.4 Evaluation of the Role of C.M.'

83%	MATCHING BLOCK 161/219	SA	MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

s Secretariat In the face of the growing responsibilities of the C.M., there is need for providing him with intensive and intelligent administrative assistance. Such assistance is provided by the Chief Minister's Secretariat, which is accountable only to him. This organization ensures that the C.M.'s directives are implemented by various state and district agencies. In Rajasthan, the C.M.'s Secretariat was set up in 1951. It is headed by a secretary belonging to the selection/super-time scale of the I.A.S., who is assisted by deputy secretaries, OSDs, deputy directors, assistant secretaries, accounts officers, Statistical assistants and the Superintendent of Police (Vigilance). The C.M.'s Secretariat looks after the functions relating to the tours and correspondence of the C.M., redressal of public grievances, management of the C.M.'s benevolent funds, implementation of the C.M.'s assurances and monitoring. The Secretary to the C.M., while providing administrative assistance to the C.M., keeps confidential documents and correspondence, accompanies the C.M. on important tours, takes follow-up action on cabinet decisions, apprises the

C.M.

92% MATCHING BLOCK 162/219 SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

of major developments and issues, helps him in the conduct of assembly work and supervises the staff of the C.M.'s Secretariat. Moreover, he writes informal notes on all important files going to the Chief Minister to facilitate his making decisions. 108 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 The post of the Secretary to the Chief Minister (in some states, he is called Principal Secretary to the Chief Minister), has acquired enormous status and influence in recent times. The rationale behind this phenomenon is the assumption that the Secretary to the Chief Minister is the alter ego of his boss, i.e. the Chief Minister. There have been occasions when the influence of a Secretary to the Chief Minister has been disproportionately more than that would be commanded by virtue of his seniority and status in the regular IAS hierarchy. In cases when even the Chief Secretary's real power is compromised and when other secretaries feel subservient to the

C.M'

99% MATCHING BLOCK 171/219 SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

s Secretary, the situation would lead to envy, silent acrimony and even demoralization among the services. Therefore, the Secretary to the Chief Minister ought to be a person who is committed to the traditional civil service virtues of anonymity, impartiality and neutrality. And, the Chief Minister should also give the impression that he does not believe in bypassing the normal channels of authority and responsibility. 5.5

Emerging patterns of relationship between the secretariat and non-secretariat organizations

Ouriginal by Turnitin

96% MATCHING BLOCK 163/219 W

What might be a suitable pattern of relationship between the Secretariat and non- Secretariat organisation? On the question of evolving a suitable pattern, broadly three schools of thought are discernible. Each adopts a different approach. Neither yields a conclusive answer for, as we shall see in the ensuing discussion, it is possible to list arguments for as well as against the arrangement each proposes. Based on their dominant thrust, the three schools of thought or approaches may be referred to as the Status-quo Approach, Bridging the gulfApproach, and De-amalgamationApproach. 5.5.1 The Status-quo Approach The Status-quoApproach favours the traditionalist system and holds that the Secretariat and the Directorates have well-defined roles in our administrative setup to which they should continue to stick. The approach is based on the traditional concept of staff-line dichotomy where the Secretariat performs the role of a Line Agency and the attached office that of the Staff Agency. The Status-quo Approach also accepts the traditional policy-administration dichotomy. The advocates of this approach believe that the relationship between the Secretariat and Directorates should be based on the following principles: i) Policy-making should be the responsibility of the Secretariat, and Policy implementation that of the Directorates. NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 109 ii) Subject to the rules governing the conditions of service, the Head of the Department should have fullest control over the personnel under him. iii) The Secretariat Department should provide common services and undertake domestic housekeeping in respect of the Directorate(s) attached to it (for instance, the allocation of office accommodation). 5.5.2 The Bridging The Gulf Approach As against the School advocating Status-quo Approach there is another, which advocates measures for bridging the gulf between the Secretariat and Non-Secretariat organisations. Its protagonists suggest various devices for bridging the gulf. These include (i) the conferment of ex-officio Secretariat status on the heads of Executive Departments; (ii) the system under which a Secretary concurrently holds the office of the head of the Executive Department; (iii) the merger or amalgamation device under which an Executive Department is placed in a corresponding Secretariat Department; and (iv) a device, which is a variant of point (iii), involving, once again, merger or amalgamation, but under this device, the Secretariat Department is placed with the corresponding Head of the Department, rather than the other way around. Amalgamation of Directorate with Secretariat Terms like integration, merger and amalgamation have been interchangeably used to suggest an arrangement under which the distinction between the Secretariat and the Non- Secretariat Organisations is completely dissolved. Under this system, the office of the heads of the Executive Agencies is merged with the corresponding departments in the Secretariat. The advocacy of amalgamation is based on the argument that the encroachment of the Secretariat into the executive functions is in any case, an established fact of the Indian administrative landscape. This is so because the political executive in India is unable to devote adequate attention to policy functions. Instead, it preoccupies itself rather quite excessively with matters of day-to-day nature (like appointments, promotion, and transfers). As a result, the Secretariat itself becomes involved in what are patently executive matters and which, therefore, should, in fact, fall in the domain of the Directorate, as ultimately the role of the Secretariat is governed by the role perceptions of the political executive. It is thus, argued that since the role of two agencies anyhow overlap, amalgamation would be both logical as well as desirable. 110 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Arguments for Continued Amalgamation Those who report favourably on the experience of amalgamation argue as follows: i) Amalgamation has obviated the need for examination of proposals independently by the Directorate and Secretariat. ii) It has cut down delays and ensured expeditious disposal of cases. iii) It has affected economy in establishment expenditure. 5.5.3 The De-amalgamation Approach Arguments for De-amalgamation The officials who recommend de-amalgamation give the following arguments: i) Although amalgamation permits much economy of time in that it does away with two parallel scrutiny of proposals, the experience has shown that, under the amalgamated setup, the quality of final proposals/schemes has declined, which frequently involves reconsideration. This, they point out, was not so when Directorate and Secretariat functioned separately. ii) Amalgamation has resulted in gradual removal of distinction between the functions of the Heads of Departments and those of the Secretariat. iii) Amalgamation has rendered objective examination of proposals and schemes at the Secretariat level difficult. The Secretaries have to write their notes on files in a guarded manner so as to avoid causing offence to the Head of Department. This extra caution often prevents a frank examination of the cases by the Secretariat officers. iv) Under the amalgamation schemes, the Head of Department remains stuck up in the Secretariat. S/he is not able to go on tours and inspections, which are her/ his main obligations. After studying the above stated approaches and recommendation of the second ARC, it can be stated that the Ministries/Departments should concentrate more on policy, planning and strategic decision-making; and implementation work should be given to adequately empowered Executive Agencies. The Second ARC has suggested, "... there can be no water-tight separation of the policy-making and implementation functions since Ministers are ultimately accountable to Parliament for the performance of their Ministries and departments in all respects." As per the Government of India (Transaction of Business) NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 111 Rules, all business allocated to a Department in the Government of India has to be disposed of under the directions of the Minister in-charge. It has been observed that the Ministers can discharge their responsibilities more effectively by supervising the performance of operational agencies from time to time rather than by taking direct control of routine functions. In the states, a major part of implementation work is done by the executive agencies. They are structured as departments, statutory boards, commissions, departmental undertakings and other parastatals. The Commission has pointed out that these bodies do not function as real autonomous agencies due to the centralised controls, and inadequate delegation of authority. While the necessity of delegating increased powers to the executive agencies is getting recognised and some states have delegated more powers to these agencies, the overall approach has been one of caution and hesitancy. 5.6

Conclusion As a real head of the state the Chief Minister has to take a key role in administration and legislation of the state. In this regard, the Chief Minister's Office (CMO) takes an important role by giving secretarial assistance to the chief Minister. But the CMO does not have any constitutional base. It is an extra-constitutional body.
Actually, the Chief Minister's Office (CMO) is a line agency. The composition of Chief Minister's Office (CMO) is not same for all states in India. The composition of the CMO varies from state to state. Generally, the Chief Minister is the political head of the CMO and the Chief Secretary is the administrative head.
Apart from the Chief Minister and the Chief Secretary, there are some Additional secretaries, Joint Secretaries and Private Secretaries in the CMO. The main purpose of this office is to provide institutional support to the Chief Minister in his official and policy making functions.
In fact, the role of the CMO is not static. It varies from Chief Minister to Chief Minister and State to State. 5.7 Summary ? In this unit the composition and functions of the Chief Ministers' Secretariat has been explained. ? We have evaluated the role of CM's Secretariat. ? Emerging patterns of relationship between the Secretariat and the non-Secretariat have been discussed.
112 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 5.8 Glossary ? Evaluation: making of assessment of something ? Emerging: becoming apparent or prominent. 5.9 Model Questions ? Evaluate the role of the Chief Minister's Office (CMO) in a state of India. ? Discuss the structure and functions of the Chief Minister's Seceratriat. ? Discuss in brief the emerging patterns of relationship between the Sectretariat and non-Secretariat organizations. ? Discuss the various arguments in favour of CM's Secretariat. ? Discuss the de-amalgamation approach in regard to the relationship between Secretariat and non-Secretariat organizations. ? What is the dominant theme of the 'bridging the gulf' approach? Explain. ? Write a short note on the composition of Chief Minister's Seceratriat. ? What is the significance of the Secretariat of the Chief Minister. ? "The status quo

100% MATCHING BLOCK 164/219 W

approach is based on the traditional concept of Staff-Line dichotomy"

Do you agree with the statement? Justify your answer. 5.10 References http://wbcmo.gov.in/cmo.aspx https://cmo.rajasthan.gov.in/keyOfficial https://cm.odisha.gov.in/officers-cmo https://haryanacmoffice.gov.in/team-cmo https://www.tn.gov.in/contact_directory/2025

96% MATCHING BLOCK 165/219 W

Second Administrative Reforms Commission, 2009 https://darpg.gov.in/sites/default/files/sdadmin15.pdf).

BLOCK III FIELD ADMINISTRATION
114 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04
NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 115 Unit I Divisional Commissioner : Power and functions Structure 1.0 Objectives 1.1 Introduction 1.2 Divisional Commissioner: Position and Scope of the Office 1.3 Divisional Commissioner: A Controversy 1.4 Divisional Commissioner: Power and Functions 1.5 Necessity of Divisional Commisioner 1.6
Conclusion 1.7 Summary 1.8 Glossary 1.9 Model Questions 1.10 References 1.0 Objectives ? To understand the role of the Divisional Commissioner. ? To examine the power and functions of the Divisional Commissioner. 1.1 Introduction Field administration is a decentralised State administration. The purpose of field administration is basically to bring the regulatory and service functions of the State 'nearer to the people'. There is also a demand for greater citizen participation in policy formulation and execution. For this purpose, a vast politico-administrative apparatus has been established. The State Government officers cannot transact their business from the Headquarters due to the long distance, magnitude of work, administrative cost, and time taken to communicate. Therefore, the field offices are the necessity for the efficient functioning of administration. The policies are translated into reality and programmes are 116 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 implemented at the field level. In India, the State level Departments and Ministries establishing a large number of field offices, delegate their power and functions to the field officers to implement the development programmes. The Divisional offices, wherever they exist, district offices, and local self-government institutions broadly constitute the component parts of the Field Administration. The offices of Field Administration are organised on the basis of historical traditions, political considerations, administrative convenience, technical requirements, development imperatives and the need for greater interaction between the administration and the community. At the field level, majority of people come into closer contact with the Government. It is also here that the people judge the quality and efficiency of the Government. The Field administration undertakes a wide range of activities associated with the life of community. Technological advances especially in the field of transport and communication have played an important role in the expansion of field administration. Most of the State Departments such as Public Works, Irrigation, Health, Education etc. are having their offices in the District, Sub- Divisions, and Blocks.

85% MATCHING BLOCK 166/219 W

Administrative organisation at the sub-state level in the country is not uniform. Broadly, there are two different systems. Firstly, the State is divided into a few divisions, each division consisting of a few districts. In this system, the Divisional Commissioners are the Head of the Division and act as a link between the District Administration and the State Government. In the second system, where there are no divisions, the District Administration directly deals with the State Government without any intermediary in between. The Field Administration in the country falls in between these two systems. 1.2

88% MATCHING BLOCK 167/219 W

Divisional Commissioner: Position and Scope of the Office The Divisional Commissioner supervises the work of the District Collectors under his charge. He is the coordinator at the divisional level of a wide range of activities such as law and order administration, development administration, rural development as well as revenue administration. Therefore, the Divisional Commissioner occupies a place of special significance in the intermediate (regional) level administrative set-up. Chequered Career of the Institution : The office of Divisional Coinmissioner in the country has had a chequered career. It has seen a succession of abolitions and revivals in various states since independence. Madhya Pradesh and (old) Mumbai states had abolished it in 1948 and 1950 respectively. However, both revived the commissionership - Madhya Pradesh in 1956 and Mumbai in 1958. Rajasthan abolished the institution in 1961. Uttar Pradesh went halfway, it reduced the number of Commissioners and enlarged their NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 117 geographic jurisdiction. Soon thereafter, however, it restored the status quo. Likewise, the commissionership was abolished in Maharashtra, but was subsequently revived.

The most importart regional administrator is the Divisional Commissioner. He represents state government in the regional level. He acts as the supervisor of all the state government offices and activities situated in the division. The office at the Divisional Commissioner existed in all the states but some states had abolished this office after independence. In order to put the entire country under administrative control almost every state in India had long been divided in to a number of Divisions. A group of three or four districts form a Division and a commissioned, an officer at high seniority, is in charge of the Division. This institutions came into being in 1829 by the then Governor General Lord William Bentinck. India is a federation of states and union territories. For the sake of administrative convenience some states and union territories are further divided into Divisions which are made up of groups of districts. And each Division is put under the control of a Commissioner. A Division generally covers three to five districts. Divisional Commissioners act as mediators between state administration from above and district administration from below. In the large sized and medium sized states Divisional Commissioners are considered as regional authority who supervises the functioning of government offices in the number of developmental activities on the part of the state. Divisional Commissioners have a big strategic role to play at the regional level. By this way the span of control of the state headquarters has been reduced. Divisional Commissioner : Eligibility–Divisional Commissioners are usually selected form senior Indian Administrative Service officers from the state. Office bearers are generally either of the ranks of Secretary to the state government or principal secretary to the state government. Being a senior and experienced officer the Divisional Commissioner has the capacity to act as a friend, philosopher and guide to the district officials particularly the young IAS officers appointed as District Magistrates. Being a store-house of past experience and information his advice to the junior officers in the district level is likely to the more mature and comprehensive in nature. His is a dual role, regional representative of the state government and a 'government' in the Division. 1.3 Divisional Commissioner: A Controversy Divisional Comnlissionership: A Controversial Office – Substantive Points of the Controversy: The office of the Commissioner has aroused much controversy. Two distinct schools of thought appear to have emerged, one in its defence and the other against it. 118 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Those who support its cause argue that creation of a strong intermediate tier of administration would encourage decentralisation and bring state administration physically and psychologically closer to people at the grassroots level. Besides, improved coordination and supervision of the field establishment would be achieved. Those who argue against it and recommended its abolition maintain that the creation of an intermediate level of administration curbs the initiative and respondibility of the district functionaries. The States where the institution of Divisional Commissioners exists has not achieved any marked improvement in efficiency, or speed in disposal. Even 'coordination' does not appear to have achieved any worthwhile results. Besides, as the Ministers nowadays tour the districts frequently, as a result the problems of coordination are easily noticed. The Collector can easily get in touch with the Headquarters, in case of need, due to facilities for speedy communication. Thus, there is no need for referring matters to an intermediate authority. We may now summarise arguments for and against the institution of Divisional Commissioners. Arguments For: The ARC Study Team in its Report on District Administration argues in favour of the office of the Divisional Commissioner on following grounds: 1) The Divisional Commissioner's presence will facilitate coordination of the regional level officers of the various development departments. Such coordination cannot be achieved at the State Headquarters because it is too distant for the purpose. Only an officer who has an intimate awareness of the problems of the region can do this effectively. 2) In large States like Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh, it is not possible to exercise effective supervision over Collectors unless a regionally based officer undertakes it. 3) The Commissioner's presence at the intermediate level will encourage delegation from the State level. This will make speedy disposal of cases possible as it makes administration more accessible to the public. 4) The Commissioner's presence can be used to provide more adequate guidance to the Panchayati Raj Institutions. He can also be utilised to facilitate coordination between the Panchayati Raj bodies, and Regional and State Level Agencies. 5) A regionally based officer of an adequate administrative experience will act as a catalyst for regional planning and implementation. NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 119 6) An administrator of the Commissioner's seniority and experience could perform a useful training role in respect of the young IAS and state civil service officers of division. Arguments Against Arguments against the post of Divisional Commissioner as mentioned in the Bengal Administration Enquiry Committee are: 1) The activities of Government have grown too large and complex at the district level. As a result of which a division is no longer a suitable

80% MATCHING BLOCK 168/219 W

the

96% MATCHING BLOCK 169/219 W

96% MATCHING BLOCK 170/219 W

area unit for purpose of supervision. It is too large an area to be an effective unit of administration. 2) As authorities of supervision over districts and as appellate revenue bodies, commissioners are disproportionately expensive. 3) It is doubtful if, as an intermediate level of administration, the Commissioners have much useful role to perform or any specific contribution to make in the disposal of work. The post has been reduced to the position of a mere post office and contributes only delay in the dispatch of public business. 4) Commissioners are officers of wide and mature experience and as such their availability at the state headquarters would mean a fuller use of the valuable experience. Divisional administration fails to create a much useful preoccupation for officers of the Commissioner's seniority and experience. 1.4

Divisional Commissioner : Power and Functions Broadly speaking Divisional Commissioner is the coordinator at the divisional level. The powers of commissioners may vary from state to state but basic functions are same across the states. At the outset it is to be acknowledged that junior officers at the district level are often subjected to political pressure from outside and therefore need the guidance and supervison of a seasoned administrator like the Divisional Commissioner. He is the co-ordinator of all activities connected with general administration including law and order, revenue administration and development administration.

70% MATCHING BLOCK 172/219 SA VANITHA-197211EP119.docx (D129003930)

The Divisional Commissioner usually performs following functions : 1. He acts as the head of the revenue administration in his jurisdiction and hears appeals against the orders of the District

75% MATCHING BLOCK 173/219 SA VANITHA-197211EP119.docx (D129003930)

Magistrate.
120 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 2. He is the coordinator and supervisor of the work of all sections of public administration in his division. 3. He resolves differences arising between departments in his division. 4.

72% MATCHING BLOCK 176/219 SA VANITHA-197211EP119.docx (D129003930)

In some of the states he has been given certain powers with regard to panchayati raj bodies. 5. He is often entrusted with the power to play a role in the municipal administration. 6. He exercises his control over the local government and administers the oath of the elected functionaries like Mayor, Zillah panchayet chairperson in many states. 7. He hears public grievances and gives its redressal. 8. He supervises the preparation of development budget of urban and local bodies etc. 9. He prepares annual confidential reports of officers of various departments of division and district level. 10. He exercises general control over all relief operations within his jurisdiction. 11. He examines police administrative reports. 12. He acts as electoral roll observer and accessibility observer during parliamentary and state assembly elections. 13. He possesses touring and inspectorial responsibilities. 14. He ensures integrity in the officials in his division. He also ensures that government officials behave properly with the public in keeping with the needs and ideals of democracy. In addition to all these activities Divisional Commissioners have special role to play in the day to day administration at the division. The role of such senior officers become greater as the volume of business at state headquarters has been increased, departmental activities and agencies multiplied. The commissioner acts as the regional coordinator. He is an instrument of decentralized coordination at the district level. The activities of different departments of the government, especially those engaged in development programme are NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 121 interlinked. There arises a number of common problems which need immediate attention and resolution. Divisional Commissioner is intimately aware of the problems of the region and is able to find agreeable solutions to inter-developmental problems. The Commissioner effectively supervises and inspects the work of district offices, both police and revenue. His position in the hierarchy of state administration is unique : 1. He is the channel of communication between districts and state government. 2. He is the coordinating authority for technical departments at the regional level. 3. He provides help, guidance and assistance to deputy commissioners. 4. He provides expert advice to state headquarters. His advice flows to both the government above and district and sub-district officers below. 5. Apart from all these activities the commissioner has special powers during crisis and emergency. He keeps a vigil on developmental activities going on in the districts of his division. His supervisory and coordinating roles include an overall supervisor of general administration, law and order, land reforms, land management, food and relief administration, and other activities in the division and implementation of plan and non-plan development schemes. 1.5 Necessity of Divisional Commissioner After independence Divisional Commissionership came under a cloud and some people demanded that these posts should be abolished. Their opinion was that the intermediate tier between the state government and district should be abolished because this tier only retarded the despatch of public business. These experienced officers could be better utilized by the minister at the government headquarters. However those in favour of the post opined that its position should be strengthened so that the junior officers at the district level could function under the aegis of a senior leader. Those in favour of the posts claimed that a small state may function well without the post of a Divisional Commissioner. But in a large state with twenty or more districts the retention of these posts is a necessity. With the increase in the number of activities many departments of government have created the posts of divisional officers to reduce the span of control from state capital. By this way the commissioner acts as a buffer between the government

122 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 at the state level and the administration at the district level. This role is all the more necessary in a democracy. 1.6 Conclusion After independence development becomes the sole concern of the government, both at the central and the state level. The allocations for development works and technical departments thereafter increased. Many new departments also had opened at the district level. As a result the shape of district administration has become a more complex pattern. Later with the emergence of the three-tier panchayati raj, the district administration has become a complex zone. Here the traditional tight bureaucratic frame has to negotiate with panchayati raj bodies. Now the role of the Divisional Commissioner has become more important than before. The role of a senior officer like Divisional Commissioner in the form of guidance, direction and expertise is enormous. For this reason Divisional Commissioner is the most important regional officer. He is the representative of the state government at the district level. The governmental functions are decentralized and vested in the office of the Divisional Commissioners. He provides effective leadership to the administration in the Division and properly feedback the state secretariat in framing the policies. 1.7 Summary ? The Division as an administrative unit comprising of four or five districts came into being in 1829 as a result of increase in scope of operations corresponding to the expansion of British territories. ? Each Division is put under the charge of a Divisional Commissioner. ? The Divisional Commissioner is a senior member of Indian Administrative Service and before his appointment as a commissioner, he should have gathered varied experiences, having served in different capacities in the state government. ? His power included control over revenue administration, maintenance of law and order, supervision of the development functions etc. ? He coordinates and supervises all the government departments of the Division.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 123 ? He also supervises local government institutions, preparation of budget. He prepares annual confidential reports of officers working within his Division. ? He acts as a channel of communication between districts and state government. He provides help, guidance to the District Magistrates and other officials. ? He provides expert advice to headquarters from the field. 1.8 Glossary ? Commissioner: A government official in charge of a department or district. ? Coordination: Integration of the efforts of the department to provide unity of action for pursuing common goals. ? Field Administration: The extension of central administration at the field level to implement government programs and policies. 1.9 Model Questions ? What are the objectives of studying the divisional administration? ? Discuss the role of Divisional Commissioner in the overall structure of state administration. ? Discuss the coordinating role of the Divisional Commissioner. ? Define Division. Discuss the position of the Divisional Commissioner in the Division. ? Divisional commissioner is the link between state government and the field administration – Discuss ? Discuss the powers and functions of a Divisional Commissioner. ? What is meant by the term 'Division'? ? Discuss the necessity of Divisional Commissioner. ? What is the eligibility of a Divisional Commissioner?

124 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 1.10 References ? Indian Administration – Mohit Bhattacharya-Asit Basu. 2014. World Press, Kolkata. ? Indian Administration –S Maheshwari, 2018, Orient Blackswan, Hyderabad.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 125 Unit II Evolution of District Administration Structure 2.0 Objectives 2.1 Introduction 2.2 District Administration : its Evolution 2.2.1 Pre-British 2.2.2 British 2.3 Later Developments : Sub Division-Block 2.4 Conclusion 2.5 Summary 2.6 Glossary 2.7 Model Questions 2.8 References 2.0 Objectives ? To explain the evolution of district administration in India with special reference to the pre independence period. ? To examine the basic features of district administration in independent India. 2.1 Introduction District in one form or the other is the unit of local administration throughout the world. The name varies from country to country but the features remain the same. The basic feature of the district or the like is that it is a geographically distinct unit which contains most of the institutions and agencies of the state required by the local people inhabiting this particular area or administrative unit.

80% MATCHING BLOCK 174/219 W

District as a basic unit of field administration has been in existence through the ages.

It is surprising to note that it has not changed substantially in India since the times of Mauryan era to Mughals to British era. Historically the district in some form or the other has been the most important unit of 126 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 administration in the Indian subcontinent. The British Parliament was the first legislature with respect to India in modern times. They created enactments and gave substance to the district administration. Hence this system continued and district in India is acting as the cutting edge of administration. This administration is headed by the District Magistrate. He is often called Deputy Commissioner or District Collector who acts as the eyes, ears and arms of the state government at the field level. District administration is perhaps the most important feature of the overall administrative system of India. Through this local administrative structure the government implements its policies and the management of public affairs is ensured. Since district is a distinct entity which contains most of the agencies of the state, people inhabiting that area should be aware of this local administrative structure and its everyday functioning. Almost every territory, known or unknown, remote or well connected of India, forms part of districts. Here most of the people live, come into contract which innumerable mechanisms of governmental agencies and departments. District has virtually become the identity of the people living within the area . Within this geographical unit people feel the impact of administration, the difference between good and bad administration is made at this level.

80% MATCHING BLOCK 175/219 W

88% MATCHING BLOCK 178/219 SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

However administration at the district level has not been static and has evolved historically to meet the requirements of the day. The modern district administration is the creation of the British rulers. But Independence has indeed introduced far reaching changes in the functioning of the District Administration . Modern day Indian citizens should be aware of the evolution of District Administration in India. 2.2 District Administration : Its Evolution District is the basic territorial unit of Indian administration. At this level people living in this unit come into direct contact with the administrative machinery. District is placed under the charge of a number of government officers and the leader of the whole administrative machinery is the District Magistrate or District Collector. As a unit of local administration various departments of state government like police, agriculture, health etc. are located in the district headquarters and their jurisdiction extends to every corner of the district. District as a basic unit of field administration has been in existence through the ages.

78% MATCHING BLOCK 177/219 W

It is surprising to know that it has not changed substantially in India since the times of Mauryan era to Mughals to British era. The district in some form or other has been the most important unit of administration in the Indian subcontinent. NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 127 2.2.1 District Administration in Pre-British India

100% MATCHING BLOCK 179/219 SA Baljit Kaur Pre-Submission.docx (D59601054)

District is a territory marked off for special administrative purposes.

District or 'Janapada' is the basic geographical unit of administration in ancient India. The Manusamhita mentions that about one thousand villages were placed in the charge of an officer. However administration should be traced back to the Mauryan era when due to difficult communications the unwieldly empire were split into smaller and manageable administrative units. Each unit known as Rajuka was placed under the charge of an imperial agent. Rajuka roughly corresponds to the Collector of early British Raj. He exercised both revenue and judicial functions. During Mughal

100% MATCHING BLOCK 180/219 SA Harmanpreet Kaur- Role of Deputy Commissioner ... (D23434400)

rule, a district was called Sarkar and it was headed by Karori- Faujdar, a military officer who functioned under the direct control of the Subedar. District or Sarkar was further subdivided into tehsils or talukas. There were almost 650 districts in India. Then the term Sarkar meant administration in its total manifestation. This concept was based on the delegation of authority to the man in charge of the local unit. During the Mughal era Suba or province was divided into Sarkars. Each Sarkar consisted of several parganas. Apparently geo-political considerations were the main determinants in the shaping of a suba (province) and its lower divisions like sarkar. Mughal demarcations of territories in many cases were maintained subsequently during the British period, however in a new form. 2.2.2 The British Period The District in its present form is largely the creation of the British Colonial administration in the 18th century during the administration of Lord Cornwallis (1786- 1793). Even before Cornwallis The East India Company appointed collectors to supervise revenue collections. From then on the collector had become the pivot of district administration representing state authority at the district level. The idea of making the district the basic unit of local administration on a solid basis originated with the colonial rule but the system had some roots in the preceding Mughal Period. The Mughal kings, particularly Akbar subdivided entire country into Sarkars. But until the establishment of colonial rule there never existed settled and sustained administration discipline and strong supervision from above. Administration at the Initial Stage At the initial stage, the East India Company was not at all able to undertake administrative responsibilities. Company's interest was mainly limited to the superintendence of collection of revenue and the field administration was left in the hands of the native

128 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 satraps. A change in this system was first brought about in the year 1769 when the company's servants were entrusted with the duty to collect revenue in Bengal districts. These officials known as supervisors were appointed in the districts to supervise native collecting agency and also continued to gather detailed information of all sorts about the districts. This measure initiated by the Company had long term consequences for the future of district administration. These supervisors were the nucleus around which laterday district administration would be formed. These supervisors appointed by the company were the predecessors of future district officers. During the Governorship of Warren Hastings the supervisors were appointed as Collectors. The primary duty of the Collectors was to collect revenue but at the same time they were also entrusted with the duty of delivering civil and criminal justice. In this way the collector was vested both with revenue collection and judicial powers and became the pivot of local administration. 2.3 Later Developments: Sub Division, Block After several changes it was finally decided that the collectors to be made the permanent administrator of the district. From then on districts came to be regarded as the permanent unit of local administration and each district was placed under the charge of a collector. But Lord Cornwallis separated the revenue and judicial functions and placed them in separate hands. The separation between two functionaries was called the Cornwallis school of district administration. This arrangement was the prevalent feature of Bengal administration. But subsequently another system was developed in Madras and Bombay. An eminent group of civilians like Munro, Elphinstone and others were in favour of investing all powers, judicial or executives in one functionary, namely the collector. The collector became a local governor with wide discretionary authority. The administrative reforms of 1829-31 demonstrated the triumph of the Munro school of administration over the Cornwallis school initiated in Bengal. This reform also aimed at district administration by creating the posts of Divisional Commissioner under whose guidance both revenue and judicial functions were to be performed by the district officials. By this way the District as collector's office had become the British rule incarnate at the local level. A description of the district administration and the district magistrate's role in it had been given by Sir William Wilson Hunter in his Report of the Indian Statutory Commission (1930). The district officers whether known as collector, magistrate or the like, he reported, was the

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 129 responsible head of the district. Their duties and responsibilities were numerous. Their functions were two-fold. They were entrusted with the duty to collect revenue from land and other local sources. They also performed the role of revenue and criminal judge. The District Collector's daily concerns included police, jails, education, municipalities, roads, sanitation, the local taxation. Hunter further wrote that he should be a lawyer, an accountant, a surveyor. District administration gradually developed during colonial period as a decentralised state administration in India. The purpose of district administration was basically to bring the disciplinary state authority nearer to people. So most of the state government departments such as Public works, Irrigation, Health, Education etc. were having their offices in the district. Ramsay MacDonald (1866-1937), the first labour party Prime Minister of Britain compared the district administration of India with the tortoise on whose back stood the elephant of the government of India. Since 1786 the district came to be the key unit of administration and it is continuing even today. Other administrative Mughal rule, in addition to Sarkars which were roughly equivalent to modern day districts, there were lower administrative units called parganas. During the British period admistrative units lower than districts were not carved out in the settled areas. But the British policy makers felt the need for such subsequent lower units which should act as the link between districts and villages. For the better maintenance of peace and order it was considered necessary that a district should be further divided into sub-divisions. It was not until 1838 that the Police committee, appointed by the Bengal government had in its report recommended further creation of subordinate magisterial jurisdiction to bring the administrative machinery nearer to the local people. By a regulation of 1843 the posts of Deputy Magistrates were created. In the year 1844 the creation of sixteen sub- divisional offices in Bengal was sanctioned on a purely experimental basis. The subdivisions were created but it took some time to establish a complete and thorough system of subdivisions. Even in 1856 there were only thirty three sub divisional offices. Later on with the object of increasing magesterial control over the police the rearrangement of subdivisions of the districts throughout the provinces was undertaken. Each subdivision was placed under the charge of a sub-divisional officer. Rural areas in districts are later further divided into blocks. Each block is in charge of a Block Development Officer whose immediate superior is the collector and in some states the subdivisional officer is his/her immediate superior. In fact after Independence rural development became one of the most central concerns of the Indian state. Development

130 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 administration was the priority of a democratic state and with this end in mind Indian policymakers had undertaken the task of uplifting the rural people in a giant scale. It was an attempt to bring about a social and economic transformation of village life through the efforts of the people themselves. The Block Development officer is the chief coordinator of all these developmental activities at the block level. For this purpose development blocks were created and the office of the Block Development Officers was launched in the year 1952. The officer in charge of block development had been entrusted with the duty to monitor development works at the block level. District administration in India is the outcome of a gradual process and not a static one. The evolution of district administration in India clearly suggests that this administration of the field level of districts experienced many ups and downs during the long process of history of nearly two centuries. This field administration has undergone remarkable changes even after Independence and is still facing further changes as independence has brought about a change in the fundamental aims of district administration. With the creation of the blocks as the third tier of field administration at the district level the intervention of state in every corner at the district has become more deep. Now a network which starts at the central level goes down to Block levels for implementations and exccution of social welfare programmes. After independence a vast programme of building a new modernized India relying on the wide network of administrative structures at the field level was undertaken by the policy makers. For this reason the allocations for development works and technical department, thereafter increased steadily. Many new development departments also had opened their offices at the district level. The post independence district administration, for this reason has become a complex system. Later with the emergence of the panchayati raj system, the representative of the local elected bodies took over the responsibility of welfare of the local people at the field level. District administration has thus evolved from a compact bureaucratic steel frame, to a much more fluid network of institutions. Indian Constitution and District Administration In independent India development and welfare became the primary concern of the Government. This major shift in its aims became a turning point for the intervention of state into economic and social field. But the original Constitution of India was silent on the pattern of district administration. There was no reference to district at all, only in article 233 which deals with District Judges and the sixth schedule provisions on District councils. Even the various central and state Acts deal with the subject indirectly. But it is

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 131 the responsibility of the administration at the field level to implement the development policies taken at the Central or State government levels. The makers of the Indian Constitution were aware of the importance of the administration at all levels particularly at the field level. There are constitutional provisions for the recruitment of administrative staff at all levels from top to bottom. District administration like the administrative structures at the higher level is an instrument through which welfare policies of the government reach the people. But the administrative steelframe developed and perfected during the colonial rule is so powerful that there always remained a gap between this structure and the people living in the field. In order to bridge this gap democratic measures were undertaken gradually by the makers of the Constitution and later day politicians and policy makers. At the initial stage local self government in the form of panchayats were incorporated in the Directive Principles of the State Policy of the Constitution. In a developing country like India where nearly 70% of its population are living in the rural areas and the majority of them are poverty-stricken, the role of panchayati raj, the chief instrument of local self government is of great importance. It is their institution, through which they can voice their demands and manage their day to day basic needs like health, education, water supply, roads. markets etc. Formal administrative structures at the district level only targeted the subject population as mere object of improvement, a trickle down process from above. But the local self government institutions would enable the local people to involve in the development process initiated by the state both at the central and state level. With this end in view, far reaching changes in the district administration have been brought about through two amendments, viz 73rd Amendment Act and 74th Amendment Act of 1992. These two acts accord constitutional status to local governments and provide for broader social participation of people in the field administration. Now the District Magistrate has to act in close collaboration with the Zilla Parishad, the sub-divisional officer acts as an aid to the District Magistrate. The Block Development officer has to collaborate with the Panchayat Samiti for the implementation of developmental activities in the area. Now the district administration is a complex and interacting web of field organizations. 2.4 Conclusion The district as a unit of state administration has been in existence in the different phases of Indian history in some form or the other. The district is regarded as the most important administrative division in the country. The reason for the formulation of districts

132 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 during the British rule in India was mainly for the efficient collection of land revenue and maintenance of law and order. The district administration as an agent of the state assumes the responsibility of acting as a catalyst and functioning as a custodian, insurer, and a protector of the interests of the marginalized sections of the society. 2.5 Summary ? District is a basic unit of field administration throughout the ages. It has not changd substantially since the times of the Mauryan era to Mughals to British era. ? Through this structure the government implements its policies and it contains most of the agencies of government. ? In ancient India it was known as ‘Janapad’. During Mauryan era this unit was known as Rajuka’ and was placed under the agent of the king. During Mughal era

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 185/219	SA	Harmanpreet Kaur- Role of Deputy Commissioner ... (D23434400)

a district was called ‘Sarkar’ and it was headed by Karori-Faujdar.

This structure was maintained subsequently in the British period in a new form. ? Revenue collectors appointed by the Britishers were transformed into District Collectors around which district administration was built up. ? Lord Cornwallis separated the revenue functions and judicial functions and placed them in separate hands. Subsequently the District Magistrate was entrusted with both of the functions and became the sole authority at the field level. ? All government departments had their offices in the district. ? Later districts were further divided into sub-divisions. ? In order to implement development policies more effectively at the field level Blocks were created after Independence. ? Subsequently the passing of several amendments in the year 1992 has resulted in the formation of local self governmental bodies consisting of the representatives of the local people to operate side by side with the district administrative structures. 2.6 Glossary ? Sarkar: During Mughal rule district was called Sarkar.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 133 ? Collector: A pivot of district administration present in State Authority. ? Decentralization: dispersal of power and authority among the lower levels of the administrative system 2.7 Model Questions ? What are the objectives of District Administration in India? ? What were the features of local administration in pre-British India? ? Discuss the nature of district administration in British India. ? Discuss in brief the evolution of district administration in India. ? Discuss the evolution of district administration in British India. ? Discuss the nature of district administration in India after independence ? Give a brief note on local administration in pre-British India. ? What was the basic structure of local administrative mechanism of Mughal India? ? Define district administration. 2.8 References ? Indian Administration – Mohit Bhattacharya (2014) World Press, Kolkata. ? Indian Administration– S. Maheshwari (2018) Orient Blackswan.
134 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Unit III Role of the District Magistrate Structure 3.0 Objectives 3.1 Introduction 3.2 Recruitment of District Magistrate 3.3 Powers and Functions of District Magistrate 3.3.1 As District Officer 3.3.2 District Magistrate as Coordinator 3.3.3 District Magistrate as District Collector 3.4 District Magistrate as Liaison Officer and Returning Officer 3.5 District Magistrate as Development Administrator 3.6
Conclusion 3.7 Summary 3.8 Glossary 3.9 Model Questions 3.10 References 3.0 Objectives ? To examine the role of District Magistrate in district administration. ? To explain the power and functions of the District Magistrate. 3.1 Introduction The District Magistrate is a government officer in charge of general administration of an Indian district. The district magistrate is also responsible for collection of land revenue in the district and for this role he is also referred to as the district collector. Since he works under the supervision of the divisional commissioner, he is also known as the deputy commissioner. District magistrates are members of the Indian Civil Service or the NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 135 State Service, a legacy of the British rule. The district continued to be unit of administration at the local level after India gained Independence in 1947. His role remains unchanged. However his judicial powers are now transferred to district judicial officers. After, independence the district magistrates are entrusted with the additional responsibility of implementing various developmental programs in the districts. We come to know that the district magistrate who too recognized as the district collector is endowed with a large number of duties in the jurisdiction of the district.

73%	MATCHING BLOCK 181/219	W

As such he is known to play a vital role as the coordinator of all the government offices of the district. The district magistrate has veritable roles to play both as a district magistrate, as a district collector and also as a deputy commissioner (as the executive of the district). We confront them with our everyday life and their modes of administration around us. 3.2 Recruitment of District Magistrate A district magistrate is normally an Indian Administrative Service officer. He is drawn from two groups of officers- (a) directly recruited by the Union Public Service Commission (b) promotees from State Civil Services. The direct recruits are posted as magistrates after five to six years of service. The promotee members from State Civil Services generally occupy the post after promotion to the IAS which usually happens after two decades of service. 3.3 Powers and Functions of District Magistrate The District Magistrate is an essential part of the general administration of state government. During the British rule he was the kingpin of the administrative system at the field level. Since independence field administration at the field level has undergone a series of changes arising largely from three major developments, namely, democracy, development and decentralization. Despite all these changes the district magistrate continues to be the pivot of district administration. He shoulders direct administrative responsibilities and other emerging duties. His primary duty is of course the maintenance of law and order in the district. He is also responsible for the implementation of development plans initiated by the government both at the central and state level. Since an Indian district is the microcosm of the whole state administration, various departments are present in the district and the district magistrate is the coordinator of all the departments situated at the district level. In fact the role of the district magistrate is multifarious- he maintains law and order of the district, he is the collector of land revenue and other taxes from the district, he directs the 136 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 development plans being implemented at the district, he plays the role of a buffer between citizens living at the district and the local administration, protecting one against the possible harassment by the other. Towards these ends, the district magistrate undertakes regular tours to different parts of the district. However due to changed circumstances (implementation of panchayati raj system) his power and prestige has been reduced. But in times of emergency the government instinctively turns to him for prompt action. His duties and responsibilities are largely undefined. One important point in this connection should be mentioned. The Constitution of India is committed to the separation of the judiciary from the executive. Under separation, the head of the magistracy in the district and sessions judge work directly under the High Court of the state. But the district magistrate continues to be responsible for law and order related problems. The functions and responsibilities of a district magistrate are listed below:- 3.3.1 As District Officer As chief district officer the district magistrate has the authority to make postings, transfers and grant leave of the gazetted officers within the district. He appoints the punishing authority in respect of ministerial and subordinate staff of the district collectorate. He is also the controlling, drawing and disbursing officer of the district staff and deals with their pension cases. He prepares and presents the annual budget estimates and also the administrative report of the district. He prepares estimates of works in respect of revenue buildings and bears the responsibility for maintenance of all government buildings under the charge of the Revenue Department. He is in charge of district treasury, and responsible for the security of the treasury. He plays the role of chairman of various local institutions, sometimes becomes the member of regional transport authority and other related committees. He issues tentative tour programmes of ministers and other dignitaries. He acts as the protocol officer in the district.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 182/219	W

59%	MATCHING BLOCK 183/219	W

64%	MATCHING BLOCK 184/219	W

He also compiles and submits annual administrative report of the district. He supervises

95%	MATCHING BLOCK 186/219	SA	118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

the proper conduct of civil suits in which state is a party.

He gives appointment to government counsels and panels of lawyers in the district. He countersigns the grant-in-bills for various educational institutions. He acts as the principal agency of government in matters of general administration in the district and his primary responsibility is to look after the interests of the government in general. He is responsible for proper implementation of government orders. He trains junior officers in official procedures and NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 137 administrative work. He also ensures

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 190/219	SA	118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

71% MATCHING BLOCK 187/219 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 188/219 W

that public grievances against the administration in the district are properly and effectively dealt with. 3.3.2

District Magistrate as coordinator A district magistrate's primary role is integration and coordination. The different departments in the district usually carry on their activities independently with other departments. He is responsible for effecting coordination in the works of all district level officers. He ensures that a degree of coordination is achieved among the departments. As there is a vibrant local government organizations in the form of panchayats, and the like, the coordinating function of the district magistrate has further been increased. The functions of these local bodies are now integrated with the district level departments and for this reason the district magistrate has to play the role of the coordinator among all these fronts. He supervises the functions of these local bodies and acts as a link between these local bodies and the state government. 3.3.3 District Magistrate as District Collector The district magistrate is also called the district collector. As collector he performs several duties. The following is the list of his duties as district collector. 1) He is the custodian of all land records of the district. He is in charge of the administration of all government acquired land. He is responsible for the transfer of such lands to private or public bodies, selection of sites for the erection of government buildings. 2) He is responsible for conservation and development of his district. He supervises the maintenance of embankment or water course etc. 3) He enjoys some powers regarding land reforms. He can take charge of Estate or interest of any intermediary including a Zaminder vested in the state. He holds considerable powers regarding requisition of lands or premises for public purposes. 4) He determines the revenue rate from vested lands. He is responsible for the collection of land revenue and government dues from canal, forests, fisheries. He collects excise duties on drugs, narcotics and sales tax. He assesses the crop in the district and recommends relief to the victims of natural calamity. All other departments are directed to assist him in relief management. During emergencies like flood, earthquake, drought etc he takes up the role of the chief commander of entire district machinery.
138 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 3.4 District Magistrate as Liaison Officer and Returning Officer The state government depends on the collector for maintenance of public order and successful implementation of development projects and policies. He maintains liaison with the state government and provides regular information to the authority above. Through the district magistrate the state government feels the pulse of the public life at the field level.

60% MATCHING BLOCK 189/219 W

He controls and supervises the subordinate magistracy. He orders magisterial postings during festivals. He promulgates orders whenever there is any danger of breach of public peace and tranquility. He disposes all the petitions and general complaints received from governments and others. He inspects district jails and expedites disposal of cases of under-trial prisoners. He reserves the power to grant superior classes to prisoners. He can release prisoners on parole. He deals with petitions from prisoners: As head of criminal administration of the district he controls and directs the action of the police. He submits annual crime report to the government. He appoints and punishes village Chowkidars.

57% MATCHING BLOCK 194/219 SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

He inspects police stations every year. He also looks into labor problems occurring in the district. He supervises and controls various local bodies, municipal bodies, notified areas, town areas etc. He recommends issue of passports and visas. The district magistrate supervises the work of probation officers. He enforces the Press Act and disposes declaration in respect of the press and newspapers. He recommends schemes for the development of forests and issues permits for the cutting of trees.

55% MATCHING BLOCK 191/219 W

He issues certificates for domicile, scheduled and backward classes, looks after political sufferers in the district. The district magistrate also plays the role of

70% MATCHING BLOCK 192/219 W

Returning Officer to Parliamentary and Vidhan Sabha Constituencies and bears the responsibility for coordination of election work in the district. 3.5

District Magistrate as Development Administrator After Independence the main concern of the Indian State is development and welfare of the people at large. The district magistrate is entrusted with the charge to manage all development activities going on at the district level. He is the chief executive officer of the Zilla Parishad. There are various schemes of development relating to agriculture, animal husbandry, irrigation, education, health and others. Both government departments and local bodies are engaged in planning and implementation of all development schemes at the field level. The district magistrate is responsible to facilitate development and inter NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 139 institutional problems in the course of development management in the district. Despite the overwhelming role of the political executives at all levels, the role of the district magistrates as development administrators is acknowledged by all parties across ideology, people and local bodies working at the field level. The district magistrate is also the district census officer. He is responsible for conduct of census operations once in ten years.

66% MATCHING BLOCK 193/219 W

The census work requires more elaborate arrangements than election works. He appoints enumerators entrusted with the duty to perform census works. He also provides for their training and other arrangements for this purpose. Moreover in addition to all these specified works many unspecified responsibilities are also to be performed by the district magistrate. He collects information in regard to matters including parliamentary questions concerning his district. He plays the role of public relations officer of the government, bears responsibilities relating to municipal administration. He acts as the liaison officer of the military authority and looks after the welfare of members of the armed forces. The district magistrate is thus an overworked person. However he is the sole interpreter of government policies and the government in turn relies on his assessment to shape policies. For this reason he is broadly responsible and overburdened. His role in the district is indeed overwhelming and far reaching. He is trained to play the role of an expert. As an expert the district magistrate is professionally trained to judge every pros and cons of a policy decision. His strength lies in his thorough knowledge of administration, the laws, rules and regulations relating to his field of operation. However the field administration in the district has recently been complicated by the advent of democracy at the local level. The panchayati raj institutions and other bodies of local self government have come up recently as popular elected bodies charged with development at different levels. The political leaders belonging to these local institutions and the local political executives emerge as powerful contenders of administrative power at the district level. Now the supremacy of the district magistrate is facing many challenges from political executives. Some sort of institutional duality has actually created a situation of competition between the members of the sets of institutions, one permanent and the other fluid. This situation often gives birth to an atmosphere of confusion among the local stakeholders. Both institutions, permanent and fluid claim their shares in delivering services to the local people at the field. But in terms of resources and expertise the district magistrate and his 140 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 administrative machinery at the district level seems better placed than the local-self government institutions in the form of panchayats and the like. The latter often depend on the permanent executive for personnel, equipment and government fund. This sort of dependency on the part of the people's representative at the field level often gives birth to grievances against bureaucratic mode of functioning by the district magistrate and his office. So the field administration and the local self government bodies often come in conflict on the issue of former's rigidity and rule orientation. The impatient politicians navigating at the local level often consider the presence of the district administration and its head, the district magistrate as the stumbling block to speedy transactions in the interest of the public. In order to break free of this tussle between the two, it should be admitted that in a democratic setup policy formulation is the domain of the politicians but its implementation should be left to the administrator, particularly the district magistrate. Despite all these problems and confusions at the field level, the district magistrate is still considered to be the pivot of all the activities administrative, developmental and otherwise. The office of the district magistrate is the single reference point on which the whole district administration revolves around. 3.6 Conclusion The district magistrate is the apex of the district administration. He represents the government at the field level.

66% MATCHING BLOCK 196/219 SA Baljit Kaur Pre-Submission.docx (D59601054)

He is entrusted with enormous powers and duties relating to local administration. However, since Independence district administration in India has undergone a series of changes arising largely from increasing democratization of the polity. Apart from traditional duties the district magistrate has to negotiate with the emerging trends in the forms of developmental democracy, populism and political uncertainty. He is still the pivot of district administration and shoulders the responsibility of administering the district. 3.7 Summary ? This unit focuses on the power, functions and responsibilities of the District Magistrate. ? The role and importance of the District Magistrate has been examined in detail.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 141 3.8 Glossary ? Pivot: A person or thing that plays a central part in a situation or enterprise. ? Democratization: Citizens' participation in the political process (political equality) and the acceptance of public contestation (political freedom). ? Implementation: The process of putting a decision or plan into effect. 3.9 Model Questions ? What do you mean by the term 'District Magistrate'? Discuss. ? 'The office of the District Magistrate is a legacy of the British Raj'- Discuss the statement. ? What are the primary responsibilities of a district magistrate? ? Give a picture of the district magistrate and his office. ? Discuss the role of the district magistrate as district officer. ? Describe the powers and functions of a district magistrate. ? Discuss the coordinating role of the district magistrate. ? Discuss the changing role of the district magistrate in an Indian district. 3.10 References ? Indian Administration- Mohit Bhattacharya (2014) World Press ? Indian Administration- S Maheswari (2018) Orient Black Swan

142 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Unit IV Role of the Sub-divisional Officer Contents 4.0 Objectives 4.1 Introduction 4.2 Recruitment of Sub-divisional Officer 4.3 Powers and Functions of Sub-divisional Officer 4.4 Land and Revenue Administration 4.5 Sub-divisional Officer and the Development Programme in the field level 4.6 Duties of Sub-divisional Officer 4.7

Conclusion 4.8 Summary 4.9 Glossary 4.10 Model Questions 4.11 References 4.0 Objectives ? To understand the power and functions of the Sub Divisional Officer. ? To examine the role of the SDO in revenue administration and development programmes. 4.1 Introduction Sub-division is a particular geographical territory within a district. During British rule for the purpose of deep and thorough going administrative control of the local level, districts were further subdivided in tehsils or sub-divisions and these units formed parts of whole district. For administrative convenience the district was divided in subdivisions. Each subdivision was headed by a sub divisional officer in the rank of a deputy collector. The sub-division continues to be the unit of administration at the local level after India

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 143 gained independence in 1947. The role of the sub-divisional officer remains unchanged. Apart from normal administrative responsibilities he is entrusted with additional responsibilities of implementing various developmental programmes in the subdivision. He directs the execution of works relating to revenue agency in the sub-division. The sub- divisional officer is entrusted with powers and responsibilities for the maintenance of law and order in his sub-division. We confront them with our everyday life and their modes of administration around us. 4.2 Recruitment of Sub-divisional Officer A sub divisional officer is normally an Indian Administrative Service officer. He is drawn from two groups of officers- a) directly recruited by the Union Public Service Commission; b) promotees from State Civil services. However it should be noted that the recruits from the Indian Administrative Service are quite young in age and for them these posts are mere training posts, a stop-gap arrangement before larger responsibilities. 4.3 Powers and Functions of Sub-divisional Officer Very much like the district magistrate the sub-divisional officer is a generalist area administrator. He represents state government in the subdivision. He is a link between the district magistrate and the people living in the sub-division. The sub-divisional officer is in fact a miniature district magistrate in the sub-division. He possesses adequate powers to coordinate work in the sub-division. He exercises direct control over the tehsils and their staff. He is empowered to contact directly with government and other departments on routine matters. The sub-divisional officer maintains his office just like the district magistrate. His primary role is to inspect, test and supervise his subdivision. He gathers information relating to his sub-division and transmits it to his chief, the district magistrate. He also looks after the governmental and developmental activities being implemented in his sub-divisions. The sub-divisions may be of two broad types- An 'office' type sub-division and a 'touring' type sub-division. In the office type sub-division the sub-divisional officer runs his office very much like a district magistrate or collector. Here the headquarter of the sub-division is located in the sub-division itself. In the touring type sub-division, the sub- divisional officer does not run an office. He makes occasional tours into various parts of the sub-division and gathers information about local affairs of the area. He acts as a

144 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 transmitting belt between his super-ordinate officials and the division. His core role in both of the types is same. His primary duty is to gather experiences from the field level, ascertain the villager's grievances and demands. The sub-divisional officer is indeed a valuable field-aide to the district magistrate and is an integral part of the district administration. On behalf of the district magistrate the sub-divisional officer often acts as a returning officer in the parliamentary election. He is also the civil record keeper. In the sub-division he is the custodian of the law and order and in this capacity he is the link between the district magistrate and the district superintendent of police in the matters relating to law and order. His duties like the district magistrate include revenue, executive and judicial work. In revenue matters the powers of the district collector have often been delegated to him under certain acts. His revenue duties include supervision and inspection of all matters from assessment to collection of land revenue, coordination of work of all officials in his subdivision, particularly in the departments of revenue, agriculture, animal husbandry and public health within his subdivision. His magisterial duties include liaison and coordination with police in the subdivision, watching over the relations between different communities and classes inhabiting within the sub-division. He also watches over the local festivals. He possesses ample powers under criminal procedure code and other laws to exercise effective supervision over law and order situation in his area. In his executive capacity he has the power to call for any of the records and registers dealing with crimes in his area from a police station. He commands closer contact with the local people. He keeps close relations with the local bodies and market committees. He plays an important role in the rural development programmes initiated by the central and state governments. He needs cooperation and help from the government officials in the sub-division for the smooth running of administration and successful implementation of development schemes. For the elections to the Vidhan Sabha, he is generally appointed as returning officer for the constituencies fall within his sub-division. In the Lok Sabha elections he is generally appointed as assistant returning officer. The sub-divisional officer possesses some power regarding land reforms, collection of revenue and taxes. He keeps the maps and land records and helps in the assessment and collection of land revenue. He also deals with the land related cases. The sub-divisional officer also performs some local self-government functions. He coordinates the activities of the blocks within the sub-division.
NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 145 4.4 Land and Revenue

62% MATCHING BLOCK 195/219 W

Administration The district magistrate is the head of the revenue administration at the district level and is the custodian of government land and properties under his jurisdiction. In this area the sub-divisional officer has a role to play. As an aide to the district magistrate he assists him as a deputy collector of the sub-division. The revenue officers at the sub-division work under the direct supervision of the sub-divisional officer. In fact the sub-divisional officer is a miniature district magistrate in the sub-division. Under many revenue legislations he is invariably vested with powers of the district collector, to exercise within his jurisdiction. He also hears appeals as 'Collector' of the sub-division. He exercises direct control over the circle officers and his staff in his sub-division. He acts as an active link between the district magistrate and circle officers in his sub-division. He is the principal agent of the district magistrate in the sub-division. 4.5 The Sub-divisional Officer and the Development Programme in the Field Level After the passing of several amendments in recent years the primary emphasis in district administration has to be on the implementation of development programmes in close co-operation and with the active support of the local people. And in this situation the sub-divisional officer under the direct direction of his immediate superior, the district magistrate has a great role to play. He strengthens and takes measures to improve the machinery of general administration in his sub-division. He establishes an appropriate agency for development in his area which derives its authority from the village community. He has a specific role to integrate activities of various development departments in his area. He links up, in relation to all development work of local self-government bodies with the administrative agencies of the state government. In the past few years, the work of the district has expanded considerably and has become more complex than before. For this reason the role of the sub-divisional officer has been increased. Now his responsibility is not limited only to routine work and submission of reports to his higher authority. The sub-divisional areas are now being strengthened in terms of administrative and developmental activities. As a unit in district administration the sub-division's importance is immense today. The district magistrate now is relieved of much routine work. For a great many transactions the people are spared of the trouble of traveling to district head-146 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 quarters. The sub-divisional officers holding charge of sub-divisions secure field training in the exercise of responsibility and initiative. During their touring and field work they acquire intimate knowledge of the people living in the area. A close relationship between the state government and the local self-government institutions has been built up through the activities of the sub-divisional officers. The sub-divisional officer also coordinates the activities of the blocks that fall within the sub-division. He is the link between the district magistrate and the block-development officers. He has also some regulatory functions. These functions include recommendation of gun licenses and other licenses. He makes a weekly confidential report regarding his area and transmits it to the district magistrate. 4.6 Duties of Sub Divisional Officer The duties of the Sub Divisional Officer (Civil) within his Sub Division are almost similar to those of the Deputy Commissioner within his district. In all matters of administration, he has to be the Deputy Commissioner's principal agent. He is also incharge of various development activities going on in the Sub Division and is also responsible for co-ordinating the work of various departments. For that he has to tour the area to keep a watch on the development activities, the revenue administration as also the law & order situation in his Sub Division. Besides this he has to look after the grievances of the public and to attend to the problems arising out of the natural calamities. He supervises the work of Revenue agency in the Sub Division. There is no denying the fact that the job of a Sub Divisional Officer (civil) is independent in character to some extent. He is primarily responsible for everything that happens within his jurisdiction and must accordingly take his decisions to a large extent independently. Sub Divisional Officer (Civil) is conferred with various powers under the land revenue and tenancy acts. He also acts as Assistant Collector under the Punjab Land Revenue Act and Punjab Tenancy Act. He is also the appellate authority in cases decided by his subordinate revenue officers. The Executive Magistrate placed by the State Government as incharge of the Sub Division is termed as the Sub Divisional Magistrate Under section 20(4) Cr.P.C. and under section 23 Cr.P.C. the Sub divisional Officer like other Executive Magistrates of the District is subordinate to

the

89%	MATCHING BLOCK 197/219	SA	UNIT 11 DISTRICT COLLECTOR.docx (D40802230)

District Magistrate and is responsible for the maintenance of law and order within the limits of his local jurisdiction. He enjoys very wide powers under section 107, 151, 109, 110, 133, 144, and 145 Cr.P.C. etc. He also hears court cases under these sections.

Ouriginal by Turnitin

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 147 4.7 Conclusion The administrative structure of the district in which the sub-divisional officer plays a major role in administering the sub-division is now in a fluid state. Now the local people and their representatives have a big role to play in the decision making process. The problem of striking a balance between rigid bureaucratic structure in the form of sub- divisional office and the officer and participation of local people occurs at the field level. An efficient sub-divisional officer can manage all the complicated affairs arising out of this situation. He brings his office and position closer to the people to implement the development programmes and at the same time supervises and monitors implementation of all these programmes at the field level. A few tehsils put together constitute a sub-division. A Sub-Divisional Officer heads the sub-division. He possesses both administrative and judicial duties. He is a magistrate as well as a revenue officer. In fact, his functions are analogous to those of the Collector at the district level. His revenue duties are—regulation of details and resolution of disputes, doubts and difficulties regarding land revenue, supervision and inspection of all revenue matters, from assessment to collection, co-ordination of work in the departments of revenue, agriculture, veterinary and public health within the sub-division, appointment and dismissal of small revenue officials, collection and compilation of agricultural statistics. His judicial duties comprise of decision of cases pertaining to land rights, enhancing, abating or commuting a rent, ejecting illegal sub-letting and deciding the question of the rightful ownership for a disputed land. As a Magistrate First Class, he tries cases falling within his jurisdiction. He commits cases to sessions court. His quasi-judicial duties pertain to liaison and co-operation with the police in the sub-division, special precautions and actions in emergencies, appointments of mukhias, recommendations to the collector for grant of arms licenses. His executive duties at the sub-division level become fairly important especially when in pursuance of Directive Principles; he is deprived of judicial duties. Supervising the police, deciding disputes of non-criminal character, appointing, promoting or transferring functionaries of the revenue department, maintaining closer contract with the pubic are his important executive duties. Besides these functions, he is to perform developmental functions as well. The plans for grow more food, Community Projects and National Extension Schemes, abolition of social evils and superstitions, rehabilitation of refugees, etc., are some of the developmental 148 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 functions which S.D.O. performs at the sub-divisional level, in order to cater to the welfare concept of the state. 4.8 Summary ? Sub-divisional Officer is an administrative officer of a district sub-division. ? Sub-divisions are the creation of the British Raj. Sub-divisions are important field administrative areas within districts. ? A sub-divisional officer has an important role to play in his area which includes magisterial functions, disaster management, supervision of development activities of the area, land record, land reform functions and the like. ? He supervises and guides the functioning of all local self-government bodies operating in the sub-division. ? He acts as an aide to the district magistrate and supplies information about the sub-divisional area. 4.9 Glossary ? Subdivision: an administrative division in Indian states below the level of a district. ? General administration: ensure that all activities and their processes are functioning effectively and smoothly. 4.10 Model Questions ? What is a Sub-division? ? Discuss the recruitment procedure of a sub-divisional officer. ? Discuss the primary role of the sub-divisional officer. ? Discuss the role of a sub-divisional officer as a link between district headquarters and the sub-division. ? Discuss the role of the sub-divisional officer in the development programmes in the sub-division.
NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 149 ? Describe the administrative functions of the sub-divisional officer. ? Write an essay on the role of sub-divisional officer. ? Do you think that the sub-divisional officer is only an aide to the district magistrate? Discuss. ? Discuss in details the powers and functions of a sub-divisional officer. 4.11 References ? Indian Administration- Mohit Bhattacharya- Asit Basu. (2014) World Press, Kolkata. ? Indian Administration- S. Maheswari (2018) Orient Blackswan
150 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Unit V Role of the Block Development Officer Structure 5.0 Objectives 5.1 Introduction 5.2 Recruitment of Block Development Officer 5.3 Powers and Functions of Block Development Officer 5.4 Dual Responsibility 5.5 Democratic Decentralization and the BDO 5.6 Administrative Role, Role during Emergency, Role in Development 5.7 Some problem areas 5.8 Conclusion 5.9 Summary 5.10 Glossary 5.11 Model Questions 5.12 References 5.0 Objectives ? To study the power and various functions of Block Development Officer. ? To explain the role and responsibility of BDO in the process of democratic decentralization. 5.1 Introduction The 'Block' as a unit of government below sub-division was created after independence to ensure development at lower level. Blocks were formed during the implementation of community development and national extension programme initiated by the government in the year 1952. The Block Development Officer or the BDO is the chief coordinator of development activities at the block level. He maintains close link with the sub-divisional

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 151 officer and the district magistrate, his immediate superiors. The block development officer takes into account the administrative framework of the block he is in charge of. He acts as an extension officer who is designed to carry out the educative role and programmes of the block representative and ensures whether the plans and programmes approved by the authorities are carried out with efficacy. He is subordinate to the deputy magistrate and to the sub-divisional officer. Block areas were created during the first five year plan to facilitate and monitor development in the field area. With this end in view a large number of blocks have been created almost throughout India. Some blocks are more or less co-extensive in boundary with old tax collection area or 'Taluka', the block is a new unit with a new function and responsibilities. The BDOs play a key role in the administrative functions relating to community development. 5.2 Recruitment of Block Development Officer The pattern of recruitment of the BDOs differs from state to state. However the basic practice is that he is the member of the state civil service. Usually they are appointed on the basis of routine tests and interviews conducted by the state civil service commission. In some states the recruitment of BDOs is done by promotion. Extension officers with few years of experience are often promoted to the post of BDO. In some states recruitment is done by the state Public Service Commission but sometimes the selection to the post of BDO is made from officers belonging to revenue, agriculture, cooperatives and panchayat departments. After the appointment the BDOs have to undergo a thorough training in extension work and the purpose of the training programme of BDOs is to make them effective instruments for bringing about changes in the life of the people. 5.3 Powers and Functions of Block Development Officer The BDOs are a permanent part of the district administrative structure and his area of functioning is limited to the block level. The basic functions of a BDO are given below:- 1. He is the coordinating authority at the block level. He organizes efforts to ensure that the aims and objectives of development programmes are understood by the people in the block.
152 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 2. He exercises administrative control and supervision over the work of other officials posted in the block. He takes overall responsibility for formulating an integrated working plan for the block and also ensures the implementation of all development programmes taken at the block level. He also ensures proper utilization of funds placed at his disposal and maintains proper accounts and records in this regard. 3. He makes programmes in a manner that would ensure popular initiative and encourage people's involvement in the development process. The new administrative set up has come up with the advent of democratic decentralization in this country. And the role of the BDO has become very important. He is the chief executive officer of the Panchayat Samiti. The Panchayat Samiti works under his direct supervision. As the chief executive officer of the Samiti, he signs and authenticates all letters and documents for and on behalf of this local self-government body. He also executes contract on his behalf. It is his duty to see that the plans and programmes of panchayat samiti are executed properly with efficiency. He supervises Panchayat activities at the block level. He supervises and controls the work of the government staff. He also possesses some financial powers. He acts as the treasury officer of the Panchayat Samiti and has the power to draw and disburse funds lying with the Panchayat Samiti. He prepares the budget of the Panchayat, with reference to the levy of taxes and their recovery, recovery of loan advances and the like. He maintains regular accounts and it is his duty to remove the irregularities pointed out in the audit report. Thus the BDO is not only concerned with development work of the block but also other related functions like regulatory functions, fiscal functions and business functions. The regulatory function of BDO is to look after the Panchayat Samiti's performance in the traditional activities like maintenance of sanitary conditions, licensing of trades, preventing encroachment on the village roads etc. The fiscal functions of the BDO arise from the fact that the local bodies must have to raise their resources. The resources include taxes, fines, fees and loans. BDO is there to keep a strong vigil on all these areas. He has the responsibility to ensure that the business of the panchayat samiti is carried out according to government rules and regulations. He gives the notices of Panchayat Samiti meetings, prepares the agenda and records the proceedings of the meeting.

84%	MATCHING BLOCK 198/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

56%	MATCHING BLOCK 199/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 153 5.4 Dual Responsibility The BDO is an officer in the state-cadre and he is responsible to his superiors in the government. His primary responsibility is to ensure the conformity of the block programmes to the rules stipulated by the government. Similarly he is subordinate to the Panchayat Samiti and he has to carry out its decisions and resolutions. The BDO should have to play the role of a mediator between the two sets of bodies, one bureaucratic and other democratic. 5.5 Democratic Decentralization and the BDO Under the democratic decentralization the collection of land revenue is largely entrusted to the Panchayat Samiti. Now the BDO has to play the role of land revenue collector and keeper of land records but under the instructions given by the democratically elected body, Panchayat Samiti. However the BDO has to face situations arising out of political cleavages in the local self-government bodies of the area. Being a member of the permanent executive he has to paperwork, he submits a large number of reports to the district magistrate, other district officers and development commissioner. As the chief executive officer of the Block he is to see that the plans and programmes approved by the government are being implemented effectively. His other responsibilities in this connection are following : 1.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 200/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

83%	MATCHING BLOCK 201/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

He signs contracts and authenticates all letters and documents for and on behalf of the Panchayat Samiti subject to the prior approval of the appropriate authority. 2. He draws and disburses money out of Panchayat Samiti fund. 3. He takes appropriate steps to remove irregularities pointed out by the auditors about Panchayat Samiti accounts. 4. He inspects on behalf of the Panchayat Samiti the financial condition of the Panchayat in regard to the levy of taxes and their recovery of loans and maintenance of regular account. 5. He helps Panchayats to draw up plans and see that they conform to the plans and priorities of the Panchayat Samiti. He also sees that the construction programmes undertaken by the Panchayat conform to the standards laid down and completed within scheduled time. 154 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 6. BDO exercises supervision and control over extension officers and other employees of the Panchayat Samiti. 7.

87%	MATCHING BLOCK 202/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

He formulates annual budget and places it before the Panchayat Samiti, prepares the annual administrative report and quarterly progress reports for the consideration of the Panchayat Samiti and send all these to Zila Parishad and the state governments, all the

64%	MATCHING BLOCK 203/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

resolutions and proceedings of the Panchayat Samiti to the Zila Parishad and the state governments. 8. He deals with all cases of fraud, embezzlement, theft or loss of fund or other property of the Panchayat

Samity and takes appropriate actions. As the secretary of the Panchayat Samiti, the BDO issues notices for the meetings of the Panchayat Samiti and standing committees under instructions from the Pradhan and Chairman of the respective committees. He attends all these meetings himself or authorizes a senior officer subordinate to him to attend such meetings. But he does not exercise right to vote while attending such meetings. He also looks into it that the minutes of such meetings are recorded and circulated. 5.6 Administrative Role, Role during Emergency, Role in Development The BDO

86%	MATCHING BLOCK 204/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 206/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

directs the execution of any work or act and incurring

the

90%	MATCHING BLOCK 205/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

expenditure upon it which normally, requires the sanction of Panchayat Samity or its standing committee.

He also reports all such actions taken by him to the appropriate authorities. As the Secretary of the Panchayat Samiti he gives advice regarding the legality and the various consequences of a proposed course of action.

85%	MATCHING BLOCK 207/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

His administrative knowledge and experience gives him the opportunity to act as a moderator in Panchayat Samiti meetings. A competent BDO can win the trust and respect of the Panchayat Samiti members.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 208/219	SA	118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

BDO as Leader of Development The most important role of the BDO at the block level is to give leadership to all development work at the field. He acts as a coordinator of all activities and the staff under his control. But his main responsibility is to provide constant leadership to all the staff in the field of rural development. He educates the members of the Panchayat Samiti in taking right decisions in respect of the programmes to be undertaken in the block and

Ouriginal by Turnitin

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 155 involve them in the implementation of the development programmes. His role may be classified under the following categories:- 1. Assessment of needs and resources of all the villages in the block is done by him with the help of extension officer, gramsevaks and other village level workers. 2. After assessment he has to plan various rural development programmes by taking into account its viability in terms of the availability of resources at his disposal. 3. In the line of programme planning he has to pool various resources to match the programmes before they are implemented so that the programmes are carried out successfully as per his plans. In this regard to development management the BDO keeps track of different projects in his block, monitors performance and reports results to his higher authorities, the district magistrate and the Zila Parishad. He has to look into various rural development programmes which include rural works programme, rural water supply, food for work, public health, minor irrigation, agriculture development programme, primary school education, animal husbandry, rural employment and others. He also looks after special programmes like IRDP, Drought-Prone Area Programme, Jawahar Rozgar Yojna etc. The BDO leads the block in a number of ways. He organizes staff meetings, helps extension officers and workers, locates and fosters leadership in villages. He organizes village people for development work, ensures team work through proper motivation among staff members working in the block, keeps the people living in the block informed around the block activities etc. Finally the BDO looks after the general administration of the block and provides periodic information and reports to his higher authorities at the district level. He helps the elected representatives in their work. He accompanies the ministers and superior officers on tours. He looks after financial administration of the block. He prepares budget estimates for different development programmes at the block level. He obtains sanctions and pooling of the financial resources for the programmes. The target specific projects like tribal or SC/ST development work or beneficiary oriented projects are implemented and monitored from his office. As the executive officer of the Panchayat Samiti the BDO deals with the political leaders and notables of the block area. He also resolves the political disputes and reconciles competing demands arising out of different political interests and attitudinal groups of the area. Conflict between the BDO and the local leaders are very common because he 156 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 often opposes illegalities occurring at the block level. He is in charge of the Panchayat Samiti and his main duty is to see that the block level developmental activities are carried out in proper manner and accounts are kept in proper order. Political pressures in respect of beneficiary selection, distribution of projects among different locations and release of funds on local influence are a daily experience of a BDO. 5.7 Some problem areas We now take up certain problems connected with this office which tend to create difficulties in its smooth functioning. Among these the more pressing are two: (1) The frequent shift of B.D.O.s, from place to place or to other positions. (2) The lack of avenue for promotion. Shift of Personnel The frequent shift of B.D.O.s from place to place is obviously detrimental to the development programmes. When a person stays for a short period in a place he does not feel a sense of responsibility to the area in which he is placed. Also, he does not become emotionally involved in the programme. A development programme to be properly implemented needs staff with great zeal, enthusiasm, and patience. These qualities are not easy to develop when one is not involved emotionally in the programme. Not only that the B.D.O. may not develop emotional involvement he may not even feel a sense of sufficient responsibility for the decisions taken or for implementing the decisions taken. In all probability, he will not be there to face the consequences. The development programme can be effectively implemented when the person in charge has knowledge of the situation (resources — physical and social, the characteristics of the population, etc.). The situation can be understood only when a person has stayed long enough in an area. However, at present, by the time a B.D.O. begins to get a feel of the situation, he is often moved on to another area. This is likely to create frustration not only for the workers but also for the people. In the Panchayati Raj setup even the personalities of the members of the Panchayat Samiti have to be understood. Getting to know people takes time. Under these circumstances frequent shifts are likely to cause delay in the implementation of the development programme. Expert knowledge of any area or the people and their needs or the patterns of leadership and the functioning of various social institutions cannot be understood unless a person stays in an area for over a sufficient period of time.

Ouriginal by Turnitin

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 157 One of the major incentives for a person to stay in a job is the possibility of promotion. For the B.D.O. there are hardly any avenues of promotion, particularly for those who have been recruited directly, and consequently the incentive to do good work is not very great. Avennes of Promotion Some thought needs to be given to the provision of avenues of promotion are: (1) Those having technical training may be given promotion in the departments concerned. (2) The B.D.O.s should be eligible for promotion as District Planning Officers, Deputy and Assistant Development Commissioners. (3) A certain percentage of the B.D.O.s should be eligible for promotion to the State Civil Service on the basis of their service record, aptitude, and capability; they may be assessed by the Public Service Commission after interviewing the candidates recommended by the Development Commissioner. (4) Academically better qualified B.D.O.s may be recruited as instructors in the training centres where the pay scale is higher. 5.8 Conclusion It is not uncommon to find government functionaries with limited training and experience in the field level. It is also noticed from experience that more the development effort is directed from above, the less it is able to relate to the local people. The quality of the field personnel in terms of their knowledge, skills and commitment is a critical issue in the implementation of the development programmes in the rural areas. And the BDO should have emerged as an important centre of local planning and development combining the efforts of the state government and the panchayats. 5.9 Summary ? In this unit we have learnt about the recruitment process of the Block Development Officer, his power and functions. ? This unit also examined the multifarious roles of the BDO.

158 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 5.10 Glossary ? Leadership: the action of leading a group of people or an organisation. ? Block: an administrative division of a sub division under a district. ? Politics: the activities associated with the Governance of a country or area 5.11 Model Questions ? What is meant by Block? ? Discuss the formation of Blocks. ? Describe the recruitment procedure of Block Development Officer. ? Discuss the primary functions of a BDO. ? Discuss the relationship between BDO and Panchayat Samiti Members. ? Do you think that the BDO is the coordinator of the Block? Discuss. ? Discuss the role of a BDO in a block. ? Do you think that BDO is the leader of developmental programmes at the Block Level? ? Write an essay on the role of a BDO as an administrator in the Block. 5.12 References ? Indian Administration- Mohit Bhattacharya (2018) World Press, Kolkata. ? Indian Administration- S. Maheswari (2018) Orient Blackswan. ? The post of a Block Development Officer (BDO) in the civil services Barnabas, A.P. (1961). The Block Development Officer Today. IIPA.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 159 BLOCK IV DISTRICT POLICE ADMINISTRATION

160 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 161 Unit I Organisation of the Police Administration Structure 1.0 Objectives 1.1 Introduction 1.2 History of Police Administration in India 1.3 Organization at Central and State Level 1.4 Organization at Range Level 1.5 Organization at District and Sub-district Level 1.6

Conclusion 1.7 Summary 1.8 Glossary 1.9 Model Questions 1.10 References 1.0 Objectives ? To understand the history of police administration in India ? To analyse the role of police administration at different level 1.1 Introduction Police is one of the most ubiquitous organizations of society. Police refers to a body of officers representing the civil authority of government. English word police comes from Middle French ‘police’ (implying government, management, civil administration), which in turn derives from Latin word ‘politia’ (state, government), which itself comes from Ancient Greek word ‘polis’ meaning city. The term police first acquired its current meaning (a state power entrusted with law enforcement) around 1810. Police typically are responsible for maintaining public order and safety, enforcing the law and preventing, detecting, and investigating criminal activities. These functions are known as policing. Police are often

Ouriginal by Turnitin

162 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 also entrusted with various licensing and regulatory activities. In fact, policing is much older than the creation of a specialized armed force devoted to such a task. 1.2 History of Police Administration in India The activity of policing preceded the creation of the police as a distinct body by thousands of years. The first policing organization was created in Egypt around about 3000 BC. The Egyptian empire then was divided into 42 administrative jurisdictions; for each jurisdiction the Pharaoh appointed an official who was responsible for justice and security. He was assisted by a chief of police, who bore the title sab heri seker, or "chief of the hitters" (a body of men responsible for tax collecting, among other duties). As far as ancient India is concerned, there were officials by the name Jivagribhs mentioned in the Rig Ved and Ugras, mentioned in the Upanishads who appear to have been police officer. According to another important literary source – The Arthashastra, the Mauryan administration also had several important officers in charge of law and order like Dauvarika was responsible for the maintenance of law and order of the outer life of the palace, and Antarvansika was in charge of the peace and security in its inner life. The Dandapala, the Durgapala and the Antapala were essentially military officers who also discharged a good deal of police functions. The Durgapala in later times evolved into a Police Officer who came to be known as Kotapala and subsequently as Katuala (or Kotwal). In medieval India, Sher Shah, the famous Indo-Afghan ruler effectively organized different branches of the administrative system including the police. He continued with the traditional principles of local responsibility and held the village headmen responsible for the safety of the area within the village. In the Pargana, the Shiqudar and Amin shared between them the responsibility of policing and a group of Parganas formed a Sarkar under a Foujdar, who was the principal police officer and also the commander of the local army. The head of the city police in urban areas was known as the Kotwal. He not only continued to supervise certain municipal duties and to enforce public morals but he was also the head of the criminal Court of a Sarkar. The Kotwal's force patrolled the city at night and guarded the thoroughfares. He appointed a leading man as warden in every quarter who was responsible for seeing that no criminals were harboured by the people. The Kotwal maintained a register of the inhabitants of every quarter, kept himself informed of their activities and means of livelihood of the people in the city. He also took cognizance of every new arrival and departure in the city. During the Mughal period, the Governor of a province was called the Subhedar and under him were the Foujdars, who were in charge of sub-divisions. Though the Foujdar NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 163 was mainly a revenue official, but he also had the responsibility of keeping the peace and dealing with robbers and other anti-social elements in his area. To help him in the police duties he had a number of Thanadars who were in charge of armed forces. The activities of the Foujdars and the Thanadars were confined to using military force for quelling rebellions and disturbances by bands of robbers. They did not investigate any criminal cases. The present police system structurally and functionally owes its existing to the various Acts and Enactments promulgated by the colonial rulers. The present Indian Police System is based on the Police Act of 1861. The Indian Police Act of 1861 was drafted by the British colonizers as a direct consequence of the first war of independence to ensure the police system's subservience to the executive and to remain authoritarian in its contact with the public. Under the Police Act of 1861, the police was made subordinate to the executive government, and the same position continues even today. The Indian Police Act (IPA) of 1861 is still the basic governing instrument of the Indian police force. It lays down the structure and functions of the police departments in the country. The current administration of the police falls under the Indian Police Act (IPA) of 1861, the Indian Penal Code (IPC) of 1862; the Indian Evidence Act (IEA) of 1872; and the Code of Criminal Procedure (CrPC) of 1861. According to article 246 of the Indian Constitution and section 3 of the IPA, the police force is a state subject and not dealt with at central level. Each state government has the responsibility to draw guidelines, rules and regulations for their respective police forces. These regulations are found in the state police manuals. Under Article 246 of the Constitution of India, police and public order are made state subjects; hence the police in India is maintained and controlled by the state governments. Although, police administration is a state responsibility, the union government can make laws and amendments to basic police laws like Indian Penal Code, Management of Indian Police Service etc. The Central Government also assists the state governments in maintaining law and order through its reserve units, like the Central Reserve Police Force, Border Security Force, Railway Protection Force, Central Industrial Security Force etc. Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) and Central Intelligence Bureau (CIB) also provide assistance to the state police organizations in the fields of law and order, security and administration of justice. 1.3 Organisation at Central and State Level Article 246 (entry 2, List 11, Seventh Schedule) of the Indian Constitution enumerates police as a State subject. Police Administration, therefore, is a State responsibility. This

164 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 does not, however, minimise the role of Central Government in Police Administration. The Constitution itself enumerates a long list of subjects like All India Services, preventive detention, arms, ammunition, passports etc. in the union list. The Central Government's role in Police Administration is related to making laws on subjects included in Union and Concurrent lists and making amendments to the basic police laws like Indian Penal Code, the Code of Criminal Procedure, Evidence Act, etc. Administration of the States, policing the Union Territories, management of Indian Police Service, matters relating to arms and ammunition are also the responsibility of the Central Government. The Ministry of Home Affairs and the Department of Personnel plays the administrative and coordinating role. In maintenance of law and order, whenever required, the Central Government provides aid and assistance to the States. To discharge this function, the Central Government maintains a network of line and staff units all over the country. The Central Reserve Police Force, Border Security Force, Railway Protection Force, Central Industrial Security Force are some of the reserve units. Similarly Central Forensic Institutes, Police Wireless and Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel Police Academy are the staff units at the Central level. These apart, there are Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) and Central Intelligence Bureau (CIB) also to aid the Central Government. These agencies, under the control of the Central Government provide assistance to the State Police Organisation in the fields of law and order, security and administration of justice in the country. Rules and regulations have been formulated for the operation of these agencies in the States. There are occasions when these rules are violated leading to tensions between the Central and State Governments. At the State level, the Police Administration is more or less uniform throughout the country. The Chief Minister or Home Minister is largely responsible for policy and supervisory functions. The Home Department coordinates and supervises the Police Administration in the State. It acts as a link between Central and State Governments. But the Inspector General of Police (IGP) or the Director General of Police (DGP) who is the Head of the State Police undertakes the real work. His office is called the Office of the IGP|DGP popularly called Chief Office. This office collects information and feeds it to the Government; advises political decision-makers like the cabinet and the ministers; supervises and controls line agencies. It organises training and acts as a clearinghouse of special police services. The IGP/DGP aids and advises the Government and exercises general supervision and control over the police department. He exercises administrative, personnel, and financial power. He provides leadership to the Police

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 165 Administration in the State. He is assisted in his duties of IGP by the Deputy Inspector General of Police (DIGs) and Superintendents of Police (SPs) and other staff. They head the specialised branches like intelligence department, crime branch, transport department, training, armed forces, general administration, law and order etc. 1.4 Organisation at Range Level Many States are too big to be administered effectively and efficiently from a central point. It is not possible for the Head of the police that is the police chief or the DGP/IGP to keep in touch with the functioning of the entire organisation. Therefore, the police organisation in a State is divided into ranges for operational convenience. This is above the district and below the State level. This broadly corresponds to the divisional set up. Deputy Inspector General of Police heads each range. Each police range comprises a few districts. The number of districts in each range varies from 2 to 8 depending upon the size of the district, population, and importance of the district. The DIG functions as a staff officer to the State police chief and as a line officer to the district police. His functions include periodic inspections, receiving and processing reports and returns from districts, and issuing instructions to the district police functionaries. A major function of the range DIG is to coordinate the activities of district police and also take measures for inter-district cooperation. He is personally responsible for the enforcement of discipline among the police personnel under his charge. He exercises power of transfer and discipline over certain categories of personnel. He keeps a watch on the crime situation in the district particularly over grave offences like dacoity, murder etc. He also exercises control over police funds. The range of DIG's functions, thus, includes personnel management, budgetary control and coordination. He is responsible for the maintenance of efficiency and discipline of his staff. He ensures uniformity of procedure and securing cooperation between the police functioning in the districts, Police Administration - Field and Local within his range. He has to ensure harmonious relations between the police and the executive Magistrate. There are some criticisms about a range becoming a mere post office. It is criticised to be functionally superfluous. Some feel that inspite of range offices the workload of the State level offices has not been reduced and in fact it has been on the increase. The National Police Commission recommended that DIG of the range should play a positive role in functioning of the districts under his control. He should act as coordinating authority between districts in his range and with those of the adjacent ranges. It also

166 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 recommended that he/she should be a sensitive judge of public opinion and play an important role in planning and modernisation of the force. The commission felt that to be effective, the range of DIG should not have more than five districts under his control. It also recommended that for adequate supervision, territorial Inspector General of Police should be appointed in large States. They should not have more than 15 to 20 districts or 4-5 ranges under his charge. The Armed Battalions of the range should also be placed under the operational charge of the territorial IGP. They should be delegated administrative, financial, disciplinary and other power. This will reduce the workload on the DGP and enable him to concentrate on higher matters of policy and administration. 1.5 Organisation at District and Sub- District Level District is an important unit of the public administrative structure in the country. Almost all the State Government offices are located in the district. In Police Administration also district plays a pivotal role. All the laws and rules passed by the police are transformed into action at this level. District Police Organisation is responsible for the effective maintenance of law and order and control of crime. Police Administration at the district level is carried out by the chief of the district police, called Superintendent of Police, who is responsible for the maintenance of law and order, and other law enforcement activities. Technically, Superintendent of Police functions under the overall control of the Collector. He and his subordinate officers, in practice, enjoy operational autonomy in the discharge of their functions. The Collector as a District Magistrate is broadly responsible for preventive aspects; and the police is responsible for the control of crime, maintenance of law and order, etc. Police Administration below the district level is organised into divisions; divisions into circles; and circle into Police Stations. The organisation and working of Police Stations, marginally, varies between urban and rural areas. District Police work under the Superintendent of Police. He is always a member of the Indian Police Service and wields a great amount of power and prestige in the district. He is accountable to the Head of the range police that is Deputy Inspector General of Police for the maintenance of law and order in his district.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 210/219	SA	MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

He is also accountable to

84%	MATCHING BLOCK 209/219	W

the Director General of Police at the State Headquarters. The Superintendent of Police (

S.P) is responsible for the efficiency, morale and discipline of the police force in the district. He collects information about various aspects from the entire district and communicates the same to the State Government along with his own assessment.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 167 The Superintendent of Police is primarily responsible for the maintenance of law and order, and prevention of crime. He is empowered to take preventive measures to ensure peace in the district. He has to make adequate police arrangements during fairs and festivals as well as elections and agitations. If he apprehends untoward situations, he can advise the Collector to promulgate prohibitory orders and even to clamp curfew. He controls crime by patrolling, investigating and taking preventive measures. He also supervises the operations against crime and special branches working under him. He has many personnel and organisational responsibilities like adequate supply of arms, vehicles, uniform etc. He also has responsibilities regarding matters of training, promotion and discipline of the staff, maintaining financial property etc. He is the link between police organisation and people's representatives at the district level. He maintains coordial and friendly relations with people. In the district where important urban centers are located, he has responsibilities of regulating traffic and receiving VIPs. Thus, the SP occupies a pivotal and a powerful position not only in the district police organisation but also in the District Administration itself. The Additional Superintendent of Police assists him. The latter helps him in his day-to-day general administration. Deputy superintendents of Police, Circle Inspectors of Police, Sub-Inspectors of Police, Head Constables and Police Constables assist him in the enforcement of law and order at various levels. To assist him in undertaking his functions professionals and technical units are also placed at his disposal. The organisation at the district level broadly consists of two wings namely the District Police Office (DPO) and the Field Organisation. The general administration of the entire police in the district is carried by the DPO. It works under the SP or ASP, who is in-charge of the office administration and also exercises general control and supervision. The office administration is carried out by several sections like crime and statistics, crime bureau, audit and accounts, equipments and stores, etc. The DPO can be considered as the secretariat of the police and the nerve centre of the Police Administration in the district. To provide special assistance to the police, a number of field units function at the district level. The district armed reserve, the home guards, the women police, crime bureau, special branch, finger print unit, dog squad, transport unit are some of the field units supporting the district Police Administration. Sub-division For operational convenience, the district police organisation is divided into a number of sub-divisions. Police sub-division is a unit where police work is coordinated and 168 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 controlled. It is an intermediary link between police circles, police stations and the district police office. The police sub-division is under the charge of a Deputy Superintendent of Police or Additional Superintendent of Police. They are generally called Sub-Divisional Police Officers. The main work of the sub-division is to look into law and order matters, and discipline among the police force and other related matters at the sub-divisional level. A number of reports and registers relating to crime, security and other administrative aspects are maintained in the Sub-divisional office. The Sub-Divisional Officers are responsible primarily for the maintenance of law and order and crime control; collection and communication of intelligence; submission of periodic reports to the Superintendent of Police, inspection of Police Stations and Circle Offices. They also have an important public-relations role to perform. They act as a link between the Superintendent of Police and the Sub-Inspectors and Inspectors. Circles Sub-Divisions are further divided into police circles, which is a link between Police Stations and sub-division. This is the third tier in the district police organisation. Sometimes, the police circles are coterminous with taluka; sometimes with blocks; and sometimes they may not be in conformity with either of them. As there are no rules governing the formation of police circles, they vary in size from state to state and even in the state from circle to circle. The number of Police Stations in each police circle is determined on the basis of crime, population, area, topography, etc. Each circle may have 3 to 10 Police Stations. The Circle office facilitates smooth administration at the field level. Police Administration Inspector of Police is the Head of police circle. He is responsible for the maintenance of law and order, and control of crime. He has to promote discipline among the policemen. He guides, advises, and supervises the work of Police at the local stations and the men working there. He also investigates grave crimes with the administrative assistance of supporting staff. As is the case with the divisional office, several registers and records are maintained at the circle level. They include communication register, case diary, circle information book, annual review of crime, crime charts, criminal intelligence file, etc. The Police Station is the lowest tier in the police organisation. It is here that the actual work of the police is undertaken. It is the basic and primary unit, which is responsible for the maintenance of law and order, prevention and control of crime and protection of life and property of the community.

70%	MATCHING BLOCK 211/219	SA	MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 169 1.6 Conclusion In sum, it can be stated that the structure and mechanism of district police administration has been too static to face the dynamism of change. There is over centralization in the police organization at the district level. Today the police at the district level have to perform specialized and innovative functions but the old organizational structures have yielded little room for specialization and innovation in police department. Moreover, the changing context in the post-independence period presents a bewildering picture of the district police organization in which the Superintendent of Police (SP) is too high and too far away from the actual scene of police operations and the Sub-Inspector (SI) is inadequately qualified and ill trained to handle growing complex situations of changing India. There is an urgent requirement for autonomous, politically insulated and flat structures at the district level as far as police organization is concerned. For this to happen there is a need for a thorough overhaul and reorganization of the police machinery at all levels of hierarchy, especially at the district level. 1.7 Summary ? This units presents a brief history of the role of police administration in India. ? In this section we have explained the organisation of the police system in India at various levels, such as central and state levels, range level, and district and sub district level. 1.8 Glossary ? Central forensic institutes: these are specialised institutes which provide various kinds of scientific aids to the police forces in the detection of crime 1.9 Model Questions ? Give an account of the history of police administration in India. ? Discuss police administration in India at the state level. ? Discuss the organisation of police at the district level. ? Describe the organisations and functions of a 'Range'.
170 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? Discuss the rank structure in a Police Force. ? What is the importance of a police? Explain. ? What is the lowest tier of the police organisation in India? Indicate its functions. ? What are the duties of a sub divisional police officer? Discuss. ? Write a short note on the Indian police act of 1861. 1.10 References ? Anupam Sharma and Anupam Manhas, Police Administration in India : The Legal Development, (2015), Regal Publications. ? Administration of Police Training in India, K. M. Mathur (2013), Gyan Publishing House.
NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 171 Unit II Superintendent of Police : Functions and Role Structure 2.0 Objectives 2.1 Introduction 2.2 Power, Functions and Role of the Superintendent of Police 2.3 Duties of Superintendent of Police 2.4 Govt. of India Code of Conduct for Police 2.5
Conclusion 2.6 Summary 2.7 Glossary 2.8 Model Questions 2.9 References 2.0 Objectives ? To understand the power, functions and role of the Superintendent of Police ? To analyse the Government of India's code of conduct for police ? To describe the duties of the Superintendent of Police 2.1 Introduction The District Police organization is represented by its chief, the Superintendent of Police (SP). He is always a member of the Indian Police Service and wields a great amount of power and prestige in the district. The volume of work which depends upon the size and special demographic characteristics of the district, generally determines the size of police network and the functions of the Superintendent of Police (SP). The Superintendent of Police (SP) coordinates the functions of the heads of the district police lines, district crime bureau, district special branch, district traffic branch and the district prosecution branch. As a police chief, he has to work in close liaison and collaboration

Ouriginal by Turnitin

172 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 with his administrative seniors at the range and state headquarters. As the chief intelligence officer of the district, he collects special intelligence from the lower levels and communicates the same to his superiors. He also acts as a line agency on behalf of the state organization of the CID, which, in turn, may ask him to undertake certain special kinds of intelligence operations on the request of Union agencies like CBI. The SP always keeps the senior police officials of the government constantly informed about the incriminating activities of the saboteurs of peace and enemies of the state. He sends periodic information to the DIG (Intelligence) at regular intervals. 2.2 Power, Functions and Role of the Superintendent of Police As a captain of his team, the SP has a critical say in the policies pertaining to recruitment, promotion, training programmes and disciplinary matters. He evaluates the performance of his administrative subordinates and takes disciplinary actions as and where needed. To affect discipline in the force he attends parades, gives personal interviews and recommends cases for promotion, punishment and transfers to his seniors. The SP thus looks after the service conditions of the junior police employees working under his charge. He maintains financial propriety by observing rules and is expected to affect measures conducive to internal economy for the organisation. He supervises the office work of his civilian officials, who handle the inflows and outflows of all kinds of communications, horizontally as well as vertically. The functions of the SP further include various kinds of organisational and personnel responsibilities at the district level. He has to maintain an adequate supply of vehicles, arms, communications, equipments and other accessories like uniforms, etc., in a good shape. He inspects police stations within the jurisdictional limits of his district and provides for necessary physical conditions to keep his men working in a satisfactory state of morale and motivation. In districts which territorially include big cities, the SPs have additional and special responsibilities such as regulation and control of traffic, and handling law and order situations like political and communal conflicts. In the event of a serious conflict, he is expected to make adequate police arrangements to cope with the situation and restore order and peace in the district. The district police headquarter controls the network of police stations spread all over the district. The superintendent of police, who presides over this organization, is the key functionary through whom the state government operates and the

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 173 police stations look to him for command, guidance and action. He is directly responsible for their efficiency, morale and discipline. The SP also is in charge of crime control in his district. This function of crime control is done in several ways like arranging effective police patrol in crime prone areas in the district, investigation of grave crimes and making and receiving special reports about these cases; and administrative supervision over his subordinates who keep constant vigilance, take preventive measures, and maintain up-to- date records of criminals in the district. The SP has to call for reports, supervise in person and visit the scenes of crime soon after their occurrence. Democracy in the country has developed a new responsibility upon the SP and that is to evolve and maintain friendly and cordial police-public relations in the district. The aggrieved people are given special audiences and the co-operation of the political leaders of the area is sought. He has to act as a reconciliatory link between his junior police officers and the aggrieved parties, which hurl all sorts of accusations against the former. Some SPs maintain special research cells or police-public relations units in their organisations to keep their fingers on the pulse of the people. He organizes sports, tournaments, annual get-together and special meets to keep his district force in high spirits. He undertakes police welfare projects and provides incentives to his juniors for better performance. As head of the office, he is personally responsible for the correctness of cash and store accounts of his department. 2.3 Duties of Superintendent of Police 1) The Superintendent of Police should consider it a part of his duty, as far as possible, to give the sub-Divisional Officers the benefit of his personal guidance and instruction, whenever necessary. 2) As the Chief Police officer of the district, the primary duties of the superintendent of Police are to keep the force under his control properly trained, efficient and contented and to ensure by constant supervision that the prevention, investigation and detection of crime in his district are properly and definiently dealt with by the Police force under his command. He must, therefore, get to know all officers and men serving under him and see that they are properly trained. He must enforce discipline, if any, and encourage men who are promising and weed out those who are of no use to department. At the same time move constantly, be in touch both with his subordinates and with the public. He should pay surprise 174 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 visits to his Police Stations at regular intervals and check up whether officers and men are alert. 3) It follows that he should be free to tour the whole of his district systematically and regularly, and it is essential that he should inspect every Police Station and Outpost in his district once a year and also that he should halt at these places sufficiently long to enable him to get a thorough grasp of local conditions and crime and a full knowledge of his subordinates' work. 4) The Superintendent of Police must deal with crime as a whole studying the criminal problems of his district rather than visiting spasmodically scenes of offences, a duty which more properly falls upon the Sub-Divisional Officer. The Superintendent of Police, must however, visit scenes of really serious offences where organized crime is indicated or organized gangs are at work, as well as offences which affect markedly the general peace of the district. 5) The Superintendent of Police shall treat the Spl.IGP confidentially & frankly, give him all inspection & inquiries and consult him confidentially in all the difficulties and about all the short comings in the police work of his district. 6) Every superintendent of police should visit sick policemen in hospital regularly once a week at least. It is extremely desirable that every policeman should feel that this superior officer takes an interest in his welfare and such visits are calculated to ensure greater attention being paid to the men. Further, this practice enables the Superintendent to deal promptly with cases in which for any reason the disbursement of a sick policement's pay has been delayed. Duties of Additional Superintendent of Police The Additional Superintendent of police should give the SDPOs under him, guidance and instructions, whenever necessary. He is responsible for the general supervision of the divisions under him. In absence of Superintendent of Police he will be responsibile for the district force. He should ensure by constant supervision that the prevention, investigation and detection of crime in his jurisdiction are properly and efficiently dealt with by the police station under his command. He should enforce discipline and redress grievances. He should pay surprise visit to the police stations. He should keep vigil whether officers and men are alert. He should deal with crime as a whole studying the criminal problems. He should also visit scenes of serious offences reported in his jurisdiction.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 175 Duties of Sub-Divisional Police officers 1) An Assistant or Deputy Superintendent of police in charge of a sub-division will be responsible for all crime in his charge, and will visit all scenes of serious offences as laid down in the standing orders. Under the general orders of the Superintendent of Police, he will be responsible for the efficiency and discipline of the officers and men in his division and will hold detailed inspections of Police Stations and Outposts in this charge at regular intervals at least once a year. 2) In addition to the above, Sub-Divisional Officers will be responsible for the inspection of public conveyances playing for hire in their charges, inspection of explosives, arms and ammunition, shops, taking musketry practices, etc. and the many other duties that fall to the lot of a Sub-Divisional Officer in the ordinary course of his work. 3) Sub-Rule (6) of Rule 24 in the matter of visiting sick policemen in hospitals applies also in the case of Sub-Divisional Officer. Duties of Home Dy. S. P. 1) The home Dy. SP. is a Senior Officer of the Superintendent of Police office. As the services of the Sub-Divisional Police are utilized for crime and visiting of all scenes of serious offences in their charges, it is essential that the headquarters town and the actual Police Head– quarters as well as the Head Police office should be under a responsible officer to deal with any sudden emergency that may arise and to see that the work is properly done in the absence of the Superintendent of police. The duties of the Dy.SP. will be : a) To supervise the work in the correspondence and accounts branches. b) To dispose of routine correspondence and miscellaneous work. c) To supervise the work of the town and Headquarters police during the absence of the Superintendent of Police. d) To check initial account papers.

Ouriginal by Turnitin

176 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 2.4 Govt. of India Code of Conduct for Police Code of conduct for police in the country which was adopted at the Conference of the Inspectors General of Police in 1960, is as follows : 1. The police must bear faithful allegiance to the Constitution of India and respect and uphold the rights of the citizens as guaranteed by it. 2. The police should not question the propriety of necessity of any law duly enacted. They should enforce the law firmly and impartially without fear or favour, malice or vindictiveness. 3. The police should recognize and respect the limitations of their powers and functions. They should not usurp or even seem to usurp the functions of the judiciary and sit in judgement on cases to avenge individuals and punish the guilty. 4. In securing the observance of law or in maintaining order, the police should as far as practicable, use the methods of persuasion, advice and warning. When the application of force becomes inevitable, only the irreducible minimum of force required in the circumstances should be used. 5. The prime duty of the police is to prevent crime and disorder and the police must recognize that the test of their efficiency is the absence of both and not the visible evidence of police action in dealing with them. 6. The police msut recognize that they are members of the public, with the only difference that in the interest of the society and on its behalf they are employed to give full time attention to duties which are normally incumbent on every citizen to perform. 7. The police should realize that the efficient performance of their duties will be dependent on the extent of ready cooperation that they receive from the public. This, in turn, will depend on their ability to secure public approval of their conduct and actions and to earn and retain public respect and confidence. 8. The police should always keep the welfare of the people in mind and be sympathetic and considerate towards them. They should always be ready to offer individual service and friendship and render necessary assistance to all without regard to their wealth and/or social standing.
NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 177 9. The police should always place duty before self, should maintain calm in the face of danger, scorn or ridicule and should be ready to sacrifice their lives in protecting those of others. 10. The police should always be courteous and well mannered; they should be dependable and impartial; they should possess dignity and courage; and should cultivate character and the trust of the people. 11. Integrity of the highest order is the fundamental basis of the prestige of the police. Recognizing this, the police must keep their private lives scrupulously clean, develop self-restraint and be truthful and honest in thought and deed, in both personal and official life, so that the public may regard them as exemplary citizens. 12. The police should recognize that their full to the potential to the State. It is best ensured only by maintaining a high standard of discipline, faithful performance of duties in accordance with law and implicit obedience to the lawful directions of commanding ranks and absolute loyalty to the force and by keeping themselves in the state of constant training and preparedness. 13. As members of a secular, democratic state the police should strive continually to rise above personal prejudices and promote harmony and the spirit of common brotherhood amongst all the people of India transcending religious, linguistic and regional or sectional diversities and to renounce practices derogatory to the dignity of women and disadvantaged segments of the society. Police is an important instrument who is responsible for maintaining peace and order in the country. A country is able to live peacefully, wiithout insecurities if the police performs its functions and duties efficiently and effectively. Police Act 1861 and Model Police Act, 2006 specifies the administration, role, duties and powers of Police Department. Further, The code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 empowers police officers to conduct investigation, make arrest including preventinve arrest, requires attendance of witnesses, etc. 2.5 Conclusion Thus, the functions and duties of a SP in a district are fairly wide, varied and far- reaching. They make him a central person in the district administration. His main functions are certainly preservation of peace and prevention of crime but the ancillary roles that 178 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 grow around these major functions like collection of intelligence, traffic control, inculcation of healthy public relations, make him a really powerful district officer who occupies a pivotal position in district administration. 2.6 Summary ? We have learnt about the role of the Superintendent of Police as the chief of the district police administration. ? We have analysed the power, functions and duties of the Superintendent of Police. ? We have learnt about the code of conduct for the police. 2.7 Glossary ? Code of conduct: a set of rules outlining the norms, responsibilities and the proper practices of an individual or a post. ? Social responsibility: an ethical framework in which an individual is obligated to work. 2.8 Model questions ? Discuss the power and functions of the Superintendent of Police in India. ? Analyse the role of the superintendent of police as the chief of the district police administration. ? Discuss the Government of India's code of conduct for police. ? Describe the duties of the superintendent of police. ? What are the responsibilities of police as mentioned under the model Police Act 2006. ? What is the significance of the post of the superintendent of police? Explain. ? Examine the role of the SP in regards to the control of crime in the district. ? What is the role of the SP in the police-public relations in the district? ? Indicate the role of the SP as a line agency.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 179 2.9 References ? Anupam Sharma and Anupam Manhas, Police Administration in India : The Legal Developments, 2015, Regal Publications. ? K. M. Mathur, Administration of Police Training in India, 2013, Gyan Publishing House.
180 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Unit III District Magistrate and Superintendent of Police : Relations Structure 3.0 Objectives 3.1 Introduction 3.2 Relations between District Magistrate and Superintendent of Police 3.3 Police Commissionerate System and the Dual System 3.4 Conclusion 3.5 Summary 3.6 Glossary 3.7 Model Questions 3.8 References 3.0 Objectives ? To explain the relationship between the District Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police. ? To understand the Dual System and the Commissionerate System of control. 3.1 Introduction The District Magistrate is the pivot of district administration, representing, as he does, the government in its totality within his territorial jurisdiction. Each district is in charge of a District Magistrate who is the main link between the State Government and the people and the de-facto chief executive and administrator of the area under his charge. The District Magistrate is

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 212/219	SA	Baljit Kaur Pre-Submission.docx (D59601054)

the principal representative of the State Government in the district in whom all threads of local administration are concentrated, directly or indirectly.

The

96%	MATCHING BLOCK 213/219	SA	UNIT 11 DISTRICT COLLECTOR.docx (D40802230)

District Magistrate is responsible for the maintenance of law and order in the district, in which task he is assisted by the district police force. There is no denying that the problems of law and order have now become more complex and difficult. Strikes NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 181 and demonstrations usually take a violent turn without much provocation. In addition to these, there is the problem of political violence which acts as the direct threat to peace and security. Since these problems have a far-reaching effect on our society, the authority in charge of law and order should not only be responsible for the maintenance of law and order, but should also have an organization to study and understand the causes of discontent which result in lawlessness. Moreover, the situation demands that nothing should be done to weaken the law and order machinery in the district. In this context, the relations between the District Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police need to be examined. This question was initially examined by the Indian Police Commission of 1902- 03. The Indian Police Commission of 1902-03, which was presided, over by Sir Andrew H.L. Fraser, examined the question of relationship between the District Magistrate and the Police. According to the Commission, the object of Act V of 1861 "was to make the Superintendent primarily responsible for the administration of the district police. But the police force was to be an efficient instrument at the disposal of the District Magistrate for the prevention and detection of crime. Therefore the work of the Superintendent must be done under the general control and direction of the Magistrate and subject to his orders. It was essential to preserve the responsibility of the District Magistrate for the general success of the criminal administration of the district, and to afford him prompt means of ensuring the obedience of the organised constabulary to his lawful orders. The Commission further observed: "The police force, though bound to obey the Magistrate's orders in regard to criminal administration, should be kept as far as possible departmentally distinct and subordinate to its own officers. And the District Magistrate should avoid acting so as to weaken the influence and authority of the Superintendent." The Commission came to the definite conclusion that "in the interests of the people the police must remain under the general control and direction of the District Magistrate." The then Government of India agreed to the views of the Commission on the question of relations between the District Magistrate and the police. Subsequently, several other Police Commissions, including the West Bengal Police Commission of 1960-61, have also considered this question. Under section 4 of the Police Act of 1861, (Act 7 of 1861), the administration of the police in a district vests in the District Superintendent of Police under the general control and direction of the District Magistrate. Thus, while there can be no doubt that police administration in a district vests in the District Superintendent of Police, the Act mentions that his powers will be subject to the general control and direction of the District Magistrate. The relations between the 182 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 District Magistrate and the police may be summarized as under: The District Magistrate has no authority to interfere in the internal organization or discipline of the police force, but he may call for the papers relating to the conduct or character of any police officer of his district and may direct an enquiry into a police officer's misconduct. It is incumbent on the Superintendent of Police to afford the District Magistrate all possible assistance in the criminal administration of the district and to keep him informed of all matters affecting the peace of the district. An important part of the District Magistrate's duty is to inspect the police stations of his district. He is to exercise constant supervision over the prevention and detection of crime, for the proper conduct of which he is ultimately responsible. The District Magistrate writes the confidential character rolls of the Superintendent of Police and other gazetted police officers in his district. Working under the overall supervision of the DM, the SP looks after the problems of law and order and that of the administration of crime and vice in the district. The SP is empowered to take all sorts of preventive measures, if a breach of peace is apprehended in the district. To avoid untoward situations, he may advice the DM to issue prohibitory orders and even to clamp curfew, if the situation so warrants. In the event of actual breach of peace, he is expected to make adequate police arrangements to cope with the situation. In post-independence period, at least four Commissions, namely, the Police Commissions of Uttar Pradesh (1960-61), West Bengal (1960-61), Bihar (1961), and Punjab (1961-62), have gone into this question and all of them are generally of the view that there should be no change in the relations between the District Magistrate and the police. The West Bengal Police Commission of 1960-61, under the Chairmanship of K.C.Sen, was of the following opinion: "We think it important that the District Magistrate's position, as the officer ultimately responsible for the Police administration in his district, should not be whittled away or allowed to be whittled away in any manner, although he may have many other duties to at bend to." The First Administrative Reform Commission also had similar views in regard to the relations between the District Magistrate and the police. According to the First Administrative Reforms Commission- "the District Magistrate as the head of the regulatory administration in the district should exercise general supervisory control over the police organisation in the district. Except in an emergency, he should not interfere with the internal working of the police administration."

70%	MATCHING BLOCK 215/219	W

51% MATCHING BLOCK 219/219 SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

96% MATCHING BLOCK 214/219 W

It may be observed here that the provisions of law which vested in the District Magistrate's general powers of control over the district police are as valid today as they were when enacted

Ouriginal by Turnitin

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 183 in 1861. In other words, the existing relations between the District Magistrate and the police in his district continue unchanged. 3.2 Relations between District Magistrate and Superintendent of Police For the purpose of efficiency in the general administration of the district, it shall be lawful for the District Collector-cum-District Magistrate, in addition to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code and other relevant Acts to coordinate the functioning of the Police with other agencies of the district administration in respect of the following : (a) matters relating to the promotion of land reforms and the settlement of land disputes ; (b) matters relating to an extensive disturbance of the public peace and tranquility in the district ; (c) matters relating to the conduct of election to public body ; (d) matters relating to the handling of natural calamities and the rehabilitation of the persons affected thereby; (e) matters relating to situations arising out of any external aggression; (f) any similar matter not within the purview of any other department and affecting the general welfare of the people of the district; (g) serious fire accident causing death, injury and loss to the properties calling for immediate relief measures ; and (h) for removal of any serious public grevance and removal of serious encroachments by the orders of the Court or the Government or the Railway authorities. The District Magistrate may call for information of a general and special nature as and when required form the Police or any other agency connected with the general administration of the district. The Superintendent of the concerned district shall render all the requisite and available assistance to the District Collector-cum-District Magistrate having jurisdiction. In case of the matters relating to the regions, the Superintendent of Police and the Sub-divisional Magistrate in-charge of the sub divisions will combine and work together to do the needful.

184 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Coordination means to combine or integrate harmoniously for the purpose of carrying out the above functions. The District Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police and their SDMs and DSPs shall also adhere to the following : (i) The District Magistrate shall not interfere in questions of recruitment, transfer, internal economy, organisation and with the administrative, disciplinary and other details of the force. The District Magistrate, when exercising his powers, shall also refrain from any action likely to weaken the authority of the Superintendent of Police. The relationship between the DM. and the SP should be that of two colleagues working at a common end. (ii) The Superintendent of Police shall cooperate with the District Magistrate for the purpose of coordination, as specified above. Utmost harmony, coordination and cooperation of the two functionaries alone can secure the maintenance of public peace in the areas. (iii) The maintenance of personal contact by meetings, consultations and joint visits or tours, whenever possible between the D.M. and SP will contribute the most to the fulfillment of their joint function of preserving law and order. (iv) All communications between the District Magistrate and the Police, shall be conveyed through instructions and orders. (v) For the purpose of speedy security proceedings U/s 107 & 110 Cr. P. C., for the maintenance of the peace of the area, the Sub Divisional Maginstrate and the Superintendent of Police concerned shall exhibit their joint efforts and energy. The relative responsibilities and powers of the Magistracy and the Police in the event of an emergency arising out of a Law and Order problem are covered under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. Under sections 129 and 130 of Cr. P. C., it is open to a Magistrate or to an Officer in-charge of a Police Station to disperse by force an unlawful assembly or a riotous mob. The force which may be used on such occasions may be any kind of force appropriate to the occasion and will include the use of fire arms. But, it should only be the minimum force necessary under the circumstances. Fire should not be opened by the Police otherwise than under the specific direction of a Magistrate except under extreme situations in self-defence, when the justification for opening fire would be open for scrutiny and the responsibilities for it would lie on the Police.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 185 It may be noted that the above instructions act as a safeguard also. In case of an inquiry on the necessity to open fire, etc., it is the decision of the Magistrate that is under inquiry and the Police will have no responsibility as long as they have followed all the instructions implicitly. The construction of references to the term "Magistrate" within the meaning of Section 3 Cr.P.C. will distinguish the power and functions of the Judicial and Executive Magistrate. The function exercisable by a "Magistrate" relates to matters. (a) Which involve the appreciation or shifting of evidence or the formulation of any decision which exposes any person to any punishment or penalty or detention in custody pending investigation, inquiry or would have the effect of sending him for trial before any court, they shall subject to the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure be exercisable by a Judicial Magistrate. (b) Which are administrative or executive in nature, such, as the granting of a licence, the suspension or cancellation of a licence, sanctioning a prosecution or withdrawing from a prosecuution, they shall be exercisable by an Executive Magistrate. 3.3 Police Commissionerate System and the Dual System Historical Background ? Policing is based on the Police Act of 1861. ? Under the colonial system, the dual system of police administration was introduced. ? The overall in-charge of a district or region was the District Collector and the Superinendent of Police (SP) reported to him. ? The primary objective of the British was revenue collection in rural India. They needed a force that could support this objective and unleash tyranny and oppression when needed to suit the objective. The worst of officers from the British police were sent to India. So there was a need to put them under the District Collector. That system continued to post-Independence period.
186 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? The British also brought the Police Commissionerate System first in Kolkata and followed it in Mumbai and Chennai Presidencies. The system was introduced even before the Police Act of 1861 ? The commissionerate system is considered a step toward police reforms. Directions of the Supreme Court in Prakash Singh vs Union of India ? In 1996, a petition was filed before the Supreme Court that raised various instances of abuse of power by the police and alleged that police personnel perform their duties in a politically partisan manner. ? The Supreme Court issued its judgement in 2006, ordering the centre and states to set up authorities to lay down guidelines for police functioning, evaluate police performance, decide postings and transfers, and receive complaints of police misconduct. ? The court also required the minimum tenure of service be guarantced to key police officers to protect them from arbitrary transfers and postions. Police Commissionerate System ? Delhi turned into a commissionerate during 1977-1979. ? National Police Commission's 6th report released in 1983 recommended the commissionerate system in cities with a population of 5 lakh and above as well as in places having special conditions. ? In 2005, Draft Model Police Act, framed by a committee, set up by the Home Ministry also made a similar recommendation saying metro cities and major urban areas with a population of 10 lakh or more should have commissionerate system. ? As of January 2018, the system has been implemented in 61 cities across 15 states in the country. (BPRD data, 2018). Constitutional/Legal Provisions ? Under the 7th Schedule of the Constitution, Police is under the State list. ? Political executive (i.e., ministers) has the power of superintendence and control over the police forces to ensure their accountability.
NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 187 ? The centre is also allowed to maintain its own police forces to assist the states with ensuring law and order. Therefore, it maintains seven central police forces and some other police organisations for specialised tasks such as intelligence gathering, investigation, research and record-keeping, and training. ? The centre is responsible for policing in the Union Territories. It also extends intelligence and financial support to the state police forces. ? State police forces generally have two arms: civil and armed police. ? The civil police are responsibile for day-to-day law and order and crime control. ? Armed police are kept in reserve until additional support is required in situations like riots. ? Civil police forces broadly adhere to the hierarchical structure. Dual System ? The state government exercises control and superintendence over the state police forces. ? At the district level, the District Magistrate also gives directions to the Superintendent of Police and supervises police administration. ? The powers such as issuing orders for preventive arrests or imposition of Section 144 cr PC are vested in the DM. Commissionerate System ? In some metropolitan cities and urban areas, however, the dual system has been replaced by the commissionerate system to allow for quicker decision-making in response to complex law and order situations, rising population and rapid urbanisation. ? The police have a greater say in resolving land disputes. However, removal of encroachments and other land-related problems would need the presence of a Magistrate to lead the police.

188 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Need for Commissionerate System ? Commissionerate system is considered the most authoritative system of policing, not only in other progressive countries but also in the states of the country. ? The system brings greater power and responsibility on the Police system and the possibility of passing the buck on Magistrates is eliminated. ? It is considered essential in cities with a large population. ? Now, suggestions are being made that it should be implemented at least in the cities with a population of 20 lakh. ? Big cities generally throw law and order problems and other problems viz., student agitations, caste-communal problems, labour agitations, agitations related to laws passed by the governments. ? This requires very specialised handling and requires coordination at every stage. There can be a difference of opinion between officials. Hence, these multifarious, complicated issues need unity of command. Dual System Dual command structure over the district police means that control and direction over the police vests with the SP (head of district police) and the District Magistrate (executive). Separation of powers of the DM (e.g. Issues arrest warrants and licenses) and the police (e.g., investigate crimes and make arrests). Less concentration of power in the police, and accountability to DM at the district level. SP is assisted by Additional/Assistant/ Deputy SPs, Inspectors and constabulary. Commissionerate System Unified command structure with the Commissioner of Police (rank of the Deputy Inspector General or above) as the sole head of the force within the city. Allows for quicker response to law and order situations. Powers of placing the magistracy concentrated in Commissioner. Directly accountable to the state government and state police chief. Lesser accountability to the local administration. Commissioner is assisted by Special/Joint/ Additional/ Deputy Commissioners, etc. Inspector downwards rank structure is the same. Differences between the Dual System of Control and the Commissionerate System

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 189 ? In the present case of UP, Noida shares borders with the National Capital which already has a commissionerate system, after the implementation of he commissionerate system in UP, there would be better coordination in policing. ? Moreover, in Mumbai, the system has been proved successful in handling complex issues of Mumbai which also had faced the problem of the underworld. ? Even in the commissionerate system, unfettered power is not given to the police. Police are answerable to ministers and courts. Concerns ? When the system is introduced, initially, there can be adjustment and understanding issues. Certain legacy issues and other issues like delegation of authority and better integration will have to be addressed. ? In some states like UP, the police already have immense power. Questions are raised quite often on the functioning of the cops. People are generally scared of the police and the cops have also failed to win public confidence. ? People largely trust the civil administrative officials and feel more comfortable in interacting with them because they create balance in society. ? Further, there are several occasions when protests are of a civil nature and can be dealt with by the District Magistrate. Police action in such matters can complicate the situation. ? This system works better in states where the literacy ratio is higher and people have wide knowledge about law and their fundamental rights. Way Forward ? The Commissioncrate system brings great power to the Commissioner of Police hence it calls upon a degree of restraint in using power, which in the present scenario has not been necessarily demonstrated. ? Therefore, the selection of Commissioner becomes crucial. an officer who has a wider knowledge of handling crime, investigation in the complex urban-centric milieu and has the capacity to both restrain and increase power will do well. ? We can say that the system gives more powers to the police force and the officers but also added responsibility to ensure that those powers are handled in 190 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 a responsible manner. As it is rightly said, “With great power comes great responsibility.” ? An efficient commissionerate system would result in better detection of crime, the better quality of investigation, increased conviction rate, protection of the rights of people, and decline of the crime rate. 3.4 Conclusion India’s existing police system suffers a series of deficiencies from problems relating to a police organization, environment, infrastructure, and understaffing, to obsolete weaponry and intelligence gathering techniques to a shortage of manpower, to corruption, the police force in the country is not in good shape. Therefore, there is an urgent need for holistic police reforms. Since, Police, Law and Order are subjects of state list, the government can start by urging all states to implement the recommendations given by the supreme court in Prakash Singh case. 3.5 Summary ? This unit discusses the various dimensions of the D.M. – S.P. relationship in Indian administration. ? This section also examines the Police Commissionerate System and the Dual System of control. 3.6 Glossary ? Commissionerate System : In the Commissionerate System the Commissioner of Police (C.P.) is the head of a unified police command. ? Dual System of Control : In this system the Superintendent of Police (S. P.) has to work with District Magistrate (D. M.) for supervising police administration. 3.7 Model Questions ? Discuss the nature of relationship between the District magistrate and the Superintendent of Police in India.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 191 ? What were the important observations of the West Bengal Police Commission of 1960-61 in regard to the relationship between the D. M. and S.P. ? Explain. ? Discuss the differences between the Dual System of control and the Commissionerate System in the context of D.M.–S.P. relationship. ? What were the recommendations of the Indian Police Commission 1902-03, about the relations between the District Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police ? Discuss. ? What are the views expressed by the first Administrative Reform Commission in regard to the relation between District Magistrate and the Police ? ? Examine the role of the D.M.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 216/219 W

as the head of the regulatory administration in the district. ?

What are the urgent needs of the district level police structure for handling growing complex situations in changing India ? Discuss. ? Examine the needs for the Commissionerate System. ? What are the Constitutional/Legal provisions for the D.M. – S.P. relationship in India ? 3.8 References ? Padhi, A. P. 1988, State Administration in India, Uppal Publishing House, New Delhi. ?

87% MATCHING BLOCK 217/219 W

Ram, D. S., 1996, Dynamics of District Administration : New Perspective, Kanishka, New Delhi. 192 ?

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Unit IV Police and the Public Structure 4.0 Objectives 4.1 Introduction 4.2 Relationship between Police and the Public 4.3 Concept of people friendly police 4.3.1 Characteristics of people friendly police 4.4 Community Policing 4.4.1 Varities of Community Policing 4.5 Conclusion 4.6 Summary 4.7 Glossary 4.8 Model question 4.9 References 4.0 Objectives ? To understand the relationship between police and the public ? To explain the concept of people friendly police ? To understand community policing 4.1 Introduction Police image in a society depends on the degree of equanimity it has with public expectation. The expectations of the public are changing with time. As far as the police are concerned, the public is not a homogeneous entity. It is composed of many diverse and at times opposite interests. There is a challenge in front of the police to meet these expectations. A healthy police-public relationship is vital to secure the desired measure of public involvement in the police operations to make it acceptable to society. The very basis of the law and order in the society is public support, without the support of the

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 193 public; no government can maintain law and order in the society. Moreover, no policeman can succeed unless he gets public support. Thus, according to Radelet, police-public relations imply, "the reciprocal attitude of the police and the public to the expected and performed tasks of the police, and to involve general public relations, community services and community participation." The British Institute of Public Relations explained public relations as "the process of establishing and maintaining mutual understanding and appreciation between an organization and its public, through effective two-way communication." Today India is going through a very difficult phase when the country is convulsed by lawlessness of unprecedented magnitude. Unfortunately, a healthy relationship between the police and the public is still to be established as far as India is concerned. Compared to police in developed countries, the Indian Police has failed to fulfill the need and aspiration of the people of India. 4.2 Relationship between Police and the Public The relationship between the police as an organization and the public in general, must be based on mutual trust, understanding and mutual regard for each other. There is no place of arrogance, lack of co-operation, exploitative attitude and apathy towards other's feelings or point of view. The bases for the police-public relationship, as it exists today, are the Indian Police Act of 1861, which was enacted as a result of the recommendations made by the Indian Police Commission of 1860. The present police set-up, as is well known, is what we inherited from the British rulers from the time of the country's independence. Since then no worthwhile changes have been made in either its organization or working methods. The British had organized the police to serve their colonial interest and evidently it cannot be suitable for a country which is committed to a democratic way of life and which has adopted the 'Rule of Law' as the guiding principle of independent India. Therefore, there are allegations that the police in India continues to be essentially colonial in character. The Indian police still continue to look after the interest of the ruler, in this case, the political party in power. In such a context, it becomes more important for the police to protect the government rather than the public. All these may ultimately lead to the use of the police as a powerful instrument of oppression against the people. In present time, public distrust and enmity to the police are very great. Surveys conducted in India reveal a number of important factors in regard to the worsening of the police-public relations. One important cause of distrust is the harshness of the police, their rough manners and their lack of courtesy. Partisan law enforcement and political 194 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 interference in the day-to-day working of the police is another factor responsible for the loss of public confidence and respect of the police. The behavior of the police with the public is still very arrogant and discourteous. Today, democratic countries including India are haunted by the specter of rising crime and lawlessness. People seem to feel that the police are not able to provide adequate protection to them and control crime due to various factors like corruption, political pressure and a covert nexus with the crime mafias which was brought out by the N.N. Vohra Committee Report of 1993 which observed - "The nexus between the criminal gangs, police, bureaucracy and politicians has come out clearly in various parts of the country. The existing criminal justice system, which was essentially designed to deal with the individual offences/crimes, is unable to deal with the activities of the Mafia....." Police as the law-enforcement agency have a duty to see that they do everything to see that the people in a democratic society enjoy their human rights freely. The improper use or the misuse of power and authority by the police has been found to be causally responsible for the denial of some of these inalienable rights of man in the past and even today. In doing so, some police officers do not understand that they are violating the human rights of the people for whose welfare and protection the service is created and maintained. It has also been observed that police use to violate fundamental rights of people like torture in police custody leading to custodial deaths. 4.3 Concept of people friendly police In this context one needs to talk about the concept of 'People friendly police'. 'People friendly Police' has not been succinctly defined. It can be deduced that people friendly police behaves with the public in a friendly manner. It is participative in approach and involves the people in its operational working. It keeps the public at the centre stage. It is democratic in nature and has corroborative approach. It works in a fair and non- discriminatory manner. It promotes transparency in the working of the police and makes it incorruptible. It shows alacrity to the people in need by extending prompt help thereby standing true to the message: "we are always with you". The police by the very nature of their origin need to be a people's police. Their job is not only to protect and to help their fellow people but also to protect their fellow people against the government or against any other authority if the government or that authority acts illegally. 4.3.1 Characteristics of 'People Friendly Police': 1. People friendly police adopts participative approach and involves people in crime detection.

Ouriginal by Turnitin

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 195 2. Impartial treatment is meted out to all sections of society by the people friendly police. 3. It has a humanistic approach. It is supportive, sympathetic and caring and approaches all human beings compassionately. 4. People friendly police responds promptly to the citizens' complaints and comes into action very swiftly. 5. People friendly police is trustworthy and the people bank upon it. 6. Since people friendly police is not frightful, people approach it without any inhibitions. All the above mentioned attributes of a people friendly police organization in India can be achieved through Community Policing. Police are a part of community. It is the community that maintains the police and to serve the community the police exist. Good police public relations therefore, play a vital role in any society and more so in a democratic society like ours where the police need the continuous support, respect and approval of the citizen for their functioning. Accordingly, a good community police relations programme which aims emphasizing the mutual interdependence of the two in the maintenance of law and order as well as in the prevention and detection of crime is a necessity. Good program aims at developing natural respect and understanding between the police and the people and promotes an atmosphere conducive to greater public cooperation and eventual police effectiveness. Community policing will go a long way in meeting the changing expectations of the public. Community policing is a philosophy which supports the systematic use of partnerships among police and the community to address the conditions such as crime, social disorder and fear of crime. The success of community policing depends upon the partnership among police and the community, so the police must develop positive relationships with the community. The United States Department of Justice defines Community Policing as – "a philosophy that promotes organizational strategies in the community to combat potential situations that might create public safety issues." Community policing involves the use of partnerships between municipal agencies, businesses, individual citizens, non-profit groups and the media in order to develop methods to police the community. These organizations work together to address criminal matters and reduce crime. Instead of simply leaving it to the police force, community policing revolves around a philosophy that the entire community can help take measures to prevent crime. Bureau of Police Research and Development (BPR&D) in India has referred it as "normal policing of a society in consultation, cooperation and partnership with the 196 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 community at large". According to bureau the objectives of community policing are "To minimize the gap between police and public to such an extent that the policemen become an integrated part of the community they serve and they earn the acceptance and trust of the community leading to impulsive cooperation from people in crime prevention and security in local area and resulting in a lasting partnership between the police and the community". As for the mission of community policing the Bureau recommends "To prevent and detect crime, maintain order and ensure safety and security of the community in partnership with the people and to provide the community efficient, transparent and responsive law-enforcement machinery which perpetuates the rule of law". 4.4 Community Policing Community policing has three key components – 1. Community Partnerships: - Collaborative partnerships between the law enforcement agency and the individuals and organizations they serve to develop solutions to problems and increase trust in police. 2. Organizational Transformation: - The alignment of organizational management, structure, personnel, and information systems to support community partnerships and proactive problem solving. 3. Problem Solving: - The process of engaging in the proactive and systematic examination of identified problems to develop and evaluate effective responses. This concept brings the police and community into a closer working relationship and improves the level of mutual trust and respect among the police and the citizens. 4.4.1 Varieties of Community Policing Several approaches to policing have been associated with community-oriented policing so far. Broken-windows policing, zero-tolerance policing, and problem-oriented policing are, among others, regarded as varieties of community-oriented policing strategies. While all listed styles of policing generally engage with the community, there are still differences regarding their normative and disciplinary approaches regarding the community as well as to what extent the communities are actually involved in the provision of security. Broken-windows policing spread across the United States during the 1980s and has been mainly inspired by a seminal article by Wilson and Kelling on strategies of how to overcome diffuse fear of crime. The authors refer to the metaphor of a broken window

Ouriginal by Turnitin

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 197 to explain the increasing urban dilapidation in combination with rising criminality and insecurity. Wilson and Kelling hypothesize that if a windowpane is broken and no one repairs it soon, remaining windows of the same building will be broken as well since the apparent lack of maintenance might lead to the conclusion that breaking windows of that building will have no consequences for the respective perpetrators at all. Moreover, if, as the argument of Wilson and Kelling continues, the absence of consequences and an associated lawlessness remain for these kinds of delinquences, defiance of the law will increase and spill over to the whole neighbourhood. As a reaction, the authors conclude, average citizens will increasingly generate diffuse fear of crime on the streets and move away to safer places in the city. The neighbourhood in question, however, will sooner or later be lost. The broken-windows thesis that vandalism and disorder leads to an increase of crime has been disputed within the research community. Moreover, it has been objected that particularly ethnic minorities would disproportionally and unjustifiably become labelled as "troublemakers" and therefore targeted by police officers while following the broken- windows approach. Moreover, adolescents, members of ethnic minorities, or homeless persons could become criminalized by spending time in areas designated for public use since loitering might be perceived as disorderly behavior. Hence, implementing the broken- windows approach might lead to an immense loss of trust into the actual objectivity and impartiality of the police on behalf of the affected citizens. While the broken-windows approach seems plausible in theory, implementing it would require a highly professional and impartial police force. Otherwise, the proactive character of broken-windows policing could turn quite quickly into repressive policing similar to the zero-tolerance approach. This zero-tolerance policing is subsumed by Burke as a proactive and assertive policing concept, having its theoretical underpinnings in the broken-windoes approach. In contrast to the broken-windows thesis of Wilson and Kelling, however, zero-tolerance policing aims not only to reduce the diffuse feeling of insecurity on behalf of the residents, but also to reduce criminality in the long run. Within criminological theory, policing in New York City is widely regarded as paramount example for zero-tolerance policing when the then- mayor Giuliani heralded the start of a rigorous prosecution of any kind of crime to contain the exuberant crime rates in the metropolis during the late 1990s. Hard-line policing of any petty offense aimed therefore at calling a halt to a normalization of existing law violation in everyday life and at bringing criminals to justice. One of the main objectives of zero- tolerance policing was also to discourage any potential copycat from engaging in criminal activities. Similar to the community policing narrative, zero-tolerance policing proponents claim that this policing approach is backed up by the majority of residents and covers the 198 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 very security needs of its respective community. In fact, the rigorous policing against any form of crime according to the zero-tolerance approach enjoyed popularity and was received favourably in wide areas of New York City. However, Lum, among others, cautions that zero-tolerance policing might also lead to a normalization of inappropriate behaviour by police officers, such as harsh treatment of citizens, which might often be disproportional to the respective offence. This behaviour of police officers towards citizens might not be desirable in a political pluralist country. And while Knights admits that zero-tolerance policing might have public appeal by reducing crime rates, he doubts the long-term effectiveness of this approach. Tackling underlying social causes for criminal behaviour and establishing sustained lines of communication between the police and residents will not be achieved through hard-line policing alone, as he argues. Rather, zero-tolerance policing might sooner or later lead to cleavages along social and ethnic lines of society. Again, as Taylor concurs, zero-tolerance policing will, at the end of the day, benefit the wealthier parts of society, while ethnic minorities, adolescents, and the socially weaker parts of society get into the focus of policing measures. 4.5 Conclusion Community policing can address many common yet community and social issues: child and women safety, transportation of school children, domestic violence, traffic challenges, and neighbourhood and other issues. The police officials must be properly equipped with proper attitude and skills to handle community policing. Community policing would also make the public and police understand each other better. Police officials, especially those dealing with the public regularly, must realise that they are part of the society and the society has empowered them. Citizens also should be encouraged to participate in this endeavour. 4.6 Summary ? This unit focuses on the relationship between public and the police ? We have highlighted the ideas of people friendly police ? This section also presentes the notion of community policing and its key components

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 199 4.7 Glossary ? Community policing : it is a strategy of policing that focuses on developing relationship with community members 4.8 Model Questions ? What do you understand by the concept of people friendly police ? What are its characteristics ? Discuss. ? Discuss the relationship between police and the public with special reference to India. ? Write a note on community policing. ? What are the factors responsible for the worsening of Police – Public Relations in India ? ? What are the bases for the police – public relationship in India Today ? Discuss. ? Why is a healthy Police vs Public relationship necessary ? Explain. ? Write a short note on the Bureau of Police Research and Development in India. ? Indicate the objectives of community policing. ? Discuss the key components of community policing. 4.9 References ? Anupam Sharma and Anupam Manhas, Police Administration in India : The Legal Developments, 2015, Regal Publications. ? D, Kocak, 2018, Rethinking Community Policing in International Police Reform; Examples from Asia, Wiquity Press London.
200 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Unit V Issues Confronting the Police Administration Structure 5.0 Objectives 5.1 Introduction 5.2 Political Interference in the Police Organization 5.3 Violation of Human Rights by the Police 5.4 Corruption within the Police Force 5.5 Poor Working Conditions and Low Salary of Police Officials 5.6 Inadequate Modernization of Police Force 5.7 Conclusion 5.8 Summary 5.9 Glossary 5.10 Model Questions 5.11 References 5.0 Objectives To understand some issues confronting the police in India, such as, political interference in police organisation, violation of human rights, corruption within the police force, poor working conditions and low salary of police officials, inadequate modernization of police force. 5.1 Introduction The police in a democratic country like India should be (1) independent from the political parties in power and interest groups and accountable to the law and the community; (2) effective and efficient in performing their mission, defined as providing security and justice to citizens; and (3) equally accessible and responsive to all citizens especially the marginalized sections of the society. Unfortunately, this picture is far from NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 201 that which prevails in India. Several instances from the past like the police excesses during the National Emergency (1975-1977) or the partisan role of the police during the anti-Sikh riots of 1984, the steep rise in the level of politicization of the police force, increase in police corruption and the violation of human rights by the police force in different parts of the country have collectively led to the fast erosion of public trust in the institution of police in India. Some of the issues confronting the police in India are as follows – 5.2 Political Interference in the Police Organization In a democracy, power vests with the people. This power is exercised through its elected representatives who have the mandate to govern them for a specific period. The civil servants (permanent executive) by virtue of their knowledge, experience and understanding of public affairs assist the elected representatives (political executive) in formulating policy and implementing them. Law and order is a state subject in Schedule 7 of the Indian constitution. Therefore, police across the country continue to be subordinate to the state government executive and are nowhere an independent or autonomous institution. This has been the bone of contention in recent times. Since the police are answerable to the state executive and the political party in power, the police invariably get politicized. The watershed in the history of India's administration, both the civil service and police, was the national emergency declared by former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi in 1975. The misuse of government machinery especially the police during national emergency to stifle the opposition through indiscriminate arrests contributed to an unprecedented level. It led to the politicization of the police force in India. This unhealthy trend of excessive political interference in the police administration continues even today. It has become an unwritten norm that the Chief of Police will be changed after every state assembly election to suit the vested interest of the newly elected political party. This often demoralizes the police force who is seen to succumb to political pressure. Moreover, an honest police officer, is often coerced to toe the political lines of the political party in power by subjecting him to administrative action by way of transfer or suspension on the basis of an alleged complaint taken up for inquiry. While suspension acts as a great humiliating factor, a transfer disrupts Police officer's family and children's education. Therefore, the police deliberately become ineffective and untrustworthy because of its subordination to the political class.
202 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Over the last thirty years, the situation has worsened due to criminalization of politics. Today many candidates across the political spectrum are contesting elections with the help of criminals and mafias; and now, increasingly, these criminals are getting elected themselves.

90% MATCHING BLOCK 218/219 W

The Second Administrative Reforms Commission in its report 'Ethics in Governance'

acknowledged this fact and observed – "The opportunity to influence crime investigations and to convert the policemen from being political adversaries to allies is the irresistible magnet drawing criminals to politics." The police personnel are often pressurized by these legislators with criminal antecedents to neglect or close an ongoing investigation against them. The police investigation officers as well as the public prosecutors are under tremendous pressure not to present a strong case in the courts against them. This is the more dangerous side of political interference, where rule of law and the existence of democratic institutions are being threatened. To survive in such a system, police personnel feel compelled to surrender to political influence in their work. This in turn gravely affects the police work, and specifically the criminal investigations. 5.3 Violation of Human Rights by the Police The Indian Police Act, which was enacted in 1861, is the central law governing the police in independent India. The Indian Police Act of 1861 was legislated by the British right after the revolt of 1857 to make the police force more subservient to the executive and to remain authoritarian towards the public. After independence, though amendments have been made to this law, the basic structure remains the same. Unfortunately, the police in India are not directly accountable to the Indian citizens. Absence of structures of accountability outside the police organization has made it more imperious. This has led to the steady rise in the violation of human rights of citizens by the police force in recent times. Complaints against the police officials for harassment, coercive corruption, custodial death, physical abuse, rape, threats, psychological humiliations, false encounters and assault are on the rise. For instance, as a response to an RTI application to 'First-post', the National Human Rights Commission acknowledged that a total of 894 deaths in judicial custody and 74 deaths in police custody have been recorded in India in 2017. The letter, signed by the joint registrar (Law) of the National Human Rights Commission, stated that Uttar Pradesh leads the chart of deaths in judicial custody by a significant margin, with 204 deaths recorded in the period between 1 January, 2017 and 2 August, 2017. The state was followed by Punjab with 76 deaths and Bihar with 64 deaths.

NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 203 5.4 Corruption within the Police Force The police system in India was designed to a strict hierarchical and military structure, based on the colonial distrust of the lower ranks. The decision making authority continues to be with a few high placed police officers, while the police constables merely followed orders. After independence, the nature of the political system drastically changed but the police system still remains almost intact. It is these colonial attributes like a hierarchical structure, lack of organizational transparency and accountability to the citizens that have perhaps led to the growth of corruption within the Indian police system. Transparency International in its report - "Daily Lives and Corruption: Public Opinion in South Asia" in 2010-11, pointed out that the police is seen as one of the two most corrupt institutions in India; the other being political parties. Therefore, police service in India is viewed with certain suspicion and apprehension. One encounter various types of corruption in the police department in India starting with bribes to protection money for protection of those involved in illegal activities, to internal pay-offs for getting posting in lucrative money-making departments within the police organization. To quote Arvind Verma – "Corrupt practices are now part of the Indian police system and are found in every department, in every rank and in every police institution including training colleges. The malaise has spread all over the country and in every aspect of policing." 5.5 Poor Working Conditions and Low Salary of Police Officials Police officers are often underpaid compared to the amount of power they have. The salaries of junior policemen like constables in India are very low. Leslie Palmier, in his comparative study of the control of bureaucratic corruption in Hong Kong, India, and Indonesia identified poor salaries as one of the important factors giving rise to corruption in these countries. Leslie Palmier had pointed out that "if the official is not to be tempted into corruption and disaffection, clearly there is an obligation on the government to provide or at least allow such benefits as will ensure his loyalty; one might call it an implicit contract." He concluded by saying that "adequate pay" was an "essential ingredient in reform". In addition, many police officers especially in the paramilitary divisions usually live in appalling conditions and under tremendous stress. For instance, India's largest paramilitary, Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF) is losing more personnel to suicides, poor working conditions and stress levels than the enemy's battles. These personnel are 204 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 fighting militants in North-East India and Jammu and Kashmir under very exhausting conditions with some not having access to even basic amenities like toilets and fresh water. These conditions take their toll on the psychology of the personnel which is driving many to commit suicide. Between 2012 and 2014, 370 paramilitary troopers committed suicide because of mental stress. The diseases like malaria, HIV and heart attacks amount 1,131 deaths in the last five years, while the Maoists have killed only 323. In the last few years, there has been steep rise in premature retirements in CRPF. The premature retirements in 2013 were at 4,186 which rose over 6,000 personnel in 2014, almost 20 exits per day. Unless salaries increase and working conditions improve, it would be impossible to obtain good performance from policemen. 5.6 Inadequate Modernization of Police Force In addition to these systemic problems, the resources, technology, weapons and procedures available to the police have not kept pace with the times. Today the criminals and crime syndicates have access to much greater fire power, faster transport, better communications, and in general far superior technology and speed in decision making. Revolution taken place in the nature of crime and when jurisdictional issues have become of vital significance with an era of globalization, the existing problems of police force have been further multiplied in manifold ways. Worldwide the rapid economic development, consumerism, globalization have given rise to new crimes, new modus operandi, and new kinds of criminal behaviors. The use of modern techniques, use of machines and computers has thrown new challenges before police force in any country, including India. Facilities at the Police Station level are important to make them effective. Accommodation, facilities and modernisation are important areas, which need critical evaluation as well as reform. The police forces are not in a position to match these criminal gangs given the many inadequacies in their functioning. Given the growth of cyber and other computer related crimes, computer forensic has been the major challenge before not only the police force but also the Indian criminal justice system. Therefore modernization, update training and sensitization to modern challenges to Indian police force are also utmost essential. 5.7 Conclusion While there is no denying the fact that the police in India play very important role in the process of governance, law and order administration in India needs to be restructured. NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 205 A long-term perspective plan is needed to re-organize the entire police administration in India. Proper process of recruitment of police officials, reorientation of the training programmes should take place so that the police administration can become more responsive and effective to meet the challenges of 21 st century India. Care should be taken to attract the talented persons into the police force by making the service conditions more attractive. Moreover, the police officers should have clearly demarcated powers and should not be over-burdened with trivial functions. Every police officer should be better equipped so as to enable him to respond to the dangerous situations like terrorism. In conclusion, the police force should be kept free from the process of politicization and corruption so that it can serve better the people of India. 5.8 Summary ? This unit focuses on the rise in the level of politicization of the police force. ? We have discussed the increase in police corruption. ? The violation of human rights by police force is dealt with. ? This section highlights the salary issues and proper working conditions of the police. 5.9 Glossary ? Police - The police are a constituted body of persons empowered by a state to enforce the law, to ensure the safety, health and possessions of citizens, and to prevent crime and civil disorder. Their lawful powers include arrest and the legitimized use of force. The term is most commonly associated with the police forces of a sovereign state that are authorized to exercise the police power of that state within a defined legal or territorial area of responsibility. ? Crime - A crime is an illegal action or activity for which a person can be punished by law. According to criminologist Paul Tappan it is "an intentional act or omission in violation of criminal law ..., committed without defense or justification, and sanctioned by the state as a felony or misdemeanor." ? The Bureau of Police Research and Development (BPR&D) – It was set up on 28 August 1970 in furtherance of the objective of the Government of India for the modernization of police forces. It has evolved as a multifaceted,

206 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 consultancy organization. At present it has 4 divisions – Research, Development, Training and Correctional Administration. ? Human Rights - Human rights are rights inherent to all human beings, regardless of gender, nationality, place of residence, sex, ethnicite, religion, color or and other categorization. Thus, human rights are non-discriminatory, meaning that all human beings are entitled to them and cannot be excluded from them. Of course, while all human beings are entitled to human rights, not all human beings experience them equally throughout the world. Many governments and individuals ignore human rights and grossly exploit other human beings. ? Cyber Crime - Cybercrime, or computer-oriented crime, is a crime that involves a computer and a network. Cybercrimes can be defined as: "Offences that are committed against individuals or groups of individuals with a criminal motive to intentionally harm the reputation of the victim or cause physical or mental harm, or loss, to the victim directly or indirectly, using modern telecommunication networks such as Internet (networks including chat rooms, emails, notice boards and groups) and mobile phones (Bluetooth/SMS/MMS)". Cybercrime may threaten a person or a nation's security and financial health. Issues surrounding these types of crimes have become high-profile, particularly those regarding hacking, copyright infringement, unwarranted mass-surveillance, child pornography, and child grooming. 5.10 Model questions ? What are the major issues confronting the police administration in India in recent times ? ? How would you explain the politicisation of the police force in India ? ? Write an essay on the corruption in the police system in India ? ? "Adequate pay is an essential ingredient in reform"- Lesley palmier. Do you agree with the statement ? Give reasons for your answer ? Why is adequate modernization essential for police force in India ? Discuss. ? Write a note on human rights violation by the police in India. ? Write a short note on criminalization of politics in India.
NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 207 ? What should be the role of the police in a democratic country like India ? Discuss. ? What are your suggestions to make the police administration more responsive and effective ? Discuss. 5.11 References ? Government of India, 1979, Reports of the National Police Commission I to VIII. ? Arora, Ramesh K. (ed.), 1999, Indian Administration Perceptions and Perspectives, Aalekh Publishers, Jaipur. ? Gupta, K.N, 2002, Indian Police and Vigilance in the 21" Century, Anmol, New Delhi. ? Roy, Joytilak Guha (ed.), 1999, Policing in Twenty First Century, Indian Institute of Public Administration, New Delhi. ? Raghavan, R.K, 1999, Policing a Democracy -A Comparative Study of India and the US., Manohar, New Delhi. ? Singh, Joginder, 2002, Inside Indian Police, Gyan Publishing House, New Delhi. ? Subramanian, K.S. 1995, Police Organization in India - A Historical and Contemporary Assessment, Nehru Memorial Museum Library, New Delhi.
208 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Notes

Hit and source - focused comparison, Side by Side

Submitted text As student entered the text in the submitted document.
Matching text As the text appears in the source.

1/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	23 WORDS	84%	MATCHING TEXT	23 WORDS
of State Administration Structure 1.0 Objectives 1.1 Introduction 1.2 Powers of the State Government 1.3 State legislature 1.3.1 Legislative procedures 1.3.2 Legislative control over administration 1.4 State Council of Ministers 1.5			OF STATE ADMINISTRATION* Structure 2.0 Objectives 2.1 Introduction 2.2 Powers of the State Government 2.3 Role of the Governor 2.4 State Legislature 2.4.1 Legislative Procedure 2.4.2 Legislative Control over Administration 2.5 State Council of Ministers 2.6

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

2/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 40 WORDS 38% MATCHING TEXT 40 WORDS

the constitutional framework of state administration. ? To discuss the power of the state government with respect to state list and concurrent list. ? To examine the role of the state legislature. ? To describe the role of the state Council of Ministers. 1.1

the Constitutional framework of the state administration. Powers of the state governments with respect to the State List and Concurrent List have been made clear. We have also discussed the role of the Governor and State Council of Ministers.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

3/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

aided and advised by the council of ministers headed by the Chief Minister.

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

4/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 42 WORDS 26% MATCHING TEXT 42 WORDS

the leader of the majority party of Bidhan Sabha as the Chief Minister and upon his / her advice rest of the ministers are appointed by the Governor. It is the duty of the council of ministers to look after the administration of the the leader of the majority party in the State Legislative Assembly. Functions of the Chief Minister are : 1. To communicate to the Governor the decisions of the Council of Ministers relating to the administration of the

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

5/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

the State Legislature -comprising of Governor and one house or two houses.

SA VANITHA-197211EP119.docx (D129003930)

6/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 73% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

is the secretary. The most important function of the secretary is to advise the minister in the is the Secretariat. The main function of the secretary is to advise the minister in the

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

7/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	20 WORDS	50%	MATCHING TEXT	20 WORDS

is the Chief Advisor to the Chief Minister and state cabinet. The entire state secretariat depends on the advice of the is the chief advisor to the Chief Minister and Secretary to the State Cabinet. He is the head of the

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

8/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	31 WORDS	91%	MATCHING TEXT	31 WORDS

Powers of the State government The Union government and the state government derive their powers, directly from the Constitution. The Constitution has adopted a three-fold distribution of legislative powers between the Union and

POWERS OF THE STATE GOVERNMENT As already mentioned, the Union government and state government derive their powers, directly from the Constitution. The Constitution has adopted a three-fold distribution of legislative powers between the Union and

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

states (Article 246). Schedule VII of the Constitution enumerates the subjects into three lists. List I or the Union List consists of the items over which the Union has exclusive powers of legislation. Similarly, List II or the State List comprises items over which the state has exclusive powers of legislation. There is yet another List (List III) known as the Concurrent List that comprises subjects over which both the Union and the states have powers to legislate. The residual powers are vested in the Union. We would now briefly discuss List II and List III, which enumerate the subjects over which the states have jurisdiction either exclusively or concurrently with the Union. i) State List The State List contains 59 items (originally 66 items in the Schedule VII) over which states have exclusive jurisdiction. Some of the important ones are- Public Order, Police, Agriculture, Public Health and Sanitation, Local Government, etc. These are subjects of maximum concern to the people, which can be better dealt with at the state level. These subjects are generally under the exclusive jurisdiction of the states, but under the following circumstances, the Parliament can legislate on these matters. a) In national interest, Council of States by a resolution of 2/3rd of its members present and voting may authorise the Parliament to legislate on a state subject. 12 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Such authorisation may be for one year at a time, but can be renewed by a fresh resolution; b) Under a proclamation of emergency, the Parliament may legislate on a state subject; c) With the consent of two or more states, the Parliament may legislate on a state subject with respect to the consenting states; d) Parliament has powers to legislate with reference to any subject (including a state subject) for the purpose of implementing treaties or international agreements and conventions; and e) When a proclamation is issued by the President on the failure of Constitutional machinery in any state, s/he may declare that the powers of the state legislature shall be exercised by or under the authority of Parliament. ii) Concurrent List The Concurrent List, originally comprises 52 items (though the last item is numbered 47) over which the Union and state legislatures have concurrent jurisdiction. The important ones are- Criminal Law, Criminal Procedure, Marriage, Education, Civil Procedure, Insurance, Economic and Social Planning etc. While the Union and states can legislate on any of the subjects in the Concurrent List, predominance is given to the Union Legislature. It means that in case of repugnancy between the Union and a state law relating to the same subject, the former prevails. If, however, the state law was states (Article 246). Schedule VII of the Constitution enumerates the subjects into three lists. List I or the Union List consists of the items over which the Union has exclusive powers of legislation. Similarly, List II or the State List comprises items over which the state has exclusive powers of legislation. There is yet another List (List III) known as the Concurrent List that comprises subjects over which both the Union and states have powers to legislate. The residual powers are vested in the Union. We would now briefly discuss List II and List III, which enumerate the subjects over which the states have jurisdiction either exclusively or concurrently with the Union. i) State List The State List contains 59 items (originally 66 items in the Schedule VII) over which states have exclusive jurisdiction. Some of the important ones are- Public Order, Police, Agriculture, Public Health and Sanitation, Local Government, etc. These are subjects of maximum concern to the people, which can be better dealt with at the state level. These subjects are generally under the exclusive jurisdiction of the states, but under the following circumstances, the Parliament can legislate on these matters. a) In national interest, Council of States by a resolution of 2/3 rd of its members present and voting may authorise the Parliament to legislate on a state subject. Such authorisation may be for one year at a time, but can be renewed by a fresh resolution; b) Under a proclamation of emergency, the Parliament may legislate on a state subject; c) With the consent of two or more states, the Parliament may legislate on a state subject with respect to the consenting states; d) Parliament has powers to legislate with reference to any subject (including a state subject) for the purpose of implementing treaties or international agreements and conventions; and e) When a proclamation is issued by the President on the failure of Constitutional machinery in any state, s/he may declare that the powers of the state legislature shall be exercised by or under the authority of Parliament. State and District Administration 29 ii) Concurrent List The Concurrent List, which originally comprises 52 items (though the last item is numbered 47) over which the Union and state legislatures have concurrent jurisdiction. The important ones are- Criminal Law, Criminal Procedure, Marriage, Education, Civil Procedure, Insurance, Economic and Social Planning etc. While the Union and states can legislate on any of the subjects in the Concurrent List, predominance is given to the Union Legislature. It means that in case of repugnancy between the Union and a state law relating to the same subject, the former prevails. If, however, the reserved for the assent of the President and has received such assent, the state law may prevail not withstanding such repugnancy, but it would still be competent for the Parliament to override such state law by subsequent legislation. Any dispute about the interpretation of the entries in the three lists is to be decided by the Courts. Following principles have been followed in such interpretation: a) In case of overlapping of a subject between the three lists, predominance is to be given to the Union Legislature; b) Each entry is given the widest importance that its words are capable of, without rendering another entry nugatory; and c) In order to determine whether a particular enactment falls under one entry or another, it's "pith and substance" is considered.

state law was reserved for the assent of the President and has received such assent, the state law may prevail notwithstanding such repugnancy, but it would still be competent for the Parliament to override such state law by subsequent legislation. Any dispute about the interpretation of the entries in the three lists is to be decided by the Courts. Following principles have been followed in such interpretation: a) In case of overlapping of a subject between the three lists, predominance is to be given to the Union Legislature; b) Each entry is given the widest importance that its words are capable of, without rendering another entry nugatory; and c) In order to determine whether a particular enactment falls under one entry or another, it's "pith and substance" is considered. 2.3

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

10/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 488 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 488 WORDS

Legislation provides the framework for policy formulation, and arms the government with powers to implement the policies. At the state level, the function of providing the necessary legislative framework is performed by State Legislature. There is no uniformity in the organisation of State Legislatures in India. In this regard, a sizeable number of states have unicameral system and remaining like Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Maharashtra, Karnataka etc. have bicameral system, that is, both Legislative Assembly and Legislative Council. Our Constitution provides that every state shall have at least one house, viz., the Legislative Assembly comprising 60 to 500 members (except Sikkim, Goa, Mizoram etc.) chosen by direct election on the basis of universal adult franchise from territorial constituencies. In addition, any state can create a second house, viz., Legislative Council if it so desires. This can be done by a resolution of the Assembly passed by a special majority (i.e., a majority of total membership of the Assembly not being less than two- thirds of the members actually present and voting) followed by an Act of Parliament. By the same process, an existing Legislative Council can be abolished also. The members of Legislative Council are indirectly elected. The election is to be in accordance with the principle of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote. Duration of the Assembly is five years unless dissolved earlier by the Governor. Its term may be extended by Parliament during an Emergency up to a period of six months beyond the expiry of the proclamation of an Emergency by the President. Legislative Procedure i) Regarding a Money Bill a) A Money Bill can originate only in the Legislative Assembly and not in the Council. b) The Council cannot reject or modify this Bill passed by the Assembly. It can only make recommendations, which may or may not be accepted by the Assembly. The Bill as passed by the Assembly with or without modification is presented to the Governor for assent. If the Council does not return the Bill within 14 days, it can straightaway be presented to the Governor for her/his assent. Thus, the will of the Assembly ultimately prevails. The Council can at best delay its passage. 14 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ii) Regarding any Bill other than a Money Bill a) Such a Bill can originate in either House. b) If a Bill is passed by the Assembly, the Council may reject the Bill, modify it or may not pass it for three months. If the Bill is again passed by the Assembly with or without modification, the Council, on its second journey, may only delay it by one month. c) If a Bill originates in the Council and is rejected by Legislation provides the framework for policy formulation, and arms the government with powers to implement the policies. At the state level, the function of providing the necessary legislative framework is performed by State Legislature. There is no uniformity in the organisation of State Legislatures in India. In this regard, a sizable number of states have unicameral system and remaining like Andhra Pradesh, Bihar, Maharashtra, Karnataka etc. have bicameral system, that is, both Legislative Assembly and Legislative Council. Our Constitution provides that every state shall have at least one house, viz., the Legislative Assembly comprising 60 to 500 members (except Sikkim, Goa, Mizoram etc.) chosen by direct election on the basis of universal adult franchise from territorial State and District Administration 31 constituencies. In addition, any state can create a second house, viz., Legislative Council if it so desires. This can be done by a resolution of the Assembly passed by a special majority (i.e., a majority of total membership of the Assembly not being less than two- thirds of the members actually present and voting) followed by an Act of Parliament. By the same process, an existing Legislative Council can be abolished also. The members of Legislative Council are indirectly elected. The election is to be in accordance with the principle of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote. Duration of the Assembly is five years unless dissolved earlier by the Governor. Its term may be extended by Parliament during an Emergency up to a period of six months beyond the expiry of the proclamation of an Emergency by the President. 2.4.1 Legislative Procedure i) Regarding A Money Bill a) A Money Bill can originate only in the Legislative Assembly and not in the Council. b) The Council cannot reject or modify this Bill passed by the Assembly. It can only make recommendations, which may or may not be accepted by the Assembly. The Bill as passed by the Assembly with or without modification is presented to the Governor for assent. If the Council does not return the Bill within 14 days, it can straightaway be presented to the Governor for her/his assent. Thus, the will of the Assembly ultimately prevails. The Council can at best delay its passage. ii) Regarding any Bill other than a Money Bill a) Such a Bill can originate in either House. b) If a Bill is passed by the Assembly, the Council may reject the Bill, modify it or may not pass it for three months. If the Bill is again passed by the Assembly with or without modification, the Council, on its second journey, may only delay it by one month. c) If a Bill originates in the Council and is rejected by the Assembly, the matter ends.

theAssembly, the matter ends. d) Thus, in every way, the supremacy of the Assembly is established; more so, in case of Money Bills. The dispute between two houses is always resolved according to the will of the Assembly. This is in contrast to the Union Legislature where a dispute between the two Houses is resolved by a joint sitting. This is probably in recognition of the fact that the Upper House in Union Legislature is representative of the

d) Thus, in every way, the supremacy of the Assembly is established; more so, in case of Money Bills. The dispute between two houses is always resolved according to the will of the Assembly. This is in contrast to the Union Legislature where a dispute between the two Houses is resolved by a joint sitting. This is probably in recognition of the fact that the Upper House in Union Legislature is representative of the

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

11/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

Chief Secretary is the head of the state secretariat – the nerve-centre of the state administration.

Chief Secretary is the head of the state secretariat. He is the administrative head of the state administration, following forms: i) Assembly Questions The members of the Assembly have a right to ask questions from the government. They can also ask supplementary questions. This device keeps the government on its toes. Whenever weaknesses are noticed, the government is compelled to promise and take corrective action. ii) Discussions Apart from asking questions, the members may ask for discussions over important matters. They may also bring forward Call Attention Motions and Adjournment Motions on important public matters. Even if such motions are not allowed, a lot of information has to be supplied by the government and some discussion does take place. Here again the government is kept on a tight leash and has to answer the representatives of the people.

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

12/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 109 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 109 WORDS

following forms: i) Assembly Questions The members of the Assembly have a right to ask questions from the government. They can also ask supplementary questions. This device keeps the government on its toes. Whenever weaknesses are noticed, the government is compelled to promise and take corrective action. ii) Discussions Apart from asking questions, the members may ask for discussions over important matters. They may also bring forward Call Attention Motions and Adjournment Motions on important public matters. Even if such motions are not allowed, a lot of information has to be supplied by the government and some discussion does take place. Here again the government is kept on a tight leash and has to answer the representatives of the people.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

13/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	195 WORDS	85%	MATCHING TEXT	195 WORDS

No money can be raised and no expenditure can be incurred without a vote by the Legislature. By controlling the purse strings, the Legislature controls the programmes and activities of the government. It is true that by virtue of its majority in the Legislature, the government may ultimately get the money it wants, but during the process a lot of discussion takes place. This keeps the government in touch with the needs of the people. The discussion also highlights the weaknesses of the administration in the implementation of the voted programmes. iv) Post-expenditure Control The State Legislature also scrutinises the expenditure incurred by the government through the device of audit. Our Constitution provides for an integrated accounts and audit system. The Comptroller and Auditor General of India (CAG) gets the account of the state government audited and sends her/his report to the Assembly through the Governor. The Public Accounts Committee of the State Legislature goes through this report, examines and finally reports to the Legislature. Any instances of unauthorised, improper, or imprudent expenditure are, thus, discussed in detail and brought to the notice of the Legislature, which can then keep a vigilant eye on the government. v) Control through Legislative Committees Apart from the Public Accounts Committee mentioned earlier, there are several other

No money can be raised and no expenditure can be incurred without a vote through the Legislature. Through controlling the purse strings, the Legislature controls the programmes and activities of the government. It is true that through virtue of its majority in the Legislature, the government may ultimately get the money it wants voted, but throughout the procedure, a lot of discussion takes place. This keeps the government in touch with the needs of the people. The discussion also highlights the weaknesses of the administration in the implementation of the voted programmes. Post-expenditure Control The State Legislature also scrutinizes the expenditure incurred through the government through the device of audit. Our Constitution gives for an integrated accounts and audit system. The Comptroller and Auditor General of India (CAG) get the accounts of the state government audited and send his report to the Assembly through the Governor. The Public Accounts Committee of the State Legislature goes through this report, examines and finally reports to the Legislature. Any instances of unauthorized, improper, or imprudent expenditure are therefore discussed in detail and brought to the notice of the Legislature, which can then keep a vigilant eye on the government. Control through Legislative Committees Separately from the Public Accounts Committee mentioned earlier, there are many other committees, viz., Estimates Committee, Committee on Public Undertakings, Committee on Government Assurances, etc. These committees examine the various aspects of the working of the government and make useful suggestions. They also criticise the government for its failures and bring these failures to the notice of the Legislature and the people. This is a good device of exercising control over the government, as the Assembly is too unwieldy a body to examine the working of the government in detail. vi) Ministerial Responsibility The most potent function of the Legislature is to enforce the ministerial responsibility. In a parliamentary form of government, the political executive is a part of the Legislature and is responsible to it all the time. The government can be thrown out at any time by a vote of no-confidence or even on being rejected on its budget or any of the substantive legislative measures. As the political executive is always responsible to the legislature, committees, viz., Estimates Committee, Committee on Public Undertakings, Committee on Assurances, etc. These committees look at the several characteristics of the working of the government and create useful suggestions. They also criticize the government for its failures and bring these failures to the notice of the Legislature and the people. This is a good device of exercising control over the government, as the Assembly is too unwieldy a body to look at the working of the government in detail. Ministerial Responsibility The mainly potent function of the Legislature is, to enforce the ministerial responsibility. In a Parliamentary form of government, the political executive is a part of the Legislature and is responsible to it all the time. The government can be thrown out at any time through a vote of no-confidence or even on being rejected on its budget or any of the substantive legislative measures. As the political executive is always responsible to the legislature,

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

14/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	144 WORDS	90%	MATCHING TEXT	144 WORDS

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

15/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	928 WORDS	96%	MATCHING TEXT	928 WORDS

the administrators. 1.4 State Council of Ministers As already mentioned, the executive power of the state is exercised in the name of the Governor, who is the Constitutional Head of the state. But, the Governor has to have a Council of Ministers with the Chief Minister as its Head to aid and advise her/him. However, for a few discretionary functions, the Governor has to act on the advice of the Council of Ministers. It means that the real executive power is exercised by the Council of Ministers. The Council of Ministers is appointed by the Governor on the advice of the Chief Minister and hold Office during her/his pleasure. It means that a Minister can also be dismissed by the Governor on the advice of the Chief Minister. On the pattern of the Union government, ministers in the state governments are of the following categories: i) Cabinet Ministers ii) Ministers of State iii) Deputy Ministers In a State, total number of Ministers, including the Chief Minister, in the council shall not exceed fifteen percent of the total number of members of the Legislative Assembly of that State. The system of Cabinet Committees is not so popular in the state governments as in the Central government. i) Powers and Functions of the Council of Ministers The Council of Ministers is the highest policy-making body of the state government. It lays down policy in respect to all matters within the legislative and administrative competence of the state government. The Council also reviews the implementation of the policy laid down by it and can revise any policy in view of the feedback received during implementation. Since the Governor has to exercise her/his executive powers on the advice of the Council of Ministers and all the executive power is exercised in the name of the Governor, there is no limitation on the powers of the Council except the following: NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 17 a) The limits imposed by the Constitution and the laws passed by the Union and State Legislature. b) Self-imposed limits to exclude consideration of less important matters of State and District Administration ii) Division of Work into Departments at the State Level According to the doctrine of Ministerial Responsibility, the Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the StateAssembly. It is, however, impossible for the Council to take all the decisions collectively. During the early British period, the administration of the state was carried on by the Governor-in-Council.At that time, most of the decisions were taken collectively, because the number of decisions to be taken was not very large. With the passage of time, the scope of governmental activity increased and the matters that came up for the decision the administration?

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

..... 2.5 STATE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS As already mentioned, the executive power of the state is exercised in the name of the Governor, who is the Constitutional Head of the state. But, the Governor has to have a Council of Ministers with the Chief Minister as its Head to aid and advise her/him. However, for a few discretionary functions, the Governor has to act on the advice of the Council of Ministers. It means that the real executive power is exercised by the Council of Ministers. The Council of Ministers is appointed by the Governor on the advice of the Chief Minister and hold Office during her/his pleasure. It means that a Minister can also be dismissed by the Governor on the advice of the Chief Minister. On the pattern of the Union government, ministers in the state governments are of the following categories: i) Cabinet Ministers ii) Ministers of State iii) Deputy Ministers In a State, total number of Ministers, including the Chief Minister, in the council shall not exceed fifteen percent of the total number of members of the Legislative Assembly of that State. The system of Cabinet Committees is not so popular in the state governments as in the Central government. i) Powers and Functions of the Council of Ministers The Council of Ministers is the highest policy-making body of the state government. It lays down policy in respect to all matters within the legislative and administrative competence of the state government. The Council also reviews the implementation of the policy laid down by it and can revise any policy in view of the feedback received during implementation. Since the Governor has to exercise her/his executive powers on the advice of the Council of Ministers and all the executive power is exercised in the name of the Governor, there is no limitation on the powers of the Council except the following: a) The limits imposed by the Constitution and the laws passed by the Union and State Legislature. b) Self-imposed limits to exclude consideration of less important matters. State and District Administration Division of Work into Departments at the State Level According to the doctrine of the Council also proliferated. This led to the development of "portfolio system" in which the Councillors were placed in charge of certain specified subjects leaving only a few important matters to be placed before the whole Council. The same system has continued after Independence. Under our Constitution, the Governor has to make rules for the efficient conduct of business [Article 166(3)]. The state governments have framed "Allocation of Business Rules", according to which the work is divided among different ministers. This division of work can be done on the basis of functions, or on the basis of clientele, or on geographical basis or on the basis of the combination of these factors. Very often, the division of work is decided on personal considerations rather than rational criteria. Most of the work in respect of subjects allotted to a Minister is disposed of by the Minister. However, according to the rules of business, some matters have to be reserved by the Minister for: a) Consideration of the Chief Minister These are called coordination cases, in these cases the Minister in charge of a portfolio records her/his recommendations and submits the file to the Chief Minister for her/his orders. Rules of business give a list of such cases. The Chief Minister may also reserve some cases or classes of cases for her/his orders. b) Presentation before the Cabinet These are important policy matters, which have wide repercussions. Important cases of disagreement between two or more ministers are also brought before the Cabinet for its decision. A list of such cases is given in the rules of business. In addition, the Chief Minister may require any particular case of any department 18 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 to be placed before the Cabinet. Afew of the typical Cabinet cases are given below: – Annual Financial Statement to be laid before the Legislature, and demands for supplementary grants. – Proposals affecting state finance, not approved by the Finance Minister. – Exemption of important matters from the purview of State Public Service Commission. – Proposals for imposition of new taxes, etc. The size and composition of the Council of Ministers is important for effective public administration. The Ministry and Cabinet come into existence for running the administration efficiently and impartially. In view of above, it needs to be compact and homogenous, its size being determined by administrative needs. It will depend on various factors such as the area of state, its population, level of economic development and specific problems. However, the present size of Council of Ministers in the states especially in larger ones appears to be disproportionate. In this context, an attempt was made by the 91st Constitutional Amendment introduced with effect from of Ministerial Responsibility, the Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the Assembly. It is, however, impossible for the Council to take all the decisions collectively. During the early British period, the administration of the state was carried on by the Governor-in-Council. At that time, most of the decisions were taken collectively, because the number of decisions to be taken was not very large. With the passage of time, the scope of governmental activity increased and the matters that came up for the decision of the Council also proliferated. This led to the development of "portfolio system" in which the Councillors were placed in charge of certain specified subjects leaving only a few important matters to be placed before the whole Council. The same system has continued after Independence. Under our Constitution, the Governor has to make rules for the efficient conduct of business [Article 166(3)]. The state governments have framed "Allocation of Business Rules", according to which the work is divided among different ministers. This division of work can be done on the basis of functions, or on the basis of clientele, or on geographical basis or on the basis of the combination of these factors. Very often, the division of work is decided on personal considerations rather than rational criteria. Most of the work in respect of subjects allotted to a Minister is disposed of by the Minister. However, according to the rules of business, some matters have to be reserved by the Minister for: a) Consideration of the Chief Minister These are called coordination cases, in these cases the Minister in charge of a portfolio her/his recommendations and submit the file to the Chief Minister for her/his orders. Rules of business give a list of such cases. The Chief Minister may also reserve some cases or classes of cases for her/his orders. b) Presentation before the Cabinet These are important policy matters, which have wide repercussions. Important cases of disagreement between two or more ministers are also brought before the Cabinet for its decision. A list of such cases is given in the rules of business. In addition, the Chief Minister may require any particular case of any department to be placed before the Cabinet. A few of the typical Cabinet cases are given below: – Annual Financial Statement to be laid before the Legislature, and demands for supplementary grants. – Proposals affecting state finance, not approved by the Finance Minister. – Exemption of important matters from the purview of State Public Service Commission. – Proposals for imposition of new taxes, etc. The size and composition of the Council of Ministers is important for effective public administration. The Ministry and Cabinet come into existence for running the administration efficiently and impartially. In view of above, it needs to be compact and homogenous, its size being determined by administrative needs. It will depend on various factors such as the area of state, its population, level of economic development and specific problems. However, the present size of Council of Ministers in the states especially in larger ones appears to be disproportionate. In this context, an attempt was made by the 91 st Constitutional Amendment introduced with effect from 1 st January Constitutional Profile of State Administration 36 2004 by restricting the size of Council of Ministers to a maximum of 15 per cent of the strength of the respective State Legislative Assembly, but the problem still persists. In bigger states of India (for example, U.P. where the Assembly has a strength of 404 legislators), even this restriction has not prevented formation of jumbo sized Ministries. Hence, there is growing realisation that there is an urgent need to reduce the size of Council of Ministers in the states. The SARC has recommended that the maximum size of the Council of Ministers may be fixed in a range of 10% to 15% of the strength of their Legislative Assemblies (

1st January 2004 by restricting the size of Council of Ministers to a maximum of 15 per cent of the strength of the respective State LegislativeAssembly, but the problem still persists. In bigger states of India (for example, U.P. where the Assembly has a strength of 404 legislators), even this restriction has not prevented formation of jumbo sized Ministries. Hence, there is growing realisation that there is an urgent need to reduce the size of Council of Ministers in the states. The SARC has recommended that the maximum size of the Council of Ministers may be fixed in a range of 10% to 15% of the strength of their Legislative Assemblies. 1.5

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

16/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

State Legislature has exclusive jurisdiction over items given in the State List (Schedule VII of the constitution).

State Legislature has exclusive jurisdiction over items given in the State List (Schedule VII of the Constitution)

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

17/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 38 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 38 WORDS

The Governor is the constitutional Head of the State, while the real executive power is exercised in her/his name by the Council of Ministers headed by the Chief Minister. In the light of the constitutional framework of the State administration, the Governor is the Constitutional Head of the state, while the real executive power is exercised in her/his name by the Council of Ministers headed by the Chief Minister. in this we have the Constitutional framework of the state administration.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

18/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

the emerging trends in the relationship between the Union and States

the emerging trends in the relationship between the Union and states. 2.8

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

19/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	10 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	10 WORDS

the constitutional provisions regarding the functioning of the state government.

the Constitutional provisions regarding the functioning of the state Government; ?

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

20/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	13 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	13 WORDS

postponement of the punishment Repugnancy: contradiction Respite: a temporary stay of execution 1.8

postponement of the punishment. Repugnancy : Contradiction. Respite : A temporary stay of execution. 2.9

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

21/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	13 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	13 WORDS

the various ways through which the legislature exercises its control over the administration. ?

the various ways through which the Legislature exercises its control over the administration?
.....
.....
.....
.....
.....
.....
.....
.....
.....
..... 2.5

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

22/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

of India (2009) Second Administrative Reforms Commission, (15th Report), State and District Administration, pp. 22-23 20 ?

of India, (2009) Second Administrative Reforms Commission (15 th Report), State and District Administration, pp. 65-68,

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

23/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

Arora, R. K. & Goyal, R. (2013). Indian Public Administration : Institutions and Issues. New Delhi, India : New Age International Publishers. ?

Arora, R.K. & Goyal, R. (2013). Indian Public Administration: Institutions and Issues. New Delhi, India: New Age International Publishers.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

24/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

S. R. (2000). State Governments in India. New Delhi, India : The Macmillan Company of India Limited. ?

S.R. (2000). State Governments in India. New Delhi, India: The Macmillan Company of India Limited.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

25/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

Basu, D. D. (2019). Introduction to the constitution of India (24th ed.) New Delhi, India : Lexis Nexis.

Basu, D.D. (2019). Introduction to the Constitution of India (24 th ed.). New Delhi, India: Lexis Nexis.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

26/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 76% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

the powers and functions of the Council of Ministers. ?
Discuss the distribution of

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

27/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 57% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

the Governor is the nominal head of the state and with the aid and advice of the state cabinet headed by the chief minister, he/

The Governor is the Constitutional head of the state and on the advice of the Council of Ministers headed by the Chief Minister. he (

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

28/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 43% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

and removal of the Governor ? Special privileges of the Governor ? Powers and Functions of the Governor ? Discretionary Powers ? Position of the Governor 2.1 Introduction The

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

29/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	19 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	19 WORDS

that the Governor of a state shall be appointed by the President by warrant under his hand and seal.

SA Issues in indian polity.docx (D115818322)

30/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	11 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	11 WORDS

Chief minister and other ministers are appointed by the Governor.

chief minister and other ministers are appointed by the Governor

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

31/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	57%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

is appointed as the Chief Minister and upon his/her advice other ministers are appointed by the Governor. The is appointed as the Chief Minister by the Governor. Other Ministers are appointed by the Governor on the

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

32/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	17 WORDS	75%	MATCHING TEXT	17 WORDS

is vested in the hands of the Governor. The executive functions of the Governor are as follows:- a)

SA VANITHA-197211EP119.docx (D129003930)

33/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	15 WORDS	87%	MATCHING TEXT	15 WORDS

the state government to carry on the functions in accordance with the provisions of the constitution,

SA VANITHA-197211EP119.docx (D129003930)

34/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	14 WORDS	89%	MATCHING TEXT	14 WORDS

The Governor has the power to grant pardons, reprieves, respites or remission of punishments

SA Issues in indian polity.docx (D115818322)

Ouriginal by Turnitin

35/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	27 WORDS	48%	MATCHING TEXT	27 WORDS

report to the President regarding the situation of the concerned state that the government can not be carried on in accordance with the provisions of the constitution is report to the President under Article 356 that a situation has arisen which the Government of State be carried on in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution is

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

Exercise of Discretion by the Governor : It has already been pointed out that the Governor has to exercise his powers on the advice of the Council of Ministers. He does not, therefore, have much discretion in the exercise of his powers as long as a stable Ministry enjoying the confidence of the Assembly is in office. However, this is not always the case. The Governor may then be called upon NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 27 to exercise his discretion. It is this exercise of discretion that has made the Governor's office the most controversial constitutional office of the country. Major controversies have arisen in the following types of cases in the past: i) Appointment of Chief Minister The Governor appoints the Chief Minister and on his advice the Council of Ministers. When a party with absolute majority elects a leader, the Governor has no choice but to appoint him the Chief Minister and invite him to form the government. Problems arise when no political party has an absolute majority in the legislature. Here the discretion of the Governor comes into play. For example, in 1952 the Congress Party was the largest single party in Madras legislature, but did not have an absolute majority. Still the Governor Mr. Sri Prakash invited Mr. C. Rajgopalachari to form the government as the leader of the largest single party. This principle was, however, not followed in West Bengal in 1970. The CPM led by Mr. Jyoti Basu was the largest single party in the West Bengal Assembly. The Governor Mr. S.S. Dhavan asked Mr. Basu to prove his majority. Mr. Basu insisted on calling the Legislative Assembly and proving his majority on the floor of the House. The Governor ultimately did not invite him to form the government. The opponents of Congress criticised this on the ground that this was done at the behest of the Congress government which was in office at the Centre at that time. Thus different criteria have been followed by different Governors even in similar circumstances. ii) Dismissal of a Ministry A Chief Minister and his Ministry hold office during the pleasure of the Governor, which is not subject to any scrutiny. However, the Governor has to exercise his discretion judiciously. There is a general feeling that the Governors have not done so. For example, the Governor of West Bengal, Mr. Dharma Veera dismissed the Ajoy Mukherjee Ministry in 1967 on the grounds that he did not call a meeting of the Assembly within the time specified by the Governor for proving the majority. The action was severely criticised by many jurists who felt that it was a wrong convention to establish. It would have been much better to establish the convention that a Governor can call a meeting of the Assembly to test the majority of the government, in case

Exercise of Discretion through the Governor It has already been pointed out that the Governor has to exercise his powers on the advice of the Council of Ministers. He does not, so, have much discretion in the exercise of his powers as long as a stable Ministry enjoying the confidence of the Assembly is in office. Though, this is not always the case. The Governor may then be described upon to exercise his discretion. It is this exercise of discretion that has made the Governor's office the mainly controversial Constitutional office of the country. Major controversies have arisen in the following kinds of cases in the past : Appointment of Chief Ministers: The Governor appoints the Chief Minister and on his advice the Council of Ministers. When a party with absolute majority elects a leader, the Governor has no choice but to appoint him the Chief Minister and invite him to form the government. Troubles arise when no political party has an absolute majority in the legislature. Here the discretion of the Governor comes into play. For instance, in 1952 the Congress Party was the largest single party in Madras legislature, but did not have an absolute majority. Still the Governor Mr. Sri Prakash invited Mr. C. Rajgopalachari to form the government as the leader of the largest single party. This principle was, though, not followed in West Bengal in 1970. The CPM led through Mr. Jyoti Basu was the largest single party in the West Bengal Assembly. The Governor Mr. S.S. Dhavan asked Mr. Basu to prove his majority. Mr. Basu insisted on calling the Legislative Assembly and proving his majority on the floor of the House. The Governor ultimately did not invite him to form the government. The opponents of Congress criticized this on the ground that this was done at the behest of the Congress government which was in Office at the Centre at that time. Therefore, dissimilar criteria have been followed through dissimilar Governors even in similar circumstances. Dismissal of a Ministry: A Chief Minister and his Ministry hold office throughout the pleasure of the Governor, which is not subject to any scrutiny. Though, the Governor has to exercise his discretion judiciously. There is a general feeling that the Governors have not done so. For instance, the Governor of West Bengal, Mr. Dharma Veera dismissed the Ajoy Mukheijee Ministry in 1967 on the grounds that he did not call a meeting of the Assembly within the time specified through the Governor for proving the majority. The action was severely criticized through several jurists who felt that it was a wrong convention to establish. It would have been much better to establish the convention that a Governor can call a meeting of the Assembly to test the the Chief Minister refuses to do so. The opposition interpreted it as a deliberate attempt on the majority of the government, in case the Chief Minister refuses to do so. The opposition interpreted it as a deliberate attempt on the

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

37/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

on part of the Governor for helping the ruling party at the Centre. According to 28 ?

on the part of the Governor for helping the ruling party at the Centre. According to the amount payable by the state exchequer to the District Council as royalty from the licenses for

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

38/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 64% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

39/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 579 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 579 WORDS

Governor's pleasure is subject to the Ministry enjoying the confidence of the Assembly, which alone should decide the fate of a Ministry. iii) Dissolution of the Assembly In British Parliamentary Democracy, the king is guided by the advice of the Prime Minister in the matter of dissolution of the House of Commons. Likewise, the Governor should be guided by the advice of the Chief Minister in the matter of dissolution of the Assembly. Unfortunately, such a convention has not been established in India. For example, in 1967 the Chief Minister of Punjab, Mr. Gurnam Singh advised the Governor to dissolve the Assembly. His advice was not accepted by the Governor on the grounds that as long as it is possible to form a government, the Assembly should not be dissolved. Same thing happened to the advice of Mr. Charan Singh when he advised the Governor of U.P. in 1968 to dissolve the Assembly. In 2003, the Chief Minister of U.P. Ms. Mayawati advised the Governor to dissolve the Assembly but the Governor did not accept the advice on the ground that the party in power had lost the majority. The opposition parties have alleged that here again the Governor have tended to act according to the wishes of the Central Government. iv) Use of Emergency Powers It has also been alleged that the Governors have not used their discretion judiciously in advising the President for using his emergency powers under Article 356 of the Constitution. In 1959 itself, the Governor of Kerala reported to the President that due to failure of law and order, the government of the state could not be carried on according to the provisions of the Constitution. The first non- Congress state government of the country was thrown out by the President on the basis of this report, which was severely criticised by all sections of the opposition. In 1984, the Governors of J&K and Andhra Pradesh verified the numerical support of the ruling (non-Congress) parties in the Assembly and hurriedly advised the dismissal of the state governments on the ground that in the absence of stable majorities, the governments of these states could not be carried on according to the Constitution. In either case, the majority of the government was not tested on the floor of the Assembly. Moreover, in case of Andhra Pradesh even the arithmetic of numbers proved to be incorrect. In these cases, there were open allegations also that the Governors had tried to reduce the state governments to a minority. NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 29 2.5 Conclusion Thus, it appears that our Constitution envisages a dual role for the Governor. He is a Constitutional head of the state government as well as a representative of the President. The mode of

Governor's pleasure is subject to the Ministry enjoying the confidence of the Assembly, which alone should decide the fate of a Ministry. Dissolution of the Assembly: In British Parliamentary Democracy, the king is guided through the advice of the Prime Minister in the matter of dissolution of the House of Commons. Likewise, the Governor should be guided through the advice of the Chief Minister in the matter of dissolution of the Assembly. Unluckily, such a convention has not been recognized in India. For instance, in 1967 the Chief Minister of Punjab, Mr. Gurnam Singh advised the Governor to dissolve the Assembly. His advice was not accepted through the Governor on the grounds that as long as it is possible to form a government, the Assembly should not be dissolved. Same thing happened to the advice of Mr. Charan Singh when he advised the Governor of U.P. in 1968 to dissolve the Assembly. In 2003, the Chief Minister of U.P. Ms. Mayawati advised the Governor to dissolve the Assembly but the Governor did not accept the advice on the ground that party in power had lost the majority. The opposition parties have alleged that here again the Governors have tended to act according to the wishes of the Central Government. Use of Emergency Powers: It has also been alleged that the Governors have not used their discretion judiciously in advising the President for using his emergency powers under Article 356 of the Constitution. In 1959 itself, the Governor of Kerala reported to the President that due to failure of law and order, the government of the state could not be accepted on according to the provisions of the Constitution. The first non-Congress state government of the country was thrown out through the President on the basis of this report, which was severely criticized through all sections of the Opposition. In 1984, the Governors of J&K and Andhra Pradesh verified the numerical support of the ruling (non- Congress) parties in the Assembly and hurriedly advised the dismissal of the state governments on the ground that in the absence of stable majorities, the governments of these states could not be accepted on according to the Constitution. In either case, the majority of the government was not tested on the floor of the Assembly. Moreover, in case of Andhra Pradesh even the arithmetic of numbers proved to be incorrect. In these cases, there were open allegations also that the Governors had tried to reduce the state governments to a minority . General Remarks Therefore, it appears that our Constitution envisages a dual role for the Governor. He is a Constitutional head of the state government as well as a representative of the appointment of the Governor and his holding office during the pleasure of the President have tended to emphasise the second role of the Governor, i.e., his role as a representative of the President. Since the President has to act on the advice of the Council of Ministers headed by the Prime Minister, the Governor has to indirectly act according to the wishes of the leader of the ruling party at the Centre. This has been resented by the opposition parties and has also been criticised by eminent jurists. It has been argued that provisions regarding the appointment and termination of the Governor have made him a tool of the ruling party at the Centre and not an impartial head of the state. On the other side, it has been argued that the mode of appointment and termination of the Governor was deliberately adopted by the framers of Constitution, after a good deal of debate, with a view to guard against the fissiparous tendencies present in our polity. 2.6

President. The mode of appointment of the Governor and his holding office throughout the pleasure of the President has tended to emphasize the second role of the Governor, i.e., his role as a representative of the President. Since the President has to act on the advice of the Council of Ministers headed through the Prime Minister, the Governor has to indirectly act according to the wishes of the leader of the ruling party at the Centre. This has been resented through the opposition parties and has also been criticized through eminent jurists. It has been argued that provisions concerning the appointment and termination of the Governor have made him a tool of the ruling party at the Centre and not an impartial head of the state. On the other side, it has been argued that the mode of appointment and termination of the Governor was deliberately adopted through the framers of Constitution, after a good deal of debate, with a view to guard against the fissiparous tendencies present in our polity.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

40/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 52% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

failure of the constitutional machinery in the state is the discretionary power of the Governor. b) The proclamation of the President' of the state. ? Indicate the legislative functions of the Governor. ? Describe the executive powers of the Governor. ?

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

41/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 58% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

SA VANITHA-197211EP119.docx (D129003930)

42/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 65% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

the constitutional head is the Governor and the real executive is the council of ministers headed by the Chief Minister.

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

43/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 76% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

aid and advise the Governor in the discharge of his/her functions except the discretionary

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

44/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 32 WORDS 39% MATCHING TEXT 32 WORDS to the office of the Governor. ? Discuss the changing role of the Governor in India today. ? Examine the role of the Governor in Centre–State relations. ? Discuss the role of the Governor

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

45/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

the Chief Minister and the Governor 4.1 Introduction The Chief Minister is the prototype of the convention of the parliamentary system of governance that the leader of the majority party will be appointed as the Chief Minister.

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

46/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 45% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

SA THESIS FINAL.pdf (D16635872)

47/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

is in a position to form the ministry, then the Governor

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

48/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

the council of ministers The Chief Minister is the leader of the council of ministers. He

the Council of Ministers The Chief Minister is the leader of the Council Ministers. he

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

49/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 50% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

and functions The functions of the Chief Minister can be explained under the following heads : a) As the leader of the

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

50/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 68% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

the Chief Minister plays the role of mediator between the Governor and the council of ministers.

the chief minister is the principal channel of communication between the Governor and the council of ministers (

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

51/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 37 WORDS 33% MATCHING TEXT 37 WORDS

the decisions of the council of ministers to the Governor and places the advice of the Governor before the council for consideration. In fact he is bridge or channel of communication between the Governor and the council of ministers.

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

52/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

Advocate General, Chairman and other members of the State Public Service Commission

SA 180E3620_ Indian Administration.docx (D165106916)

Ouriginal by Turnitin

53/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 318 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 318 WORDS

The Chief Minister is the leader of the Council of Ministers. With the passage of time, the position of Chief Minister has strengthened vis-a-vis his Council of Ministers. He has to assign portfolios among his ministers and can change such portfolios when he likes. He plays a coordinating role in the functioning of his Council of Ministers. He has to see that the decisions of the various departments are coherent. He has to lead and defend his Council of Ministers in the Assembly. In short, he has to ensure the collective responsibility of the Council of Ministers to the State Assembly. The Chief Minister sets the agenda for the Cabinet and greatly influences its decisions. He takes decisions on important matters of coordination even though these are allotted to individual ministers. Moreover, the Governor appoints the Council of Ministers on the advice of the Chief Minister and the ministers hold Office during the pleasure of the Governor. As a result of these provisions, the Minister, in fact, holds office during the pleasure of the Chief Minister. This power of dismissing the ministers at will and the power to change their portfolios has greatly strengthened the power of the Chief Minister in relation to his ministers and ultimately the Council of Ministers. It must also be realised that the power of the Chief Minister in relation to his Council of Ministers also depends on political conditions prevailing in the state. If a cohesive party has an absolute majority in the Assembly, the Chief Minister becomes very powerful and the ministers are afraid of him. His power is further enhanced in case of a statewide regional party for, in that case he is not subject to the discipline of the national leadership. The position of a Chief Minister gets weakened if he heads a coalition government or a faction-ridden party. In either case, he or she has to effect compromises to keep a balance among the coalition partners or various factions within the party. 46 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Powers of

The Chief Minister is the leader of the Council of Ministers. With the passage of time, the position of Chief Minister has strengthened vis-à-vis his Council of Ministers. He has to assign portfolios in the middle of his ministers and can change such portfolios when he likes. He plays a coordinating role in the functioning of his Council of Ministers. He has to see that the decisions of the several departments are coherent. He has to lead and defend his Council of Ministers in the Assembly. In short, he has to ensure the communal responsibility of the Council of Ministers to the State Assembly. The Chief Minister sets the agenda for the Cabinet and greatly influences its decisions. He takes decisions on significant matters of coordination even though these are allotted to individual ministers. Moreover, the Governor appoints the Council of Ministers on the advice of the Chief Minister and the ministers hold Office throughout the pleasure of the Governor. As a result of these provisions, the Minister, in fact, holds Office throughout the pleasure of the Chief Minister. This power of dismissing the ministers at will and the power to change their portfolios has greatly strengthened the power of the Chief Minister in relation to his ministers and ultimately the Council of Ministers. It necessity also be realized that the power of the Chief Minister in relation to his Council of Ministers also depends on political circumstances prevailing in the state. If a cohesive party has an absolute majority in the Assembly, the Chief Minister becomes very powerful and the ministers are afraid of him. His power is further enhanced in case of a statewide local party for, in that case he is not subject to the discipline of the national leadership. The position of a Chief Minister gets weakened if he heads a coalition government or a faction- ridden party. In either case, he or she has to affect compromises to keep a balance in the middle of the coalition partners or several factions within the party. powers of the Governor : The powers of Chief Minister in relation to the Governor have not been mentioned anywhere in the Constitution. A convention was sought to be established whereby the Chief Minister could be consulted regarding the appointment of the Governor in his state. Even this has not been followed by the Union government in many cases. The only other power, which can be indirectly inferred from the Constitution is the power to exercise executive power of the state in the name of the Governor. All the public appearances of the Governor and the speeches delivered by him on such occasions have to be in accordance with policy laid down by the Council of Ministers headed by the Chief Minister; the speeches of the Governor on ceremonial occasions and the annual speech before the Assembly have to be approved by the Cabinet. Powers of the Chief Minister in relation to the Legislature The Chief Minister is also the leader of the House. Apart from this formal position, the Chief Minister provides real legislative leadership to the House in the sense that -he sets the legislative agenda. The legislative measures are brought before the Assembly after the approval of the Council of Ministers headed by the Chief Minister. It is true that private members may also bring a Bill before the Assembly. But, that has a limited chance of success. Apart from the fact that it has the party. The powers of Chief Minister in relation to the Governor have not been mentioned anywhere in the Constitution. A convention was sought to be recognized whereby the Chief Minister could be consulted concerning the appointment of the Governor in his state. Even this has not been followed through the Union government in several cases. The only other power, which can be indirectly inferred from the Constitution is the power to exercise executive power of the state in the [name of the Governor. All the public appearances of the Governor and the speeches delivered through him on such occasions have to be in accordance with policy laid down the Council of Ministers headed through the Chief Minister. the speeches of the Governor on ceremonial occasions and the annual speech before the Assembly have to be approved through the Cabinet. Powers of the Chief Minister in Relation to the Legislature The Chief Minister is also the leader of the House. Separately from this formal position, the Chief Minister gives real legislative leadership to the House in the sense that he sets the legislative agenda. The legislative measures are brought before the Assembly after the approval of the Council of Ministers headed through the Chief Minister. It is true that private members may also bring a Bill before the Assembly. But, that has a limited chance of success. Separately from the fact that it has backing of the majority party, the private members do not have the wealth of information that is available to the government. Apart from setting up the legislative agenda, the Chief Minister has to keep the Assembly informed about the various activities of the government by answering questions, making statements, intervening in the debates, etc. Powers of the Chief Minister in relation to the Executive By virtue of being the head of the political executive, the Chief Minister controls the entire bureaucracy of the state. In this function, he is assisted by the Secretariat headed by the Chief Secretary. He approves all senior appointments like those of Secretaries, Additional/Joint/Deputy Secretaries, Heads of the Departments, Chairpersons and Managing Directors of Public Sector Undertakings, etc. Through his Cabinet, he controls their service conditions and disciplinary matters. He provides them leadership to ensure good performance and good morale. At the same time, he has to keep a watch on their performance through administrative channels as well as through his own sources like party workers, complaints fiom aggrieved persons and actual observation during tours.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

54/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	220 WORDS	91%	MATCHING TEXT	220 WORDS

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

55/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 166 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 166 WORDS

backing of the majority party, the private members do not have the wealth of information, that is, available to the government. Apart from setting up the legislative agenda, the Chief Minister has to keep the Assembly informed about the various activities of the government by answering questions, making statements, intervening in the debates, etc. iv) Powers of the Chief Minister in relation to the Personnel By virtue of being the head of the political executive, the Chief Minister controls the entire bureaucracy of the state. In this function, s/he is assisted by the Secretariat headed by the Chief Secretary. S/he approves all senior appointments like those of Secretaries, Additional/Joint/Deputy Secretaries, Heads of the Departments, Chairpersons and Managing Directors of Public Sector Undertakings, etc. Through her/his Cabinet, s/he controls their service conditions and disciplinary matters. S/he provides them leadership to ensure good performance and good morale. At the same time, s/he has to keep a watch on their performance through administrative channels as well as through her/his own sources like party workers, complaints from aggrieved persons and actual observation during tours

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

56/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 66% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

The Governor appoints the leader of his party or the coalition as the Chief Minister,

SA THESIS FINAL.pdf (D16635872)

57/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 83 WORDS 21% MATCHING TEXT 83 WORDS

the Chief Minister. ? Analyse the position of the Chief Minister. ? Give a brief account of the appointment and removal of the Chief Minister. ? Mention the powers of the Chief Minister as the leader of the house. ? Write the powers of the Chief Minister as the leader of the Council of Ministers. ? Briefly mention the functions of the Chief Minister as the chief advisor of the Governor. ? Examine the powers of the Chief Minister in relation to the Governor. ? Discuss the role of the

THE CHIEF MINISTER The position of the Chief Minister of the State corresponds to the of the Prime Minister the Centre. The Chief Minister, who is by the is the head the State Council Ministers. He is the leader of the majority party in State Legislative Assembly. Functions of the Chief Minister To communicate to the Governor all the decisions of the Council of Ministers relating to the administration of affairs of the

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

58/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 77% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

S. R. (2000), State Governments in India. New Delhi, The Macmillan Company of India Limited. ? Pande, L. B. 1984, The State Executives, Amar Prakashan,

S.R. (2000). State Governments in India. New Delhi, India: The Macmillan Company of India Limited. State and District Administration 39 Pandey, L.B. (1984). The State Executives. Delhi, India: Amar Prakashan.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

59/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

state's de jure head, but de facto executive authority rests with the Chief Minister. 4.7

SA Pavan Kolhare llm 3rd seme 2-6-22.pdf (D139014254)

60/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 54% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

Understand the meaning of the State Secretariat. ? Explain the Structure of the State Secretariat ? Discuss the Structure of the State Secretariat

Understand the meaning, significance and role of the State Secretariat; ? Explain the vertical structure of a typical Secretariat Department and the pattern of departmentalisation in the State Secretariat; ?

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

61/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

at the Centre and in the States of the Indian Union.

SA Issues in indian polity.docx (D115818322)

62/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 76% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

The expression 'Secretariat' is used to refer to the summation of all departments

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

63/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

the departments are headed politically by the Ministers and administratively by the Secretaries

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

64/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

the secretary is the secretary to the State Government as a whole, not to the individual Minister. The secretary is normally, a	The Secretary is the Secretary to the Government as a whole, not to the Minister. The Secretary is normally a

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

65/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

The administrative philosophy to which the secretariat system owes its existence is that policy making must be kept separate from policy execution. Several advantages	The administrative philosophy to which the secretariat system owes its existence is that policy-making must be kept separate from policy execution. Several advantages

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

66/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 166 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 166 WORDS

claimed in favour of such an arrangement: i) Freedom from operational involvement makes the policy making apparatus forward looking and allows it to think in terms of overall goals of government rather than narrow, sectional interests of individual departments. ii) Policy making receives the time and attention it deserves, if different set of persons are charged with the functions of policy making as well as its execution. This is because, policy making, is a serious exercise in drawing up what would be a future course of action. It should not be treated as less urgent than policy execution, which involves routine, day-to-day administration. iii) Secretariat serves as a disinterested adviser to the minister. It is important to remember that the secretary is the secretary to the government and not to the minister concerned, which ensures objective examination of the proposals coming from the executive departments. It enables a more balanced scrutiny of proposals. iv) Policy making must be separated from current administration and day-to-day implementation should be left to a different agency with executive freedom, which ensures delegation of authority.	claimed in favour of such an arrangement are: State and District Administration 43 i) Freedom from operational involvement makes the policy-making apparatus forward looking and allows it to think in terms of overall goals of government rather than narrow, sectional interests of individual departments. ii) Policy-making receives the time and attention it deserves, if different set of persons are charged with the functions of policy-making as well as its execution. This is because, policy-making is a serious exercise in drawing up what would be a future course of action. It should not be treated as less urgent than policy execution, which involves routine, day-to-day administration. iii) Secretariat serves as a disinterested adviser to the Minister. It is important to remember the Secretary is the Secretary to the government and not to the Minister concerned, which ensures objective examination of the proposals coming from the Executive Department. It enables a more balanced scrutiny of proposals. iv) Policy-making must be separated from current administration; and day-to-day implementation should be left to a different agency with executive freedom, which ensures delegation of authority.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

67/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

It should be in order at this stage to portray the broad dimensions of the Secretariat's role in some detail.

It should be in order at this stage to portray the broad dimensions of the Secretariat's role in some detail.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

68/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 173 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 173 WORDS

This has many aspects. First, the secretary supplies to the minister all the data and information needed for policy formulation. Second, the secretaries sometimes provide the programmes, with content by working out their details, on whose strength ministers are voted to power. Third, the Secretariat assists ministers in their legislative work. Drafts of legislations to be introduced in the legislature by ministers are prepared by the secretaries. Besides, to answer questions in the Legislature, the minister needs relevant information; the secretary supplies this information to the minister. Secretary also collects information required with respect to the legislative committees. Fourth, the Secretariat functions as an institutionalised memory. This means that the emerging problems require an examination in the light of precedents. Records and files maintained in the Secretariat serve as an institutional memory and ensure continuity and consistency in the disposal of cases. Fifth, the Secretariat is a channel of communication between one government and another, and between the government and such agencies as the Planning Commission and Finance Commission. Finally, the Secretariat evaluates and keeps track of execution of policies by the field agencies 1.3 Structure of

This has several characteristics. First, the secretary supplies to the minister all the data and information needed for policy formulation. Second, the secretaries sometimes give the programmes, with content through working out their details, on whose strength ministers are voted to power. Third, the Secretariat assists ministers in their legislative work. Drafts of legislations to be introduced in the legislature through ministers are prepared through the secretaries. Besides, to answer questions in the Legislature, the minister needs relevant information; the secretary supplies this information to the minister. Secretary also collects information required with respect to the legislative committees. Fourth, the Secretariat functions as an institutionalized memory. This means that the emerging troubles require an examination in the light of precedents. Records and files maintained in the Secretariat serve as an institutional memory and ensure stability and consistency in the disposal of cases. Fifth, the Secretariat is a channel of communication flanked by one government and another, and flanked by the government and such agencies as the Planning Commission and Finance Commission. Finally, the Secretariat evaluates and keeps track of execution of policies through the field agencies. STRUCTURE OF the Chief Secretary is the head of the entire State Secretariat.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

69/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

70/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	36 WORDS	43%	MATCHING TEXT	36 WORDS

the Office staff comprises the superintendent (or section officer), assistants, upper division clerks NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 65 (UDCs), lower division clerks (LDCs), steno-typists and typists. They are also the permanent element in the Secretariat system. The

The office comprises the Superintendent (or Section Officer), Assistants, Upper Division and Lower Division Clerks, Steno-typists, and Typists. Unlike officers, the office constitutes the permanent element in the Secretariat system. While the

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

71/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	30 WORDS	44%	MATCHING TEXT	30 WORDS

the states are mentioned below: 1. General Administration 2. Home 3. Finance 4. Revenue 5. Agriculture 6. Law 7. Forest 64 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 8. Jail 9. Labour and employment 10. Panchayati Raj 11. Public works 12. Irrigation and power 13.

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

72/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	25 WORDS	80%	MATCHING TEXT	25 WORDS

departments. I. Home Department. II. Finance Department including Accounts Branch and Financial Advisers' offices 66 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 of R. R. and R., Food and

DEPARTMENTS I. Home Department. II. Finance Department including Accounts Branch and Financial Advisers offices of R. R. and R., Food and 2

W http://wbpar.gov.in/writereaddata/Common%20Cadre%20Rules1984_b.pdf

73/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 173 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 173 WORDS

Supplies and Development and Planning Departments. IIIA. Legislative Department. IIIB. Judicial Department. IV. Department of Land and Land Reforms. V. Department of Agriculture including Inputs Branch. VI. Department of Animal Husbandry and Veterinary Services. VII. Department of Forests. VIII. Department of Commerce and Industries. IX. Department of Labour. X. Department of Education including office of State Archives. XI. Department of Health and Family Welfare. XII. Department of Local Government and Urban Development. XIII. Department of Refugee Relief and Rehabilitation, Relief and Welfare, Scheduled Castes and Tribes Welfare Department. XIV. Public Works Department including P. W. Roads Department and Construction Board. XV. Department of Irrigation and Waterways. XVI. Department of Food and Supplies. XVII. Department of Development and Planning including State-Planning Board and Town and Country Planning Branch. XVIII. Department of Fisheries. XIX. Department of Cottage and Small Scale Industries. XX. Department of Excise. XXI. Department of Co-operation. XXII. Department of Housing. XXIII. Department of Panchayats and Community Development including Panchayats and C. D. Branches. NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 67 XXIV. Department of Information and Cultural Affairs. XXV. Department of Public Undertakings. XXVI. Department of Power. XXVII. Department of Industrial Reconstruction. XXVIII. Department of Youth Services. XXIX. Department of Tourism. XXX. Metropolitan Development Department. XXXI. Department of Environment.

Supplies and Development and Planning Departments. IIIA. Legislative Department. IIIB. Judicial Department. IV. Department of Land and Land Reforms. V. Department of Agriculture including Inputs Branch. VI. Department of Animal Husbandry and Veterinary Services. VII. Department of Forests. VIII. Department of Commerce and Industries. IX. Department of Labour. X. Department of Education including office of State Archives. XI. Department of Health and Family Welfare. XII. Department of Local Government and Urban Development. XIII. Department of Refugee Relief and Rehabilitation, Relief and Welfare, Scheduled Casts and Tribes Welfare Department. XIV. Public Works Department including P. W. (Roads< Department and Construction Board. XV. Department of Irrigation and Waterways. XVI. Department of Food and Supplies. XVII. Department of Development and Planning including State-Planning Board and Town and Country Planning Branch. XVIII. Department of Fisheries. XIX. Department of Cottage and Small Scale Industries. XX. Department of Excise. XXI. Department of Co-operation. XXII. Department of Housing. XXIII. Department of Panchayats and Community Development-including Panchayats and C. D. Branches. XXIV. Department of Information and Cultural Affairs. XXV. Department of Public Undertakings. XXVI. Department of Power. XXVII . Department of Industrial Reconstruction. XXVIII. Department of Youth Services. XXIX. Department of Tourism. XXX. Metropolitan Development Department. XXXI. Department of Environment.

W http://wbpar.gov.in/writereaddata/Common%20Cadre%20Rules1984_b.pdf

74/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

Land and Land Reforms & Refugee Relief And Relabilitation ? Information and Cultural Affairs ? Personnel and Administrative Reforms ?

Land and Land Reforms & Refugee Relief And Rehabilitation • Information and Cultural Affairs • Personnel and Administrative Reforms •

W http://wbcmo.gov.in/cmo.aspx

75/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	14 WORDS	78%	MATCHING TEXT	14 WORDS

Section Officers ? Head Assistants ? Upper Division Assistants ? Lower Division Assistants ? Steno-typists and Typists ?

Section Officers, Head Assistants, Upper Division Assistants, Lower Division Assistants [Typists Supervisory Grade], Typists (Grade I) and Typists

W http://wbpar.gov.in/writereaddata/Common%20Cadre%20Rules1984_b.pdf

76/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	97 WORDS	90%	MATCHING TEXT	97 WORDS

Pattern of Departmentalization in State Secretariat Each secretary is normally in charge of more than one department. The number of secretariat departments would therefore be larger than the number of secretaries. The number of secretariat departments, quite naturally, varies from state to state. Their number broadly ranges between 10 and 40 in different states. The number of departments in a particular state is not necessarily related to its size in terms of population. For instance, a small state like Mizoram had as many as 36 secretariat departments in 1987, the corresponding figure for Andhra Pradesh (which is a much larger state), was 19 in 1982

PATTERN OF DEPARTMENTALISATION IN STATE SECRETARIAT Each secretary is normally in charge of more than one department. The number of secretariat departments would so be larger than the number of secretaries. The number of secretariat departments, quite naturally, varies from state to state. Their number broadly ranges flanked by 10 and 40 in dissimilar states. The number of departments in a scrupulous state is not necessarily related to its size in conditions of population. For instance, a small state like Mizoram had as several as 36 secretariat departments in 1987, the corresponding figure for Andhra Pradesh (which is a much larger state), was 19 in 1982.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

77/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	119 WORDS	84%	MATCHING TEXT	119 WORDS

Larger number of departments, in particular states, would result from restricting the scope of the functions and charges of those which may be created. Partly, such increase in the number of departments may arise from the peculiar problems a particular state may face. There is a lot of criticisms about the work allocation existing in the secretariat departments, which are: First, work allocation is lop-sided in that some departments are burdened with more work than others. Second, allocation is far from rational even in terms of homogeneity of work. Not only are the subjects handled by a particular department too numerous and therefore unmanageable but these are also too heterogeneous, causing problems of coordination. These are further aggravated when charges of particular departments are incomplete in scope. 1.6

Larger number of departments, in scrupulous states, would result from restricting the scope of the functions and charges of those which may be created. Partly, such augment in the number of departments may arise from the peculiar' troubles a scrupulous state may face. There is a lot of criticism about the work allocation existing in the secretariat departments, which is: First, work allocation is lop-sided in that some departments are burdened with more work than others. Second, allocation is far from rational even in conditions of homogeneity of work. Not only are the subjects handled through a scrupulous department too numerous and so unmanageable but these are also too heterogeneous, causing troubles of coordination. These are further aggravated when charges of scrupulous departments are partial in scope.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

78/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	13 WORDS	88%	MATCHING TEXT	13 WORDS

Secretary/ Secretary ? Special Secretary/Additional Secretary ? Joint Secretary ? Deputy Secretary ? Under Secretary ? Assistant Secretary

Secretary / Secretary Special Secretary /Additional secretary Joint Secretary Deputy Secretary Under Secretary Asst. Secretary

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

79/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	13 WORDS	76%	MATCHING TEXT	13 WORDS

The expression 'Secretariat' is used to refer to the summation of all departments

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

80/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	35 WORDS	54%	MATCHING TEXT	35 WORDS

the Office staff comprises 72 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 the superintendent (or section officer), assistants, upper division clerks (UDCs), lower division clerks (LDCs), steno-typists and typists. They are also the permanent element in the Secretariat system.

The office comprises the Superintendent (or Section Officer), Assistants, Upper Division and Lower Division Clerks, Steno-typists, and Typists. Unlike the office constitutes the permanent element in the Secretariat system.

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

81/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	24 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	24 WORDS

the departments are headed politically by the Ministers and administratively by the Secretaries. The Chief Secretary is the head of the entire State Secretariat.

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

82/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	17 WORDS	76%	MATCHING TEXT	17 WORDS

the office of the Secretaries. The expression Secretariat is used to refer to the complex of departments.

the office of ministers and The expression Secretariat, it has been is used to refer to the complex of departments

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

83/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

the Chief Secretary is the head of the entire State Secretariat

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

84/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

the departments. The Chief Secretary is the head of the entire State Secretariat. 2.2

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

85/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 80% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

acts “as a memory and a clearing house preparatory to certain types of decisions and as a general supervisor of executive action.” Some important functions of the State Secretariat are acts —as a memory and a clearing house, preparatory to sure kinds of decisions and as a general supervisor of executive actionll. The main functions of the State Secretariat are the Directorate and other field agencies. Fifth, The secretariat not only supervises the implementation of various policies but evaluates the performance of different field agencies also.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

86/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 48% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

the Directorates and other field agencies for the efficient implementation of Government policies and decisions. 4. It monitors the implementation of various programmes and evaluates the performance of different field agencies. 5. It also

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

87/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

the State Government in policy making and discharging its legislative functions.

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

88/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 68% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

acts as the spokesman of the state government. It maintains contacts with the central government and other state governments.

acts as the spokesman of the Government and maintains contact with the Central Government and other State Governments

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

89/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

the Ministers in policy making and in modifying policies from time to time.

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

90/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 78% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

All-India conferences and important conferences of state level; NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 77 9. Public accounts committee, estimates committee, assembly and parliamentary questions; 10.

All-India conferences and important conferences of state level; ? Delegation of powers; ? Public Accounts Committee, Estimates Committee, assembly and parliamentary questions; ?

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

91/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 89 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 89 WORDS

prescribed the following functions which should be performed by the secretariat. General: 1. All matters of general policy; 2. Inter-departmental co-ordination; 3. Matters involving the framing of new legal enactments or rules or amendments in the existing ones. Cases involving interpretation or relaxation of existing rules or government orders; 4. Correspondence with the Government of India and other governments; 5. All matters relating to the preparations or adoption of new plan schemes and important modifications in the existing schemes; 6. Review of the progress of plan schemes, both physical and financial; 7. Inspection reports and tour notes, recorded by

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

92/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 50 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 50 WORDS

Appeals, revisions, etc. within the powers of the State Government. Financial Matters: 1. Scrutiny and approval of development budget estimates, major appropriation of accounts, surrender of funds, and supplementary grants; 2. All proposals involving new items of expenditure; 3. Financial sanctions not within the competence of the Heads of Departments; 4. Sanction of expenditure from

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

93/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 80 WORDS 72% MATCHING TEXT 80 WORDS

cases beyond powers of Heads of Departments and audit objections regarding the offices of Heads of Department, etc. Service Matters: 1. Approval of service rules and amendments thereto; 2. Papers relating to senior appointments/promotions/transfers of the Deputy Heads of Departments and above and cases of disciplinary proceedings against these officers; 3. Initial appointment of officers belonging to the state service and infliction of major punishments upon them; 4. Creation of posts, their extension and continuance, reemployment, resignation, special pay, allowances and pensions not within the powers of this type of concentration leads to inefficiency in the working of the Government. Second, the Secretariat being far away from the field are not aware of the problems in the

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

94/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

95/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

This slow and tardy processing of the cases impairs the efficiency of the field agencies.

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

96/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 69% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

the Secretariat officers have a very good existence. They work close to the centre of power and are able to develop better equation with them. Moreover, the Secretariat

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

97/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS which do not have a close bearing on policy making should be transferred to appropriate which do not have a close bearing on policy making should be transferred to an appropriate,

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

98/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 76% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

the office of the Secretaries. The expression Secretariat is used to refer to the complex of departments.

the office of ministers and The expression Secretariat, it has been is used to refer to the complex of departments

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

99/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

scheme of grouping of subjects into departments should not be changed to provide for an increase in the number of ministers'

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

100/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

the departments. The Chief Secretary is the head of the entire State Secretariat.

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

101/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

the State Government in policy making and discharging its legislative functions.

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

102/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

as a memory and a clearing house preparatory to certain types of decisions and as a general supervisor of executive action." 2.7

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

103/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

Simon commission, the executive department "is an administrative unit, separate from 84 ?

Simon Commission, the executive department 'is an administrative unit, separate from

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

104/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 54 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 54 WORDS

the Secretariat, which reaches its apex, usually, in a single officer like the Inspector- General of Police or the Chief Conservator of Forests, outside the Secretariat altogether. Such a head of department will usually be concerned principally with a single secretary to Government and a single.....Minister, for his orders and the funds which he has to spend."

the Secretariat, which reaches its apex, usually, in a single officer like the Inspector-General of Police, or the Chief Conservator of Forests, outside the Secretariat altogether. Such a head of department will usually be concerned principally with a single Secretary to Government and a single Minister, for his orders and the funds which he has to spend.'

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

105/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

Secretariat. Excepting few cases, each secretariat department has a corresponding executive department secretariat departments. Excepting for a few cases, each Secretariat department has a corresponding executive department.

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

106/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 61% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

the head of a Directorate may also be known as Commissioner, Director-General, Inspector-General, Registrar, Chief Engineer, Controller, and so on.

the head of a Directorate (i.e., executive department or executive agency) may also be known by various names viz. Commissioner, Director –General, Inspector – General, Registrar, Controller Chief Engineer, Chief Conservator, and so on. 3.2.7.1

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

107/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 70% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

Questions ? Discuss the functions of the State Secretariat.
? Write a note on the recommendations of the executive department is an administrative unit, separate from the Secretariat.

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

108/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

the executive department 'is an administrative unit, separate from the Secretariat,

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

109/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 55% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

To inspect the execution of work of departmental district staff. d. To allocate grants as per rules, making budget re-appropriation within prescribed limits. e. To

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

110/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 73% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

should be based on the following general principles: i. Policy making should be main duty of the Secretariat and implementation of the should be based on the following principles: i) Policy-making should be the responsibility of the Secretariat, and Policy implementation that of the

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

111/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 39 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 39 WORDS

The Secretariat Department must be distinguished from the executive department. The Secretariat has the function of aiding, assisting and advising the political executive in arriving at policy choices. The heads of executive departments -who are known as director (although other nomenclature

The Secretariat Department must be distinguished from the Executive Department. The Secretariat has the function of aiding, assisting and advising the Political Executive in arriving at policy choices. The heads of Executive Departments – who are in the main known as Director (although other nomenclature

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

also used to refer to them) -have the responsibility of implementing policies formulated by the political executive. Therefore, the secretaries assist in policy formulation whereas the directors' role lies in executing policy. Long ago, the Simon Commission had observed, that executive department 'is an administrative unit separate from the Secretariat, which reaches its apex, usually, in a single officer like the Inspector General of Police, or the Chief Conservator of Forests, outside the Secretariat altogether. Such a head of a department will usually be concerned principally with a single secretary to Government and a single . .. minister of his orders and the funds which he has to spend.' Each secretariat department is in charge of a number of executive departments. This number varies over a wide range with some departments taking charge of a much larger number of executive heads than others. There is an average of 6 to 7 executive departments in relation to one secretariat department. However, it must be carefully noted that not all secretariat departments have executive departments attached to them. Some of the secretariat departments are engaged in advisory and controlling functions and therefore do not have executive departments reporting to them. Examples are Departments of Law, Finance, etc. The Secretariat and executive departments organisationally express the policy formulation and policy execution processes involved in the functioning of the government; the two may be looked upon as extensions of the personality of the Council of Ministers. The former is a policy-making organ, the latter a policy executing organ. The secretariat department is normally headed by a generalist civil servant (drawn from the IAS), the executive department by a specialist. The specialist (the head of the executive department) functions under the supervision of the generalist (the secretary or the head of the secretariat department). This can be illustrated with some examples, Director of Agriculture, who is a specialist, in that he is trained in and holds a formal degree in agricultural sciences, would function under the supervision of the Secretary, Agriculture (a generalist, an IAS). The latter represents agriculture department at the secretariat level, whereas the Director of Agriculture represents agriculture department at the executive level. The director is the executive head of the agriculture department - the Directorate of Agriculture. Likewise, the home department in the Secretariat has the Director-General of 88 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Police as its executive head of the department. Similar correlation exists between also used to refer to them) - have the responsibility of implementing policies formulated through the political executive. So, the secretaries assist in policy formulation whereas the directors' role lies in executing policy. Long ago, the Simon Commission had observed, that executive department is an administrative unit separate from the Secretariat, which reaches its apex, usually, in a single officer like the Inspector General of Police, or the Chief Conservator of Forests, outside the Secretariat altogether. Such a head of a department will usually be concerned principally with a single secretary to Government and a single... minister of his orders and the funds which he has to spend.' Each secretariat department is in charge of a number of executive departments. This number varies over a wide range with some departments taking charge of a much larger number of executive heads than others. There is an average of 6 to 7 executive departments in relation to one secretariat department. Though, it necessity be cautiously noted that not all secretariat departments have executive departments attached to them. Some of the secretariat departments are engaged in advisory and controlling functions and so do not have executive departments reporting to them. Examples are Departments of Law, Finance, etc. The Secretariat and executive departments organizationally express the policy formulation and policy execution processes involved in the functioning of the government; the two may be looked upon as extensions of the personality of the Council of Ministers. The former is a policy-creation organ, the latter a policy executing organ. The secretariat department is normally headed through a generalist civil servant (drawn from the IAS), the executive department through a specialist. The specialist (the head of the executive department) functions under the supervision of the generalist (the secretary or the head of the secretariat department). This can be illustrated with some examples, Director of Agriculture, who is a specialist, in that he is trained in and holds a formal degree in agricultural sciences, would function under the supervision of the Secretary, Agriculture (a generalist, an IAS). The latter represents agriculture department at the secretariat stage, whereas the Director of Agriculture represents agriculture department at the executive stage. The director is the executive head of the agriculture department - the Directorate of Agriculture. Likewise, the home department in the Secretariat has the Director-general of Police as its executive head of the department.. Similar correlation obtains flanked by education secretary and education director, industries secretary and industries education secretary and education director, industries secretary and industries director, social welfare secretary and social welfare director, and so on. We have emphasised the distinctness of the roles of the Secretariat and the Directorate by saying that, while the former is concerned with policy formulation, the latter is concerned with policy execution (or with administering policy or to put it yet more simply, the administration). The question which may, therefore, be asked is whether policy and administration are discrete processes. The answer is that at a conceptual level, the two are distinct; it is possible to identify, and define them as two clearly distinguishable phenomena. But at a ' practical plane, the two are inextricably interlinked, even tend to become indistinguishable and therefore, it is difficult to say where the policy ends and administration begins. Policy is concerned with political choices and involves questions of broader values, whereas administration is concerned with implementing programmes emanating from particular policy decisions. Administration, therefore, involves such details of execution as framing organisational structures, staffing of organisations, coordinating activities, directing, controlling, motivating the personnel and so on. That the two are dichotomous is the traditional view, which owes its origin to Woodrow Wilson's essay of 1887, 'The Study of Administration'. Politics, he said, is the proper activity of Legislature and other policy-making groups (e.g., political parties, cabinet, etc.). Administration is the sphere of administrators who carry out the policies stated in the laws. The context of the dichotomy was the civil service reform movement of the 1880s in the United States, which aimed to eliminate political interference in civil service. It was argued that civil service recruitment should, in the interest of administrative efficiency, be based on considerations of merit and fitness rather than partisan politics. In other words, politics should be kept out of administration. Max Weber further justified separation of policy from administration by arguing that the attributes of politicians are exactly the opposite of those of the civil servants. The essence of politics is to take a stand, to take personal responsibility for the policies decided on, and to admit the transitory nature of the political role. The essence of administration is to execute conscientiously the order of the political authority, even if it appears wrong to the administrator. The administrator is politically neutral. He simply does what he is asked to do and assumes no personal responsibility. However, the complexities of governmental operations have increasingly required administrators to become involved in policy making or director, social welfare secretary and social welfare director, and so on. We have emphasized the distinctness of the roles of the Secretariat and the Directorate through saying that, while the former is concerned with policy formulation, the latter is concerned with policy execution (or with administering policy or to put it yet more basically, the administration). The question which may, so, be asked is whether policy and administration are discrete processes. The answer is that at a conceptual stage, the two are separate; it is possible to identify and describe them as two clearly distinguishable phenomena. But at a practical plane, the two are inextricably interlinked, even tend to become indistinguishable and, so, it is hard to say where the policy ends and administration begins. Policy is concerned with political choices and involves questions of broader values, whereas administration is concerned with implementing programmes emanating from scrupulous policy decisions. Administration, so, involves such details of execution as framing organizational structures, staffing of organisations, coordinating activities, directing, controlling, motivating the personnel and so on. That the two are dichotomies is the traditional view, which owes its origin to Woodrow Wilson's essay of 1887, _The Revise of Administration'. Politics, he said, is the proper activity of Legislature and other policy-creation groups (e.g., political parties, cabinet, etc.). Administration is the sphere of administrators who carry out the policies stated in the laws. The context of the dichotomy was the civil service reform movement of the 1880s in the United States, which aimed to eliminate political interference in civil service. It was argued that civil service recruitment should, in the interest of administrative efficiency, be based on thoughts of merit and fitness rather than partisan politics. In other words, politics should be kept out of administration. Max Weber further justified separation of policy from administration through arguing that the attributes of politicians are exactly the opposite of those of the civil servants. The essence of politics is to take a stand, to take personal responsibility for the policies decided on, and to admit the transitory nature of the political role. The essence of administration is to execute conscientiously the order of the political authority, even if it appears wrong to the administrator. The administrator is politically neutral. He basically does what he is asked to do and assumes no personal responsibility. Though, the complexities of governmental operations have increasingly required administrators to become involved in policy creation or political decisions. As a result of political decisions. As a result of

Ouriginal by Turnitin

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

to draw a clear boundary separating policy and administration, or to say where policy ends and administration begins. Sources of Administrative Expertise. There are several sources from which the modem day administrators have obtained a kind of 'expertise', which the politicians need to use when formulating policies as: (i) The administrators stay in office longer, (they are career civil servants) than the politicians, who come and go with elections, the former have opportunities of giving sustained attention to problems. From this, they gain an invaluable kind of practical knowledge that comes from the experience of handling these very problems day in and day out. This knowledge is conserved in records and transmitted to new generations of civil servants through training programmes. This monopoly of experience and practical knowledge coupled with continuity in office gives them a decisive edge over politicians in framing policies. (ii) The administrators are in possession of facts, figures, information and intelligence regarding the specific areas in which policies are to be framed. Politicians would need these data and statistics in formulating policies. (iii) Administrative expertise also comes pre-eminently from the fact that the governments of today employ a large variety of professionals (doctors, engineers, scientists, economists, etc.). They possess technical knowledge, which forms a vital, input in policy making. (iv) The advent of merit system has also helped to build up administrative expertise by attracting better talent in civil service and loosening the grip of politicians on civil service. Administrators' Role in Policy Making The increase in civil service expertise, together with the growth in the functions of government and growing complexity of administration, has resulted in an increasing dependence of politicians on administrators in the task of policy making. This is reflected in the following: i) Policy making exercise is done on the basis of facts, figures, information and data, which are supplied by the bureaucracy. In other words, politicians, in order to enhance the credibility of the policies, depend on the administrators' data support to their policies. ii) Civil servants based on their long administrative experience, tender advice to the lay politicians on the administrative, technical and financial feasibility of the various policy options under consideration. iii) Civil servants prepare the draft legislations (bills), which after ministerial approval, are placed before the legislature for its consideration. In other words, 90 ?

to draw a clear boundary separating policy and administration, or to say where policy ends and administration begins. This would be clear from the following. Sources of Administrative Expertise There are many sources from which the modem day administrators have obtained a type of _expertise', which the politicians need to use when formulating policies as: (i) The administrators stay in office longer (they are career civil servants) than the politicians, who come and go with elections, the former have opportunities of giving sustained attention to troubles. From this, they gain an invaluable type of practical knowledge that comes from the experience of handling these very troubles day in and day out. This knowledge is conserved in records and transmitted to new generations of civil servants through training programmes. This monopoly of experience and practical knowledge coupled with stability in office gives them a decisive edge over politicians in framing policies, (ii) The administrators are in possession of facts, figures, information and intelligence concerning the specific areas in which policies is to be framed. Politicians would need these data and statistics in formulating policies, (iii) Administrative expertise also comes pre- eminently from the fact that the governments of today employ a large diversity of professionals (doctors, engineers, scientists, economists, etc.). They possess technical knowledge, which forms a vital input in policy creation, (iv) The advent of merit system has also helped to build up administrative expertise through attracting better talent in civil service and loosening the grip of politicians on civil service. Administrators' Role in Policy Creation The augment in civil service expertise, together with growth in the functions of government and rising complexity of administration, has resulted in a rising dependence of politicians on administrators in the task of policy creation. This is reflected in the following : Policy creation exercise is done on the basis of facts, figures, information and data, which are supplied through the bureaucracy. In other words, politicians, in order to enhance the credibility of the policies they frame, depend on the administrators' data support to their policies. Civil servants based on their long administrative experience, tender advice to the lay politicians on the administrative, technical and financial feasibility of the several policy options under consideration. Civil servants prepare the draft legislations (bills), which after ministerial approval, are placed before the legislature for its consideration. In other words,

Ouriginal by Turnitin

114/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	16 WORDS	75%	MATCHING TEXT	16 WORDS

is a specialist and the Secretary is the generalist civil servant, normally a member of the administrators initiate the process of public policy formulation, which in its final form assumes the shape of an Act passed by the Legislature.

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

115/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	22 WORDS	87%	MATCHING TEXT	22 WORDS

administrators initiate the procedure of public policy formulation, which in its final form assumes the shape of an Act passed through the Legislature.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

116/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 312 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 312 WORDS

Administrators formulate policy through the exercise of administrative discretion. When an administrator is required to choose between alternative courses of action within a policy frame, he is said to exercise discretion. In this sense, administrators are described as supplementaty lawmakers. The actual content of policy becomes entirely a matter for bureaucratic determination. Here administrators actually decide how the power of the State shall be used in specific cases. In modern times, there has come about a tremendous increase in administrative discretion by virtue of an incessant increase in the volume of legislation to be enacted. Legislature is under the circumstances, compelled to confine itself to indicating broad framework of law, leaving details to be filled up by the administrative agencies. The growing variety and complexity of laws to be enacted has further circumscribed the Legislature's competence. The legislators do not have the technical know-how and training to venture into the details of particular legislations. This further necessitates exercise of administrative discretion. And, at any rate, if the Legislature delves into the details of each law, this would be at the cost of other important duties and functions of the legislators and therefore an undesirable thing to happen. This, coupled with the assurance that it has the necessary means available to hold administration accountable to itself has, in fact, encouraged the Legislature in its attitude of not delving too deeply into the details of the enactments it formulates. And, it is not possible to work out the details of the enactments for another reason too. Ultimately, the policy is to be executed in the field where an administrator must necessarily face a bewildering variety of situations as he sets himself to the task of policy execution. For the law making agency, it is clearly not possible to visualise, at the point of legislation, the different variety of situations that may arise in the field. For this reason, once again, the policy makers must do no more than provide only broad guidelines in the legislations they frame. 3.6

Administrators formulate policy through the exercise of administrative discretion. When an administrator is required to choose flanked by alternative courses of action within a policy frame, he is said to exercise discretion. In this sense, administrators are described as supplementary lawmakers. Because here, the actual content of policy becomes entirely a matter for bureaucratic determination. Here administrators actually decide how the power of the State shall be used in specific cases. In modem times, there has come about a tremendous augment in administrative discretion through virtue of an incessant augment in the volume of legislation to be enacted. Legislature is under the circumstances, compelled to confine itself to indicating broad framework of law, leaving details to be filled up through the administrative agencie s. The rising diversity and complexity of laws to be enacted has further circumscribed the Legislature's competence: The legislators do not have the technical know-how and training to venture into the details of scrupulous legislations. This further necessitates exercise of administrative discretion. And, at any rate, if the Legislature delves into the details of each law, this would be at the cost of other significant duties and functions of the legislators and so an undesirable thing to happen. This, coupled with the assurance that it has the necessary means accessible to hold administration accountable to itself has, in fact, encouraged the Legislature in its attitude of not delving too deeply into the details of the enactments it formulates. And, it is not possible to work out the details of the enactments for another cause too. Ultimately, the policy is to be executed in the field where an administrator necessity necessarily face a bewildering diversity of situations as he sets himself to the task of policy execution. For the law creation agency, it is clearly not possible to visualize, at the point of legislation, the dissimilar diversity of situations that may arise in the field. For this cause, once again, the policy makers necessity do no more than give only broad guidelines in the legislations they frame.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

117/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 55% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

is a specialist and the Secretary is the NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 91 generalist civil servant, normally a member of the

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

118/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 65% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Functions of the Chief Secretary 4.3 Position of the Chief Secretary 4.4 The Role of the Chief Secretary

SA 180E3620_ Indian Administration.docx (D165106916)

119/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 31 WORDS 32% MATCHING TEXT 31 WORDS

the functions of the Chief Secretary ? Discuss the position of the Chief Secretary in the entire state administration 4.1 Introduction The State Secretariat is the top layer of every State administration and the Chief Secretary from the senior IAS officers of the state cadre. But the Chief Minister the chief minister form the senior IAS officers of the state cadre. Generally, the chief minister

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

120/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

121/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 28 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 28 WORDS

The Chief Secretary should ordinarily be the senior- most person, due regard being paid to merit. He should have a minimum tenure of 3 to 94 ?

The chief secretary should be the senior- most person, due regard being paid to merit. He should have a minimum tenure of 3 to 4

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

122/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 93 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 93 WORDS

the State Government." The office of the Chief Secretary is an institution unique to the states; it is without a parallel in the administrative landscape of the entire country. The Chief Secretary's office has, for instance, no parallel in the Central government. The work he performs in relation to the state government is, at the Union level, shared by three high-ranking functionaries of more or less an equal status, i.e., Cabinet Secretary, Home Secretary, and Finance Secretary, This is a vivid reflection on the wide scope of the duties and powers of the Chief Secretary. 4.2 Fuctions of the Chief Secretary	the state's administrative The office of the Chief Secretary is an institution unique to the states; it is without a parallel in the administrative landscape of the entire country. The Chief Secretary's office has, for instance, no parallel in the Central Government. The work s/he performs in relation to the State Government is, at the Union level, shared by three high-ranking functionaries of more or less an equal status, i.e., Cabinet Secretary, Home Secretary and Finance Secretary, This is a vivid reflection on the wide scope of the duties and powers of the Chief Secretary. Yet another significant on of the Chief Secretary'

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

123/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

the Chief Secretary is the executive head of the State Secretariat. He

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

124/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 57% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

the chief advisor to the Chief Minister but also he acts as the Secretary to the State Cabinet. He is the administrative head of the	the chief advisor to the Chief Minister Secretary to the State Cabinet. He the head of the administrative head of the State Cabinet Secretariat he attends meetings of the cabinet and its committees. He prepares the agenda of the meetings and keeps record of	administrative head of the cabinet secretariat and attends the meeting of the cabinet and its sub- committees. He prepares the agenda for cabinet meetings and keeps records of

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

125/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 51% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

126/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 46 WORDS 62% MATCHING TEXT 46 WORDS

principal advisor to the Chief Minister: The Chief Secretary is the principal adviser to the Chief Minister on all matters of the state administration. The Chief Minister consults with him in the matters of appointments to the senior posts of secretaries, special secretaries, deputy secretaries and heads of the head of the civil service: He is head of the civil servants in the state and their mentor.

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

127/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 60% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

128/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 81% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

The Chief Secretary is the Secretary, by rotation, of the Zonal Council of which his state is a member. (

The Chief Secretary is the secretary, through rotation, of the Zonal Council of which the scrupulous state is a member.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

129/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

As the head of certain Departments: The Chief Secretary acts as administrative head of some

As the Head of Certain Departments: The Chief Secretary also acts as the administrative head of some

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

130/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 81% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

Chief coordinator: The Chief Secretary is the chief coordinator of the state administration. Being at the

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

131/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	12 WORDS	83%	MATCHING TEXT	12 WORDS

He exercises general supervision and control over the entire secretariat. b. He

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

132/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	13 WORDS	88%	MATCHING TEXT	13 WORDS

He exercises administrative control over the secretariat building including allocation of rooms in

He exercises administrative control over the Secretariat buildings, including allocation of rooms in

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

133/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	190 WORDS	93%	MATCHING TEXT	190 WORDS

In considering the position of the Chief Secretary, another fact needs to be taken note of. The incumbent of this office is not necessarily the seniormost civil servant of the state. This was at any rate the situation till 1973 when, for instance, in U.P., the Chief Secretary was junior in rank and seniority to the members of the Board of Revenue. Same was the case in Punjab, where he was junior to the Financial Commissioner. Since 1973, however, the office of the Chief Secretary has been standardised; its incumbent 96 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 since then has begun to hold the rank of the Secretary to Government of India and receives emoluments admissible to the latter. How does the imposition of the Presidents' rule on a state affect the Chief Secretary's Office? Where the Centre does not appoint advisers during the President's rule, the Chief Secretary becomes clothed with the powers belonging to the Chief Minister. When, however, central advisers are appointed, it tends to inhibit the Chief Secretary in his administrative capacity because the former are drawn from the ranks of senior civil servants (senior to the state's Chief Secretary) as a result of which a hierarchical relationship becomes operative.

In considering the position of the Chief Secretary, another fact needs to be taken note of. The incumbent of this office is not necessarily the senior mainly civil servant of the state. This was at any rate the situation till 1973 when, for instance, In U.P., the Chief Secretary was junior in rank and seniority to the members of the Board of Revenue. Same was the case in Punjab, where he was junior to the Financial Commissioner. Since 1973, though, the office of the Chief Secretary has been standardized; its incumbent since then has begun to hold the rank of the Secretary to Government of India and receives emoluments admissible to the latter. How does the clamping, of the Presidents' rule on a state affect the Chief Secretary's Office? Where the Centre does not appoint advisers throughout the President's rule, the Chief Secretary becomes clothed with the powers belonging to the Chief Minister. When, though, central advisers are appointed, it tends to inhibit the Chief Secretary in his administrative capability because the former are drawn from the ranks of senior civil servants (senior to the state's Chief Secretary) as a result of which a hierarchical relationship becomes operative.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

134/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 134 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 134 WORDS

In conclusion, it may be noted that a host of personnel matters and many other minute and unimportant administrative details consume a sizeable chunk of the Chief Secretary's time. TheAdministrative Reforms Commission is constrained to agree with the following observations of the Maharashtra Reorganisation Commission (1962- 68) on the manner in which the Chief Secretary has become burdened with trivial details: ". .. it seems unfortunate that the highest official in the state has to sign gazette notifications of appointments, promotions, transfers leave; etc., that he has to spend time on minutiae of protocol, passports, etc." To rectify this situation, the ARC has recommended that this functionary be relieved of the work of routine nature as well as be provided with appropriate staff assistance. That alone will ensure speedy implementation of decisions and effective coordination of policies and programmes of the state government. 4.3

In conclusion, it may be noted that a host of personnel matters and many other minute and unimportant administrative details consume a sizeable chunk of the Chief Secretary's time. The Administrative Reforms Commission is constrained to agree with the following observations of the Maharashtra Reorganisation Commission (1962-68) on the manner in which the Chief Secretary has become burdened with trivial details, "... it seems unfortunate that the highest official in the state has to sign gazette notifications of appointments, promotions, transfers, leave, etc., that s/he has to spend time on minutiae of protocol, passports, etc.". To rectify this situation, the ARC has recommended that this functionary be relieved of the work of routine nature as well as be provided with appropriate staff assistance. That alone will ensure speedy implementation of decisions and effective coordination of policies and programmes of the state government.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

135/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

is the head of the entire State Secretariat, whose political head is the Chief Minister himself.

is the head of the General Administration whose political head is the Chief Minister, himself.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

136/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 62% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

is the chief advisor to the Chief Minister and also acts as the Secretary to the State Cabinet. He is the kingpin of the is the chief advisor to the Chief Minister and Secretary to the State Cabinet. He is head of the

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

137/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

He also acts as the chief public relations officer of the state government.

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

138/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

is more than primus inter pares (first among equals). He is, in fact,

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

139/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 66% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

civil servant of a state. He is head of the civil servants in the state, their mentor and conscience- keeper. In

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

140/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 35 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 35 WORDS

the Andhra Pradesh Administrative Reforms Committee (1964- 65), "he is the chief of the civil services and all governmental servants look to him to deal with all and every problems concerning their conditions of service and work."

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

141/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 35 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 35 WORDS

technician's or even a professional's, he is not a knowledgeable engineer, nor even a first class magistrate, he is part of the process of government and in a democratic republic, part of the human process." The Chief Secretary technician's or not even a professional's, he is neither a knowledgeable engineer, nor even a first class magistrate, he is part of the process of government and in a democratic republic, part of the human process." Since 1973, a Chief Secretary

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

142/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 42 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 42 WORDS

The office of the Chief Secretary is considered so important that it has been excluded from the operation of the tenure system. In practice, generally the Chief Secretary either retires as the Chief Secretary or moves to the Central Government to take up a

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

143/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

The Rajasthan Administrative Reforms Committee (1963) has also recognised the importance of the office

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

144/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 31 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 31 WORDS

By virtue of his unique position as head of the official machinery and adviser to the Council of Ministers, the Chief Secretary has an extremely important role to play in the State administration.

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

145/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

acts as the ex-officio Secretary to the Council of Ministers and, in that capacity, he is known as the Secretary to the Cabinet.

acts as the ex officio secretary to the council of ministers and while acting in this capacity, he may be called as the secretary to the cabinet. 6.1.3

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

146/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

The functions of the Cabinet Secretariat are also prescribed by the Rules of Business of each state. But, in broad terms, its functions are: providing secretarial assistance

The functions of the cabinet secretariat are prescribed by the Rules of Business of each state. But, in broad terms, these functions are: secretarial assistance,

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

147/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

ensure that there is a certain degree of uniformity in the policies adopted by State Government with respect to different departments." 4.4

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

148/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

any department and such a request has to be complied with by the secretary of the department concerned.

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

149/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

to the posts of chairman and members of the State Public Service Commission. (

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

150/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 67% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

most of the states in India, the Chief Secretary functions as the Secretary, General Administration. This department most of the states in India, the Chief Secretary will be the secretary of the General Administration Department. 3.2.5.1

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

151/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

general administrative matters of different state government departments and provides miscellaneous facilities to the departments and officers. 102 ?

general administrative matters of different State government departments and provides miscellaneous to the departments and officers.

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

152/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

matters of housing accommodation and government buildings and circuit house fall under his jurisdiction. These responsibilities of the Chief Secretary affect all the departments and, therefore, matters of housing accommodation and government buildings and circuit house fall under his general jurisdiction. These responsibilities of the chief secretary affect all the departments and therefore,

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

153/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 68% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

head of the entire State Secretariat, whose political head is the Chief Minister himself. The Chief head of the General Administration department whose political head is the Chief Minister herself/himself. The Chief

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

154/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 68% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

the Chief Secretary from the senior IAS officers of the state cadre. The Chief Secretary takes the chief minister form the senior IAS officers of the state cadre. Generally, the chief minister takes

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

155/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 57% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

is the chief advisor to the Chief Minister and also acts as the Secretary to the State Cabinet. He is the king pin of the is the chief advisor to the Chief Minister and Secretary to the State Cabinet. He the head of the

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

156/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

being the head of the civil service, the Chief Secretary

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

157/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 35 WORDS 56% MATCHING TEXT 35 WORDS

He is the principal communicator between his Government and Central Government and other state Governments. He also plays an NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 103 important role in the administration of law and order and planning.

He is the principal channel of communication between his government and the Central government and other state governments and this capacity plays a role in the administration of law and order and planning.

W https://epgp.inflibnet.ac.in/epgpdata/uploads/epgp_content/S000029PE/P001576/M020562/ET/151419374 ...

158/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

How does the imposition of the President's rule on a state affect the Chief Secretary's office? 104 ?

How does the clamping, of the Presidents' rule on a state affect the Chief Secretary's Office?

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

159/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

The Status-quo Approach 5.5.2 The Bridging The Gulf Approach 5.5.3 The De-amalgamation Approach 5.6 Conclusion 5.7 Summary 5.8 Glossary 5.9

The Status-quo Approach 4.7.2 The Bridging the gulf Approach 4.7.3 The De-amalgamation Approach 4.8 Conclusion 4.9 Glossary 4.10

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

160/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

He is head of the civil servants in the state, their mentor and conscience- keeper.

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

161/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 150 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 150 WORDS

s Secretariat In the face of the growing responsibilities of the C.M., there is need for providing him with intensive and intelligent administrative assistance. Such assistance is provided by the Chief Minister's Secretariat, which is accountable only to him. This organization ensures that the C.M.'s directives are implemented by various state and district agencies. In Rajasthan, the C.M.'s Secretariat was set up in 1951. It is headed by a secretary belonging to the selection/super-time scale of the I.A.S., who is assisted by deputy secretaries, OSDs, deputy directors, assistant secretaries, accounts officers, Statistical assistants and the Superintendent of Police (Vigilance). The C.M.'s Secretariat looks after the functions relating to the tours and correspondence of the C.M., redressal of public grievances, management of the C.M.'s benevolent funds, implementation of the C.M.'s assurances and monitoring. The Secretary to the C.M., while providing administrative assistance to the C.M., keeps confidential documents and correspondence, accompanies the C.M. on important tours, takes follow-up action on cabinet decisions, apprises the

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

Ouriginal by Turnitin

162/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	146 WORDS	92%	MATCHING TEXT	146 WORDS

of major developments and issues, helps him in the conduct of assembly work and supervises the staff of the C.M.'s Secretariat. Moreover, he writes informal notes on all important files going to the Chief Minister to facilitate his making decisions. 108 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 The post of the Secretary to the Chief Minister (in some states, he is called Principal Secretary to the Chief Minister), has acquired enormous status and influence in recent times. The rationale behind this phenomenon is the assumption that the Secretary to the Chief Minister is the alter ego of his boss, i.e. the Chief Minister. There have been occasions when the influence of a Secretary to the Chief Minister has been disproportionately more than that would be commanded by virtue of his seniority and status in the regular IAS hierarchy. In cases when even the Chief Secretary's real power is compromised and when other secretaries feel subservient to the

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

163/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	946 WORDS	96%	MATCHING TEXT	946 WORDS

What might be a suitable pattern of relationship between the Secretariat and non- Secretariat organisation? On the question of evolving a suitable pattern, broadly three schools of thought are discernible. Each adopts a different approach. Neither yields a conclusive answer for, as we shall see in the ensuing discussion, it is possible to list arguments for as well as against the arrangement each proposes. Based on their dominant thrust, the three schools of thought or approaches may be referred to as the Status-quo Approach, Bridging the gulfApproach, and De-amalgamationApproach. 5.5.1 The Status-quo Approach The Status-quoApproach favours the traditionalist system and holds that the Secretariat and the Directorates have well-defined roles in our administrative setup to which they should continue to stick. The approach is based on the traditional concept of staff-line dichotomy where the Secretariat performs the role of a Line Agency and the attached office that of the Staff Agency. The Status-quo Approach also accepts the traditional policy-administration dichotomy. The advocates of this approach believe that the relationship between the Secretariat and Directorates should be based on the following principles: i) Policy-making should be the responsibility of the Secretariat, and Policy implementation that of the Directorates. NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 109 ii) Subject to the rules governing the conditions of service, the Head of the Department should have fullest control over the personnel under him. iii) The Secretariat Department should provide common services and undertake domestic housekeeping in respect of the Directorate(s) attached to it (for instance, the allocation of office accommodation). 5.5.2 The Bridging The Gulf Approach As against the School advocating Status-quo Approach there is another, which advocates measures for bridging the gulf between the Secretariat and Non-Secretariat organisations. Its protagonists suggest various devices for bridging the gulf. These include (i) the conferment of ex-officio Secretariat status on the heads of Executive Departments; (ii) the system under which a Secretary concurrently holds the office of the head of the Executive Department; (iii) the merger or amalgamation device under which an Executive Department is placed in a corresponding Secretariat Department; and (iv) a device, which is a variant of point (iii), involving, once again, merger or amalgamation, but under this device, the Secretariat Department is placed with the corresponding Head of the Department, rather than the other way around. Amalgamation of Directorate with Secretariat Terms like integration, merger and

What might be a suitable pattern of relationship between the Secretariat and non- Secretariat organisation? On the question of evolving a suitable pattern, broadly three schools of thought are discernible. Each adopts a different approach. Neither yields a conclusive answer for, as we shall see in the ensuing discussion, it is possible to list arguments for as well as against the arrangement each proposes. Based on their dominant thrust, the three schools of thought or approaches may be referred to as the Status-quo Approach, Bridging the gulf Approach, and De-amalgamation Approach. 4.7.1 The Status-quo Approach The Status-quo Approach favours the traditional split system and holds that the Secretariat and the Directorates have well-defined roles in our administrative setup to which they should continue to stick. The approach is based on the traditional concept of staff-line dichotomy where the Secretariat performs the role of a Staff Agency and the Attached Office that of the Line Agency. The Status-quo Approach also accepts the traditional policy-administration dichotomy. The advocates of this approach believe that the relationship between the Secretariat and Directorates should be based on the following principles: i) Policy-making should be the responsibility of the Secretariat, and Policy implementation that of the Directorates. ii) Subject to the rules governing the conditions of service, the Head of Department should have fullest control over the personnel under him. iii) The Secretariat Department should provide common services and undertake domestic housekeeping in respect of the Directorate(s) attached to it (for instance, the allocation of office accommodation). 4.7.2 The Bridging The Gulf Approach As against the School advocating Status-quo Approach there is another, which advocates measures for bridging the gulf between the Secretariat and Non-Secretariat organisations. Patterns of Relationship between the Secretariat and Directorates 64 Its protagonists suggest various devices for bridging the gulf. These include (i) the conferment of ex-officio Secretariat status on the heads of Executive Departments; (ii) the system under which a Secretary concurrently holds the office of the head of the Executive Department; (iii) the merger or amalgamation device under which an Executive Department is placed in a corresponding Secretariat Department; and (iv) a device, which is a variant of point (iii), involving, once again, merger or amalgamation, but under this device, the Secretariat Department is placed with the corresponding Head of the Department, rather than the other way around. Amalgamation of Directorate with amalgamation have been interchangeably used to suggest an arrangement under which the distinction between the Secretariat and the Non- Secretariat Organisations is completely dissolved. Under this system, the office of the heads of the Executive Agencies is merged with the corresponding departments in the Secretariat. The advocacy of amalgamation is based on the argument that the encroachment of the Secretariat into the executive functions is in any case, an established fact of the Indian administrative landscape. This is so because the political executive in India is unable to devote adequate attention to policy functions. Instead, it preoccupies itself rather quite excessively with matters of day-to-day nature (like appointments, promotion, and transfers). As a result, the Secretariat itself becomes involved in what are patently executive matters and which, therefore, should, in fact, fall in the domain of the Directorate, as ultimately the role of the Secretariat is governed by the role perceptions of the political executive. It is thus, argued that since the role of two agencies anyhow overlap, amalgamation would be both logical as well as desirable. 110 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Arguments for Continued Amalgamation Those who report favourably on the experience of amalgamation argue as follows: i) Amalgamation has obviated the need for examination of proposals independently by the Directorate and Secretariat. ii) It has cut down delays and ensured expeditious disposal of cases. iii) It has affected economy in establishment expenditure. 5.5.3 The De-amalgamation Approach Arguments for De-amalgamation The officials who recommend de-amalgamation give the following arguments: i) Although amalgamation permits much economy of time in that it does away with two parallel scrutiny of proposals, the experience has shown that, under the amalgamated setup, the quality of final proposals/schemes has declined, which frequently involves reconsideration. This, they point out, was not so when Directorate and Secretariat functioned separately. ii) Amalgamation has resulted in gradual removal of distinction between the functions of the Heads of Departments and those of the Secretariat. iii) Amalgamation has rendered objective examination of proposals and schemes at the Secretariat level difficult. The Secretaries have to write their notes on files in a guarded manner so as to avoid causing offence to the Head of Department. This extra caution often prevents a frank examination of the cases by the Secretariat officers. iv) Under the amalgamation schemes, the Head of Department remains stuck up in the Secretariat. S/he is not able to go on tours and inspections, which are her/ his main obligations. After Secretariat Terms like integration, merger and amalgamation have been interchangeably used to suggest an arrangement under which the distinction between the Secretariat and the Non-Secretariat Organisations is completely dissolved. Under this system, the office of the heads of the Executive Agencies is merged with the corresponding departments in the Secretariat. The advocacy of amalgamation is based on the argument that the encroachment of the Secretariat into the Executive Functions is in any case, an established fact of the Indian administrative landscape. This is so because the political executive in India is unable to devote adequate attention to policy functions. Instead, it preoccupies itself rather quite excessively with matters of day-to-day nature (like appointments, promotion, and transfers). As a result, the Secretariat itself becomes involved in what are patently executive matters and which, therefore, should, in fact, fall in the domain of the Directorate, as ultimately the role of the Secretariat is governed by the role perceptions of the political executive. It is thus, argued that since the role of two agencies anyhow overlap, amalgamation would be both logical as well as desirable. Arguments for Continued Amalgamation Those who report favourably on the experience of amalgamation argue as follows: i) Amalgamation has obviated the need for examination of proposals independently by the Directorate and Secretariat. ii) It has cut down delays and ensured expeditious disposal of cases. iii) It has affected economy in establishment expenditure. 4.7.3 The De-amalgamation Approach Arguments for De-amalgamation The officials who recommend de-amalgamation give the following arguments: i) Although amalgamation permits much economy of time in that it does away with two parallel scrutinise of proposals, the experience has shown that, under the amalgamated setup, the quality of final proposals/schemes has declined, which frequently involves reconsideration. This, they point out, was not so when Directorate and Secretariat functioned separately. ii) Amalgamation has resulted in gradual removal of distinction between the functions of the Heads of Departments and those of the Secretariat. iii) Amalgamation has rendered objective examination of proposals and schemes at the Secretariat level difficult. The Secretaries have to write their notes on files in a guarded manner so as to avoid causing offence to the Head of Department. This State and District Administration 65 extra caution often prevents a frank examination of the cases by the Secretariat officers. iv) Under the amalgamation schemes, the Head of Department remains stuck up in the Secretariat. S/he is studying the above stated approaches and recommendation of the second ARC, it can be stated that the Ministries/Departments should concentrate more on policy, planning and strategic decision-making; and implementation work should be given to adequately empowered Executive Agencies. The Second ARC has suggested, "... there can be no water-tight separation of the policy-making and implementation functions since Ministers are ultimately accountable to Parliament for the performance of their Ministries and departments in all respects." As per the Government of India (Transaction of Business) NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 111 Rules, all business allocated to a Department in the Government of India has to be disposed of under the directions of the Minister in-charge. It has been observed that the Ministers can discharge their responsibilities more effectively by supervising the performance of operational agencies from time to time rather than by taking direct control of routine functions. In the states, a major part of implementation work is done by the executive agencies. They are structured as departments, statutory boards, commissions, departmental undertakings and other parastatals. The Commission has pointed out that these bodies do not function as real autonomous agencies due to the centralised controls, and inadequate delegation of authority. While the necessity of delegating increased powers to the executive agencies is getting recognised and some states have delegated more powers to these agencies, the overall approach has been one of caution and hesitancy. 5.6

not able to go on tours and inspections, which are her/his main obligations. After studying the above stated approaches and recommendation of the second ARC, it can be stated that the Ministries/Departments should concentrate more on policy, planning and strategic decision-making; and implementation work should be given to adequately empowered Executive Agencies. The Second ARC has suggested, "... there can be no water-tight separation of the policy-making and implementation functions since Ministers are ultimately accountable to Parliament for the performance of their Ministries and departments in all respects." As per the Government of India (Transaction of Business) Rules, all business allocated to a Department in the Government of India has to be disposed of under the directions of the Minister in-charge. It has been observed that the Ministers can discharge their responsibilities more effectively by supervising the performance of operational agencies from time to time rather than by taking direct control of routine functions. In the states, a major part of implementation work is done by the executive agencies. They are structured as departments, statutory boards, commissions, departmental undertakings and other parastatals. The Commission has pointed out that these bodies do not function as real autonomous agencies due to the centralised controls, and inadequate delegation of authority. While the necessity of delegating increased powers to the executive agencies is getting recognised and some states have delegated more powers to these agencies, the overall approach has been one of caution and hesitancy (

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

164/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 10 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 10 WORDS

approach is based on the traditional concept of Staff-Line dichotomy"

approach is based on the traditional concept of staff-line dichotomy

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

165/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 6 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 6 WORDS

Second Administrative Reforms Commission, 2009 https://darpg.gov.in/sites/default/files/sdadmin15.pdf).

Second Administrative Reforms Commission, 2009, pp. 30-31 https://darpg.gov.in/sites/default/files /sdadmin15.pdf).

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

166/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 89 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 89 WORDS

Administrative organisation at the sub-state level in the country is not uniform. Broadly, there are two different systems. Firstly, the State is divided into a few divisions, each division consisting of a few districts. In this system, the Divisional Commissioners are the Head of the Division and act as a link between the District Administration and the State Government. In the second system, where there are no divisions, the District Administration directly deals with the State Government without any intermediary in between. The Field Administration in the country falls in between these two systems. 1.2

Administrative organisation at the sub-state stage in the country is not uniform. Broadly, there are two dissimilar systems. Firstly, the State is divided into a few divisions, each division consisting of a few districts. In this system, the Divisional Commissioner is the Head of the Division and acts as a link flanked by the District Administration and the State Government. In the second system, where there are no divisions, the District Administration directly deals with the State Government without any intermediary in flanked by. The Field Administration in the country falls in flanked by these two systems.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

167/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 161 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 161 WORDS

Divisional Commissioner: Position and Scope of the Office The Divisional Commissioner supervises the work of the District Collectors under his charge. He is the coordinator at the divisional level of a wide range of activities such as law and order administration, development administration, rural development as well as revenue administration. Therefore, the Divisional Commissioner occupies a place of special significance in the intermediate (regional) level administrative set-up. Chequered Career of the Institution : The office of Divisional Coinmissioner in the country has had a chequered career. It has seen a succession of abolitions and revivals in various states since independence. Madhya Pradesh and (old) Mumbai states had abolished it in 1948 and 1950 respectively. However, both revived the commissionership - Madhya Pradesh in 1956 and Mumbai in 1958. Rajasthan abolished the institution in 1961. Uttar Pradesh went halfway, it reduced the number of Commissioners and enlarged their NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 117 geographic jurisdiction. Soon thereafter, however, it restored the status quo. Likewise, the commissionership was abolished in Maharashtra, but was subsequently revived.

Divisional Commissioner. Position and Scope of the Office The Divisional Commissioner supervises the work of the District Collectors under his charge. He is the coordinator at the divisional stage of a wide range of activities such as law and order administration, development administration, rural development as well as revenue administration. So, the Divisional Commissioner occupies a place of special significance in the intermediate (local) stage administrative set-up. Chequered Career of the Institution The office of Divisional Commissioner in the country has had a chequered career. It has seen a succession of abolitions and revivals in several States since independence. Madhya Pradesh and (old) Mumbai States had abolished it in 1948 and 1950 respectively. Though, both revived the commissioner ship - Madhya Pradesh in 1956 and Mumbai in 1958. Rajasthan abolished the institution in 1961. Uttar Pradesh went halfway, it reduced the number of Commissioners and enlarged their geographic jurisdiction. Soon thereafter, though, it restored the status quo. Likewise, the commissionership was abolished in Maharashtra, but was subsequently revived.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

168/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 414 WORDS 80% MATCHING TEXT 414 WORDS

of the state government and a 'government' in the Division. 1.3 Divisional Commissioner: A Controversy Divisional Comnlissionership: A Controversial Office – Substantive Points of the Controversy: The office of the Commissioner has aroused much controversy. Two distinct schools of thought appear to have emerged, one in its defence and the other against it. 118 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 Those who support its cause argue that creation of a strong intermediate tier of administration would encourage decentralisation and bring state administration physically and psychologically closer to people at the grassroots level. Besides, improved coordination and supervision of the field establishment would be achieved. Those who argue against it and recommended its abolition maintain that the creation of an intermediate level of administration curbs the initiative and respondibility of the district functionaries. The States where the institution of Divisional Commissioners exists has not achieved any marked improvement in efficiency, or speed in disposal. Even 'coordination' does not appear to have achieved any worthwhile results. Besides, as the Ministers nowadays tour the districts frequently, as a result the problems of coordination are easily noticed. The Collector can easily get in touch with the Headquarters, in case of need, due to facilities for speedy communication. Thus, there is no need for referring matters to an intermediate authority. We may now summarise arguments for and against the institution of Divisional Commissioners. Arguments For: The ARC Study Team in its Report on District Administration argues in favour of the office of the Divisional Commissioner on following grounds: 1) The Divisional Commissioner's presence will facilitate coordination of the regional level officers of the various development departments. Such coordination cannot be achieved at the State Headquarters because it is too distant for the purpose. Only an officer who has an intimate awareness of the problems of the region can do this effectively. 2) In large States like Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh, it is not possible to exercise effective supervision over Collectors unless a regionally based officer undertakes it. 3) The Commissioner's presence at the intermediate level will encourage delegation from the State level. This will make speedy disposal of cases possible as it makes administration more accessible to the public. 4) The Commissioner's presence can be used to provide more adequate guidance to the Panchayati Raj Institutions. He can also be utilised to facilitate coordination between the Panchayati Raj bodies, and Regional and State Level of the law and order administration in the territory under his command. Divisional Commissionership: A Controversial Office - Substantive Points of the Controversy The office of the Commissioner has aroused much controversy. Two separate schools of thought appear to have appeared, one in its defense and the other against it. Those who support its cause argue that creation of a strong intermediate tier of administration would encourage decentralization and bring State administration physically and psychologically closer to people at the grassroots stage. Besides, improved coordination and supervision of the field establishment would be achieved. Those who argue against it and recommended its abolition maintain that the creation of an intermediate stage of administration curbs the initiative and responsibility of the district functionaries. The States where the institution of divisional Commissioners exists has not achieved any marked improvement in efficiency, or speed in disposal. Even _coordination' does not appear to have achieved any worthwhile results. Besides, as the Ministers nowadays tour the districts regularly, as a result the troubles of coordination are easily noticed. The Collector can easily get in touch with the Headquarters, in case of need, due to facilities for speedy communication. Therefore, there is no need for referring matters to an intermediate authority. We may now summaries arguments for and against the institution of Divisional Commissioners. Arguments For The ARC Revise Team in its Report on District Administration argues in favor of the office of the Divisional Commissioner on following grounds: The Divisional Commissioner's attendance will facilitate coordination of the local stage officers of the several development departments. Such coordination cannot be achieved at the State Headquarters because it is too distant for the purpose. Only an officer who has an intimate awareness of the troubles of the region can do this effectively. In large States like Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh, it is not possible to exercise effective supervision over Collectors unless a regionally based officer undertakes it. The Commissioner's attendance at the intermediate stage will encourage delegation from the State stage. This will create speedy disposal of cases possible as well as create administration more accessible to the public. The Commissioner's attendance can be used to give more adequate guidance to the Panchayati Raj Institutions. He can also be utilized to facilitate coordination flanked by the Panchayati Raj bodies, Local and State Stage Agencies. A regionally based officer of an Agencies. 5) A regionally based officer of an adequate administrative experience will act as a catalyst for regional planning and implementation. NSOU ? CC-PA-04 ? 119 6) An administrator of the Commissioner's seniority and experience could perform a useful training role in respect of the young IAS and state civil service officers of adequate administrative experience will act as a catalyst for local planning and implementation. An administrator of the Commissioner's seniority and experience could perform a useful training role in respect of the young IAS and State civil service officers of

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

169/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 40 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 40 WORDS

division. Arguments Against Arguments against the post of Divisional Commissioner as mentioned in the Bengal Administration Enquiry Committee are: 1) The activities of Government have grown too large and complex at the district level. As a result of which a division is no longer division. Arguments Against Arguments against the post of Divisional Commissioner as mentioned in the Bengal Administration Enquiry Committee are: The activities of Government have grown too large and complex at the district stage. As a result of which a\division is no longer

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

170/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 123 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 123 WORDS

area unit for purpose of supervision. It is too large an area to be an effective unit of administration. 2) As authorities of supervision over districts and as appellate revenue bodies, commissioners are disproportionately expensive. 3) It is doubtful if, as an intermediate level of administration, the Commissioners have much useful role to perform or any specific contribution to make in the disposal of work. The post has been reduced to the position of a mere post office and contributes only delay in the dispatch of public business. 4) Commissioners are officers of wide and mature experience and as such their availability at the state headquarters would mean a fuller use of the valuable experience. Divisional administration fails to create a much useful preoccupation for officers of the Commissioner's seniority and experience. 1.4

area unit for purpose of supervision. It is too large an area to be an effective unit of administration. As authorities of supervision over districts and as an appellate revenue bodies, commissioners are disproportionately expensive. It is doubtful if, as an intermediate stage of administration, the Commissioners have much useful role to perform or any specific contribution to create in the disposal of work. The post has been reduced to the position of a mere post office and contributes only delay in the dispatch of public business. Commissioners are officers of wide and mature experience and as such their availability at the State Headquarters would mean a fuller use of the valuable experience. Divisional administration fails to make a much useful preoccupation for officers of the Commissioner's seniority and experience. .

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

171/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 61 WORDS 99% MATCHING TEXT 61 WORDS

s Secretary, the situation would lead to envy, silent acrimony and even demoralization among the services. Therefore, the Secretary to the Chief Minister ought to be a person who is committed to the traditional civil service virtues of anonymity, impartiality and neutrality. And, the Chief Minister should also give the impression that he does not believe in bypassing the normal channels of authority and responsibility. 5.5

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

172/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 70% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

the Divisional Commissioner. He is the co-ordinator of all activities connected with general administration including law and order, revenue administration and development administration.

SA VANITHA-197211EP119.docx (D129003930)

173/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

the head of the revenue administration in his jurisdiction and hears appeals against the orders of the District

SA VANITHA-197211EP119.docx (D129003930)

174/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 80% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

District as a basic unit of field administration has been in existence through the ages.

District as a vital unit of field administration has been in subsistence through the ages.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

175/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 80% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

called Deputy Commissioner or District Collector who acts as the eyes, ears and arms of the state government at the called either Deputy Commissioner or District Collector. The Collector acts as the eyes, ears and arms of the State Government. The

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

176/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 72% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

the work of all sections of public administration in his division. 3. He resolves differences arising between departments in his division. 4.

SA VANITHA-197211EP119.docx (D129003930)

177/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 78% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

district. District as a basic unit of field administration has been in existence through the ages.

DISTRICT ADMINISTRATION District as a vital unit of field administration has been in subsistence through the ages.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

178/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

administration, the difference between good and bad administration is made at this level.

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

179/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

District is a territory marked off for special administrative purposes.

SA Baljit Kaur Pre-Submission.docx (D59601054)

180/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

rule, a district was called Sarkar and it was headed by Karori- Faujdar, a military officer who functioned under the direct control of the district collector is endowed with a large number of duties in the jurisdiction of the district.

SA Harmanpreet Kaur- Role of Deputy Commissioner in Present Context.docx (D23434400)

181/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 73% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

The District Collector is entrusted with a wide range of duties in the jurisdiction of the district.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

182/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

the controlling, drawing and disbursing officer of the district staff	the controlling, drawing and disbursing officer of the district staff. 6.

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

183/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 59% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

responsibility for maintenance of all government buildings under the charge of the Revenue Department. He is in charge of district treasury, and responsible for the security of	responsibility for maintenance of all Government buildings under the charge of the Revenue Department. 8. In-Charge of the Treasury, District Stamp Officer and responsible for verification of the security of

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

184/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 64% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

tentative tour programmes of ministers and other dignitaries. He acts as the protocol officer in the district.	tentative tour programmes of Ministers and VIPs. 11. Acting as the protocol officer in the district. 12.

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

185/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

a district was called ‘Sarkar’ and it was headed by Karori-Faujdar.

SA Harmanpreet Kaur- Role of Deputy Commissioner in Present Context.docx (D23434400)

186/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

the proper conduct of civil suits in which state is a party.

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

187/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

after the interests of the government in general. He is responsible for proper implementation of government orders. He trains junior officers	after the interests of the Government in general. 25. Responsible for proper implementation of Government orders. 26. Training junior officers

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

188/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

that public grievances against the administration in the district are properly and effectively dealt with. 3.3.2

that public grievances against the administration in the district are properly and effectively dealt with. 28.

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

189/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 40 WORDS 60% MATCHING TEXT 40 WORDS

He controls and supervises the subordinate magistracy. He orders magisterial postings during festivals. He promulgates orders whenever there is any danger of breach of public peace and tranquility. He disposes all the petitions and general complaints received from governments and others. He

He controls and supervises the subordinate magistracy and orders magisterial postings during festivals. •••• He promulgates orders whenever there is any danger or breach of public peace and tranquility. •••• He disposes of all the petitions and miscellaneous general complaints received from Government and others. •••• He

W http://www.jeywin.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/03/Optional-Public-Administration-11-State-and-Dist ...

190/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

as the principal agency of government in matters of general administration in the district and the work of probation officers. He enforces the Press Act and disposes declaration in respect of the press and newspapers. He recommends schemes for the development of forests and issues permits for the cutting of trees.

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

191/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 34 WORDS 55% MATCHING TEXT 34 WORDS

the work of probation officers. 28. Making of reception orders for lunatics. 29. Enforcement of the Press Act and disposal of declaration in respect of the press and newspapers. 30. Administration of nazul lands. 31. Recommendations schemes for the development of forests. 32. Issue of permits for the cutting of trees. 33.

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

192/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 70% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

Returning Officer to Parliamentary and Vidhan Sabha Constituencies and bears the responsibility for coordination of election work in the district. 3.5

Returning Officer for elections to the Parliamentary and Vidhan Sabha Constituencies, and has the responsibility of coordination of election work at the district

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

193/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 66% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

at the field level. The district magistrate is also the district census officer. He is responsible for conduct of census operations once in ten years.

at the district level. As the District census officer the District Census Officer, the Collector is responsible for conduct of census operations once in ten years.

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

194/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 34 WORDS 57% MATCHING TEXT 34 WORDS

with petitions from prisoners: As head of criminal administration of the district he controls and directs the action of the police. He submits annual crime report to the government. He appoints and punishes village Chowkidars.

SA 118E1120-Indian Constitution & Administration.pdf (D165201927)

195/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 62% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

Administration The district magistrate is the head of the revenue administration at the district level and is the custodian of administration. ? The Collector is the Head of the revenue administration at the district level. ? The maintenance of

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

196/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 66% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

is the apex of the district administration. He represents the government at the field level.

SA Baljit Kaur Pre-Submission.docx (D59601054)

197/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

District Magistrate and is responsible for the maintenance of law and order within the

SA UNIT 11 DISTRICT COLLECTOR.docx (D40802230)

198/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS of the Samiti, he signs and authenticates all letters and documents for and on behalf of

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

199/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 56% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

the Panchayat Samiti. He prepares the budget of the Panchayat, with reference to the levy of taxes and their recovery, recovery of

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

200/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

is to see that the plans and programmes approved by the

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

201/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 140 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 140 WORDS

He signs contracts and authenticates all letters and documents for and on behalf of the Panchayat Samiti subject to the prior approval of the appropriate authority. 2. He draws and disburses money out of Panchayat Samiti fund. 3. He takes appropriate steps to remove irregularities pointed out by the auditors about Panchayat Samiti accounts. 4. He inspects on behalf of the Panchayat Samiti the financial condition of the Panchayat in regard to the levy of taxes and their recovery of loans and maintenance of regular account. 5. He helps Panchayats to draw up plans and see that they conform to the plans and priorities of the Panchayat Samiti. He also sees that the construction programmes undertaken by the Panchayat conform to the standards laid down and completed within scheduled time. 154 ? NSOU ? CC-PA-04 6. BDO exercises supervision and control over extension officers and other employees of the Panchayat Samiti. 7.

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

202/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 35 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 35 WORDS

He formulates annual budget and places it before the Panchayat Samiti, prepares the annual administrative report and quarterly progress reports for the consideration of the Panchayat Samiti and send all these to Zila Parishad and the state

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

203/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 33 WORDS 64% MATCHING TEXT 33 WORDS

resolutions and proceedings of the Panchayat Samiti to the Zila Parishad and the state governments. 8. He deals with all cases of fraud, embezzlement, theft or loss of fund or other property of the Panchayat

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

204/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 57 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 57 WORDS

of the Panchayat Samiti, the BDO issues notices for the meetings of the Panchayat Samiti and standing committees under instructions from the Pradhan and Chairman of the respective committees. He attends all these meetings himself or authorizes a senior officer subordinate to him to attend such meetings. But he does not exercise right to vote while attending such meetings. He expenditure upon it which normally, requires the sanction of Panchayat Samity or its standing committee.

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

205/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

206/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

directs the execution of any work or act and incurring

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

207/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

advice regarding the legality and the various consequences of a proposed course of action.

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

208/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 10 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 10 WORDS

can win the trust and respect of the Panchayat Samiti members.

SA 118E1240-Local Goverment and Administration.pdf (D165201934)

209/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

the Director General of Police at the State Headquarters. The Superintendent of Police (

the Director General of Police at the State stage and the Superintendent of Police

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Basic_of_Indian_Administration.pdf

210/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

for the maintenance of law and order in his district.

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

211/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 70% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

the Head of police circle. He is responsible for the maintenance of law and order,

SA MHYS-45 INDIAN ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEM.docx (D161284834)

212/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

the principal representative of the State Government in the district

SA Baljit Kaur Pre-Submission.docx (D59601054)

213/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

District Magistrate is responsible for the maintenance of law and order in the district,

SA UNIT 11 DISTRICT COLLECTOR.docx (D40802230)

214/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 38 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 38 WORDS

District Magistrate as the head of the regulatory administration in the district should exercise general supervisory control over the police organisation in the district. Except in an emergency, he should not interfere with the internal working of the police administration."

District magistrate as the head of the regulatory administration in the district should exercise general supervisory control over the police organizations in the district. Except in an emergency, he should not interfere with the internal working of the police administration.

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

215/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 70% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

the District Magistrate for the general success of the criminal administration of the district, and

The District Magistrate is the head of the Criminal Administration of the District and

W https://pdfcoffee.com/administrative-system-of-india-pdf-free.html

216/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 10 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 10 WORDS

as the head of the regulatory administration in the district. ?

as the head of the regulatory administration in the district

W https://www.distanceeducationju.in/pdf/MA%20Political%20Science%20Indian%20Administration%20305.pdf

217/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Ram, D. S., 1996, Dynamics of District Administration : New Perspective, Kanishka, New Delhi. 192 ?

Ram, D.S. (1996). Dynamics of District Administration: New Perspective. New Delhi:

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

218/219 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

The Second Administrative Reforms Commission in its report 'Ethics in Governance'

The Second Administrative Reforms Commission (SARC) in its report, entitled 'Ethics in Governance'

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68087/3/BLOCK-2.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

219/219	SUBMITTED TEXT	35 WORDS	51%	MATCHING TEXT	35 WORDS

the Police Act of 1861, (Act 7 of 1861), the administration of the police in a district vests in the District Superintendent of Police under the general control and direction of the District Magistrate. Thus, while there

SA MHYS-45 Indian Administrative System.docx (D151906351)

Ouriginal by Turnitin

Document Information

Analyzed document	CC-PA-05.pdf (D164995539)
Submitted	4/25/2023 1:02:00 PM
Submitted by	Library NSOU
Submitter email	dylibrarian.plagchek@wbnsou.ac.in
Similarity	21%
Analysis address	dylibrarian.plagchek.wbnsou@analysis.urkund.com

Sources included in the report

W	URL: http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20The%20new%20... Fetched: 4/16/2021 9:56:54 AM	1
W	URL: https://www.ijsr.net/archive/v5i1/NOV152468.pdf Fetched: 11/16/2021 3:19:40 AM	6
W	URL: http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%... Fetched: 5/7/2022 12:02:50 PM	27
SA	PSC_1046.pdf Document PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)	18
W	URL: https://link.springer.com/chapter/10.1007/978-981-19-1208-5_2 Fetched: 9/29/2022 4:52:23 AM	1
W	URL: https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM	40
SA	contemporary theoretical perspective.docx Document contemporary theoretical perspective.docx (D159756278)	3
W	URL: http://anucde.info/Administrative%20Theory%20(Classical).pdf Fetched: 7/15/2021 11:19:33 AM	1
W	URL: https://www.questjournals.org/jrhss/papers/vol4-issue6/D461520.pdf Fetched: 1/31/2022 8:14:11 AM	1
W	URL: https://www.owlgen.in/discuss-the-theory-building-in-public-administrative/ Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:02:00 PM	1

W	URL: https://himia.umj.ac.id/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/Handbook-of-Public-Administration-By-Jack-R... Fetched: 2/5/2023 5:03:47 PM	6
W	URL: https://pubad-ias.blogspot.com/2011/09/riggesian-models-and-their-critique.html Fetched: 6/14/2020 3:03:05 AM	5
SA	MPM415 COMPARATIVE PUBLIC MANAGEMENT.docx Document MPM415 COMPARATIVE PUBLIC MANAGEMENT.docx (D86981748)	1
W	URL: https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM	10
W	URL: https://www.managementstudyguide.com/comparative-public-administration.htm Fetched: 10/24/2019 11:41:00 AM	1
SA	Upasana Ghosh -Internal Assignment.docx Document Upasana Ghosh -Internal Assignment.docx (D37819549)	1
W	URL: https://link.springer.com/chapter/10.1007/978-981-19-1208-5_5 Fetched: 2/22/2023 5:58:39 AM	3
W	URL: https://www.iicseonline.org/comparative_public_administration2.pdf Fetched: 1/26/2023 2:40:34 PM	1
W	URL: https://www.american.edu/spa/dpap/degrees/upload/puad-608-hafner-mpa.pdf Fetched: 10/24/2019 11:34:25 AM	6
W	URL: https://unacademy.com/content/upsc/study-material/public-administration/comparative-public-adm... Fetched: 2/22/2023 5:58:38 AM	1
W	URL: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Public_choice Fetched: 10/25/2019 4:27:00 PM	4
SA	KEY PAPER 2019 PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY.docx Document KEY PAPER 2019 PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY.docx (D93844872)	3
SA	Coursework2.pdf Document Coursework2.pdf (D23885180)	3
SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx Document Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)	32
W	URL: https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-... Fetched: 12/30/2021 7:07:21 PM	11
W	URL: https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=2242208 Fetched: 5/24/2022 7:24:02 PM	1

W	URL: https://www.cambridge.org/core/journals/review-of-politics/article/public-administration-publi... Fetched: 11/2/2021 12:23:46 AM	1
SA	new public management.docx Document new public management.docx (D159210533)	1
SA	新建 Microsoft Office Word 文档.docx Document 新建 Microsoft Office Word 文档.docx (D29583276)	1
SA	MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf Document MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)	8
W	URL: https://www.aijbm.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/09/I395661.pdf Fetched: 1/10/2021 2:59:48 PM	2
W	URL: https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM	28
W	URL: https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM	18
SA	synopsis 12.docx Document synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)	5
W	URL: https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future... Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM	34
W	URL: https://core.ac.uk/download/pdf/96375.pdf Fetched: 10/11/2019 5:53:30 PM	1
W	URL: https://global.oup.com/academic/product/the-oxford-encyclopedia-of-public-administration-97801... Fetched: 11/10/2022 1:32:49 PM	1
W	URL: https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC/New%20Public%20Administration,%202nd%... Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM	9
W	URL: https://schoolofpoliticalscience.com/new-public-administration/ Fetched: 7/29/2021 3:44:48 PM	1
W	URL: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/New_Public_Administration Fetched: 10/30/2019 1:30:42 PM	1
W	URL: https://schoolofpoliticalscience.com/comparative-public-administration/ Fetched: 11/28/2020 1:12:12 AM	1

W URL: http://eflorakkl.in/staff/uploads/sem2%20cpa%20uniti1.pdf
Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM 6

W URL: https://www.researchgate.net/publication
/364410503_PUBLIC_ADMINISTRATION_AND_PUBLIC_CHOICE_THEORY
Fetched: 10/27/2022 2:50:49 AM 1

Entire Document

PREFACE In a bid to standardize higher education in the country, the University Grants Commission (UGC) has introduced Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) based on five types of courses viz. core, discipline specific, generic elective, ability and skill enhancement for graduate students of all programmes at Honours level. This brings in the semester pattern, which finds efficacy in sync with credit system, credit transfer, comprehensive continuous assessments and a graded pattern of evaluation. The objective is to offer learners ample flexibility to choose from a wide gamut of courses, as also to provide them lateral mobility between various educational institutions in the country where they can carry their acquired credits. I am happy to note that the University has been recently accredited by National Assessment and Accreditation Council of India (NAAC) with grade ''A''. UGC (Open and Distance Learning Programmes and Online Programmes) Regulations, 2020 have mandated compliance with CBCS for UG programmes for all the HEIs in this mode. Welcoming this paradigm shift in higher education, Netaji Subhas Open University (NSOU) has resolved to adopt CBCS from the academic session 2021- 22 at the Under Graduate Degree Programme level. The present syllabus, framed in the spirit of syllabi recommended by UGC, lays due stress on all aspects envisaged in the curricular framework of the apex body on higher education. It will be imparted to learners over the six semesters of the Programme. Self Learning Materials (SLMs) are the mainstay of Student Support Services (SSS) of an Open University. From a logistic point of view, NSOU has embarked upon CBCS presently with SLMs in English / Bengali. Eventually, the English version SLMs will be translated into Bengali too, for the benefit of learners. As always, all of our teaching faculties contributed in this process. In addition to this we have also requisitioned the services of best academics in each domain in preparation of the new SLMs. I am sure they will be of commendable academic support. We look forward to proactive feedback from all stakeholders who will participate in the teaching-learning based on these study materials. It has been a very challenging task well executed, and I congratulate all concerned in the preparation of these SLMs. I wish the venture a grand success. Professor (Dr.) Ranjan Chakrabarti Vice-Chancellor
Netaji Subhas Open University Under Graduate Degree Programme Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) Subject : Honours in Public Administration (HPA) Comparative Public Administration Course Code : CC-PA-05 First Print—January, 2023 _____ Printed in accordance with the regulations of the Distance Education Bureau of the University Grants Commission
Netaji Subhas Open University Under Graduate Degree Programme Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) Subject: Honours in Public Administration (HPA) Comparative Public Administration Course Code: CC-PA-05 : Board of Studies : : Members : Chandan Basu Dipankar Sinha Professor of History Professor of Political Science Director, School of Social Sciences, NSOU University of Calcutta Soma Ghosh Pujan Kumar Sen Professor of Political Science Professor of Public Administration Principal, HMM College for Women NSOU Barnana Guha Thakurta (Banerjee) Sital Prasad Nag Associate Professor of Political Science Associate Professor of Political Science NSOU NSOU Manoj Kumar Haldar Debajit Goswami Assistant Professor of Political Science Assistant Professor of Public Administration NSOU NSOU : Writers : : Editor : Block I Units 1-5 Debajit Goswami Kaushik Ghosh Assistant Professor of Political Science, Assistant Professor of Public Administration Bankura University NSOU Block II Units 1-5 : Format Editing : Titu Bardhan Basabi Chakraborty Faculty of Political Science, Assistant Professor of Public Administration, Vidyasagar Metropolitan College NSOU Block III Units 1-5 Nikita Rai Scholar of Political Science, University of North Bengal Block IV Units 1-5 Isha Tirkey Assistant Professor of Political Science, University of North Bengal Notification

65% MATCHING BLOCK 1/307 W

All rights reserved. No part of this Self-Learning Material (SLM) may be reproduced in any form without permission

in writing from Netaji Subhas Open University. A.B.Aich Registrar
Netaji Subhas Open University Under Graduate Degree Programme Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) Subject: Honours in Public Administration (HPA) Comparative Public Administration Course Code: CC-PA-05 CONTENTS Block I Introduction .....1- 10 Block II Theories and Models of Comparative Public Administration .....11 - 48 Block III Public Choice Theory .....49 - 111 Block IV Recent Trends .....112 - 168
1 CC-V BLOCK-1 UNIT-1 AN INTRODUCTION TO COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION STRUCTURE 1.1 Learning Objectives 1.2 Introduction 1.3 Nature and Scope 1.4 Evolution 1.5 Major Approaches 1.6 Problems 1.7 Conclusion 1.8 Summing Up 1.9 Glossary Keywords 1.10 Model Questions (3 Questions each of 6, 12 & 18 Marks) 1.11 Further Readings and References 1.1 Objectives This unit helps our students in learning: ? How does Comparative Public Administration emphasise on the development of the third world countries ? How do successes and failures of one country's public administration help the administration of other countries
2 ? Evolution of this subject ? Various approaches and models of Comparative Public Administration 1.2 Introduction "...

100% MATCHING BLOCK 2/307 W

The new paradigm for public administration must be comparative i.e., global, since the solution of the problem to which it addresses itself will require increasing communication between scholars and practitioners in all countries". ---

Fred W. Riggs ...

98% MATCHING BLOCK 3/307 W

the comparative aspects of public administration have largely been ignored; and as long as the study of public administration is not comparative, claims for ''a science of public administration'' sound rather hollow. Conceivably there might be a science of American public administration and a science of British public administration and a science of French public administration; but can there be a ''science of public administration'' in the sense of a body of generalized principles independent of their peculiar national setting? ---

Robert A. Dahl After World War II, newly independent countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America (most of them were ruled by the United Kingdom, France, Germany, The Netherlands, Portugal) required socio-economic-political development in their own way. All these colonial countries had only one single common legacy and that is 'ultimate exploitation by the colonial rulers more than century years old'. That's why they needed special care which the then dominated traditional public administration failed to provide. Because traditional public administration was born and developed in first world countries. So, traditional public administration had solutions of the problems of those countries. So, comparative public administration (CPA) is an answer

65% MATCHING BLOCK 4/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

for the probable development methods for the newly independent countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Without introducing something new, it was not possible to rebuild the third world countries. Although scholars like Woodrow Wilson wanted to compare public administration from the very initial stage of this subject, but most of his contemporary scholars were not in favour to compare various administrations in that initial stage. They wanted to give a good shape to the subject (public administration) at first and only then they were in favour of compare one country's administration with another. We may also say in this way that satisfaction over the traditional public administration in spite of the fact that traditional public
3 administration is non-comparative by nature, was one of the major causes that CPA took so many years to emerge. Why CPA is necessary? Actually, until or unless, we compare one thing with other thing/ things we cannot say that this one is good or bad. So, comparison is very much necessary to know whether I am doing well or I need to change, and if I need to change, towards which direction I need to change? In this connection, one thing we should remember that literature of comparison of administration is very old. It is even found in the writings of Aristotle too. Aristotle, in his time, compared 158 city-states' political systems to learn what makes a government good and what makes a government bad. In comparative public administration it is very important to know that what we should compare and what we should not--- and obviously the whole matter will be done in a systematic way. In this particular point, modern comparative public administration differentiate itself from older classification and analysis. So, CPA is closely associated with nation building process since World War II. One of the major important objectives of the comparative public administration is to make the public administration universal. If we minutely follow the first quotation of this writing taken from Fred W. Riggs, we will see that Riggs did not want that public administration should show much concern over a single country. Behind flourish or spread or popularize this CPA subject, it should be noted that after World War II, each newly independent country adopted various types of political, economic, social as well as administrative systems considering their own suitability. This actually helped CPA to flourish as a specialized field. At the same time, we should not forget to mention another important objective or purpose of the CPA i.e., after comparing properly, apply best administrative solutions assembleing from anywhere of the world to solve a particular socio-economic-political problem anywhere and achieve better goals. 1.3 Nature and Scope Like other social science subjects, CPA also have ambiguity and debates over what is its nature and what are its scope. By nature, one can say that CPA is cross cultural as well as cross national. It is cross national because it studies administration of various countries. It is cross cultural because different countries possess different administrative culture of its own. If anybody wants to compare the administrative system of capitalist countries with the administrative system of socialist countries, then, he has to compare countries like USA, UK, France (capitalist countries) with the administration of Cuba, Vietnam (socialist countries). If any scholar wants to study the administration of developed countries and developing countries, he has to compare USA's administration (developed) with that of India's administration (developing). That's why CPA is branded as a cross cultural discussion platform.

4 By nature, comparative public administration is empirical too. traditional public administration was very much book oriented. But comparative public administration on contrary is very much empirical and survey based at the grassroots level. From the above point, another nature of CPA comes forward and i.e. while traditional public administration emphasized on theories (e.g. what to do or what not to do). On contrary, comparative public administration emphasized on how to do. CPA also transformed from ideographic to nomothetic nature. According to Fred W. Riggs, ideographic approach means those approaches which emphasize on a particular case, a particular historical event or on a single nation-state. On contrary, nomothetic approach wants to generalize various theories. So, ideographic approach was obviously descriptive one only. But nomothetic approach is full of writing on comparing various political, social, administrative systems. No one can deny the fact that, CPA helps public administration to move from non- ecological to ecological. And most of its credit goes to Fred W. Riggs. Although few experts of CPA introduced or discussed about ecology in CPA, but theoretical form of this in CPA was first given by Fred W. Riggs. Now, one may ask that what is ecological factor in comparative public administration? The term 'ecology' comes from the subject biology. There it purely denotes 'environment'. But, in the field of comparative public administration, it denotes the relationship between one country's administration with economic, political and social factors of that particular country. Institutions are playing very important role in comparative public administration. Here institutions mean legislature, executive and judiciary. Because state or administrative authority cannot do anything without various institutions mentioned above of the state. For example, in any country legislature passes the bill into law, executive organ executes those laws and judiciary interprets the law and if anything found wrong in execution, judiciary correct the same. CPA after careful studying or analysis tries to implement the best institutional process in a country. Another important nature of traditional public administration was that it emphasized on individual rather organization. For example, while traditional public administration emphasized on any particular organisation of a state like, NASA, Soviet ROSCOSMOS (erstwhile Soviet Space Programme), CPA here emphasize on individual. Traditional public administration surveys any particular country's administration and then apply this to other administrative systems. But comparative public administration under Fred W. Riggs had multiple focus. He and his followers knew better that the demands and needs of the third world countries are something different and much more than first world countries. That's why they have given special multiple focus on CPA to become a best solution to old exploited colonial countries.

5 Comparative public administration not only emphasizes on inter-government analysis, but it also emphasizes on intra-governmental activities too. It means comparative public administration try to compare administrative systems between or among the countries as well as between or among the various ministries/ departments within a same government too. It is one of the most important nature of CPA. CPA emphasised on studying voting behaviour of the various countries. Why do people cast vote? Why do a section of people cast vote in favour of a particular political party for a long time? Why do a section of people always shift their political loyalty from a particular political party to another--- all these queries are traced and discussed by CPA. For example, we know that India, Pakistan and Bangladesh are neighbours. But since 1947, Pakistan and Bangladesh (even when it was erstwhile East Pakistan) were ruled by the military junta. But, in India, democracy successfully runs since independence (except two years of emergency period). What are the major causes behind this? How did various forms of political system (democracy, autocracy) affect administration? CPA tries to serach out the answer of all these questions. Another important subject matter of CPA is growth and functions of pressure groups or interest groups in different parts of the world. How did interest groups emerge, how did they function, particularly how did they operate in different political structures and cultures--- all are the prominent subject matter of this discipline. On the other hand, few want to discuss CPA mainly at three broad levels i.e. i) Macro; ii) Middle-range; and iii) Micro. i) Macro Level: In macro level, for example, India's administrative system will be compared with France's administrative system. Two states' administrative system will be discussed here, in details. ii) Middle-range Level: In this approach, local level governments of the various states are compared and analysed. iii) Micro Level: Under this approach, comparison took place in grassroots level with similar type of organisations. For example, Railway administrative system, Banking system of various states can be compared and discussed under micro level analysis. Another important scope of CPA is management of human resources including financial management. These areas are mostly needed while discussing or analysing third world countries administration. Social welfare including education are two other important areas of discussion in CPA. As the subject intend to develop the socio-political-economic conditions of third world countries, so, without developing social welfare indicators and education no third world countries can develop itself.

6 1.4 Evolution When a new subject or a branch of new subject emerged, thought comes in the mind that what are the necessity of this new discipline? In case of comparative public administration, this question also arose and the simple answer is the independence of colonial countries after World War II. As we have already discussed that in spite of Aristotle's attempt in ancient Greek, we consider that comparative politics emerged as a separate discipline only after World War II. To serve the people of the third world countries, it is necessary to make the administration suitable for them. And to do this no administration of the first world country can help them. Because demands and priorities of the first world countries are different from the demands and priorities of the poor countries. Malnutrition is the problem found among the people of third world countries. Famine was very much normal for the people of newly independent countries. On contrary, these words are uncommon to the people of first world countries. Overnutrition is the problem of the first world countries. Fred W. Riggs has been given the most of the credit behind flourishing of this subject. Dwight Waldo, Ferrel Heady, L D White, R A Dahl are the eminent scholars in the field of CPA, but the contribution of Fred W. Riggs is the most remarkable one. To him, earlier studies should not be considered as 'comparative governments' and those studies one merely called as 'governments of foreign countries'. Because not only they had lack of comparativeness in nature but also these were not written in orderly manner. Fred W. Riggs wrote an article '

100% MATCHING BLOCK 5/307 W

Notes on Literature Available for the Study of Comparative Public Administration'.

It was published in 'The American Political Science Review' in 1954. In this article Riggs discussed about the available literature found on the comparative public administration in various countries. It was such a nice and needed article of that time. It was that time when under the leadership of Fred W. Riggs and under the financial patronage (one-half million dollars) of Ford foundation, a group of people started to discuss on comparative administration for two decades. Riggs was the Chairman of the comparative administration group (CAG) (which was a special division of the American Society for Public Administration) from 1960 to 1973.

57% MATCHING BLOCK 6/307 W

Scholars gradually believed that Weberian model was not sufficient to understand public administration of third world countries. Dwight Waldo talked about the structural functionalism of the comparative public administration but in practice it is the credit of Riggs who actually introduced structural functionalism in the study of comparative public administration. Marshall Plan (1948) also played an important role behind emergence of comparative public administration. Under this plan USA provided foreign aid to Western Europe. USA all total transferred 13.3 billion dollars to Western Europe to recover their economy. At present this comparative public administration discipline is receiving importance throughout the world, beyond boundary.

7 1.5 Major Approaches: Major approaches under this discipline may be called: i) Bureaucratic approach ii) Behavioural approach iii) Structural-functional approach iv) Ecological approach i) Bureaucratic approach: Max Weber introduced this approach. To Max Weber, each organization can be defined or understood as a structure of activities and in future it will be in the direction to achieve desired goal. For the sake of maximum interest gain, each organisation develops a specialized system and few systematic rules and regulations. ii) Behavioural approach: This approach is related with the scientific study of human behaviour in different social environments. This approach demands that comparative public administration should include individual in the study. As this approach stresses on 'fact', thus, collection of data and analyse the same, quantification and verification of that data are given the primary priority. iii) Structural-functional approach: This approach is derived from the research work of Malinowski and Radcliff Brown--- two anthropologists. Although this approach was not applied in the field of public administration, as same as applied in the anthropology. In this approach, two major key words are 'structure' and 'functions'. Here social structure refers to "any pattern of behaviour, which has become the standard feature of a social system". This approach, in the arena of comparative public administration accepts that, a structure exists in each administrative system. And with the help of this structure and components or organs, several functions are performed. In comparative public administration, structures are of two types, 'concrete' (various government departments) and 'analytic' (structures of authority, power etc.). The word function here denotes any consequences of structure. It may be possible that those are the consequences of one structure to another structure or are the consequences of the whole system. Structures may be monofunctional or multifunctional. If structure like Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) is noticed, we'll find out that it is monofunctional but if we look at the Office of the US President, we'll find out that this structure is multifunctional. iv) Ecological approach: As we have already discussed that Fred W. Riggs is the father of this approach and according to him, this ecological approach is based on the 8 communication between administrative system and its external environment. But this environment is something different from the idea of Botany. Here, environment denotes political, cultural, economic and social systems. So, influence of administrative system over environment and vis-à-vis are the main discussing matter of this approach. In his famous book 'Ecology of Public Administration' (1962), Fred W. Riggs nicely discussed the relationship between administration and with its environment or surroundings. To Riggs, administration, social, economic, political--- all are subsystems of a society. 1.6 Problems Study of CPA depends very much on the political culture of that country. Sometime, country or specifically express, ruler of that country does not want that news or information from his country should go outside. For example, one can very much consider the case of North Korea now. North Korean President Kim Jung-un does not allow foreign media to travel here and there and collect information about his country. Even, he sometimes arrested foreign media personnel, tortured them on the grounds of spying in North Korea. So, if one scholar wants to compare capitalist country's administration with socialist country's administration and he chose USA as sample from capitalist country and North Korea as sample from socialist block, that researcher might face big problem to collect information from his sample North Korea. Or, we may say in this way that on the very first day when he chose North Korea as his sample, his research work came to an end. Technology is another challenge in case of studying or comparing various countries. Normally first world countries are technologically advanced countries, so, the tools and methods one is able to use in first world countries, is not easy to use the same in third world countries. For example, if one researcher is collecting data and analyse the same with 5G technology sitting in a developed country and that researcher use 3G technology while surveying and analysing in a third world country, findings might not give the same outcome. 1.7 Conclusion In conclusion, we may remind that CPA is not only a subject. CPA has become a tool for development of the developing and underdeveloped countries. One question sometime arose that whether was it too late to introduce the discipline CPA as a tool for development? It means should we introduce or implement CPA before World War II? The simple answer is no. Reality is something different. Actually, if we deeply notice, we'll find out that, till the end of World War II, concept of developing countries almost absent. These areas (e.g. India, Sri Lanka) were captured by the 9 colonial superpowers and they gave independence to these countries after World War II. So, in reality, the main subject matter (i.e. developing countries) of CPA did not exist at all before World War II. Till that time, their identity was just they were 'colonies'. So, as the main subject matter was absent, how did CPA emerged as a separate discipline? 1.8 Summing Up I. Comparative Public Administration can be branded as a movement to save and develop the third world countries II. This discipline received most contributions from Fred W. Riggs III. Subject matter of Comparative Public Administration is very tough as different nations have different political culture (democratic, autocratic etc.) IV. Without studying Comparative Public Administration, no administrative development is possible in current world 1.9 Glossary Keywords Major Approaches to Comparative Public Administration, Developing Countries, Third World Countries, Comparison of Administration, Comparison of Socio-Political- Economic Condition, Fred W. Riggs, 1.10 Model Questions (3 Questions each of 6, 12 & 18 Marks) 6 Marks Model Questions a) Examine the nature of comparative public administration. b) Write a short note on the shifting of ideographic nature to nomothetic nature. c) Why comparison is needed in administration? 12 Marks Model Questions a) What are the scope of comparative public administration?

10 b) Write a note on the contribution of Fred W. Riggs in the emergence of comparative public administration. c) Write a note on the ecology approach to comparative public administration. 18 Marks Model Questions a) Write a note on the various approaches of the comparative public administration. b) What are the major problems in comparative public administration? c) Explain the evolution of comparative public administration. 1.11 Further Readings and References 1. 'The Ecology of Public Administration' by Fred W. Riggs 2. 'The Study of Public Administration' by D. Waldo 3. 'Political Culture and Political Development' by Lucian W. Pye and Sidney Verba 4. 'Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective' by Ferrel Heady 5. 'The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems' by Robert A Dahl 6. 'Modern Comparative Politics: Approaches, Methods and Issues' by S N Ray 7. 'Introduction to Comparative Political Analysis' by Rakhahari Chatterji
11 BLOCK 2 THEORIES AND MODELS OF COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION UNIT 1 RATIONALE BEHIND THEORY AND MODEL BUILDING STRUCTURE 1.1 Learning objectives 1.2 Introduction 1.3 Theory building 1.3.1 Administrative management 1.3.2 Scientific management approach 1.3.3 Bureaucratic approach 1.3.4 Human relations approach 1.3.5 Behavioural approach 1.3.6 Public policy making 1.3.7 New public administration 1.4 Model building 1.4.1 Systems model 1.4.2 Institutional model 1.4.3 Rational policy-making model 1.4.4 Incremental model 1.5 Conclusion 1.6 Summary 1.7 Keywords 1.8 Model

71%	MATCHING BLOCK 7/307	SA	contemporary theoretical perspective.docx (D159756278)

questions 1.9 References 1.1. LEARNING OBJECTIVES After reading this Unit, one should be able to: ? Explain

why there was a need to devise and theorise newer theories and models in public administration ? Discuss various advantages and disadvantages of theory and model making, ? Highlight traditional theorising with modern administrative theories, ? Explain new public management theory ? Explain the rationale behind scientific management theory ? Gather knowledge about the bureaucratic theory, ? Understand and appreciate the human relations approach that has taken the world of administration by storm ? Understand the Eastonian model for policy analysis; ? Discuss the Rationality model for policy-making;

12 ? Highlight the Institutional approach, which addresses the role that state and social institutions have in defining and shaping public policies; ? Describe Lindblom's Incremental approach to policy-making; and ? Examine the Political Public Policy approach 1.2. INTRODUCTION Modern day states are highly bureaucratic in nature. Since the 19 th century throughout the 20 th and in the 21 st centuries administration has played a pivotal role in safeguarding the interests of the modern state. Without it no state can function and serve the people that make its populace. Even in times of war a bureaucratic model is not necessarily disturbed for there is always a scope of improvement in the institution. Public Administration in a modern state is a government in action. The activities of government are almost look to the state. Today government has ceased to be merely the keeper of the peace, the arbiter of disputes and the providing of common and mundane services. Public Administration is an integral part of the development process and has a significant role to play in national development and social change. It is responsible for ending social inequalities and providing social justice to the weaker sections of society. It is a great instrument in the spread of education, ending un touch ability, providing social status to each and everyone. Public Administration plays a significant role in policy making in various fields. It helps the executive in identifying major policy areas, preparing major policy proposals, analysing various alternatives and solutions, dividing the major policies into sub-policies. In fact, bureaucracy is the only conceivable instrument capable of formulating and implementing the policies of modern government is called upon to undertake. From the above discussion, Public Administration is really government in action. It is true that public administration is mainly concerned with the executing and implementing part of governmental activity.

95% MATCHING BLOCK 8/307 W

Thus,

92% MATCHING BLOCK 9/307 W

Public Administration consists of getting the work of government done by coordinating the efforts of the people so that they can work together to accomplish their set tasks. Public administration is concerned with the activities of the government, people and it differ from the private administration. Administration is essentially a matter of human relationships. It may be emphasized that the administrator is neither a philosopher nor a politician. 1.3. THEORY BUILDING

97% MATCHING BLOCK 10/307 W

Theory building in public administration is not an easy task to do, because there are various kinds of public organisations, administrative structures and processes has been developed in the study of public administration. The aim of public administrative theory is to achieve politically legitimated goals by constituency moulded means. For the success of public administration, public administrators have borrowed various methods, role, and theories from the other disciplines like economic, sociology, psychology etc. Theory building in public administration is not only related to develop a theory of administration but also to formulate a set of theories. Administrative theory is basically deals in the various ideas and views of various scholars. Administrative theory is that theory, which. helps to develop the other theories in the field of public administration. They are administrative management theory, the scientific management approach, the bureaucracy approach, the human relations approach, the behavioural approach, 13 the systems approach, public-policy approach, decision making theory, public choice theory, and in the end, it creates new public administration. Administrative theory helps to growth various theories in the field of public administration, which is briefly discussed in the following: 1.3.1 Administrative Management: Theory Administrative management theory is that a science of administration can be developed based on some principles and experience of administrators. It deals primarily with formal organisation structure. The basic aims of this theory are efficiency and economy. It explains briefly in the words of Henry Fayol, Luther Gullick and Lyndall Urwick. Henry Fayol is considered the father of administrative management theory. He mainly focusses on the development of broad administrative principles which are applicable to general and higher management levels. He defined management in terms of five functions, Planning, Organizing, Commanding, Coordinating and Controlling. Gullick explains major management techniques by the word POSDCORB, which stands for a different technique such as, Planning, Organizing, Staffing, Directing, Coordinating, Reporting and Budgeting. The administrative management theory is marked by the four basic features, impersonal, specialization, efficiency, and hierarchy. Although, the exponents of this theory, they often invoked the name of science, but they did not even come close to using established scientific methods. Their principles were derived from experience and collections of information. 1.3.2 The Scientific Management Approach: The scientific management approach was based on the design and the operation of production processes on the shop level of the organisation. Scientific management refers to the time motion studies. It signing in the United States in twentieth century by contribution of the scientific management school. The key representatives of this school are Lillian Gilberth. F.W. Taylor is the father of scientific management. Scientific management theory concern was to improve organisational efficiency and economy for the sake of the creational production. Taylor's belief that economic incentives are strong enough to motivate the worker for the increased production in the organisation. The major principles of scientific management are: ? It based on standardization of work methods. ? It deals with scientific selection and training of workers. ? It was an open advocacy of an equal division of work and responsibility between management and workers. ? There should be active cooperation and cordial relations between management and workers. 1.3.3. Bureaucratic Approach: The bureaucratic approach was systematically developed by German sociologist Max Weber in the twentieth century. He was first to describe its characteristics systematically. According to the Weber, bureaucracy is superior to any other form decision, precision, stability, discipline, and reliability. 14 For Max Weber, the national-legal bureaucracy was a prime example of rationalization and its impact on Western socio-economic and political institutions. Weber's explain the characteristics of the bureaucratic forms of organisation is based on Division of Labour, Hierarchy, Rules, Rationality, Inter personality, Rule orientation and Neutrality. 1.3.4 The Human Relations Approach: The basic of the human relations theory lies in its primary in human beings, psychological motivations, and informal group behaviour in the organisation. This theory focuses on management as a web of interpersonal relationships and it is also based on the behaviour of role occupants in an organisation than on the formal structure of the organisation. This theory came from the Hawthorne experiment which were carried out in the USA by Elton Mayo and his colleagues of the Harvard Business School in the late 20th century. In the first experiment workers operating under a piece-rate system. Overall, the significance of Hawthorne investigation was in discovering the informal organisation which it is now realized exists in all organisations. 1.3.5 Behavioural Approach: Herbert Simon, Douglas McGregor, Abraham Maslow, Kurt Lewin, Chester Barnard, Mary Parker Follet, Rensis Likert and Wanen Bennis are some of the foremost behavioural scientists who contributed in the development of the Behavioural approach to organisation. Behavioural scientists explain that an industrial organisation should be considered a social system which has both economic and social dimension. Every member of the organisation is unique to some degree. 1.3.6 Public Policy making: The model of public policy making are more concerned with the objective of forming better policies for the state. The public policy maker as a person who does not have the brain, time, and money to fashion truly different policies. Public policy-making organs in India are, Constitution, Parliament, Cabinet, Planning Commission, National Development Council, Judiciary, Civil Services, Press, Political Posters, Pressure and Interest Groups, Professional Associations, and Voluntary Organisations. In our nation, policy is formulated by the cabinet or minister but it is implemented by the civil servants. Policy-making is done at the Union and State level in India. 1.3.7New Public Administration: New Public Administration was used to describe new philosophical outlook for public administration, which is specially based on efficiency and economy. It began to be said that efficiency is not the soul of public administration. Man is the focal point of all administration activities who cannot be subjected to the mechanical test of efficiency. New public administration is movement inspired by younger scholars. Overall, the new public administration has stressed on four important goals relevance, values, equity, and change. 15 Therefore, it is no doubt that, the study of public administration is a systematic body of knowledge which is mainly study of administrative system of the organisation. It goals to improve production and create efficiency of workers. In the public administration, the organisation is based on scientific management which is need for modern welfare state. Thus, administrative theory really is very useful for the modern state because it is based on the scientific management. It brings change in structure and process of the system of the government organisation. At last, it brings a new kind of public administration in the modern state, of which basic aim is managerial orientation. 1.4.

MODEL BUILDING In general terms, a model is a representation of a person or thing. When one is considering political systems or elitism in terms of public policy, one is abstracting from the real situation to simplify and identify significant aspects of public policy. In other words, in the field of public policy, models help to classify our ideas about public policy environment. They not only identify issues but also suggest explanations for public policy and its effects. 1.4.1 Systems model The Policy-making process has been regarded by David Easton as a 'black box', which converts the demands of the society into policies. While analysing political systems David Easton (1965) argues that the political system is that part of the society, which is engaged in the authoritative allocation of values. Inputs are seen as the physical, social, economic and political products of the environment. They are received into the political system in the form of both demands and supports. Demands are the claims made on the political system by individuals and groups to alter some aspect(s) of public policy. At the heart of the political system are the institutions and actors for policymaking. These include the chief executive, legislators, judges, and bureaucrats. In the system's version they translate inputs into outputs. Outputs, then, are the authoritative value allocations of the political system, and these allocations constitute what is called public policy or policies. The system theory portrays public policy as an output of the political system. 1.4.2 Institutional model Institutional model focuses on the government as an institution for policy analysis. It covers the realms of key government institutions – Parliament, Executive (including government departments) and Judiciary. In other words, a policy does not take the shape unless it is adopted and implemented by governmental institutions. The government institutions endow public policy with three distinct characteristics. Firstly, the government invests legal authority to policies. Secondly, application of a public policy is universal. Only public policies extend to all citizens in the state. Thirdly, public policy involves coercion. It is applied to the acts of government in backing up its decisions. A policy conveys the possibility for imposing penalties, through coercion, if necessary. Only the government can legally impose negative sanctions on violators of its policies. As such, there is a close tie-up between public policy and governmental institutions. The institutional approach to public policy, which depends on the interactions of those institutions created by the constitution, legislature, or government, has gained significance.

16 The value of the institutional approach to policy analysis lies in asking what relationships exist between institutional arrangements and the content of public policy, and also in investigating these relationships in a comparative fashion. However, it would not be right to assume that a particular change in institutional structure would automatically bring about changes in public policy. Without investigating the underlying relationship between structure and policy, it is difficult to assess the impact of institutional arrangements on public policies. In this context, Thomas Dye says, "both structure and policy are largely determined by environmental forces, and that tinkering with institutional arrangement will have little independent impact on public policy if underlying environmental forces – social, economic, and political – remain constant" 1.4.3. Rational policy making model The idea of 'rationality' has an important place in the study of policy and decision-making in the post-World War II era. Two sources are mainly responsible for this rational approach: (i) the idea of economic 'rationality' as it grew in economic theory, and (ii) the idea of 'bureaucratic,' rationality, as advocated in sociological theories of organisation. The concept of rationality, as it has been applied in public policy, has its roots in the construction of 'economic man', a 'calculating self-interested individual'. The Weberian model (formulated by Max Weber, a German Sociologist) of the rational imperative, or the choice of the most appropriate means to achieve the desired ends, has transformed the analytical approach to decision making studies. This approach emphasises that policy decisions involve a choice among policy alternatives on rational grounds. Rational policy-making is "to choose the one best option." Thomas Dye equates rationality with efficiency. "A policy is rational when the difference between the values it achieves and the values it sacrifices is positive and higher than any other policy alternative." He further observes that the idea of efficiency involves the calculation of all social, political, and economic values sacrificed or achieved by a public policy, not just those that can be measured in monetary terms. Thomas Dye prescribes a few requirements to policy-makers in selecting a rational policy. They must: ? know all the society's value preferences and their relative weights, ? know all the policy alternatives available, ? know all the consequences at each policy alternative, ? calculate the ratio of benefits to costs for each policy alternative, and ? select the most efficient policy alternative 1.4.4 Incremental model Charles Lindblom (1917- 2018) is a critic of the traditional rationality model. In criticising the rational model as advocated by Simon and others, Lindblom rejected the idea that decision- making was essentially something which was about defining goals, selecting alternatives, and comparing alternatives. Lindblom wanted to show that rational decision-making was simply "not workable for complex policy questions." To Lindblom, constraints of time, intelligence, cost, and politics prevent policy-makers to identify societal goals and their consequences. He

17 drew the distinction between Herbert Simon's concept of comprehensive (or root) rationality and his own idea of 'successive limited comparisons' (or branch decision-making). There are 3 prime analyses of incremental model i) Simple Incremental Analysis: It is a form of analysis in which only those alternative policies which are marginally different to the existing policy are analysed. ii) Strategic Analysis: Lindblom suggests reliance on "informed thoughtful" use of methods to "simplify problems" so as to make better choices. These methods include: "trial and error learning; systems analysis; operations research; management by objectives; programme evaluation and review technique." iii) Disjointed Incrementalism: It is an analytical strategy which involves "simplifying and focussing" on problems by six methods: (i) the limitation of analysis for a few familiar alternatives; (ii) intertwining values and policy goals with empirical analysis of problems; (iii) focussing on ills to be remedied rather than on goals to be sought; (iv) trial-and-error learning; (v) analysing a limited number of options and their consequences; (vi) fragmenting of analytical work to many partisan participations in policy-making. 1.5. CONCLUSION The Unit dealt with the various approaches and models of public policy. It emphasises public policy as an important area of politics and public management. As a separate approach it is useful in studying the interaction between government that produces policies, and its people for whom the policies are intended. There are now two public policy approaches, each with its own methods and emphases. The first is labelled as 'Policy Analysis;' the second, 'Political Public Policy.' From a policy analysis perspective, Putt and Springer (1989) argue that the function of policy research is to facilitate the analysis of public policy process by providing accurate and useful decision-related information. The skills required to produce information, which is technically sound and useful, lie at the heart of the policy research process, regardless of the specific methodology employed. Attempting to bring modern science and technology to bear on societal problems, policy analysis searches for appropriate methods and techniques that help the policy-makers to choose the most advantageous action. 1.6. SUMMARY ? Public administration is one of the most important parts of modern-day state system where proper legalised functionaries work coordinated in a manner for the good of the population. In order to initiate such changes administrators, undertake certain policies for the execution of plans that will in future lead to the god of the state. ? Models and theories are the two important factors in policy analysis and formulation as well. Theories act as background to proper models which implemented in real zones can lead to successes of policies undertaken by various institutions. ? Models act as structures based on which proper policies could be implemented. Various theorists have provided models to understand public policy formulation. ? Comparative public administration deals with the various models and theories that make up the corpus of public administration and public policy. Based on various theories and models theorists and administrators as well devise plans to be initiated to make the system better and efficient to deal with the problems of the people.
18 1.7. KEYWORDS 1, Universal- relating to or done by all people or things in the world or in a particular group; applicable to all cases. 2, policymaking- the activity of deciding on new policies, especially by a government or political party. 3, institutional-This means that an organization has a distinctive sense of self and identity and its way and its beliefs become important for the society as well. 4, systematic-a systematic approach to learning that involves carefully following the program's steps. Systemic describes what relates to or affects an entire system. 5, incentives-In general, incentives are anything that persuade a person to alter their behaviour. It is emphasised that incentives matter by the basic law of economists and the laws of behaviour, 1.8. MODEL QUESTIONS Short questions What is new public administration? What are the various facets that administrative theory deals with? Name a few policy making organisations in India? Medium questions What is black box model? Write a short note on the incremental model? What are the major principles of scientific management? Long questions Critically examine the policy-making models and suggest best suitable model/ models for a democratic country? Theories and models are the soul of administration while institutions are the body- justify this statement? Explain rational decision-making model in detail? 1.9. REFERENCES Buchanan, J.M. (1988). Market Failure and Political Failure. Cato Journal. 8(1). Dane, K. (2022). Discuss the theory building in public administrative. Owlgen.in. Retrieved March 12, 2023, from https://www.owlgen.in/discuss-the-theory-building-in-public-administrative/

100% MATCHING BLOCK 11/307 W

Dror, Y. (1964). Muddling through-science or inertia? Public Administration Review.24. Dror, Y. (1989).

Public Policy-Making Re-examined. New Brunswick, NJ: Transaction Publishers. Dye, T.R. & Gray, V. (Eds.). (1980). The Determinants of Public Policy. Toronto. Dye, T.R. (2004). Understanding Public Policy. Englewood Cliffs: Prentice Hall. Easton, D. (1957). An approach to the analysis of political systems. World Politics. 9(1). Easton, D. (1965). A Systems Analysis of Political Life. New York: Wiley.
19 Friedrich, C.J. (1941). Constitutional Government and Democracy. Boston: Little, Brown & Company. Hogwood, B.

75% MATCHING BLOCK 12/307 W

W. & Gunn, L.A. (1987). Policy Analysis for the Real World. London: Oxford University Press.

Lane, J-E. (2000). The Public Sector. London: Sage Publications. Lindblom, C. (1968). The Policy-Making Process. Englewood Cliffs: Prentice Hall. Lindblom, C. (1959). The Science of Muddling Through. Public Administration Review.19 UNIT 2 FRED RIGGS STRUCTURE 2.1 Learning objectives 2.2 Introduction 2.3 Ecological approach 2.4 Agrariaindutria models 2.4.1. Agraria 2.4.2. Industria 2.5 Fused Prismatic Diffracted 2.6 Prismatic Sala theory 2.7 Conclusion 2.8 Summary 2.9 Key words 2.10 Model Questions 2.11 References 2.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES

41% MATCHING BLOCK 13/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

After studying this unit, you will be able to: 1. Discuss the essential features, merits, and limitations of the Ecological Approach to the study of Comparative Public Administration; 2. Appreciate the way Fred W. Riggs has used the Ecological Approach in the creation of his models; 3. Understand the key elements of the Riggsian models of Agraria and Industria and their limitations;

20 4. Examine the attributes of Fused, Prismatic, and Diffracted societies, more particularly the Prismatic system and its administrative subsystem, the Sala; 5. Develop insights into the utility and limitations of the Prismatic-Sala model in the context of 'developing societies'; and 6. Have a brief view of the concepts of Development Administration and Administrative Development. 2.2 INTRODUCTION In recent years modern Governments have experienced a great change in their functions and responsibilities. In the changed context role of Public Administrative has become all the more crucial in fulfilling the goals of the government. Consequently, administrative theories and models have become all the more important to the understanding of it. The ecological approach to the study of administration has been suggested when Western organisation theories have been found inadequate for the study of the problems of administration in Third World Countries, After the Second World War many countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America were liberated from colonial rule. They were faced with the task of nation-building and socio-economic transformation to fulfil their people's aspirations. The western scholars who acted as consultants to many of these countries found that western organizational models failed to explain the reality in Third World Societies. This realisation resulted in the development of new concepts and approaches including the ecological one. In this unit, we shall discuss the views of Fred W. Riggs on the ecological approach to the study of Public Administration. Fred Riggs was a renowned professor of Emeritus of the political science department of the university of Hawaii. He was a political scientist and pioneer in administrative model building and theory formulation. He is known for his work in public administration, especially the Riggsian model. Here are some of his other works; Frontiers of Development Administration, Idea of Development Administration, and Administration in Developing Countries. The Riggsian theory or sala was based on the different types of societies we have in the world. Fred w. Riggs made a great effort in searching for an effective and efficient model for analysing public administration in developing countries. With Fred Riggs background in sociology, he identified the fused or traditional society, diffracted or developed society and the prismatic or developing society. According to Fred Riggs, the fused or traditional society has no specialization, it is undeveloped because in it there is a low level of structural differentiation with a corresponding level of integration. There is no separation among the various institutions. From the very beginning, Riggs made a great effort in searching for an objective and effective model for analysing public administration in developing regions. With his background in sociological theory, Riggs created the —fused-prismatic-diffracted model.‖ This model covers a wide range of research. For instance, economic life, social structures, political symbols, and the allocation of power are all part of the analysis of structural function. From the perspectives of heterogeneity, overlapping, formalism, and social transformation, the model observes peculiar features in a prismatic society. Even though the theory behind it needs refinement, it has exerted tremendous influence on the understanding of public administration and organizational behaviour.

21 A polarized model is inadequate in depicting the features that contribute to a developing country's administrative system. As a result, Riggs abandoned models that differentiated flanked by agrarianism and industrialism. Rather, Riggs opted to make a more diverse, yet simplified model, namely, the —fused prismatic-diffracted model or called a —prismatic model. The formulation of the prismatic model was primarily based on the extent to which a social administrative system undergoes functional differentiation. The model is appropriate for learning three societal kinds: highly developed Western industrial societies and traditional agrarian societies, as well as developing societies. Each society has its own social, economic, politically symbolic, and communicative attributes, as well as its political system and concepts of individual rights. Yet, these attributes eventually develop into dissimilar administrative systems. Riggs whispered that the degree to which each component of society differs from another in function is measurable and that measures of functional differentiation can be used to locate the three societal kinds beside a continuum. Simultaneously, Riggs whispered that his theoretical model can be used to compare the fundamental structure of several societies. Through his model, one is so able to comprehend each country's administrative attributes and differences. Riggs 'analysis of public administrations primarily relies upon a functional structural analytical approach. He refers to the structure as a society's pattern of activity, while the function is measured to be the outcome of a pattern of activity. Given this analytical approach, one discovers that traditional agrarian societies, highly developed industrial societies, and developing societies are functionally and structurally separate. Such functional and structural attributes can be further examined by using a biological approach, that is, via a spectrum. Taking a traditional agrarian society as an instance, say a traditional Thai society, one notices that several social functions and social structures are highly functionally diffuse, that is, there is no organized division of labour. This analogy serves to demonstrate the consequences of an unorganized functional and structural system in a traditional agrarian society. But, should a white ray of light be beamed through a prism, it would disperse into a wide range of colours. Riggs uses the word —diffractll to refer to this phenomenon (dissimilar to its meaning in physics) as a metaphor for the functional and structural system that is highly functionally specific, as found within an industrialized society. Though, Riggs believes that there is a third scenario in addition to the two opposed extremes. That is, one necessity also contemplates the condition of the white light throughout the procedure in which it is being beamed through the prism itself. Specifically, the white ray is just starting to be diffracted, but the diffraction procedure has yet to be completed. Social differentiation, hence, cannot be successfully achieved overnight. Likewise, social transformation does not progress at a constant speed. The question, therefore, remains, how does a traditional society become modernized? Moreover, how does a fused society become a more diffracted society? Flanked by the two extremes of a —lack of division of labourll society versus a diffracted society, one may ask, what other possibilities are there? Through his model, Riggs suitably and thoroughly addresses these questions. Riggs first tackles these issues by describing how a ray of light passes through a prism: when a fused white light is beamed through a prism, the white light is subsequently diffracted into a rainbow of colours. Riggs further conceptualizes the diffraction procedure itself as creating a continuum. 2.3 ECOLOGICAL APPROACH The administration does not function in isolation from its environment. It influences it and is influenced by it. An understanding of the dynamics of this process of interaction between the

22 two is necessary for the understanding of the administration. The approach adopted is known as the ecological approach. Ecology is a term borrowed from Biology. It is concerned with science dealing with the interrelationship of organisms and their environment. It is a study of the interplay of living organisms and their physical and social environment. It is concerned with the question of how a balance involving organisms and the environment is achieved for survival. In Biology, it is established that a particular plant requires for its growth particular climate Soil humidity, temperature, etc. A plant that can grow well in a particular climate cannot do so under a different climate. Likewise, the growth or development of each society is conditioned by its history, economic structure, values, political system, etc. The characteristics of its social system and its physical, environment shape the ideas and institution just as a plant cannot grow in a different environment; so also, all institutions cannot thrive in a different social setting. Thus to understand the ecology of Public Administration. i.e. the interaction of administration and its environment, it is necessary to have an understanding of the society and the various factors affecting its functioning. The ecological approach to the study of public Administration was initiated by J.M. Gaus, Robert A. Dahl and Robert A. Merton long before Fred W. Riggs. But it was Riggs who made a significant contribution to this approach:

57% MATCHING BLOCK 14/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

Fred W. Riggs, a distinguished American scholar and consultant to many developing countries, developed the ecological concept based on his studies in Thailand, the Philippines and 28 India. In his study of the administrative systems of developing societies, Riggs analysed the relationship between the administrations and the economic, social, technological, political and communication factors from a wide perspective. He has explained with illustration how environmental conditions influence administrative systems based on his Studies in Thailand and the Philippines. Riggs raised basic questions about the relevance of Western organisation theories to developing countries. He pointed out that each society has certain unique characteristics which influence the working of its sub- systems. He found that most Western theories look "inside" the system. The "outside" refers to the general socio-economic environment. The socioeconomic environment in Western developed countries is not the same as that in the Third World Countries. That is why, as observed by Riggs, the theories or models developed for the former seem inapplicable to the latter. The findings of Riggs, therefore are considered a significant contribution to the understanding of administrative systems in Third World Countries, based on them he has broadened the analytical frame for the examination of the administrative systems in Third World Countries. 2.4 AGRARIA INDUSTRIA MODELS Inspired by Dwight Waldo, Fred W. Riggs utilized innovatively the essential feature of the general system approach, the structural-functional, and the ecological approach, while developing a typology of models in his path-breaking article entitled, ‘

60% MATCHING BLOCK 15/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

100% MATCHING BLOCK 16/307 W

Agraria and Industria- Toward a Typology of Comparative Administration’ published in an anthology, Towards a Comparative study of Public Administration edited by William J Siffin in 1957. In the agrarian-industria models, Riggs used the ideal-type methodology, which has logically interrelated various important and relevant concepts and their relationships and, which are based on imagination and extrapolation of societies that represent the total development of the characteristics of a particular model. Like Max Weber’s models, Riggs’s models are ideal- typical or ‘pure’ in the formulation and are not found in real life. It may, however, be pointed 23 out that Riggs abstracted his Agrarian model from the features of Imperial China of ancient times and likewise, for Industria, he abstracted the features of the modern United States of America. Normally, we can say that two were inductive models derived from the study of distinct historical societies. However, we should remember that ideal-type models are not necessarily inductive or deductive. Deductive models by some scholars are constructed based on the analysis of features of several societies or systems. It is assumed by some scholars that Weber's model of bureaucracy was apparently 'deductive' in nature. Nevertheless, the caution is clear: Ideal-type models need not be inductive or deductive. They have a methodology of their own. 2.4.1Agraria The main features of an agrarian society were as follows: 1. Man's status is based on his birth (parentage, lineage) 2. Traditions are followed, as the basis of the functioning of an administrative system. These traditions favour privileged groups over the rest. 3. Some structures perform many functions; they are multi-functional in nature. 4. Social groups at the local level are stable and there is very little movement from one social group to another. Thus, the status system is rigid and almost closed. 5. Occupations in this society have very little specialization. 6. Various groups in the agrarian society have specific tasks defined by traditions. This leads to rigidity in their classification of social hierarchy that is based on conventional stratification. 2.4.2 Industria An industria society has the following features: 1. There is universalism and equity in the application of rules in society. No special privileges are granted to any section of society. 2. Structures are specialized in their nature. They perform tasks particularly related to their special sphere. 3. Progress of a person in society and the administrative system is decided on merit and achievement (as against birth in the agraria) 4. Certain social groups have the opportunity and freedom to move on to other social groups depending on their will and skill. The road to progress, vertical or horizontal, is not blocked for anyone. 5. The occupational system is well-developed with its norms and rules. There is no interference from any outside structure in the conduct of occupational roles. 6. The class system in society is not rigid or based on any conventional social hierarchy. Instead, it is based on a generalized pattern of occupational achievement. 7. Associations in society are not based on rigidity or birth. Instead, they are functionally specialized and based on achievement. 2.5 FUSED PRISMATIC DIFFRACTED

24

Prismatic society is characterised by various economic, social, political, and administrative sub- systems. Riggs called the administrative sub-system the 'Sala Model'.

In a diffracted society its counterpart is called 'Bureau' or 'Office' and in a fused society 'Chamber'. Each of them has distinctive features of its own. The Spanish word, 'Sala', has a variety of meanings like a government office, a religious conference, a room, a pavilion, etc. The word, 'Sala', is also generally used in East Asian countries more or less with the same meaning. Sala has certain features of both the diffracted 'bureau' and the fused 'chamber'. However, the 'bureau' features of Sala do not well represent its basic character. The heterogeneous value system and the traditional and modem methods of the prismatic society are reflected in its administrative rationality and efficiency found in the Bureau is absent in Sala. Riggs believes that when analysing prismatic societies, mainly social scientists fail to understand how they essentially function. More significantly, they are unable to fully understand the circumstances under which society experiences diffraction. Such social scientists only grasp the concept of a dedicated structure and are not able to conceptualize the whole social structural system. Taking a family household as an instance, in a fused society the family is the model through which politics, the administrative system, religion, and ethics are judged. In contrast, in a diffracted society, the family household's influence on other social structures is negligible. Yet, in a prismatic society, the degree of influence lies within these two extremes. In other words, a family household's influence on several other social structures is less than in a fused society, but more than in a diffracted one. The revision of economic behaviour can be applied in the same manner. In a prismatic society, should one ignore the interrelationship flanked by political, administrative, social, and economic factors, and limit one 's analysis to economic behaviour alone, one not only fails to fully grasp the larger picture but more importantly, misunderstands the role of economic behaviour as well. 2.6 PRISMATIC SALA THEORY Prismatic-Sala Model The ecological approach to development administration is the central point of Riggs's analysis. It is on account of environmental influences that an administrative system in a prismatic society develops the characteristics of heterogeneity, formalism and overlapping. These three, according to Riggs, are the important features of development administration in a developing nation. Heterogeneity It is the presence of a mix of traditional and modern forms and institutions in the administrative system. For example, office attendants coexist with telephones as aids to the administration. Modern ideas are superimposed upon traditional ones. Behind the façade of new structures introduced, the old and traditional ways of doing things persist. In brief, in prismatic society modernity and tradition coexist in an uneasy companionship. Formalism The existence of discrepancy between the formally prescribed norms and their practice is known as formalism. As a result of formalism, there is a wide gap between government proposals and their implementation. Most of the laws are either bypassed or not implemented at all. Although government officials insist on following some of the laws, rules and regulations, their official behaviour does not correspond to the legal status. Very often they work for the 25 realisation of goals other than the achievement of programme objectives. Formalism gives raise to administrative evils like red tape, passing the buck, inefficiency and corruption. Overlapping It means non-administrative criteria determining what is described as administrative behaviour. The administrative structures are intermixed with the social, economic, political, and cultural aspects of society. As a result of overlapping, the administrative institutions give the impression of performing specific administrative functions, but actually, they perform a variety of non-administrative, traditional functions. The social role of the officer often overlaps with his/her official role and causes a lot of confusion and maladjustment. 2.7 CONCLUSION

93% MATCHING BLOCK 17/307 W

In adopting a deductive procedure, the —fused-prismatic-diffracted‖ model likewise ignores the ultimate goal of public administration in its attempt to build a value-free science. W. Wilson argues that the primary function of any public administration is to work efficiently. So, it should be obvious that a public administration cannot and should not abandon sure values. Moreover, while the —fused-prismatic-diffracted model‖ tends to supplement its theory with empirical proof, it is sometimes hard to find appropriately related proof. The uniqueness of Riggs 'theory is undeniably influential. Yet, his theory is to some extent predicated on logical speculation or assumptions. For instance, Riggs believes that formalism is the primary and sole factor in rising administrative hierarchical power within prismatic societies. This argument, though, is too simple and unequivocal to accept. To illustrate his argument, Riggs uses American society as his model of a diffracted society. The shortcoming here is, although American society is a developed and industrialized country, one cannot infer that it is free of formalism and no longer a prismatic society. So, the theoretical hypothesis that American society is a model which one should use in constructing a diffracted society is both inappropriate and unsatisfactory.

78% MATCHING BLOCK 19/307 W

Riggs openly admits that the prismatic model is appropriate only for examining phenomena that occur throughout the social transformation procedure. In an actual society, though, —independent variables‖ and —dependent variables‖ are complex and therefore hard to predict. Consequently, causal inference is hard

93% MATCHING BLOCK 18/307 W

to avoid. From a purely functional or linguistic point of view, the —fused prismatic-diffracted model uses too much terminology and dedicated jargon. To understand it, one necessity patiently wades through the definitions provided by Riggs himself. Therefore, in designing a new model, and in the effort to distinguish it from others, Riggs recognized a unique vocabulary that has no application whatsoever to other models. In addition, from a structural perspective, the —fused-prismatic- diffracted‖ model is awkwardly divided into three sections. This kind of organization reflects the model 's formalist limitations. Factors that cause or instigate social transformations are latent, unstable, and indefinite at best. In describing the development of Middle Eastern society, D. Lerner 's —The Passing of Traditional Society proves this point decisively. Certainly, there are societies whose transformations have occurred as a result of powerful external forces. Under these circumstances, if one insists on using the —fused-prismatic diffracted‖ model for analytical purposes, the result would be irrelevant to the facts 2.8

SUMMARY
26 ? Classical organizational theories mainly emphasise organizational structures and

62% MATCHING BLOCK 20/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

principles and behavioural theories concentrate on human behaviour in the organisation. But ecological theories emphasise the interaction of administration with its environment. ? Both in content and in analysis, Riggs's ecological approach extends the horizons; and assumes an integrated approach to the administrative system. His approach and models help us in examining the administrative process in developing countries.

91% MATCHING BLOCK 21/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

Although in practice

63% MATCHING BLOCK 24/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

his administrative models are difficult to find, they help us in appreciating the realities. ? The Sala model provides an opportunity to analyse and understands the administrative system in developing countries. It also facilitates further such studies that are based on empirical and ecologic approaches. 2.9 KEYWORDS ? Ascriptive values: Values derived by birth ? Attainment values: Values derived from one's efforts. ? Barter exchange: It is a characteristic feature of the traditional economy. In such an economy there is an exchange of goods and services without the use of money. ? Bureau: Bureau or office refers to an administrative sub-system in a diffracted society. ? Chamber: Refers to administrative sub-system in a fused society. ? Differentiation: Existence of a situation in which every function has a corresponding specialised structure for its performance. ?

75% MATCHING BLOCK 27/307 SA MPM415 COMPARATIVE PUBLIC MANAGEMENT.docx (D86981748)

Formal: The official norm, the theory, what ought to be done, as expressed in constitutions, laws, rules and regulations. ? Integration: A process to tie together, to coordinate the various kinds of specialised roles in a society 2.10 MODEL QUESTIONS Short questions Who are the theorists who initiated the ecological approach? What is the origin of the 'sala'? Who inspired Riggs to write 'Agraria and Industria- Toward a Typology of Comparative Administration'? MEDIUM QUESTIONS What is the major criticism of the ecological approach? Public administration without comparison will not develop- justify the statement? What objections did F. Riggs have to the traditional society theory? Long questions What is the Riggsian model of public administration? Explain prismatic sala theory? Write a short note on the need for governments to compare to serve the public better through public administration?
27 2.11 REFERENCES

100% MATCHING BLOCK 22/307 W

Arora, Ramesh K. 2021. Comparative Public Administration: An Ecological Perspective. New Delhi: New Age International. Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York. Marcel Dekker.

Heady,

87% MATCHING BLOCK 23/307 W

Ferrel. 1979. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey: Prentice-Hall,

Inc. Riggs, Fred. 1964.

95% MATCHING BLOCK 25/307 W

Administration in Developing Countries: Theory of Prismatic Society. Boston: Houghton Mifflin.

Riggs, Fred. Riggs, Fred W. 1961. The Ecology

83% MATCHING BLOCK 26/307 W

of Public Administration. New Delhi: Asia Publishing House. Riggs, Fred W. 2006. "The Prismatic Model: Conceptualizing Transitional Societies," in Otenyo, E. and Lind, Nancy (eds.) Comparative Public Administration: The Essential Readings, New York: Elsevier Ltd., 52-56. Shen, Chu-Ta. 1987. "A Study on Riggs' Ecological Public Administration Model," Journal of Su Chou University, 9-10. UNIT 3 A CRITIQUE OF RIGGS STRUCTURE 3.1 Learning objectives 3.2 Introduction 3.3 Riggs, CAG and ecological approach 3.4 Criticism of Fred Riggs 3.5 Conclusion 3.6 Summary 3.7 Key words 3.8 Model questions 3.9 References

28 3.1 LEARNING
OBJECTIVES

50% MATCHING BLOCK 28/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

After studying this unit, one will be able to ? Understand the beginning of the era of comparative public administration in the USA and its ramifications globally. ? Understand the ecological approach to public administration by Fred Riggs holistically. ? Analyse the fallacies and redundancies linked with the Riggsian approach. ? Critically evaluate the pros and cons related to the various theories of Fred Riggs. ? Explain the relevance of the Riggsian approach to public administration in both historical terms as well as contemporary terms. 3.2 INTRODUCTION One cannot criticise something that one does not know about. Such criticism is hollow and lacks objectivity and rationality. If pursued such an analysis will only yield faulty, error-laden results. Therefore, the priority while constructing a critique of Riggs is to explain what Riggs stood for and what is the Riggsian approach. With the end of the Second World War and the emergence of third-world nations Public Administration was developed as Comparative Public Administration by developing its comparative viewpoint. It was developed with a more scientific outlook of public administration by establishing and strengthening theory in Public Administration. In simple words comparative public administration refers to the comparative study of government administrative systems functioning in different countries with different cultural and geographical settings at different periods. Originally the thinkers of the USA were trying to develop the subject matter of Comparative Public Administration by undertaking the analysis of various constitutional administrative systems in the world. In this regard, Robert Dahl addressed three major obstacles. They are (1)

96% MATCHING BLOCK 29/307 W

the inherent normative implication of Public Administration (2) what a science of Public Administration must be based upon a study of human behaviour and (3) that "as long as the study of Public Administration is not comparative, claims for a science of Public Administration sound rather than hollow." When Public administration is defined as a sub-field of political science Comparative Public Administration is a specialization in the field of Public Administration. Like other specializations such as administrative theory, public-personnel administration, and government budgeting.

95% MATCHING BLOCK 37/307 W

Comparative public administration focuses on Public Administration as a field of study and research rather simple execution of tasks. Haroon A. Khan defined Comparative Public administration as a quest for searching patterns and regularities in administrative behaviour and action and to characterize them in present-day nation-states. 3.3

RIGGS, CAG AND THE ECOLOGICAL APPROACH The first organization formally formed to formulate a universal comparative theory of public administration was the Comparative Administration Group (CAG) in 1960 that was a division of the ASPA, funded by the Ford Foundation to study methods for improving public administration in developing countries under the chairmanship of Fred W. Riggs. More than providing administrative techniques this group became a forum for intellectuals to understand 29 why the developing countries differ so much in the practice of administration and are not able to sustain the classical theory principles of administration in their systems even though Classical theorists of administration like Fayol and Weber, etc preached that their principles and models of administration were universal in their element and can be applied anywhere with the greatest success. CAG gave the idea of scientific studies and emphasized empirical and ecological (social, cultural and historical factors) study of various administrative systems. Even the CAG had to shut shop in the early 70s since various administrators and academicians realised that the highly complex setting which the group had provided for comparative Public Administration studies was resulting in failures in providing empirical assessment 98 of administration factors in a society. They stated that it provided a very good direction but the techniques were not specified to execute the idea. And so the studies were transferred back to the Department of Comparative Studies. In 1968, the first Minnowbrook Conference was held under the chairmanship of Dwight Waldo that also talked about the need for Comparative Public Administration study and analysis. The prominent idea under the banner of CAG was the ecological approach. Administration and its environment influence each other and an understanding of the dynamics

88% MATCHING BLOCK 30/307 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 31/307 W

of this process is necessary to understand administration. This approach is known as

the

100% MATCHING BLOCK 32/307 W

ecological approach. The word ‘ecology’ is borrowed from biology where it suggested the interdependence

100% MATCHING BLOCK 33/307 W

between an animal species and its natural environment. The Ecological approach to the study of public administration was initiated (in the order) by J.M. Gans (1947), Robert. A. Dahl (1969), Roscoe Martin (1952) and FW. Riggs (1961).

98% MATCHING BLOCK 34/307 W

In 1961, F.W. Riggs in his book, "The Ecology of Public Administration" explored from a comparative perspective the interaction between public administration and the environment in which it develops. In analysing the administrative system from the ecological point of view, Riggs mainly used the structural- functional approach. Talcott Parsons, Robert Merton, Marion Levy, Gabriel Almond and David Apter are the other thinkers who adopted this approach in their works. The ecological approach views public bureaucracy as a social institution which is continuously interacting with the economic, political and socio-cultural sub-systems of a society. Bureaucracy is not only affected by these environmental systems but also affects them in turn. Thus, this approach emphasizes the necessary interdependence of public bureaucracy and its environment. In the opinion of Riggs, administrative institutions are shaped and affected by their social, economic, cultural and political environment. Therefore, he emphasizes that to understand better the real nature, operations and behaviour of a particular administrative system, one should identify and understand deeply various environmental factors influencing it. The ecological approach determines how an administrative system operates in practice. Thus, it is useful to understand administrative realities.

Fred Riggs, who is known as the Father of Comparative Public Administration is the propounder of the ecological approach. He wrote the book "The Ecology of Public Administration "in 1962 in which he threw light on the relationship & interaction of an administration with its external surroundings. He analysed that many factors like political, social, economic, administrative etc. are influenced by its environment & in turn influence the environment in which it works. During his period as a Researcher at the Foreign Policy Association in the USA, Fred Riggs came across an interesting phenomenon regarding American Public Administration. He found them to be extremely self-absorbed in their approach which believed that the American way of administration was unique without any complements

30 elsewhere in the world and that it could answer all the administrative problems emerging in the newly developing countries. However, to explore the consequences of 28 intermingling contrasting systems in developing countries, he looked at the structural-functional approach of the social sciences. This approach provides a mechanism to understand social processes. The function is the consequence of patterns of action while the structure is the resultant institution and the pattern of the action itself. It reads complicated but the theory is not that difficult to understand. Social structures can be concrete such as Government departments and Bureaus or even specific societies held together by shared beliefs, customs and morals and also analytic like the structure of power or authority. These structures perform certain functions and in terms of the structural functional approach, these functions have an interdependent pattern between structures. So the first step would be to view bureaucracy as a structure which has an administrative system with characteristics like hierarchy, specialization etc. The behavioural characteristics can be rationality, neutrality, professionalism, and rule orientation. Then, one can proceed to examine the functions of bureaucracy. According to Riggs, there are five functional requisites of a society: Economic, Socio- communicational, Symbolic, and Political. While talking about Riggs's explanation of the concept and contribution to this approach, we cannot proceed further without mentioning his Prismatic Model. This model uses a common phenomenon as an analogy, when white light passes through a prism it breaks into seven colours of different wavelengths. As per Riggs, the white light is the fused structure of traditional society. The rainbow represents the diffracted (or refracted) structures of an industrialized society. Inside the prism, society was in transition. Riggs challenged the traditional approaches of public administration implying that basic principles of administration have universal application. It also contributed to the comparative study of public administration by providing a more relevant perspective; that not all systems work the same in all places, so one can take what one likes and leave the rest. 3.4 CRITICISM OF FRED RIGGS Fred W. Riggs, one of the leading scholars on public administration in contemporary America, is considered an authority with exceptional creativity and great theory in the field of the comparative study of public administration. From the very beginning, Riggs made a great effort in searching for an objective and effective model for analysing public administration in developing regions. He is an energetic pioneer in research methodology, as evidenced by the "Pan-disciplinary approach" he came up with in the book " Public Administration in Developing Countries " published in 1964. Among others, Riggs' most significant contribution was to create the administration model - the fused prismatic-diffracted model. The model covers a wide range of research, for instance, economic life, social structures, political symbols, and the allocation of power are all part of the analysis of structural function. Moreover, the model can be applied in modern, traditional, developing and semi- developed economies. Riggs has consistently put a particular emphasis on the linkage between public administration and its environment and therefore advocated the concept that the administrative behaviour in a given society must be understood in the context of the social background instead of the administration itself. A polarized model is inadequate in depicting the characteristics that contribute to a developing country's administrative system. As a result, Riggs abandoned models that differentiated between agrarianism and industrialism. Rather, Riggs opted to create a more diverse, yet

31 simplified model, namely, the "fused-prismatic diffracted" model or what I have chosen to call a "prismatic" model. The formulation of the prismatic model was primarily based on the extent to which a social administrative system undergoes functional differentiation. The model is appropriate for studying three societal types: highly developed Western industrial societies and traditional agrarian societies, as well as developing societies. Each society has its own social, economic, politically symbolic, and communicative attributes, as well as its political system and concepts of individual rights. Yet, these attributes eventually develop into different administrative systems. Riggs believed that the degree to which each component of society differs from another in function is measurable and that measures of functional differentiation can be used to locate the three societal types along a continuum. Simultaneously, Riggs believed that his theoretical model can be used to compare the fundamental structure of various societies. Through his model, one is therefore able to comprehend each country's administrative attributes and differences. Riggs' analysis of public administrations primarily relies upon a functional-structural analytical approach. He refers to the structure as a society's pattern of activity, while the function is considered to be the outcome of a pattern of activity. Given this analytical approach, one discovers that traditional agrarian societies, highly developed industrial societies, and developing societies are functionally and structurally distinct. Such functional and structural attributes can be further examined by using a biological approach, that is, via a spectrum. Taking a traditional agrarian society as an example, say a traditional Thai society, one notices that various social functions and social structures are highly functionally diffuse, that is, there is no organized division of labour. This analogy serves to demonstrate the consequences of an unorganized functional and structural system in a traditional agrarian society. But, should a white ray of light be beamed through a prism, it would disperse into a wide range of colours. Riggs uses the word "diffract" to refer to this phenomenon (different than its meaning in physics) as a metaphor for the functional and structural system that is highly functionally specific, as found within an industrialized society. However, Riggs believes that there is a third scenario in addition to the two opposed extremes. That is, one must also contemplate the condition of the white light during the process in which it is being beamed through the prism itself. Specifically, the white ray is just starting to be diffracted, but the diffraction process has yet to be completed.. Social differentiation, hence, cannot be successfully achieved overnight. Likewise, social transformation does not progress at a consistent speed. The question thus remains, how does a traditional society become modernized? Moreover, how does a fused society become a more diffracted society? Between the two extremes of a "lack of division of labour" society versus a diffracted society, one may ask, what other possibilities are there? Through his model, Riggs suitably and thoroughly addresses these questions. Riggs first tackles these issues by describing how a ray of light passes through a prism: when a fused white light is beamed through a prism, the white light is subsequently diffracted into a rainbow of colours. Riggs further conceptualizes the diffraction process. itself as creating a continuum. Riggs believes that when analysing prismatic societies, most social scientists fail to understand how they essentially function. More significantly, they are unable to fully understand the conditions under which society experiences diffraction. Such social scientists only grasp the concept of a specialized structure and are not able to conceptualize the entire social structural system.

32

Ouriginal by Turnitin

Fred W. Riggs' article "Agraria and Industrial Toward a Typology of Comparative Administration," published in 1955, won him wide acclaim among scholars. Since the publications of The Ecology of Public Administration (1961) and Administration in Developing Countries (1964), Riggs' position and reputation in the field of comparative public administration have been peerless. T. Parsons once said that "sociologists all critique Max Weber, but no one can do social research independently and scientifically without referring to Weber's theories." In the same manner, those who study comparative public administration will criticize Fred W. Riggs' "fused-prismatic-diffracted model," but in conducting research, no one is free of Riggs' influence. The limits of Riggs' theory can be summarized along the following lines. First, one school of thought that supports the "fused- prismatic-diffracted model" believes that this model can replace empirical studies in general. In other words, empirical studies are regarded as having little to no value. The primary reason for this stems from the perspective that empirical studies are time-consuming and expensive. As Milne astutely points out, however, it is dangerous for novice scholars to rely entirely upon model theories. Shortcomings arise when scholars erroneously believe that once one is familiar with one model of administrative theory, one can draw broad conclusions about the administrative features of all regions without conducting empirical research. A second critique of Riggs' theory identifies the scope of the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" as being too broad and abstract. Riggs' structural function studies, which include several cultural factors-including economic, social, and political-are difficult to follow. Therefore, some scholars may be tempted to denounce this kind of large-scale theory as middle-range theory, and hence, consider empirical investigations as supplemental. The objective is thus to shorten the distance between theory and practice. Concrete examples include the study of the influence of foreign capital enterprises on political transformations and minutely detailed categorizations of the hierarchical power system. Another critique of the "fused-prismatic- diffracted" model argues that while it is predicated on the notion of deduction, there is little empirical evidence to support it. Most sciences require empirical evidence so that results can be verified, not only repeatedly but also at any time and place. Moreover, objective comparisons would then likewise be possible. Riggs, however, endeavours to prescribe "formalism" as a given standard, and most scholars consider this concept unsatisfactory. Moreover, when scholars attempt to use Riggs' model to study the administrative systems of foreign countries, they often encounter numerous difficulties. Scholars have also found that in some cases the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" ignores certain variables, but in others it exaggerates them. For instance, as Riggs himself pointed out, aside from cultural factors others should also be considered. These include historical background, the political structure of postcolonial countries, territorial size, the status of hierarchical power, and the role of the military, as well as social ideologies. Most importantly, the unique circumstances of each country will have a profound influence on administrative behaviour. Yet, these are factors Riggs seldom discusses. In adopting a deductive process, the "fused prismatic-diffracted" model likewise ignores the ultimate goal of public administration in its attempt to build a value-free science. W. Wilson argues that the primary function of any public administration is to work efficiently. Therefore, it should be obvious that a public administration cannot and should not abandon certain values. Moreover, while the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" tends to supplement its theory with empirical evidence, it is sometimes difficult to find appropriately related evidence. The uniqueness of Riggs' theory is undeniably influential. Yet, his theory is to some extent 33 predicated on logical speculation or assumptions. For instance, Riggs believes that formalism is the primary and sole factor in increasing administrative hierarchical power within prismatic societies. This argument, however, is too simple and unequivocal to accept. To illustrate his argument, Riggs uses American society as his model of a diffracted society. The shortcoming here is, although American society is a developed and industrialized country, one cannot infer that it is free of formalism and no longer a prismatic society. Therefore, the theoretical hypothesis that American society is a model which one should use in constructing a diffracted society is both inappropriate and unsatisfactory. 3.5

CONCLUSION In conclusion, it can be said that though Riggs provided a new approach to studying public administration. With the ecological approach, Riggs changed the discourse of public administration towards comparative analysis. The model propounded by him brought a breath of fresh air to the traditional domain. But problems remained with this model as with every other model. It was criticised as having a western bias against the newly independent third-world countries. It also avoided the goal of creating a value-free model and thus reduced the basic tenets of Weberian bureaucratic efficiency. 3.6 SUMMARY ? Fred Riggs along with other theorists of the comparative public administrative group brought a welcome change to the discipline of public administration. ? The ecological approach propounded by Fred Riggs explained public administration is not a mechanistic institution of state service but rather is an engagement between the environment and its constitutive forces of which its environment is the primary one. ? The Riggsian approach divided the entirety of the environment between agraria, industria and prismatic society. ? There are major drawbacks to the model put forward by Fred Riggs. The western bias against the third world nations, the shifting of the goal of public administration. The inclusion of a differentiated model rather than holism is some of the many problems in the theory of Riggs. 3.7 KEYWORDS 1. Diffracted- to break up light or sound waves by making them go through a narrow space or across an edge. In the context of Public Administration where the division of typologies takes place. 2. Prismatic- the colours formed by the refraction of light through a prism. prismatic effects. In Public Administration shows various formulations in the same society. 3. Pan-disciplinary-an approach that brings together knowledge from various disciplines such as literary, anthropological, political etc. to make the research more coherent. 4. Post-colonial-The consensus in the field is that "post-colonial" (with a hyphen) signifies a period that comes chronologically "after" colonialism. "Postcolonial," on the other hand, signals the persisting impact of colonization across time periods and geographical regions. 5. Ecological Approach-The ecological approach focuses on the perception and control of behaviours that occur naturally, that is, outside the laboratory. In particular, the ecological approach focuses on aspects of the animal and the environment that determine the success or failure of behaviours.
34 3.8 MODEL QUESTIONS SHORT QUESTIONS Name the people associate with the Comparative public administration group? Name the book written by Fred Riggs and its core contents? Which conference in 1968 changed the orientation of public administration towards comparative analysis? MEDIUM QUESTIONS Explain with suitable examples how the ecological approach began to change the domain of public administration? Explain prismatic society? Explain the terms Agraria and Industria? LONG QUESTIONS Write a brief note on what are the limitations of the Riggsian model of comparative public administration? Explain with examples the fused diffracted prismatic model? Public administration has come a long way since the second world war Justify this statement in light of the contribution of Fred Riggs. 3.9 REFERENCES Dahl Robert A. (1947) “The Science of Public Administration" USA: Blackwell Publishing. Easton David (1957) “An Approach to the Analysis of Political system" New York: Ardent Media Inc Heady, F. (1979).

90% MATCHING BLOCK 36/307 W

Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey: Prentice-Hall,

Inc. Peng, W. (2008).

85% MATCHING BLOCK 39/307 SA Upasana Ghosh -Internal Assignment.docx (D37819549)

A Critique of Fred W. Riggs’ Ecology of Public Administration. International Public Management Review, 9(1), 213–226.

https://www.jstor.org/stable/pdfplus/41288330.pdf Pfiffner, J.M. (1946) “Public Administration" New York: The Ronald Company.
Riggs, F.W. (1961) “The Ecology of Public Administration" New York: Asia Publishing House.

79% MATCHING BLOCK 41/307 W

Riggs, F. W. (1962). "Trends in the Comparative Study of Public Administration," International Review of Administrative Science Vol. 27(1), 35 Riggs, F. W. (1964). Administration in Developing Countries: The Theory of Prismatic Society. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. Riggs, F. W. (1964). The Ecology of Development. CAG Occasional Paper

58% MATCHING BLOCK 38/307 W

Waldo, D. (1967) "The study of Public Administration" New York: Random House. Willoughby, W.F. (1927) "Principles of Public Administration"

Washington: Publications of Institute for Government Research. UNIT 4 FERREL HEADY STRUCTURE 4.1 Learning objectives 4.2 Introduction 4.3 FerrelHeady's comparative perspective 4.4 Advantages of comparative public administration 4.5 Conclusion 4.6 Summary 4.7 Key words 4.8 Model questions 4.9 References 4.1. LEARNING OBJECTIVES After studying this Unit, one should be able to: ? Understand the importance of Ferrel Heady in the discipline of comparative public administration. ? Gain knowledge regarding the comparative public administration group that initialised the comparative public administration as a prominent subset of public administration 36 ? Analyse the various ways in which comparative public administration has expanded over the years and helped enrich the discipline of public administration as a whole ? Understand the various ways in which facets of who comparative public administration has transformed from the days of Ferrel Heady to the 21 st century. 4.2. INTRODUCTION The goal of the comparative public administration movement, not unlike that of public administration generally, is the development of a science of administration comprised of general propositions of universal applicability. Where the movement parts company with other approaches to the study of public administration is its choice of subject matter and methodology. It assumes that the science of public administration can only be based upon generalizations drawn from administrative behaviour and practices analysed in widely differing societies and cultures. Moreover, to approach the study of public administration from a broad perspective, the comparative administration movement has found it necessary to develop new methods and techniques of analysis

99% MATCHING BLOCK 40/307 W

In 1963, the Comparative Public Administration Group (CAG) was set up, as a committee of the American Society for Public Administration. It was funded from 1963 to 1970 by the Ford Foundation. Fred W. Riggs was the chairman of the group from its inception till the end of 1970. The CAG conducted a series of seminars on comparative administrative systems, focusing on theoretical as well as applied perspectives. It published more than one hundred monographs and brought out several edited anthologies on various themes. The group also sponsored many research studies in countries of Asia, Europe, Latin America, and Africa. Besides, it was instrumental in publishing a quarterly, 'Journal of Comparative Administration' through SAGE publishers; the journal was later re-named Administration and Society, which continues to be published. Among the scholars, who were pioneers in the Comparative Public Administration Movement were Ralph Braibanti, Milton Esman, Ferrel Heady, John Montgomery, Fred Riggs, William Siffin, and Dwight Waldo.

Though Ferrel was most widely recognized for his contributions to comparative public administration, he maintained a clear and coherent focus on public administration as a general area of theory, research, and scholarship, albeit one illumined by his comparative perspective. He also remained an engaged and reflective man who could not separate his intellectual interests from his personal life. This included insightful commentary on his experiences as president of the University of New Mexico during the tumultuous era of Vietnam War protests and the Watergate scandal. Ferrel Heady died on August 16, 2006, at his home in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Together with Fred Riggs, he is widely known and respected as one of the founders of comparative public administration. 4.3. FERREL HEADY'S COMPARATIVE PERSPECTIVE Despite his evident aptitude and ability as an academic administrator and colleague in professional associations, Ferrel Heady was first and foremost a scholar whose work habits and research were performed carefully and meticulously. Rereading the first chapter of his seminal contribution to the field, Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective, one is impressed by the breadth and depth of his knowledge of the works of his predecessors and contemporaries. This chapter is a tour de force on the development and status of the field and a must-read for all students of public administration, regardless of whether they are 37 comparative scholars. Ferrel firmly believed that all students in public administration should be knowledgeable about governments and governance in systems other than that of the United States. Without such comprehension, Ferrel believed, the ability to understand one's nation is limited. Thus, during his lifetime, he advocated "mainstreaming" the comparative perspective into all public administration curricula, and he wrote his classic work to enable such integration. Ferrel Heady was a broadly educated, well-trained, and skilful scholar whose home discipline was political science. To understand his contributions to the field, one must view his work as focused primarily on comparative public administration but firmly grounded within the discipline of political science. In this regard, Ferrel had much in common with his contemporaries, a group that included Fred Riggs, Dwight Waldo, Alfred Diamant, William Siffin, Lynton Caldwell, Gabriel Almond, Walter Sharp, and many other early contributors to our knowledge of comparative administration.

97% MATCHING BLOCK 42/307 W

The record of this ''golden era'' in comparative public administration is a continuation and expansion of what had already begun during the post-war

92% MATCHING BLOCK 43/307 W

period. The sheer bulk and great diversity of the output generalizes hazardous. Nevertheless, it is possible to identify some characteristic features, which not only show what was accomplished but also foreshadow some of the predicaments faced later by the comparative administration movement. One obvious enduring influence can be traced to the large-scale post-war effort to export administrative know-how through unilateral and multilateral technical assistance programs. The CAG inherited the then favourable reputation and shared many of the attitudes associated with the public administration technical assistance efforts of the 1950s. Experts in public administration, not only from the United States but from numerous European countries as well, were scattered around the world, engaged in similar projects to export administrative technology, largely drawn from American experience to a multitude of developing countries. Looking back, one of these experts describes the scene as follows: The 1950s was a wonderful period. The ''American Dream'' was the ''World Dream'' – and the best and quickest way to bring that dream into reality was through the mechanism of public administration. The net result of all this enthusiastic action was that in the 1950s public administration was a magic term and public administration experts were magicians, of a sort. They were eagerly recruited by the United States aid-giving agencies and readily accepted most of the new nations, along with a lot of other experts as well. Another well-informed participant observer takes 1955 as the baseline year and describes it as ''a vintage year in a time of faith – faith in the developmental power of administrative tools devised in the West. It was a sanguine year in a time of hope – hope that public administration could lead countries toward modernization. It was a busy year in a brief age of charity – the not-unmixed charity of foreign assistance. 'Members of the CAG, many of whom had been or still were active participants in such programs, shared as a group most of the assumptions of the public administration experts, at least initially. Siffin has provided an accurate and perceptive analysis of the orientations, which marked this era, noting several major features. The first was a tool or technology orientation. The best developed and most widely exported of these processes were in the fields of personnel administration and budgeting and financial administration, but the list included administrative planning, records management, work simplification, tax and revenue administration, and at least the beginnings of computer 38 technology. Part of the tool orientation was a belief that

the

94% MATCHING BLOCK 44/307 W

use of the tools could be essentially divorced from the substance of the governmental policies, which they would be serving. Second, there was a structural orientation that placed great emphasis on the importance of appropriate organizational arrangements and assumed that organizational decisions could and should be based on rational considerations. For the most part, organizational forms then popular in the West were thought of as the most fitting, and organizations recommended for the developing countries usually emulated some model familiar to the expert at home. Underlying these administrative manifestations were certain value and contextual orientations that helped explain the specifics of technical assistance recommendations. The instrumental nature of administration was the core value, with related supportive concepts of efficiency, rationality, responsibility, effectiveness, and professionalism. Education and training projects, including the sending of thousands of individuals to developed countries and the establishment of about seventy institutes in developing countries, were designed to inculcate these values as well as transmit technical know-how in specific subjects. Probably most important of all, these normative elements, particularly the commitment to responsibility as a basic value, were in Siffin's words ''predicated upon a certain kind of socio-political context – the kind of context which is distinguished in its absence from nearly every developing country in the world.'' This context included economic, social, political, and intellectual aspects drawn mainly from U.S. experience and to some extent from other Western democratic systems. Politically, for example, these systems operated ''within reasonably stable political frameworks, with limited competition for resources and mandates. In this milieu, administrative technologies provided order more than integration. The political context of administration was generally predictable, supportive, and incrementally expansive.'' In this and other respects, Siffin concluded that ''the radical differences between the U.S. administrative context and various overseas situations were substantially ignored. 4.4.

ADVANTAGES OF COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

98% MATCHING BLOCK 45/307 W

The positive influence and contribution of comparative public administration are summarized as follows: Scientific Study of Public Administration Robert Dahl in his well-known article entitled 'The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems' published in Public Administration Review, (1947) had observed that there cannot be a science of public administration without a comparative analysis. Even James Coleman, an eminent scholar of comparative politics, had observed "You cannot be scientific if you are not comparative." Through comparative analysis of administrative systems, new insights into the administrative reality in cross-national contexts are generated, which can be treated, as hypotheses to be tested empirically in order to draw generalizations that may apply to many or select groups of nations. Inter-disciplinary Orientation 39 Comparative public administrative studies have several concepts and methodologies from Political Science, Sociology, Economics, Anthropology, Psychology, and other disciplines. This has broadened and enriched the study of public administration to a greater extent. A good number of scholars from different disciplines have contributed to the development of comparative public administration. 3. Strengthening Ecological Orientation Traditional public administration was confined to the description of administrative structures prevailing in certain western countries like the U.S, Great Britain, and France. The environment of public administration was treated, as 'given'. There was no focus on this issue. Contemporary comparative public administration has boldly advocated for the adoption of an ecological approach to the study of administrative systems. This approach has made administrative analysis more realistic and dynamic. 4. Universalism Comparative studies in public administration have challenged parochialism in western studies. The non-western world has experienced and nurtured its own administrative reality that has been elaborated by a host of comparative scholars of whom many of them are western. The conceptual transformation of even the western administrative analysis can be attributed to the insights provided by comparative public administration. 5. More Rational Use of Foreign Assistance Comparative public administration studies have proved to be catalysts to the capacity building of nations receiving aid from international agencies and big powers. The utilization of such assistance has become more prudent, as a result of insights gained from the experiences of different nations. 6. Holistic Approach 'Grand' theories of comparative public administration, borrowed from Political Science, Sociology, and Anthropology may not have strengthened scientific analysis of administrative reality, yet they have expanded the vision of public administration by making its scholars and practitioners more aware of the need to look at administrative systems from a 'holistic' angle. This 'systemic' perspective has augmented the understanding of a variety of administrative systems and their subsystems. 7. Administrative Development Comparative studies of public administration have stressed improvements in the structures, processes, and behavioural patterns of public administrative systems in diverse settings. This approach has highlighted that the processes of socio-economic and even political development get speeded up through effective administrative practices. 8. Development Administration A related benefit of the study of comparative public administration has been in the emergence of the concept of 'development administration,' which has become a key strategy for holistic transformation of various societies. It is accepted widely that development administration is a goal-oriented and a change-oriented administration and is the 40 main engine of all round progress of a country. 4.5.

CONCLUSION

95% MATCHING BLOCK 46/307 W

The prospects for the comparative public administration movement were not as bright as they had once seemed to be. The period of massive technical assistance in public administration, which had helped launch the movement, was over. The CAG, which had been the organizing force during the years of greatest activity, had lost its separate identity, and the programs it initiated had been ended or cut back. As a source of action-oriented plans for dealing with problems of development administration, the movement had generally been judged disappointing. At any rate, whatever the impact, it had lessened.

As a pioneer of the ecological approach F. Riggs through his prismatic model explained the differences between various civilisations and their ways of public management was also an important part of the public administration discipline looking through the lens of comparative politics. His name is thus taken along with Heady as a theorist who not only popularised comparative administration but developed it further for future generations.

92% MATCHING BLOCK 47/307 W

Moreover, earlier optimistic expectations about the possibilities of transferring or inducing a change in developing societies had come into question, as many of these nations were suffering from increasing rather than decreasing problems of economic growth and political stability. As an academic or intellectual enterprise, comparative

administration

97% MATCHING BLOCK 48/307 W

had moved from a position of innovation and vitality to a more defensive posture, reacting to charges that the promises of its youth had not been fulfilled and to advice from various quarters as to remedial measures. During the decades of the 1980s and 1990s, however, there has been a reassuring revival of activity in comparative public administration. The exuberance of the movement's youth has not been regained, but the field may have attained maturity – a stage of development bringing fewer drastic changes but presenting a new set of challenges and problems.

97% MATCHING BLOCK 55/307 W

Today's public administration functions in a different time and faces different challenges, requiring new concepts and methods. Realizing the massive influence of unfolding globalism, comparative public administration opens the door for effective adjustment and transition from traditional, ethnocentric perspectives to a wider scope that integrates knowledge from various places and cultures. There is no one way to get to the place where public administration ought to be.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 49/307 W

The students of public administration still study comparative public administration whenever any necessity arises. The meteoric rise of comparative public administration was due to the formation of Comparative Administration Group and financial help given by the Ford Foundation. Today, students of public administration do not display excessive interest in the subject. But sometimes they say that the administrative systems of different countries should be studied in a comparative way in order to have a full understanding of all aspects of the subject.

Comparative administration remains a potent weapon in the hands of administrators, theorists, technocrats, bureaucrats and policy makers to improvise their domains both intellectually and materialistically. The state remains the focal point of international power and without a proper administrative system running the state is like running a car blindfolded, doomed to destruction. There is an ample scope for governments to learn from each other's successes as well as failures and comparative political analysis creates that opportunity for study.
41 4.6. SUMMARY ? Ferrel Heady has been one of the most prominent comparative public administration theorists of the 20 th century. The corpus of his work as enlightened not only the discipline of public administration but public management as well. ? Through the CAG Heady and other theorists led a new approach to public administration and opened the sector for more nuanced, holistic and approach to studying newer dimensions of public administration. ? Heady has highlighted the co-existence of normative studies, empirical studies, ideographic studies, nomothetic studies, non-ecological studies, and ecological studies in the discipline of comparative public administration and this co-existence represents the nature of the discipline. ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 50/307 W

With major contributions from Riggs, Heady, Dahl and others today CPA is contributing to the science of public administration, re-enforcing the Inter-disciplinary and ecological orientation, calling for development administration. ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 51/307 W

With the advent of modern administrative development has positive influencing of the intellectual development of the discipline of public administration and has broadened its structure, processes, roles, and behaviour, as such. 4.7.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 52/307 W

KEYWORDS 1. Incremental- of, relating to, being, or occurring in especially small amounts of change 2. Instrumental- serving as a crucial means, agent 3. Tool orientation- changing the direction or approach of solving a problem with the medium of equipment or policy 4. Ecological Approach- an approach that focuses on the primacy of the environment in public administration. 5. Comparative analysis- when two or more things are compared qualitatively or quantitatively to choose the best option towards problem resolution is called comparative analysis. 4.8 MODEL QUESTIONS SHORT QUESTIONS Mention the prominent members of the comparative public administration group (CAG)? What were the two incidents that affected the thoughts of Ferrel Heady at the University of New Mexico? Why thousands of individuals were sent to developed countries and the establishment of about seventy institutes in developing countries, undertaken by the US government? MEDIUM QUESTION Write a short note on comparative public administration in the 21 st century? Mention any 2 prominent criticisms of a comparative approach to public administration? What are the supportive concepts of administration? Explain 42 LONG QUESTIONS Write a short note on the contributions of Ferrel Heady to the discipline of comparative public administration? Explain in detail about Comparative Public Administration Group? A comparative approach to public administration has expanded the domain of knowledge of public administration to newer areas- justify this statement? 4.9 REFERENCES

83% MATCHING BLOCK 53/307 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 54/307 W

Arora, Ramesh K. 2021. Comparative Public Administration: An Ecological Perspective. New Delhi: New Age International.

95% MATCHING BLOCK 60/307 W

Dahl, Robert, 1947. ‘‘The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems,’’ Public Administration Review 7,

No.1.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 56/307 W

Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker.

Heady,

71% MATCHING BLOCK 57/307 W

Ferrel, and Sybil S. Stokes, eds. 1960. Comparative Public Administration: A Selective Annotated Bibliography. 2nd ed. Ann Arbor: The University of Michigan,

Institute of Public Administration

100% MATCHING BLOCK 58/307 W

Henry, Nicholas. 2004. Public Administration and Public Affairs. Upper Sadle River, N.J.: Pearson.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 59/307 W

Jreisat, J. E. (2005). Comparative Public Administration Is Back In, Prudently. Public Administration Review, 65(2), 231–242.

https://doi.org/10.1111/j.1540-6210.2005.00447.x Riggs, Fred W 1961. Ecology of Public Administration. London: Asia Publishing House Rosenbloom, David H. 1998.

90% MATCHING BLOCK 61/307 W

Public Administration: Understanding Management, Politics, and Law in the Public Sector. 4th ed. New York:

McGraw-Hill Siffin,

78% MATCHING BLOCK 62/307 W

William J., ed. 1957. Toward the Comparative Study of Public Administration. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.

UNIT 5 A CRITIQUE OF FERREL HEADY STRUCTURE 5.1 Learning objectives 5.2 Introduction 5.3 Riggs and Heady 5.4 FerrelHeady's comparative perspective 5.5 Conclusion 5.6 Summary 5.7 Key words 5.8 Model questions

43 5.9 References 5.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES After studying this unit, one would be able to- ? Understand the life and contributions of Ferrel Heady to the area of comparative public administration. ? Explain the various approaches Ferrel Heady and Fred Riggs proposed to diversify the field of comparative politics ? Critically analyse the various structures that are important to study comparative public administration 5.2 INTRODUCTION Heady's work focused on the study of comparative public administration, which involves examining how public administration operates in different countries and contexts. He is known for developing a conceptual framework that identified three different types of administrative systems: the Anglo-Saxon model, the Germanic model, and the Napoleonic model. Heady also wrote extensively on topics such as bureaucracy, organizational theory, and public policy, and his work has had a significant impact on the field of public administration. He was a professor of political science at the University of Kansas for many years, and his contributions to the field continue to be studied and discussed by scholars today. Ferrel Heady served his country and his profession for over 65 years in the armed forces, as the political science faculty at several noted universities, as a university president, and as leader of several professional associations supporting public administration and public service (Public Administration Review 1994). After earning his PhD in political science from Washington University (St. Louis) in 1940, Ferrel Heady served in the US Navy during World War II. After the War, he taught political science at the University of Michigan (1946- 1966), where he also served as director of the Institute of Public Administration (1960-1966). He moved to the University of New Mexico in 1967, where he served as president from 1968 to 1975. From 1975-1981 he returned to the political science faculty, where he served as Professor Emeritus until he died in 2006. Despite his evident aptitude and ability as an academic administrator and colleague in professional associations, Ferrel Heady was first and foremost a scholar, whose work habits and work were performed carefully and meticulously. Rereading the first chapter of his seminal contribution to the field, Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective one is impressed by the breadth and depth of his knowledge of the works of his predecessors and contemporaries. This chapter is a tour de force on the development and status of the field and is a “must read” for all students of public administration, whether they are comparative scholars. Ferrel believed firmly that all students in public administration should be 44 knowledgeable about government and governance in systems other than the U.S. Without such comprehension Ferrel believed that the ability to understand one's own nation was limited. Thus, during his lifetime he continued to advocate "mainstreaming" the comparative perspective into all public administration curricula, and he wrote the classic work to promote such integration. Ferrel Heady’s contributions to public administration literature began in the 1940s with law review articles on administrative rule making (Public Administration Review 1994). Over the next 15 years, he continued with a steady stream of articles and monographs on state-level administrative reform, primarily published through the Institute of Public Administration and its predecessor organizations at the University of Michigan and the National Municipal League. Beginning in the late 1950s, his interests expanded into comparative public administration, inaugurating what most consider the primary focus of his career. For these efforts, he selected “bureaucracy” as an overarching variable common to public administration throughout the world and, hence, an appropriate focus for the study of public administration from a comparative perspective. His work in this period included articles in scholarly journals, contributed book chapters , an edited book and occasional papers published through the Comparative Administration Group (CAG) of the American Society for Public Administration..

100% MATCHING BLOCK 63/307 W

It culminated with the publication of the treatise Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective, eventually rendered in six editions over 35 years. His comparative publications in this period also included several journal articles. While Ferrel Heady was most widely recognized for his contributions to comparative public administration, he maintained a clear and coherent focus on public administration as a general area of theory, research and scholarship, albeit one illuminated by his comparative perspective. He also remained an engaged and reflective man who could not separate his intellectual interests from his personal life. This included his insightful commentary on his experiences as president of the University of New Mexico during the tumultuous era of Vietnam War protests and Watergate scandal. 5.3 RIGGS AND HEADY Ferrel Heady and Fred W. Riggs are two prominent American political scientists who made significant contributions to the field of public administration. Both scholars were pioneers in the comparative study of public administration and emphasized the importance of context in understanding administrative systems. While their work had similarities, they had different perspectives and approaches to the study of public administration. Fred W. Riggs was a political scientist who made significant contributions to the field of comparative public administration. Riggs believed that administrative systems could not be fully understood without considering the broader social, cultural, economic, and political context in which they operate. He believed that administrative systems are shaped by cultural factors, which influence the behaviour of bureaucrats and the way in which they interact with citizens. Riggs was particularly interested in the relationship between administrative systems and development. He believed that administrative systems were critical to the development of countries and that understanding administrative systems was key to understanding why some countries developed while others did not. Riggs also argued that administrative systems in 45 developing countries were often characterized by "dualism," where traditional and modern systems coexist and compete. Riggs' most significant contribution to the field of public administration was his concept of "prismatic societies," which he developed in his book "Administration in Developing Countries." Riggs described prismatic societies as societies in which multiple social forces coexist and compete, resulting in a complex and dynamic environment. This concept has been widely used in the study of public administration in developing countries and has helped scholars understand the complex and diverse administrative systems in these countries. Ferrel Heady, on the other hand, was a political scientist who focused on the comparative study of administrative systems. Heady believed that a comparative study of administrative practices across countries could provide insights into how administrative systems functioned and what factors influenced their development. He identified three different types of administrative systems: the Anglo-Saxon model, the Germanic model, and the Napoleonic model. Heady's classification system helped scholars understand how different administrative traditions evolved in different countries. He highlighted the importance of cultural, social, economic, and political factors in shaping administrative systems. Heady's work also emphasized the importance of context in shaping administrative systems. He believed that administrative systems could not be fully understood without considering the broader social, cultural, economic, and political context in which they operate. One of Heady's most important contributions to the field of public administration was his conceptualization of the three models of administrative systems. He explained the Anglo- Saxon model to be characterized by individualism, with a focus on individual rights and freedoms, decentralized decision-making, and limited government. In contrast, the Germanic model is characterized by the rule of law, with a highly centralized administrative system focused on efficiency and effectiveness. The Napoleonic model, on the other hand, emphasized centralization with a highly hierarchical administrative system controlled by the central government. While Riggs and Heady had different perspectives on the study of public administration, their work had some similarities. Both scholars emphasized the importance of context in shaping administrative systems. They both believed that administrative systems could not be fully understood without considering the broader social, cultural, economic, and political context in which they operate. Riggs and Heady also shared an interest in the study of bureaucracy. Riggs was particularly interested in the behaviour of bureaucrats, and he believed that cultural factors played a significant role in shaping their behaviour. Heady, on the other hand, was interested in the structure and organization of bureaucracies and how they differed across countries. In conclusion, Fred W. Riggs and Ferrel Heady were two influential political scientists who made significant contributions to the field of public administration. Their work emphasized the importance of context in understanding administrative systems and helped scholars understand the complex and diverse administrative

46 5.4 FERREL HEADY'S COMPARATIVE PERSPECTIVE Ferrel Heady was one of the most influential scholars in the field of public administration during the mid-twentieth century. He is perhaps best known for his comparative perspective on public administration, which he developed during a time when there was increasing interest in studying the differences and similarities among administrative systems in different countries. Heady believed that studying public administration comparatively could help us understand how different administrative systems functioned and what factors influenced their development. He argued that the study of public administration should not be limited to the examination of administrative practices within a single country, but rather should be extended to a comparative study of administrative practices across countries. Heady's comparative perspective was based on the belief that administrative systems were shaped by a complex interplay of cultural, social, economic, and political factors. He argued that different countries had different administrative traditions, which were influenced by their histories, cultures, and political systems. One of Heady's most significant contributions to the study of comparative public administration was his identification of three different types of administrative systems: the Anglo-Saxon model, the Germanic model, and the Napoleonic model. The Anglo-Saxon model, according to Heady, was characterized by a strong tradition of individualism, which placed a high value on individual rights and freedoms. Administrative systems in countries such as the United States and the United Kingdom were said to reflect this tradition, with a focus on limited government, decentralized decision-making, and a strong emphasis on individual rights. The Germanic model, on the other hand, was characterized by a strong emphasis on the rule of law, with a highly centralized administrative system that placed a premium on efficiency and effectiveness. Countries such as Germany and the Netherlands were said to reflect this tradition, with a strong focus on hierarchical structures, bureaucratic procedures, and a commitment to achieving specific goals. Finally, the Napoleonic model was characterized by a strong emphasis on centralization, with a highly hierarchical administrative system that was tightly controlled by the central government. Countries such as France and Italy were said to reflect this tradition, with a strong focus on centralized decision-making, bureaucratic formalism, and a commitment to implementing government policies. Heady's comparative perspective on public administration also emphasized the importance of context in shaping administrative systems. He argued that administrative systems could not be fully understood without taking into account the broader social, cultural, economic, and political context in which they operated. For example, he argued that the differences in administrative systems between the United States and the United Kingdom could be explained by the fact that the United States had a stronger tradition of individualism, while the United Kingdom had a stronger tradition of collectivism. Similarly, he argued that the differences in administrative systems between Germany and France could be explained by the fact that Germany had a stronger tradition of bureaucratic efficiency, while France had a stronger tradition of centralized decision-making. 5.5 CONCLUSION In conclusion, Ferrel Heady's comparative perspective on public administration was a significant contribution to the field, as it helped to broaden the scope of the study of public 47 administration beyond the borders of individual countries. Heady's identification of three different types of administrative systems, along with his emphasis on the importance of context, helped to provide a framework for the comparative study of public administration that continues to be relevant today. 5.6 SUMMARY ? Ferrel Heady was a pioneering scholar in the field of comparative public administration, and his work helped to establish the comparative approach as a key method for studying public administration and governance. ? Heady's approach to comparative public administration emphasized the importance of cultural and historical context in shaping administrative systems, and he sought to develop a more nuanced and contextualized understanding of public administration across different countries and regions. ? Heady's seminal book "Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective" introduced a set of comparative analytical categories that helped researchers to identify and compare different dimensions of administrative systems, including the structure, function, culture, and performance of government organizations. ? Heady's comparative method has been influential in shaping

100% MATCHING BLOCK 64/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

the development of public administration as a field of study, and has also had broader implications for the study of comparative politics, international relations, and development studies. ? Despite some criticisms of his approach, Heady's work remains highly regarded and continues to inspire new research on the comparative study of public administration and governance. 5.7 KEYWORDS 1. Comparative Public Administration - The study of public administration systems and practices across different countries and regions, with a focus on identifying similarities and differences, and analysing the causes and consequences of these variations. 2. Administrative Culture - The values, beliefs, norms, and attitudes that shape the behaviour of individuals and organizations within public administration systems, and that influence the design and implementation of public policies and programs. 3. Contextualization - The process of understanding and interpreting social phenomena in their specific historical, cultural, and institutional contexts, rather than treating them as universal or abstract concepts. 4. Analytical Categories - Conceptual frameworks or sets of criteria used to identify and analyse different aspects of public administration systems, such as the structure, function, culture, and performance of government organizations. 5. Development Administration - A subfield of public administration that focuses on the challenges and opportunities of promoting economic, social, and political development in less developed countries, and that emphasizes the importance of context-specific approaches and participatory governance. 5.8 MODEL QUESTIONS SHORT QUESTIONS How did Heady define and approach the study of administrative culture? In which areas did Riggs and Heady differ? What is the Germanic model proposed by Heady?

57% MATCHING BLOCK 66/307 W

48 MEDIUM QUESTIONS In what ways did FerrelHeady's approach to comparative public administration reflect broader intellectual trends and debates in the social sciences during the mid-20th century? What was FerrelHeady's main contribution to the field of comparative public administration? In what ways did Heady's work challenge traditional assumptions about public administration? LONG QUESTIONS What were Ferrel Heady's key ideas and contributions to the field of comparative public administration, and how have these ideas influenced the study of public administration today? How did Ferrel Heady's work challenge traditional assumptions about the study and practice of public administration, and what were some of the key debates and controversies sparked by his ideas? How did Ferrel Heady approach the study of administrative culture, and what were some of the key insights and findings he developed through his research in this area? 5.9 REFERENCES Heady, F. (1956). Public Administration and the Comparative Method. Public Administration Review, 16(2), 81-89. Heady, F. (1966). The Comparative Approach to Public Administration. In R. C. Macridis (Ed.), Modern Comparative Politics (pp. 582-603). Prentice-Hall.

90% MATCHING BLOCK 65/307 W

Jones, L. R. (2007). The Consummate Comparative Public Administrationist: A Tribute to Ferrel Heady (1916-2006). Public Administration

Quarterly, 31(1), 132-136. Meier, K. J., & O'Toole Jr., L. J. (2005). Ferrel Heady and the Comparative Study of Public Administration. Public Administration Review, 65(5), 554-563. Stillman II, R. J. (Ed.). (2015). Ferrel Heady: A Pioneer in Comparative Public Administration. Lexington Books. Stillman II, R. J. (2016). A Tribute to Ferrel Heady: A Pioneer in Comparative Public Administration. Public Administration Review, 76(6), 856-858.
49 BLOCK: III PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY UNIT I BACKGROUND Structure 1.1Learning Objectives 1.2INTRODUCTION 1.3 WHAT IS PUBLIC CHOICE 1.4 BACKGROUND AND DEVELOPMENT 1.5BASIC PREMISES OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY 1.6 APPLYING ECONOMICS TO POLITICS AND GOVERNANCE 1.7 BASIC METHODOLOGY OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY 1.8 PUBLIC CHOICE CHALLENGE TO ORTODOX THINKING 1.9 PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY A PARADIGM SHIFT IN OUBLIC ADMINSTRATION 1.10 CONCLUSION 1.11 SUMMARY 1.12 GLOSSARY 1.13 MODEL
QUESTIONS 1.14 REFERENCES
50 1.1 LEARNING
OBJECTIVES

60% MATCHING BLOCK 67/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

After reading this unit, students will be able to ? Discuss the basic concept of public choice theory ? Explain the origin and development of public choice theory 1.2 INTRODUCTION 'Public choice''public choice theory' is a relatively new science located at the interface between economics and politics was founded in 1948 by Duncan Black, who died in 1991 without ever achieving full recognition as the Founding Father of the discipline. It received widespread public attention in 1986, when James Buchanan, a leading architect was awarded the Nobel Prize in 'Economic Science' for his developmental of the contractual and constitutional base for the theory of economic and political decision making. It is James Buchanan only who is known as the father of the Public Choice Theory.Public Choice Theory is the use the methods and tools of economics to explore how politics and government works.

85% MATCHING BLOCK 68/307 W

It is the subset of positive political theory that studies self-interested agents like Voters, politicians and bureaucrats and their interactions to the politics and governance.

83% MATCHING BLOCK 69/307 W

Public choice has roots in positive analysis but is often used for normative purposes in order to identify a problem or suggests improvement in different aspects of governance and politics. The major proponents of public choice theory are James Buchanan, Gordon Tullock, Niskanen, Anthony Downs and Vincent Ostrom. This particular course designed to have detailed study of public choice theory and seek to explain the background, basic tenets, its contribution and limitations. Whereas, this particular unit mainly attempt to explain the origin and development of the modern public choice theory, visit the early writings, discuss the premise of the theory and an attempt to focus onadvent of public choice theory in the broad discipline of public administration.

51 1.3 What is Public Choice? Public Choice is

100% MATCHING BLOCK 70/307 SA KEY PAPER 2019 PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY.docx (D93844872)

the application of economics to the analysis of non-market decision- making involving public goods, externalities and income distribution.

95% MATCHING BLOCK 73/307 SA Coursework2.pdf (D23885180)

Public choice takes the principles that economists use to analyse people's actions in the marketplace and applies them to people's actions in politics and an administration. Public choice as defined by Dennis Mueller is "

98% MATCHING BLOCK 74/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

the economic study of non-market decision making or simply application of economics to political science. The subject matter of Public Choice is same as that of political science: the theory of the state, voting rules, voter behaviour, party politics, the bureaucracy and so on. The methodology of Public Choice is economics an inherently interdisciplinary field. As public choice is often referred to as a school of economics however'' (1979. The interesting fact of the theory is that it does not try to explain how the economy works. Rather, Public choice uses the methods and tools of economics to explore and understand how politics and government works. 1.4 BACKGROUND AND DEVELOPMENT 1.4.1 HISTORY OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY An early precursor of modern public choice theory was the work of the two French mathematician J.C Borda(1781) and M.de Condorcet (1785). Condorcet considered the first person to discover the problem of cycling by using the simple majority rule where one can decide or choose among the alternatives in the decision making. The Codorcet work has raised some important questions which modern public choice is also concerned. Following the Borda and Condorcet, there comes Lewis Caroll wrote a series of pamphlets analysing the properties of voting procedures roughly a century after the work of Borda and Condorcet. Wicksell and John C. Calhoun also seen as forerunner of the public choice theory. Wicksell wrote the classic essay on Just Taxation and his normative inquiry regarding the economic justification of the 52 state.v John c. Calhoun writing on political economy anticipate the ''public choice revolution'' in modern economics and an administration. 1.4. 2 MODERN PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY The Scottish economist Duncan Black rediscovered Borda's and Condorcet's ideas again, and made them widely available to the English speaking world. Black's 1948 articles on the electoral problems that Borda and Condorcet posed make him arguably the ''founder of modern Public Choice''. Black's most important contribution to Public Choice theory is his famous ''Median Voter Theorem'' and rediscovered earlier work on voting theory. In 1951, the American economist (and later Nobel laureate) Kenneth Arrow made another major contribution with his Impossibility Theorem. His book

100% MATCHING BLOCK 71/307 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 72/307 W

Social Choice and Individual Values (1951) influenced formulation of the theory of public choice and election theory. One of Arrow's students, Anthony Downs, also worked on the median-voter issue, buthe is best known for his 1957 application of rational choice theory across the workings of the political marketplace. Tremendous growth in the study of the Public Choice trace back to year 1962 and 1963 when James Buchanan introduced normative rules like Politics as Exchange, Economic Constitutionalism which were constitutive of the public choice. The Gordon Tullock co-authored book Calculus of consent with J.M Buchanan which made them leading scholar in the field. Not only that, Tullock's rent-seeking article has proved to be a hidden classic which made the public choice theory more empirical. Application of economics to the study of politics has taken to understand the social function of democracy by Joseph Schumpeter in book Capitalism, Socialism and Democracy. Following Tullock and Buchanan it is 1971, William Niskanen's study on Bureaucracy from the economic methodology became new area of study in the field of public choice. With Niskanen marked the end of first generation of Public Choice theorists. Frist generation theorists has mainly led the foundational stones to public choice theory and latter second generation and third generation theorist like McKelvey (1976) and Schofield (1978) William Riker's (1982) implemented the economic 53 methods in different direction. The scholar like Riker studied ''Populist Democracy'' through the lenses of the public choice. Taylor and Herman (1971) has measured the length of a government's life and related this length to various characteristics of the government. Person and Tabellini (2000, 2003) have developed and tested hypotheses about the effects of electoral rules on political outcomes such as the size and composition of state budgets, rent seeking and corruption. Their work uncovers significant differences between two- and multi-party systems, and between presidential and parliamentary systems. The field of public choice is now some sixty years old and it has become important theory in almost all three subject, political sciences, public administration and economics. it has brought the tremendous shift in the methodology of political and an administrative science. Important theoretical breakthroughs are fewer and farther between than during the field's first 25 years. If we see the much current research, it consists of extending existing theories in different directions, and of filling in the remaining empty interstices in the body of theory. Robert Tollison states that the ''Public Choice can now be said to be both an interdisciplinary and an international field of research.'' 1.5 THE BASIC PREMISE OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY: ? Its major concern is public investment and public expenditure decisions. ? Public choice assumes that people gets motivated by the 'self-interest'. Public choice theorist believes that the primary motive in people's action in the marketplace whether they are employers, employees, or consumers is mainly the concern for themselves. ? In short, the basic premise of the public choice is that every individual is driven by the self-interest and as a rational person, it focuses to increase its self-interest.

55% MATCHING BLOCK 75/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

When this premise applied to the role of the government and bureaucracy, Public choice theory makes an important interference. ? JamesM Buchanan has pointed out that in this context that political theorists while examining the public policies made by the mere politicians, executives, bureaucrats they ignore the "open'' system of behavioural analysis mainly the role of self-interest,

54 imperfect information and the role of incentives in shaping politicians' choices. He further argues, if people takes incentive in market then it is possible people respond to the government incentive. ? In a welfare state also it is perfectly possible for a self-interested majority to exploit the minority by voting themselves public benefits. So, the major concern of the pubic choice theory lies to explore major aspect of politics and an administration by using the economic method. ? Market may fail to provide adequately in such areas does not necessarily mean that government can do things better, there is 'government failure' too. ? Political decision-making is not a dispassionate pursuit of the 'public interest', but can involve a struggle between different personal and group interests. There is no single 'public interest' anyway. We live in a world of value-pluralism: different people have different values and different interests. Competition between competing interests is inevitable. This makes it vital to study how such competing interests and demands are resolved by the political process. 1.6 APPLYING ECONOMICS TO POLITICS AND GOVERNANCE Public Choice is about applying these simple economic concepts to the study of how collective choices are made- applying them to such things as the design and workings of constitutions, election mechanisms, political parties, interest groups, lobbying, bureaucracy, parliaments, committees and other parts of the governmental system. ? public choice emphasis upon Political decision, the main concern of the theory to understand how individual makes political decisions. As per the public choice theorists, in collective political decisions, such as to raise the commercial taxes or build a new bridge or a road are just as economic as they too involve a choice between costs and benefits and it is not just financial costs and benefits, but, more broadly, between whatever has to be sacrificed and whatever is gained as a result ? Another important assumption of public choice theory is that, when someone makes an economic choice, they personally experience both the costs and benefits. However, in Public Choices, by contrast, the people who benefit are not always the who bear the cost. Butler has pointed out that, in market both the customer and seller have to give

55 consent before transaction, if either the buyer or seller doesn't agree to deal, they can simply walk away. However, in politics the minority cannot walk away, they are forced to accept the decision of the majority, and bear the sacrifices that collective choice demands. Now, that makes self-interested majority to exploit the minority, by voting themselves public benefits that impose financial or other burdens on other people. ? what makes crucial to study how such government decisions are made is for the fact that government can use coercion to force minorities to go along with the majority decisions. So, the public theorist uses the economic method to understand how government decisions are made, and public choice theory help us to understand this process, to identify problems such as the self-interest of particular group and the potential exploitation of coerced minorities and to propose the ways to deal with these shortcomings. 1.7 BASIC METHODOLOGY OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY 1. METHODOLOGICAL INDIVIDUALISM: The idea of the Methodological Individualism has been out forwarded by the Joseph Schumpeter. as it has been said "work in Public choice begins with the methodological Individualism". In the theory of the pubic choice, the individual stand for the basic unit of analysis and the public goods, service and the decision structure is the analytical variable. Individuals are assumed to be self-interested. The word "self-interest" is not equivalent to preferences which affect the decisions they make, and that those preferences may differ from individual to individual. Groups, organizations, or even societies, are also is the composition of these individuals, it is not different institutions. As other social science stream, talks of group decision making being different from individual

71%	MATCHING BLOCK 76/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

decision- making, the public choice approach denies the legitimacy of decision making at the group level. 2.

RATIONAL CHOICE The second important element of public choice which is closely related to the first is the rational choice. According to the S. Sen, Rational Choice is merely the modern application of the attribute of 'measuring the pleasure plain calculus' that according to 56 the classical philosophers follow. It considers but one aspect of the human behaviour, namely decision making in specific environment. Individuals are assumed to be rational. Rationality is defined as the ability to rank all known alternatives available to the individual in a transitive manner. Individuals are assumed to adopt maximizing strategies. Maximization as a strategy implies the consistent choice of those alternatives which an individual think will provide the highest net benefit. Public choice theorist claim that even politics should not analysed from a 'public interest' perspective but, rather from an 'individual gain- maximizing' concept. Even the politicians, bureaucrats, and voters also act to maximize the personal gains. Rational Choice theory attempts looks to individual decision making as the source of collective political outcomes and suggests that the individual function according to the logic of rational self-interest. Through the assumptions of rational self-interest, positive political theory postulates a specific motivational foundation for behaviour. 3. POLITICS AS EXCHANGE Public choice scholars argue that politics is as system of exchange. It considers the realisation of certain ends arises as a result of bargaining and exchange among individuals. However, the exchange takes place in the political sphere or public sphere rather than the market place.

53%	MATCHING BLOCK 77/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

95%	MATCHING BLOCK 78/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

96%	MATCHING BLOCK 79/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

Exchange takes place in political realm between various players to gain mutual benefits. 1.8

THE PUBLIC CHOICE CHALLENGE TO ORTHODOX THINKING Post-war 'welfare' scholars seek hard to measure the costs and benefits of policy proposals such as new roads or airports, and to identify how 'social welfare' might be increased and maximised by the right choices. They believed such work would inform and improve public decision making and those policy decisions would be made logically and rationally, by enlightened and impartial officials, pursuing the public interest. That in turn would make them far superior to market choices, driven as they were by self- interest and private profit.

57 Public choice theorist showed the dissatisfaction to the assumption and they pointed out that the people who make public decisions are, in fact, just as self-interested as anyone else. They are, after all, the same people; individuals do not suddenly become angels when they get a job in government. Public Choice does not necessarily argue that all action to influence government policy are self-interested. They further pointed out that we should not assume that people behave differently in the marketplace for goods and services from how they behave when influencing government decisions. It is prudent to assume that self-interest might motivate people. It was a great challenge for the orthodox thinkers when Buchanan, with his co-author Gordon Tullock, applied this 'economic' view of human beings systematically through the institutions of government – suggesting that legislators, officials and voters all use the political process to advance their private interests, just as they do in the marketplace. Even more fascinating was their conclusion that political decisions, far from being made efficiently and dispassionately in pursuit of the 'public interest', could well be less efficient, less rational and more vulnerable to manipulation by vested interests than the supposedly flawed market process. 1.9 PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY A PARADIGM SHIFT IN PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION The primary contribution of public choice theory in the field of public administration has been the fact that it has questioned the very basis of bureaucracy run governance. If we look back to the history of inception of public choice in public administration, it is the Vincent Ostromwho is the key promoter of theories in the public administration.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 80/307	W

The conceptual framework pivoting on bureaucratization theory they adopted at its inception as an academic discipline, led to a theoretical crisis and a practical dead-end. Vincent Ostrom offered an alternative: Public Choice.

He proposed that

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 85/307	W

Public Choice should be in fact the foundational theoretical framework for Public Administration.

He further pointed out that '' the proper foundation of Public Administration is in Public Choice theory. The proper operational basis of Public Choice is Public Administration''( p116)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 88/307	W

58 policy and an institutional change that executes in modern is happen mainly through the Public Administration apparatus.

90% MATCHING BLOCK 81/307 W

Public Choice has profoundly and programmatically engaged the territory of an already established domain, the field and practice of Public Administration.

It has been said that, irrespective of the field and discipline when it comes to address the policy issues means dealing with the mechanisms and the processes of the modern administrative state.

80% MATCHING BLOCK 82/307 W

A
large part of the reforms and policy implications emerging from the insights of the Public Choice research program are precisely about the institutional structure of the administrative state and its functioning at all of its different levels: from the lowest, the operational one, to the highest, constitutional choice. Public Administration is first and foremost about the building, maintaining and operating in real life structures and processes that function as preconditions the infrastructure and determinants of real-life public policies and their management. From the operation of the electoral system to the implementation of macroeconomic policies, from the monitoring and enforcement of constitutional rules to the regulatory framework of the market, the apparatus of Public Administration is vital. Ostrom pointed that Public Administration and Public Choice are connected intrinsically, they seem to be different facets of the same coin. In brief, Public Choice, whether one is aware of it or not, whether one likes it or not, is, when it comes to the applications, more about Public Administration than about anything else.

93% MATCHING BLOCK 83/307 W

During the initial decades

100% MATCHING BLOCK 84/307 W

of Public Choice, the Bloomington scholars were the main promoters of the Public Choice revolution in the field of Public Administration.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 86/307 W

In the ‘60s and ‘70s their work was in many respects defined by a systematic attempt not only to introduce Public Choice insights into the discipline dealing with the study of the administrative side of public affairs but, even more, to revolutionize this field, to incite a ‘‘paradigm shift’’ towards the Public Choice foundational principles. 1.10

CONCLUSION Public Choice theory made a powerful impact in the study of politics and an administration. It has led to some major rethinking of the very nature of elections, legislatures and

59 bureaucracies; and on whether the political process can claim to be in any way superior to the market process. Public choice theory in the study of political process, institutions, and public policies has brought a new insight in study of social science. Its basic assumption about the human nature and political decision making and study of it through the economic lenses has brought a challenge to all conservative and normative theories. Public choice did not emerge from some profoundly new insight, some new discovery, some social science miracle. The essential wisdom of the 18th century, of Adam Smith and classical political economy was lost through two centuries of intellectual folly. Public choice does little more than incorporate a rediscovery of this wisdom and its implications into economic analyses of modern politics. In this unit, the attempt has been made toexplain the basic concept of the public choice. Its history of origin and evolution from a small assumption to one of the most influential theory in political science and public administration. Its challenged to orthodox theories by applying this 'economic' view of human beings systematically through the institutions of government. the relationship of the public choice with the public administration and how the advent of the public choice approach has brought the theoretical shift in public administration. 1.11 SUMMARY ? Public Choice applies the methods of economics to the theory and practice of politics and government.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 89/307 SA KEY PAPER 2019 PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY.docx (D93844872)

This approach has given us important insights into the nature of democratic decision-making. ? Collective decision-making is necessary in some areas. However, the fact that the market may fail to provide adequately in such areas does not necessarily mean that government can do things better ? Public Choice is about applying these simple economic concepts to the study of how collective choices are made- applying them to such things as the design and workings of constitutions, election mechanisms, political parties, interest groups, lobbying, bureaucracy, parliaments, committees and other parts of the governmental system. ?

90% MATCHING BLOCK 87/307 W

Public Choice has profoundly and programmatically engaged the territory of an already established domain, the field and practice of Public Administration. 60 1.12

GLOSSARY ? Externalities:A consequence of an industrial or commercial activity which affects other parties without this being reflected in market prices. ? Value- pluralism: the idea that there are several values which may be equally correct and fundamental and yet in conflict with each other. ? Paradigm: A set of theories that explain the way a particular subject is understood at a particular time. ? Macroeconomics: the branch of economics concerned with large-scale or general economic factors, such as interest rates and national productivity. 1.13 MODEL QUESTIONS 1.What is public choice? discuss in detail the application of economic in politics and an administration. 2. Discuss in detail the origin and development of public choice theory. 3. what are the major premise of public choice theory? explain basic methodology of the theory in brief. 4. Explain 'public choice theory a paradigm shifts in public administration'. Write Short notes on 1. Methodological Individualism 2. Politics as Exchange 3. Rational Choice 4. public choice as challenge to orthodox thinking 1.14 REFERENCES

100% MATCHING BLOCK 90/307 W

Aligica, Paul Dragos. (2015) Public Administration, Public Choice and the Ostroms: the achievements, the failure, the promise.

NewYork. SpringerScience Business Media.DOI 10.1007/s11127-014-0225-8.
61 Muller D (2008). Public Choice: An Introduction. In Lawrence A and Ingram Helen M. (Ed). Politics, Policy & Public Choice: A critique & A Proposal: The University of Chicago Press. Jstor. Sen. S (2010).

60% MATCHING BLOCK 91/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

Consent, Constitutions and Contrast; Public Choice Perspectiveon the state. In Dhameja, A Contemporary Debate in Public Administration. New Delhi,

India: PHI Learning Pvt Ltd.

92% MATCHING BLOCK 92/307 W

Ostrom, Vincent and Ostrom, Elinor. (1971). A Different Approach to The Study of Public Administration.

Wiley. Retrieved from http://www.jstor.org/stable/974676 Rowley, CharlesK. (2008). Public Choice and Constitutional Political Economy.In Lawrence A and Ingram Helen M. (Ed). Politics, Policy & Public Choice: A critique & A Proposal: The University of Chicago Press. Jstor.(Schneider, 2008) Basu, Rumki (Revised Edn.) (2004)

84% MATCHING BLOCK 93/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

Public Administration: Concepts and Theories. New Delhi, India: Sterling Publishers Bhattacharya Mohit. (2010) Public Choice Theory: Government in the New Right Perspective. In Dhameja, A (Ed). Contemporary Debates in Public Administration. New Delhi, India: PHI Learning

Pvt Ltd. Schneider, C. K. (2008). Readings in Public Choice and Constitutional Economy . Springer. UNIT 2 BASIC TENETS OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY Structure 2.1 Learning Objectives 2.2 INTRODUCTION 2.3 BASIC TENETS OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY 2.4 COLLECTIVE DECISION MAKING
62 2.5 GOVERNMENTAL FAILURE 2.6 VARIOUS SCHOOL OF THOUGHT 2.7 CONCLUSION 2.8 SUMMARY 2.9 GLOSSARY 2.10 MODEL

50% MATCHING BLOCK 94/307 SA contemporary theoretical perspective.docx (D159756278)

QUESTIONS 2.11 REFERENCES 2.1 Learning Objectives After reading this unit, the student will be able to ? explain about the basic tenets of Public

choice theory ? clarify about the institution and mechanism of public choice theory ? elucidate the different school of public choice approach 2.2 INTRODUCTION In order to understand the theory, it is very important to have clear conception of the principle, methodological base and mechanism of particular theory. So, like other theories, public choice theory has its own analytical unit as the individual, public goods and public choice. The public choice theorist has made the various assumptions regarding the individual behaviour and they came up with methods which has become the foundational base of the theory. This unit consists of basic tenets of public choice theory where effort has been made to describe some principles and the methodology. Explain the institutions and the mechanisms of Public Choice theory and further attempt to discuss about the various school of approach within Public Choice tradition. 2.3 BASIC TENETS OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY Beginning with simple assumption that human behaviour in market is it same to that of in the government institution and process, the public choice developed. In order to 63 understand the theory, it is very important to have clear conception of the principle, methodological base and mechanism of particular theory.

98% MATCHING BLOCK 95/307 SA Coursework2.pdf (D23885180)

Public choice takes the same principles that economists use to analyse people's actions in the marketplace and applies them to people's actions in collective decision making

which are as follows, ? The individual is the basic unit of analysis. Further, Use of the individual as the common decision unit. They believe that there is no decision made by an aggregate whole. Rather, decisions are made by the combined choices of the individual. ? The second the conceptualization of public goods as the type of event associated with the output of public agencies. public choice theory is concerned with the effect that different decision rules or decision-making arrangements will have upon the production of those events conceptualized as public goods and services. Thus, the type of event characterized as public goods and services, and decision structures comprise the analytical variables in public choice theory. ? The individual confront certain opportunities and possibilities in the world of events and will pursue his relative advantage within the strategic opportunities afforded by different types of decision rules or decision-making arrangements. The consequences are evaluated by whether or not the outcome is consistent with the efficiency criterion which mark another unit of analysis. 2.4 COLLECTIVE DECISION MAKING Collective decision making rule helps in forming the government, deciding the goods to be provided in public sector and what taxes to be imposed. The public choice theorist has mainly written on the nature of collective choice. Mancur Oslon was the first to provide an insight into why collective group action is not likely to be very successful, specialy if the group size is large. As he pointed out tha in the case of public interest, if the group is larger then there is tendency of having small individual benefit and therefore the less people participates or volunteer in the group activity where it is needed to fulfil particular objective. Voting represents the collective decision activity and public choice theorist argues that in most of the democratic countries, special interest dominates the public interest and this is one of the major subject where public theorist has made detail study about majority voting, vote etc. which has explained below.

64 2.4.1 ELECTIONS '' It has been said that if you like laws or sausages, you should never watch either being made. The quip sums up a Public Choice scholar's view of elections'' (Butler,2012). The public choice theorist pointed out that the purpose of voting is to try somehow to translate the opinions of many individuals into one collective decision. But the decision that eventually emerges depends greatly on what particular electoral system is chosen. Moreover, every system has its own quirks – not just in terms of the mechanics of how it operates, but in terms of how it affects the way that voters and candidates behave. The political process is plainly not very pretty; and the final decision that emerges from it may be a much distorted reflection of what anyone actually want. 2.4.2 RATIONAL IGNORANCE The important underpinning of the Public Choice theory is the lack of incentives for voters to monitor government effectively. Anthony Downs in his book An Economic Theory of Democracy (1957) identify that ''the voter is ignorant of the political issues and that ignorance is rational.'' Even the result of an election is crucial. However, individual's vote rarely decides an election. The public choice theorist has mentioned that this kind of rational ignorance is not found in the market. Someone who buys a mobile phone typically wants to be well informed about the mobile he or she selects. That is because the mobile phone buyer's choice is final as She or he pays only for the one chosen. If the choice is wise, the buyer will benefit; if it is unwise, the buyer will suffer. However, voting lacks that kind of direct result. Therefore, most voters are largely ignorant about the positions of the people for whom they vote. According to the Downs, there is a lack of an adequate rational choice model of large elections with costly voting presents and giving the central place of voting within political economy has become an obvious problem. 2.4.3 THE VOTER THEOREM

65 ''Another point made originally by Duncan Black is that vote seeking parties will tend to bid for the middle ground – his median voter theorem (Butler,2010).'' He takes some simple issue such as how much we should spend on defence. Public Choice scholars call these one-dimensional issues, since people choices lie somewhere on a single scale, ranging between nothing and a great deal. For example, a few people will say we should spend nothing at all on defence, and a few will say we should spend much more than we do at present. But, like the shape of a bell, most people are likely to bunch around some point in the middle and that single scale preferences of people are termed as single picked. Not only are there more voters in the middle but if a party pitches its policy closer to where the voters bunch it is still likely to pick up those voters at one of the extremes. When question arise how to win election? as per the voter theorem, the rational vote- gathering strategy for an extreme party is therefore to move towards the centre, hoping that its more extreme followers will stay with it while simultaneously gathering up some of the large mass of moderate voters. Indeed, the nearer to the centre that any party moves, the more advantage it has over any that are farther out. The result, said Black, is that political parties converge on the centre of opinion, trying to position themselves close to the 'median voter'. This view has a great deal of truth in it: electors in countries such as the UK and the USA often complain that there is 'no difference' between the parties. But, nevertheless, this simple idea has been challenged, and indeed largely abandoned, in recent times for a variety of reasons. 2.5 GOVERNMENT FAILURE Market may fail to provide adequately in such areas does not necessarily mean that government can do things better, there is 'government failure' too. Buchanan (1962) argues that while democracy is best for promoting individual and market freedom, it may not necessarily be a very efficient system. The basic idea of democracy is that people vote for electing their representatives by secret ballot with the political party that wins the majority forming a government. Arrow's Impossibility theorem specify that there is no way to devise a collective decision making processes which satisfies every desires of collective decision makers. Every interest groups try to use the political process for their interest. So, every government hugely face the political pressure 66 specially the legislator, bureaucrats and executives because as per public choice theorist. The economic cost of favouring a particular interest group are usually higher than the benefit of the particular interest group making it socially undesirable. 2.5.1 LEGISLATURES Public choice theorists also examine the actions of legislators. The primary responsibility of the legislator is to pursue the ''Public Interest'' but the legislator is mostly paying attention to use the public resources for their interests.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 97/307 SA Coursework2.pdf (D23885180)

The incentives for good management in the public interest are weak.

In other words, Jane S Shaw has pointed out that '' legislators have the power to tax and to extract resources in other coercive ways, and because voters monitor their behaviour poorly, legislators behave in ways that are costly to citizens'' (Shaw,2002). One technique analysed by public choice is log rolling, or vote trading. LOGROLLING:Politics is a continual process, with a variety of different issues coming up over time – a state of affairs that gives wide scope for individuals and groups to gain from exchanging support between each other. Such kind of vote trading is known as logrolling, the concept was first started in USA. It says that the expression probably derives from the old practice of neighbours assisting each other to move felled timber, which is difficult to do alone. An agreement to exchange votes on separate legislative measures, for example in cases like – the need for better roads in its own locality, say. It makes a simple bargain with other such groups: you vote to improve our roads today, and we will vote to improve yours sometime soon is called explicit logrolling. It is common in democratic bodies, such as committees and legislatures, where votes are easily traded and – since both partners need to know that the other is delivering the bargain – easily observed. It does not work so well in secret ballots, or between large groups that cannot easily discipline their members. Another mechanism, implicit logrolling, is where the different groups bundle their various proposals into a package before they are voted on. So voters or legislators who feel very

67 strongly about one measure also end up voting for other people's measures too. This kind of vote trading is common when party election manifestos or legislative proposals are being put together. Implicit logrolling has many benefits for legislator. 2.5.2 RENT SEEKING Rents are here defined as returns in excess of opportunity cost engineered in a market economy through the regulatory intervention of government (Tollison, 1982, 1997, Rowley, Tollison and Tullock, 1988, as cited in Tollison,2008). the original insight came from Gordon Tullock in 1967. However, the phrase was coined by Anne Krueger some years later. In politics, rent seeking is the attempt by particular groups to persuade government to grant them sort of valuable monopolies or legal privileges. If their rent seeking is successful, such benefits could add up to a substantial transfer of wealth to these privileged groups from the general public. He pointed out that, the Consumers and taxpayers lose the financially as a result of the monopoly prices, and also lose in terms of reduced choice and lower quality that they have to endure. Tullock noted, all expensive lobbying activity is unproductive, and a pure loss to the economy. Rent seeking activity produces nothing of value to the community. All it does is determined which monopoly privileges will be granted to which interest groups. According to Tullock ''rent seeking groups would spend or in terms of the community as a whole, waste. Huge resources on trying to tilt law making in their own favour came as a real blow to the 'welfare economics'. He made it clear that, far from the public policy process being superior to the market, rent seeking massively distros public decisions. 2.5.3 BUREAUCRACY Another major subfield of public choice theory is the study of Bureaucracy Apart from the voters and politicians, public choice analyses the role of bureaucrats in government. Further disturbing feature of government is that public officials also have their own interests. The American economist William A. Niskanen tried to identify the interests and objectives of bureaucrats in a 1971 book, Bureaucracy and Representative

68 Government. He suggested that people in public agencies seek to maximise their budgets – which brings with it power, status, comfort, security and other benefits. They have the advantage over legislators in budget negotiations, he thought, because they know more about their agencies' functions than legislators do, as the latter are inevitably generalists. And once the politicians have committed to a policy, bureaucrats can crank up the implementation budget, knowing that the politicians will not want the public humiliation of abandoning the project. The result is a larger and less efficient bureaucracy than electors actually want. A 1971 article, by George Stigler, marked the arrival of the Chicago School and criticised bureaucracy from another point of view. In ''capture theory'' introduced by the late George Stigler concluded that Bureaucrats easily gets captured and starts working for social interest because they don't have definite profit goal to channelized their behaviour. They are usually there in government because they have some mission and goals and mostly rely upon the legislators for their budgets. Usually, the interest groups or leaders who have some benefits from their mission influence the legislature and increases their funds. So such interest group, lobbyists and industrialists becomes important to them and this lead to bureaucrats captured by the interest groups. 2.5.4 OTHER INSTITUTIONS Some of the public choice scholars has also brought the institution of democratic governance in a study. Scholars like Mark Crain, William Shughart and Robert Tollison has made study on the President or chief executive officer and the independent judiciary. They pointed out, that the occupants of these positions as self-interested people, who by exercising the power of veto bills, on the one hand and by ruling on the constitutionality of laws, on the other, add stability to democratic decision making processes and increase the durability of the favours granted to special interest groups and, hence the amounts the groups are willing to pay for them. Public Choice emphasised much about the Democratic theory also. They observed that social function of democracy has been fulfilled accidentally by the continuous struggle

69 for power between parties. just as the social function of markets is fulfilled incidentally by the competitive struggle for profits among firms. The scholars like Gordon Tullock and James Buchanan has also interpreted the advanced societies with liberal democratic constitution, and they draw much attention towards the dark site of the modern life in the welfare state. They claimed that the public sector has been suffering from inherent systemic failure in terms of policy-making and implementation. 2.6

82%	MATCHING BLOCK 96/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

VARIOUS SCHOOL OF THOUGHTS 2.6.1. Rochester School Rochester School was first led by the William H Riker, pioneer of the new method of positive political theory. Positive political theory, or rational choice theory, aim to build formal models of collective decision making processes frequently relying on the assumption of self-interested rational action. Rochester School mainly consists of political scientists and not economists. As the many practitioners belongs to this school are based in Rochester, it is mainly called the Rochester School of Public Choice. The objective of the Rochester School theorist is firstly, to make the positive statements about political phenomena or descriptive generalizations that can be subjected to empirical verification. The method of Positive political theory is basically to explain the political process scientifically that involves the use of the mathematical models, statistical analysis, game theory decision theory and the historical narratives and experiments. Secondly, Rational Choice theory attempts looks to individual decision making as the source of collective political outcomes and suggests that the individual function according to the logic of rational self-interest. Through the assumptions of rational self-interest, positive political theory postulates a specific motivational foundation for behaviour. Rochester School is the most technical work in public choice. The school basic ideas in relation to politics is that political studies are much effective from rational choice perspective then the public interest perspective.
70 2.6.2 CHICAGO SCHOOL The Chicago School, a very distinct school of the political economy has long been recognized by economists of all persuasions. According to the George J Stigler stated that '' the notion of the Chicago perspective on economics includes a self-conscious orientation towards politics and its study.''. The Chicago Pubic Choice economists are different from other Chicago economists in their topic of study. According to S. Sen, ''among the three prominent public choice schools in America, the Chicago stands out for its work in the field of regulation.'' The prominent Chicago Public School theorists are David Friedman, Robert Friedan and Robert Lucas. The most notable assumption in the Chicago view of politics has mainly expressed by the Stigler and Becker. They believe that political activity is motivated by the same forces as market behaviour and the condition under which political choices are made clearly encourages behaviour that is shaped by forces like ideas, values, norms or ideology. Another important standpoint of Chicago School which makes it different from other school of public choice is Stigler theory of 'regulatory capture' where he emphasised that those who are regulated by the state, themselves capture the regulatory process and earn benefits at the cost of consumers. 2.6.3

97%	MATCHING BLOCK 98/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

VIRGINIA SCHOOL The Virginia School, is the third important school of public choice. It is actually the school of economic thought originated in Universities of Virginia in the 1950s and 1960s basically focusing on public choice theory, constitutional economics, and law. It is normatively oriented in comparison to other schools. Virginia school uses the method of comparative analysis of alternative processes of decision making between the market and non- market institutional settings. The school in its methodology added the concept of politics- as- exchange to methodological individualism and rational choice in the analysis of political processes. The school analytically points out that the rational choice element of utility maximization is applicable in individual level but unsuited to

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 99/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

broad social sense because the society is not an entity that maximizes. So, it brought new unit of analysis known as the politics as an exchange processes in limelight. Their primary claim is the exchanges takes place in the political or public sphere rather than the market and in

89%	MATCHING BLOCK 100/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

71 political scenario, exchange mainly occurs between various political actors to gain the mutual benefit. For example, Vote casting by people of particular place to particular candidate to win the election are an exchange for the service that party would offer to the people of that place when they come to power. Another claim of the proponent of the Virginia School is that in politics as exchange model, the focus should be more in process, rather than the outcome. 2.6.3.1 DIFFERENCE OF INDIVIDUAL CHOICE IN MARKET AND POLITICAL REALM The public choice theorist of the Virgnia School (one of the school of Public Choice Tradition) has mainly advocates the use of economic methods to the study of politics. They have argued that economic and political process are not the same. Buchanan has pointed out five such differences which are as follows: First, in the market, individual is all responsible for his choice whether the outcome be relevant for him or not. Whereas, in the political voting process, on the other hand, the individual choice does determine by the choice of all. Due to this reason, there comes the far greater degree of uncertainty in the political process, because individual lacks control over the final outcome. Second, In the market, each individuals feels that prices, total sales, the total amount on offer by sellers are all beyond his control. Market processes seem to this individual quite impersonal and not influenced by him. On the other hand, voters know that his voice will have a role in determining the final social outcome. There is a greater sense of social participation. Third, difference is that since decision- making through voting, unlike decision making in the market, is dependent on the choices of all, each individuals feels an absence of a sense of responsibility. Each individual may feel that even if he does not vote the social outcome will in any case be decided. Fourth, distinction is in the difference in the nature of the alternatives offered in the two environments. A consumer in the market can allocate, his budget among the range of alternatives. In the market, a combination of goods and services may be purchased. A
72 voter in politics, on the other hand, has to choose one candidate (alternative) to the exclusion of others. Fifth, difference between choice in the market and political arena is that each unit of money spent goes towards the purchase of good, nothing goes waste. But in the political sphere, a person may vote for a candidate who loses. 2.7 CONCLUSION The Public choice theory is very distinct in itself among all other theories of public administration. It has covered almost every aspect of the politics and an administration. the important contribution of the theory in the field of public administration is In this unit, attempt has been made to exposed the principle of public choice theory. suppositions of public choice approach such as methodological individualism, rational choice and the politics of exchange has introduced. The unit also explained the institutions of Elections, bureaucracies and legislature with the mechanistic concepts like logrolling, capture theory and rational ignorance. The unit also went through the different schools of thought on public choice. 2.8 SUMMARY ? The Methodological Individualism, Rational Choice and politics as exchange is the suppositions of public choice theory. ? The important underpinning of the Public Choice theory is the lack of incentives for voters to monitor government effectively. ? Most voters are largely ignorant about the positions of the people for whom they vote. ? rent seeking is the attempt by particular groups to persuade government to grant them sort of valuable monopolies or legal privileges ? Some of the public choice scholars has also brought the institution of democratic governance in a study. ? There are three school of thought under public choice tradition. ? Virginia School advocates difference of choices in market and political realm
73 2.9 GLOSSARY Welfare Economics: refers to the allocation of goods and resources for promoting social welfare Equilibrium: State of physical balance or balance due to the equal action of opposing forces Methodology: System of methods that used in a particular area of study or activity or a philosophical framework within which the research is conducted. 2.10 MODEL QUESTIONS 1. Write down the Principle of public choice theory. 2. Briefly explain the Institutions and mechanism of the public choice theory. 3. What are the key contribution of different school of thought? 4. Explain in brief the Virginian school of thought. Write short notes on 1. Methodological Individualism 2. Bureaucracy 3. log rolling 4. Chicago School 2.11REFERENCES Rowley, Charles K. (2008) Public Choice and Constitutional Political Economy Scaff. In Lawrence A and Ingram Helen M. (Ed). Politics, Policy & Public Choice: A critique & A Proposal: The University of Chicago Press. Jstor.
74 Sen. S (2010).

72%	MATCHING BLOCK 101/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

Consent, Constitutions and Contrast; Public Choice Perspective on the state. In Dhameja, A Contemporary Debate in Public Administration. New Delhi,

India: PHI Learning Pvt Ltd.

86%	MATCHING BLOCK 102/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

Bhattacharya Mohit. (2010) Public Choice Theory: Government in the New Right Perspective. In Dhameja, A (Ed). Contemporary Debates in Public Administration. New Delhi, India: PHI Learning

Pvt Ltd. Shaw S. Jane. Public Choice Theory. library of Economics and Liberty. https: www.ecolib.org/library /Enc/PublicChoiceTheory Buchanan, James M. The Calculus of Consent 1962

55%	MATCHING BLOCK 103/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

Basu, Rumki. (Revised Edn.) (2004) Public Administration: Concepts and Theories. New Delhi, India: Sterling Publishers. Muller D (2008). Public Choice:

An Introduction. In Lawrence A and Ingram Helen M. (Ed). Politics, Policy & Public Choice: A critique & A Proposal: The University of Chicago Press. Jstor. UNIT 3 CONTRIBUTIONS Structure 3.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES 3.2 INTRODUCTION 3.3 MAJOR CONTIBUTION OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY 3.4 KUNT WICKSELL 3.5 GORDON TULLOCK 3.6 JAMES M BUCHANAN 3.7 ANTHONY DOWNS 3.8 WILLIAM NISKANEN 3.9 VINCENT OSTROM
75 3.10 CONCLUSION 3.11 SUMMARY 3.12 GLOSSARY 3.13 MODEL

58%	MATCHING BLOCK 104/307	SA	contemporary theoretical perspective.docx (D159756278)

QUESTIONS 3.14 REFERENCES 3.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES After reading this unit, students will be able to ? Discuss the contribution of public

choice
theory. ? understand the contributions of different public choice theorists ? Explain the concept of rent seeking concept of Gordon Tullock. ? Elucidate the normative of James Buchanan. ? Examine the work of the Anthony Downs. ? Describe the vies of Niskanen in Bureaucracy 3.2 INTRODUCTION The field of public choice is now some sixty years old and it has become important theory in almost all three subject, political sciences, public administration and economics. Public choice theory has tremendous contribution in the field of politics and administration. Its distinct approach, methodology and the mechanisms has brought new dimension in the study of political processs, institutions and public finance. Apart from that there are some scholars who have contributed to grow public choice theory as influential theory which as now to be said as the lineage of New Public Management and the Game Theory.

Ouriginal by Turnitin

76 3.3 CONTRIBUTIONS OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY Sugato Sen in his work 'Consent, Contribution and Contrasts: The Public Choice Perspective on the State'(2010)has pointed put the major contribution of the Public choice theory which are as follows: ? Public choice theory's major contribution pertinent to the area of public administration has been the fact that it has questioned the very basis of bureaucracy run governance. ? The principal contribution of public choice theorists overall has been, first, that they have largely managed to convince economists that it is futile to talk of economic policy, and public finance, without discussing politics. Economic policy is, after all, made by politicians. ? S. Sen pointed out that public choice theorists have mounted a spirited attack on several strands of economic theory and social philosophy; such as neoclassical economics, Pigovian welfare economics, Pigou Marshall type of public finance theory, and Benthamite utilitarianism. ? When discussing politics and the institutions that supply public goods, they have made a powerful case for 'politics-as-exchange', and the Constitutional-contractarian paradigm. They have contributed to voting theory, namely single-peaked preference, median voter hypothesis, vote-trading (logrolling), strategic and insincere voting, and so on. They have provided incisive analysis of supply of public goods that are not pure public goods, specifically 'club goods'. They have also broadened our understanding of collective action. ? He mentioned that public choice theorist has made a persuasive case for the possibility of government failure and shown that it is more widespread than was thought, and have given powerful insights into the theory of regulation and rent-seeking. ? The whole New Public Management approach and viewpoint is, moreover, heavily influenced by public choice theory and can indeed be said to trace its lineage to it. ? Finally, public choice theorists have provided insightful analysis of political business cycles— the relation between economic prosperity and depression and political events such as elections. Other social scientists such as Michal Kalecki had earlier provided related accounts.

77 SOME OF THE MAJOR PROPONENTS OF PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY AND THEIR CONTRIBUTIONS: 3.4 KNUT WICKSELL Knut Wicksell was the Swedish economist well known in the study of social science for his contribution to the theory of public finance which give impetus to the development of the welfare economics and public choice. Richard Musgrave and the James Buchanan who has done tremendous work in the socio-economic-political field call Knut Wicksell their intellectual father and not only that, they consider their work stands in the Wicksellian tradition. Wicksell has successfully written much in the public finance which said to be the foundation stone where later study of state, welfare, justice, decision making through the economic method in the realm of the politics and an administration carried forward. Some contributions of Wicksell are: ? Wicksellian approach rendered that the state is a participant within the economic process. Wicksell construes the state itself is a process or a framework of rules and procedures that governs the human relationships and all the fiscal phenomena of the state do not result from the optimizing choices of some intellectual political being, but rather emerge through interactions among participants within various fiscal and political processes and that those interactions are also shaped and constrained by a variety of conventions, institutions and organizational rules. ? In a Wicksellian approach the magnitude of the governmental activity is explained with the references to the same principle that are used to explain other features of economic activities within society. ? He was concerned for the injustice that emerged from the unregulated parliamentary assemblies, this majority rule was imposing cost on large segment of tax payers or citizens. He pointed out that, the network of the institutional relationships would make it possible for people their capacities as taxpayers, better to say their tax monies were directed as they wished and the Wicksell made an effort to describe such relationships because he believed, that the ability for people to direct their taxes would locate the government on the same boat as other economic participants.

78 ? He also assumed that if the parliament gets bound by the rule of unanimity, then its decision would conform closely to unanimity within the underlying population. 3.5 GORDON TULLOCK Gordon Tullock was born in Rockford, Illinois on February 16, 1922. He is one of the founders of the field of public choice. Tullock with James Buchanan formed the core of the Public Choice centre over its quarter century of existence. Gordon Tullock was both chief editor and chief referee of public choice over its first quarter century of its existence. James Buchanan has described Gordon Tullock as a natural economist, where natural is defined as having ''intrinsic talents that emerge independently of professional training, education, and experience''. A natural economist, therefore, ''is someone who more or less consciously thinks like an economist''. Here we focus on few of his seminal pieces that contributed greatly to the development of the public choice field. 1. "Problems of Majority Voting'' (Tullock 1959) a book written by the Tullock when he was post-doctoral fellow at the Thomas Jefferson Centre for Political Economy of the University of Virginia. Tullock argued that an individual will aim at equalizing marginal cost and utility of every consumed unit. Then he added that, this should be the same for voter's behaviour. He explains that in a democracy, the problem is ''majority is binding on the minority'' and it can result in a misallocation of the resources and to the creation of external costs, costs applied to people who don't receive any benefits from a voted decision. Tullock has also developed the idea of a necessary unanimity rule when he explained he felt very necessary for the member of the minority to get aware of the fact that they are paying taxes for something they don't benefit from and in order to pass bills, unanimity might be necessary. 2.Another important contribution made by Gordon Tullock is the 'rent seeking' concept. The idea of rent seeking was first led by the Gordon Tullock in 1967. However, the phrase was coined by Anne Krueger some years later. In politics, rent seeking is the attempt by particular groups to persuade government to grant them sort of valuable monopolies or legal privileges According to Tullock ''rent seeking groups would spend or in terms of 79 the community as a whole, waste. Huge resources on trying to tilt law making in their own favour came as a real blow to the 'welfare economics'.'' He made it clear that, far from the public policy process being superior to the market, rent seeking massively distros public decisions. 3.6 JAMES M BUCHANAN James M. Buchanan was an American economist and architect of the public choice theory. Buchanan had extensive interests, and as an academic, he found ways to contribute to several disciplines. As we know, that James Buchanan with Gordon Tullock formed the public choice society. He was a highly prolific writer, being the author of some 20 books and many articles. The most important book which has become the methodological base of the theory of public choice is The Calculus of Consent; Logical Foundation of Constitutional Democracy (1962) which has written by Buchanan with Gordon Tullock.

73%	MATCHING BLOCK 105/307	SA	KEY PAPER 2019 PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY.docx (D93844872)

Buchanan's insights into human nature and political outcome provide an understanding of the perks that motivate political actors and allow more accurate predictions of political decisions. In 1986, Buchanan was awarded the Noble Prize in economics for ''his development of the contractual and constitutional bases for the theory of economic and political decision making. He was highly influenced by the Wicksell, for him, Wicksell is the "primary precursor of the of modern public choice theory'' Some of the ideas and work of James Buchanan which has contributed in the public choice theory are as follows: ? Buchanan argues that basically economists while examining the market used "closed" system in which they see the individual are motivated by self-interest, respond to incentives and struggle with imperfect information. While examining the public policies made by the mere politicians, executives, bureaucrats they ignore the "open'' system of behavioural analysis mainly the role of self-interest, imperfect information and the role of incentives in shaping politicians' choices. According to Buchanan "open system, greatly restrict the usefulness that economic theory might have in policy discussion''. He then came up with the queries that i) what kind of method of analysis should it be, if we applied the assumption we made about commercial action to political action? ii) his major concern was if the people respond to incentive in markets then why not assume 80 they respond to incentive in government. Iii) Another observation was people are self- interested when they are buying and selling. Why not assume they are self-interested when they are voting and making policy? He tried to understand and solve queries with this approach where he took the method of economics in the study of politics and which came to be known as Public choice theory or James Buchanan calls it "politics without romance" and suggests that "public choice theory has become the avenue through which a romantic and illusory set of notions about the workings of governments" has been replaced with more realistic notions.'' So, the Buchanan argues the individual in politics irrespective of their role for e.g. voter, politicians, bureaucrats, lobbyist, everyone makes decision which can address some of their interest. His insistence on analysing politics in terms of self-interest, limited information, and transactions reject socio political elites' pretensions. His whole work mainly analyses how ordinary and imperfect people act politically. BUCHANAN'S NORMATIVE RULES According to S. Sen, following the Wicklesian decision principle, Buchanan has derived two normative rules which are in his view,

86% MATCHING BLOCK 106/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

constitutive of the public choice approach: (a) politics as exchange and (b) economic constitutionalism or contractarianism as the basis of public policy making.'' ? POLITICS AS EXCHANGE:

Politics as Exchange Politics, public choice scholars argue, is a system of exchange. Buchanan contrasted this to the idea of politics as a "common search for the good, the true, and the beautiful''(1987), where those ideals have an objective definition or truth value distinct from any participating individuals' values. In this, he followed Knut Wicksell, adopting his idea that what separates markets and politics is not what people choose, but the structure of the institutions that shape the pursuit of their preferences; in politics as in markets, people pursue their interests, which are privately defined, even if the individual chooses to define them as public interests. To achieve these goals, individuals engage in exchange. Politicians trade policies for votes. For example, legislators trade votes among each other for support for their bills, and "individuals exchange agreed-on shares in contributions toward the costs of that which is commonly desired, from the services of the local fire station to that of the judge." As in the market, these exchanges should 81 create mutual gains as "two or more individuals find it mutually advantageous to join forces to accomplish certain common purposes." In Buchanan's view, people even trade consent to coercion in exchange for the benefits they perceive from a political order. ? ECONOMIC CONSTITUTIONALISM: The second normative principle is a mechanism for an expression of political criticism. As Buchanan states that '' Existing constitutions or structures or rules, are the subject of critical scrutiny." Which actually means the provisions given in the constitution are subject to critical review.

92% MATCHING BLOCK 107/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

James Buchanan argued that "the political economist who seeks to offer normative advice, must of, necessity, concentrate on the process of structure within which political decisions are observed to be made.'' 3.7 ANTHONY DOWNS Anthony Downs' an Economic Theory of Democracy (1957) is one of the founding books of the Public Choice movement, and one of the most influential social science books of the twentieth century. Downs' book introduced seminal ideas, such as a cost-benefit calculation of political participation, a spatial model of party competition, knowledge about public affairs as a by-product of other more directly instrumental activities, and concepts such as rational ignorance and cue-taking behaviour. He has written extensively in areas of public policy such as housing policy, transportation policy, and urban development, and on the politics of bureaucracy. In an economic theory of democracy (1957), an early work in rational choice theory, Anthony Downs claimed that significant elements of political life could be explained in terms of voter self-interest. Downs argued that in democracies the most voters possess moderate opinion. Seminal works of Downs are as follows: ? Down's concept of 'Paradox of not voting' has been highly appreciated by the rational choice theorists. Where he argues that in election of large democracy, the individual vote value and its effect in the election outcome has become comparatively small. He

82 pointed out that the voter is largely ignorant of political issues and that this ignorance is rational. Even the result of an election is crucial. However, individual's vote rarely decides an election. Downs states "it requires time and effort to collect the information necessary to make a reasoned choice among available alternatives, an opportunity-cost perspective on voting suggests that few voters should bother" (PG 92). Thus, the direct impact of the well informed vote is almost nil, voter doesn't have any chance to determine outcome of the election. ? According to the Downs, there is a lack of an adequate rational choice model of large elections with costly voting presents and giving the central place of voting within political economy has become an obvious problem. ? Another important contribution of an Economic Theory of Democracy is on the role of information. Downs regarded as a founding figure in " Information Economics." Downs' approach to political information emphasizes the need to take into account whether new information can be expected to make a difference in the choice we make about which candidate/party to support or about whether to vote to counteract this expectation of rational ignorance, Downs points out that information useful to political choice may be gained at a relatively low cost as a "by-product" of other activities. ? Downs most important contribution in PCA is related to the bureaucratic behaviour. Downs in his book 'Inside Bureaucracy' has specify that decision making in the bureaucracy mainly get influenced by the self-interest. Though, the interest differs from person to person. Its not same for every bureaucrat of every level, different officials motivate by different things such as power, money, prestige, income, loyalty and security. 3.8 WILLIAM NISKANEN Niskanens' work was the first systematic effort to study the bureaucracy within the public choice framework. Niskanen in his book Bureaucracy and Representative Government (1971) argues that those who work in the bureaucracy seeks

97%	MATCHING BLOCK 108/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

78%	MATCHING BLOCK 111/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

to maximize their budget and the size of the bureau. He contends that only by increasing the budget that they can maximize their self-interest.

The basic ideas of Niskanen which has contributed in the study of Public Choice theory are as follows:
83 ? In terms, of what bureaucrats actually do pursue, Niskanen suggested, that budget maximisation provided a fair measure. It is an approximation to the objective of profit in the market context. And it provides a simple proxy for all the other things that go with a large and growing budget – such as job security, promotion prospects, salary increases and so on. ? According to Niskanen, business people are exposed to the scrutiny of well-informed customers and analysts, but bureaucrats are not. The fact that bureaucrats are far more knowledgeable about their own particular area than the average politician means that politicians cannot effectively control the bureaucracy. And this monopoly of inside knowledge about their own function enables them to use the 'bundling' strategy to protect their empires: by being opaque about which parts of their function could be scaled back or prised off, they present politicians with a single package which the politicians have to take or leave. ? To counteract the evils of bureaucratic monopoly and the bureaucratic tendency to increase salary, power and prestige, Niskanen's prescription is the following: (a) Stricter control on bureaucrats through the executive or the legislature. (b)

90%	MATCHING BLOCK 112/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

More competition in the delivery of public services. (c)Privatization or contracting out to reduce wastage. (d) Dissemination of more information for public benefit about the availability of alternatives to public services offered on a competitive basis, and at competitive costs. 3.9

VINCENT OSTROM

100% MATCHING BLOCK 109/307 W

Vincent Ostrom's role as a pivotal figure both as a participant in the initial Public Choice conferences, when Public Choice hadn't settled yet on an official name, and as its key promoter of the theory's use in Public Administration, has also been recognized and reemphasized in a recent article published in Public Administration Review, the flagship journal of the field, by Theo Toonen, a leading Public Administration scholar of the current generation.

95% MATCHING BLOCK 110/307 W

The role Ostroms played at the interface between Public Administration and Public Choice theory is very well captured in Public Choice Theory in Public Administration: An annotated Bibliography by Nicholas Lovrich and Max Neiman, 84 published in 1984, with a foreword by Robert Golembiewski. Some the concepts of Vincent Ostrom which has contributed in the study of public choice theory are ? Vincent Ostrom is the second generation thinker of public choice tradition.

89% MATCHING BLOCK 113/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

He mainly advocates for the replacement of the traditional doctrine of 'bureaucratic administration' by the concept of 'democratic administration'. He argues that people should have the power to decide and their demands should be the priority. He further, states that '' bureaucratic structures ae necessary, but not sufficient structures for a productive and responsive public service economy''. In addition, he argues that the best structures for satisfying individual preferences are not centralised bureaucratic agencies but rather more fragmented multi organisational arrangements. ?

Ostrom sought a way out of the prevailing public choice pessimism by looking at how collective decision making might be improved by splitting up the process between different centres. He argues that 'polycentric' decision making improves the quality and stability of collective choices, and is better tuned to the inherent diversity of the population. He further observes the decentralisation creates diversity and offers more opportunity for citizen's choice. He further proposes d bureaucratisation

100% MATCHING BLOCK 114/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

93% MATCHING BLOCK 115/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

of all administrative units and states that decentralisation and democracy enhance participation at the work place and grass root level empowerment of the people. 3.10

CONCLUSION All this public choice theorist has contributed their writings in the study of political process, bureaucracy, voluntary exchange, decentralization, voting and governance. The second generation and also the third generation theorist has implemented the methodology of the public choice in the study of other different aspects of politics. Third-generation scholars have taken Public Choice into interesting new avenues. Robert D. Tollison, for example, has shown how the rise of parliament in the late medieval age led to the decline in monopolies because it now required a majority in the legislature, not just the consent of the monarch, to create them. The pioneers of modern public choice theory were all either British or American and was mainly focused on the workings of two party majority system. But Public Choice has grown international, and now looks much more to the multi-party systems and diverse voting rules that prevails in many other places.

85 This unit has mainly attempt to cover the major contribution of public choice theory. Apart from that shed some lights on the work and contribution of different theorist. It has addressed the important concept like 'Politics as exchange' of Buchanan, Gordon Tullock's 'rent seeking', 'paradox of not voting' of Anthony Downs and others. 3.11 SUMMARY ? Buchanan considers Wicksell as primary precursor of the of modern public choice theory. ? In politics, rent seeking is the attempt by particular groups to persuade government to grant them sort of valuable monopolies or legal privileges. ? James Buchanan with Gordon Tullock formed the public choice society ? Niskanens' work was the first systematic effort to study the bureaucracy within the public choice framework. ? Vincent

100% MATCHING BLOCK 117/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

advocates for the replacement of the traditional doctrine of 'bureaucratic administration' by the concept of 'democratic administration'. 3.12

GLOSSARY ? Polycentric: Having more than one centre is polycentric. ? Monopoly: an organization or group that has complete control of something, especially an area of business, so that other have no share. ? Contractarianism: Any of various theories that justify moral principles or political arrangement by appealing to a social contract that is voluntarily committed to under ideal conditions for such commitment. Also called contractarianism.
86 ? Benthamite Utilitarianism : Utilitarianism is a family of normative ethical theories that prescribe actions that maximize happiness and well-being for all affected individuals. Benthamite is relate to philosophical system of utilitarianism proposed by Jeremy Bentham. 3.13 MODEL QUESTIONS 1.Write down the contribution Gordon Tullock and James Buchanan. 2. Discuss the major contribution of public choice theory 3.What are the major contribution of Anthony Downs? 4.Write the note on the views of second generation theorist William Niskanen and Vincent Ostrom. Write short notes on: 1.Contribution of Wicksell 2. 'Rent Seeking' 3. Buchanan's normative rule 4. Anthony Downs view on Bureaucracy 5. paradox of not voting 6. Vincent Ostrom 3.14 REFERENCES

68% MATCHING BLOCK 116/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

Sen. S (2010). Consent, Constitutions and Contrast; Public Choice Perspective on the state. In Dhameja, A Contemporary Debate in Public Administration. New Delhi,

India: PHI Learning Pvt Ltd. Butler. E (2012). Public Choice- A Primer. Westminster, London: The Institute of Economic Affairs.
87 Rowley and Friedrich (2008)Readings in Public Choice and Constitutional Political Economy: Springer Science Business Media, LLC. Muller, D. (1979). Public Choice, Cambridge, Cambridge University Press. Mitchell, William.C.(1989). Chicago Political Economy: A Public Choice Perspective. Springer. Retrieved from. https://www.jstor.org/stable /30025197 Atkinson, Anthony. (1987) B. James M. Buchanan Contributions to Economics. Wiley. Retrieved from. http://www.jstor.org/stable/3440481 Mueller Dennis.C.(2012) Gordon Tullock and Public Choice. Springer. Retrieved from. http://www.jstor.org/stable/41483751 Unit 4 LIMITATIONS CONTENTS Structure 4.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES 4.2 INTRODUCTION 4.3 A QUESTION OF SELF INTEREST 4.4 OTHER CRITICAL VIEWS 4.5 CRITICS AND PUBLIC CHOICE RESPONSE 4.6 CURRENT AND FUTURE HORIZON 4.7 GAME THEORY 4.8 CONCLUSION 4.9 SUMMARY 4.10 GLOSSARY 88 4.11 MODEL QUESTIONS 4.1 LEARNING
OBJECTIVES

78% MATCHING BLOCK 118/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

After reading this unit, students will be able to ? Describe the limitations of public

choice

theory ? Explain the Wright views against public choice theory ? Analyse opinion of different critics ? Relate the relevance of public choice theory 4.2 INTRODUCTION There were growing popularity of the public choice theory in the last decades or two. relatively 1970s marked the increased public concern for greater economic productivity, the increasingly technical bias of economic research. Public choice theory has a tremendous contribution in the field of politics, governance and administration. According to S. Sen, ''when discussing politics and the institutions that supply goods, they have made a powerful case for 'politics-as – exchange', and the constitutional-contractarian paradigm. They have contributed to voting theory, namely single- peaked preference, median voter hypothesis, vote trading (log rolling). They have incisive analysis of supply of public goods, specifically 'club goods'(Sen,2010). They have also broadened our understanding of collective action. 'The public choice school has been successful in pointing out that there are alternatives available for the delivery of services to the citizens. Even though the weight of the contribution is much heavier but like other theories, public choice theory has been subjected to severe criticism. . 4.3 A QUESTION OF SELF INTEREST The public choice theorist assumes, that in the private marketplace people are motivated mainly by self-interest. They make the assumption that people acting in the political marketplace, most notably the view of all legislators, bureaucrats and voters as purely self-interested, and a strong preference for 89 and belief in the market rather than social planning. However, the critic Michael D Wright, in his article 'A Critique of the Public Choice Theory Case for Privatization: Rhetoric and Reality,1993 has pointed out that public choice theory as a justification for privatization is problematic and as per Wright, it is problematic in three distinct ways which are as follows: First, He argues that, the use of the self-interest preference model of market behaviour in the political realm is integral to public choice theory, but it has no necessary prevalence over any other model. The model has not been proven as empirically correct. In fact, there is much evidence to suggest that it is incorrect. Second, Wright claims that, the assumption that voters will also vote according to individual, rather than collective interests, remains a point of contention and has also not been empirically proven. Third, the assertion that the private firm is more efficient than the public enterprise is not at all clear. The three critical view of Wright has explained below: 4.3.1. A PUBLIC SECTOR MODEL BASED ON SELF INTEREST • According to the Wright, "the assumption that the self-interest model of behaviour employed in the market is also appropriate in analysing individual preferences in the public sector can be challenged. Whereas, most of those who defend the public interest model agree that it is as much a goal as it is an analysis, public choice theory is not willing to acknowledge similar limitations. He argues that the view of human nature on which public choice theory is based is that the individual is an "egoistic, rational, utility maximize" in both the economic and political. Even though it is acknowledged by some theorists, such as James Buchanan, that the use of the homo economicus (the wealth-maximizing egoist) construction is not appropriate for the empirical exercise of predicting the likely outcomes of political interactions, the model is still the apparently scientific basis for public choice theory. It is also admitted by Buchanan that though self-interest is not the sole motive of politicians and bureaucrats, and may not be as relevant in politics as in the market, it is still believed to be "a significant motive." • The second and modified view of Buchanan, that self-interest is a significant, but not the only component of human nature, suffers from an inability to explain the theorizing that follows this admission. Put simply, if self-interest is not the only aspect of human nature that is important to understanding the public sector, then it seems curious to base a theory of politics solely on the economic model. • The most important feature to the public choice model is that legislators are self-interested because they are fixated with re-election. wright contradicts the argument that elections are

90 less competitive and that incumbents are ready to re-elected. He pointed out that ''the difficulty that public choice theory has in responding to these different trends is that it attempts to predict legislative behaviour, rather than understand the thinking processes of legislators, bureaucrats, and voters. The theory is committed to focussing on predictions of individual legislator behaviour, rather than interpretations.'' • The public choice fails to shed any light on motivations other than self-interest, and as such deprives attempts to develop more democratic and responsive institutions in response institutions in response to these other motivations. Rather than confronting the problems within bureaucracy at an institutional level, public choice theorists advocate the privatization of government-owned enterprises based on their analysis of individuals. In short, wright specify that only the market can properly respond to the self-interested individual. When this view of individuals is made less clear, then it cannot be assumed that the individuals involved in managing state enterprises must be engaged in behaviours that are contrary to the public interest. 4.3.2 THE VOTER MODEL Election is the primary institution of study for public choice theorist are also been the subject of severe criticism. The narrow voter self-interest model suggested by public choice theorists has also been questioned by recent research. There are two basic points here. First, though the connection between the overall economic conditions of society and electoral results remains apparent, the effect of voters' individual economic circumstances on voting behaviour (the concern of public choice) does not appear to correspond in a similar manner. Second, since Public Choice theorist apparently refutes the rational, self-interest model as applied to voters, the response has been that voters can afford to vote according to their ideology because it costs them almost nothing to do so, public theorist argues, since one's vote will almost certainly make no difference to the outcome of an election, whereas in the market setting it is more costly to base decisions on noneconomic factors such as personal ideology because real economic interests are at stake. The above public choice statement has been condemned by the alternative argument The difficulty with the public choice explanation is that it still does not explain why - if one's vote is essentially meaningless would any economically rational person vote. As it has pointed out that, voting can cost money in time away from work and it can be inconvenient, yet the propensity to vote increases the 91 more education a voter has, and voters with more education are more likely to aware of the argument that voting is not rational. The economic response to this is that voters must have a taste for voting for which they are willing to pay in order to satisfy." This kind of behaviour is still considered to be rational by the public choice theorists because in the extremely remote case that one's favoured candidate lost by one vote and one did not vote, one would feel such deep regret that the cost of voting is a reasonable price to pay to avoid this scenario. But this kind of argument undermines the core of the public choice position on voting elaborated by Lee, which is that voters can afford to take positions that are not economically rational because to do so costs them almost nothing. 4.3.3. EFFICIENCY IN PRIVATE AND PUBLIC ENTERPRISE In area of the goods and services which is the another primary unit of the public choice theory. the Public choice theory claims that at the state should be exempt from efficiency concerns in areas of provision and delivery of goods and services where there are particular social concerns. The Public choice suggests that though the public sector may be important in ascertaining the appropriate level of demand, the private sector is more efficient in providing goods and services to meet this demand. There are two themes which guide the discussion in this section. First, there may be important social reasons why private market provision is not appropriate in certain areas because of certain values or social goals we wish the state to represent. Second, the empirical evidence relating to whether efficiency is greater in public or private firms is much more complex than public choice theorists acknowledge. The Both of these points has been evaluated, as well as the fact that public choice theory concentrates much more on the public-private distinction than on questions of competition, a concentration which seems to be problematic for the public choice analysis. 4.4 OTHER CRITICAL VIEWS • First, according to the S. Sen, ''The Public Choice school has been successful in pointing out that there are alternatives available for the delivery of services to the citizens. The role of 'market' as a competing paradigm has challenged the hegemonic position of the state. Also, the power of bureaucracy has been similarly challenged, opening up possibilities of non- bureaucratic citizen-friendly organizational options. It is not however a state versus market debate, as it is often made out to be.

95%	MATCHING BLOCK 119/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

The real issue is now to make the state more 92 democratic and citizen-friendly, and not to relegate it to the background altogether and install the new God of 'market' in its place (

Sen, 2010). • Steven Pressman (economist) offers a critique of the public choice approach, arguing that public choice actually fails to explain political behaviour in a number of central areas including politicians' behaviour as well as voting behaviour. He pointed out that in the case of politicians' behaviour, the public choice assumption that a politician's utility function is driven by greater political and economic power cannot account for various political phenomena. (Pressman,2004). • Second, again, it pointed out, in different countries, there are different situations and their method to check governmental overgrowth may not be of universal relevance. For instance, public choice method is not compliant in the state-led 'development' activities in the Third World. •

93%	MATCHING BLOCK 120/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

The 'public' which the Public choice seeks to cater to are not always the elite or the middle class and needs of the low income group with poor purchasing power can never be met by the market. Lacking a philosophical or ethical foundation, the public choice theory is neither socially inclusive nor offers an integrating view of the economy and policy. • As for critiques concerning voter behaviour, it is argued that public choice is unable to explain why people vote due to limitations in rational choice theory. For example, from the viewpoint of rational choice theory, the expected gains of voting depend on (1) the benefit to the individual if their candidate wins, and (2) the probability that the individual's vote will determine the election's outcome. However, even in a tight election the probability that an individual's vote makes the difference is estimated to be effectively zero. Aldrich, suggest that even if an individual expects gains from their candidate's success, the expected gains from voting would also logically be near zero. When this is considered in combination with the multiple recognized costs of voting such as the opportunity cost of foregone wages, transportation costs, and more, the self-interested individual is, therefore, unlikely to vote at all (at least theoretically)(Adrich,1993). • Fourth, the public choice writer mainly rejects public interest and the welfare state however, it has observed that the development of human institution in history has been toward these concepts. The concept of people's welfare still exists in the societies. • According to the Herbert Simon, 'the major motivational premise of public choice, individual self-interest is false' 'Human beings not only makes decisions in terms of individual self- 93 interest, but in terms of the perceived interests of the groups, families, organizations, ethnic groups and national states with which they identify and to whom they are loyal'. 4.5

94%	MATCHING BLOCK 121/307	SA	Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

Ouriginal by Turnitin

CRITICS AND PUBLIC CHOICE RESPONSE . • According to some interpretations of public choice theory (usually critical), the proponents of public choice theory depict government officials as well as politicians as being utility maximizes who seek to maximize their 'budgets' or some other objective, which is not conducive to promoting the 'public interest'. These critics actually charged public choice theorists having narrow view of human motivation and action. The critics also pointed out, that public choice theorists call for a minimal state. According to S. Sen, ''This type of criticism of public choice theorists is misplaced. Suppose that we go along with these critics and say that it is deplorable that bureaucrats and politicians are concerned with maximizing their own utility rather than the public interest. But then we discover that public choice theorists recommend a minimal state. So, the role and influence of venal and corrupt politicians and bureaucrats is sought to be minimized. It follows that these critics cannot fault public choice theorists both for suggesting that politicians and bureaucrats are self- serving and venal, and if these critics accept this view of public officials in general, also for recommending a minimal state. Unless, of course, the critics feel either that selfishness is not descriptively and empirically correct or that it is not prescriptive and moreover, since politicians and bureaucrats should not be selfish, there ought to be a greater role of the state.'' (Sen,2010). • In another critical question. It has been asked that, if a person looks for his own gain and self-interest in market place, why the same individual suddenly respond to the public interest where he is a bureaucrat or politician? public choice theorists make an appeal for assuming consistent behaviour in all aspects of life in response. The theorists pointed out two different things about political institutions. First, whichever is the institution, the representative's individual pursues the interest of that institution. In other words, the decision-maker responsible for that institution. Thus, just as the entrepreneur can be thought as responsible for the business firm, the politician can be the representative for the

94 party, the bureaucrat for the bureaucracy, the individual voter for the collective populace. Secondly, sometimes the individual goes beyond the interest of group or institute and pursue his own gain and self-interest. • Critic of public choice theory has pointed out, that public choice theory seems more as the proponent of New Right ideology, and it is seen as advocating untrammelled markets, minimal governments and drastically cut bureaucracies. This may be true, but public choice theorists' contribution has been largely methodological. Public choice theory has provided a new way of approaching the study of politics. We can say that, there was many noteworthy attacks to the public a choice theory regarding the cooperation among humans, bureaucracy and the public interest. however, all findings of the public choice are relevant on one or another area of politics and public administration. 4.6 CURRENT AND FUTURE HORIZON OF PUBLIC CHOICE The emergence and growth of diverse new democracies has given Public Choice a new importance as new nations look to its findings for lessons on how their own constitutional, legislative and electoral systems should be constructed. In the process, Public Choice has had to expand out of the traditional US and UK two-party majority-voting models that were familiar to its founders and deal with a much wider range of different systems. Established democracies too have been taking lessons from Public Choice. There is more recognition of the private interests of legislators and bureaucrats, and of the need to restrain them. Such policies are becoming more common: sunset legislation to limit the lifetime of public agencies and programmes, privatisation and deregulation, tax simplification, competition between and within government agencies, market testing for public provision, constitutional caps on government borrowing and other measures. As attention moves beyond the traditional US and UK systems, Public Choice scholars have gone more deeply into the workings of mechanisms such as proportional representation, multi-member seats and party list systems. 4.7 GAME THEORY The most trending and particularly fruitful recent aspect of modern Public Choice is game theory, and in particular what is known as evolutionary game theory. Game theory explores what people do when their choices are critically dependent on the actions of others. The classic example is the prisoner's

95 dilemma, in which two prisoners both confess because they fear harsher punishment if they remain silent and the other implicates them. This sort of reasoning is very relevant in voting situations, particularly those in which people might try to anticipate how others will vote and then vote strategically, in order to improve the chances of their own favoured candidates or outcomes, or to prevent others from succeeding. Moving on from the pure theory of electoral gaming, economists have found it fruitful to conduct practical experiments on how real people do actually behave when faced with choices such as those they face in elections and politics. 4.8 CONCLUSION Though public Choice theory is also not free from the criticism and has its limitations. yet, it can point out that public choiceis an analysis of government organs, based on the tenets of methodological individualism, democratic administration and decentralization. It has extensively expounded political and bureaucratic behaviour, making a case for market efficiency and not only that it has influenced the approach and view point of the Public Management Theory and can said that public choice as its lineage. This unit made some reflection on the critical views expressed by various scholars on Public Choice theory. It also discussed the response of public choice against the critics and lastly the unit has concluded with giving short description regarding the Game Theory which is the modern aspect of public choice and importance of the theory in the present and future study of public administration and political science. 4.9 SUMMARY ? Wright mainly challenged the assumption that voters will also vote according to individual, rather than collective interests, remains a point of contention and has also not been empirically proven. ? The Public choice suggests that though the public sector may be important in ascertaining the appropriate level of demand, the private sector is more efficient in providing goods and services to meet this demand has been highly criticized. ? As per critics

88% MATCHING BLOCK 122/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

95% MATCHING BLOCK 123/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

the real issue is now to make the state more democratic and citizen friendly, and not to relegate it to the background altogether and install the new God of 'market' in its place. 96 ?

public choice theorists make an appeal for assuming consistent behaviour in all aspects of life to critics. ? There were many noteworthy attacks to the public a choice theory regarding the cooperation among humans, bureaucracy and the public interest. however, all findings of the public choice are relevant on one or another area of politics and public administration. 4.10 GLOSSARY ? Secret Ballot: The Secret ballot, also known as the Australian Ballot, is a voting method in which a voter identifies in an election or a referendum is anonymous. ? Individualism: social theory favouring freedom of action for individuals over collective or stare control. ? Proportional representation: type of electoral system under which subgroups of an electorate are reflected proportionately in the elected body. 4.11 MODEL QUESTION 1.Describe the limitations of Public Choice Theory 2.Discuss the three criticism made by Wright on Public Choice Theory 3.Outline the other critical views and Public Choice response . Short Note on: 1.Voter model 2.Current and future horizon of public choice 3.Game Theory 4.12 REFERENCES Aldrich (1993). Rational Choice and Turnout. American Journal of Social Science Pressman, Steven (2004). What is wrong with public choice. Journal of Post Keynesian Economics. Orchard, Lionel and Stretton, Hugh. (1997). Public Choice. Oxford University Press. Retrieved from. http://www.jstor.org/stable /23599913
97 Sen. S (2010).

72% MATCHING BLOCK 124/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

Consent, Constitutions and Contrast; Public Choice Perspective on the state. In Dhameja, A Contemporary Debate in Public Administration. New Delhi,

India: PHI Learning Pvt Ltd. Butler. E (2012). Public Choice- A Primer. Westminster, London: The Institute of Economic Affairs.

86% MATCHING BLOCK 125/307 SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

Bhattacharya Mohit. (2010) Public Choice Theory: Government in the New Right Perspective. In Dhameja, A (Ed). Contemporary Debates in Public Administration. New Delhi, India: PHI Learning

Pvt Ltd. UNIT: 5 NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT Structure 5.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES 5.2 INTRODUCTION 5.3 NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT: GENESIS 5.4 SALIENT FEATURES

46% MATCHING BLOCK 126/307 SA new public management.docx (D159210533)

OF NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT 5.5 PRINCIPLES OF NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT 5.6 IMPACT OF NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT 5.7 NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT REFORMS: APPRAISAL 5.8 CONCLUSION 5.9 SUMMARY 5.10 GLOSSARY 5.11 MODEL QUESTIONS 5.12 REFERENCES 5.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES After reading this unit, students will be able to 98 ? Explain the emergence of New Public Management. ?

Describe the salient features of NPM ? Examining the impact of NPM ? Evaluate the New Public Management 5.2 INTRODUCTION New Public Management(NPM)is the new thrust of administrative reforms sweeping through the world. The term has been used in the recent times to describe a management culture that emphasizes the centrality of the citizen or customer as well accountability for results. The New Public Management(NPM) is the latest paradigm in the evolution of public administration. It came into existence in the 1990s. The book entitled Reinventing Government by David Osborn and Red Gaebler, published in 1992

44% MATCHING BLOCK 127/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

heralded the birth of the new public management. NPM represents the second reinvention in public administration the first being the New Public Administration of the late 1960s.

NPM is a modern management practice with the logic of economics retaining core public values which are not a static phenomenon but evolving one. Unit has mainly made an attempt to explain the emergence of New Public Management. Discusses the basic characteristics and principles. The effort has been made to simplify the impacts of the New Public Management in management and an administrative function of different countries. Overall the unit has tried to cover the basic part of New Public Management. 5.3 NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT: GENESIS With the outset of globalization, everything is evolving to adjust to the pace of the world with which it is changing. Each and every individual, sector, and institution have a different take on globalization, on how it has impacted their lives. Different professionals have alternate opinions on how the influence of globalization can be studied and used for their own benefit. Globalization is one of those concepts that hold a multitude of meanings to 99 people from different backgrounds, some may find interest in the interdependence of the countries which have economic, political, and even social implications on the state whereas some may look at it as a financial boon of interconnectedness and some even judging it for freedom of access to every corner of the world. communication activities of public sector organizations can be seen both as transformative in the introduction of NPM and as an outcome of this process. The impact of globalization on public administration has been significant, emphasizing change, and reinventing public administration with a management orientation. Since the early 1980s, serious challenges have been posed to the administration to reduce reliance on bureaucracy, curtail the growth of expenditure and seek new ways of delivering public services. New Public Management Perspective prescribes a set of reform measures for organizing and offering services, with market mechanisms, to the citizens. At the beginning 1980s, there has been a widespread attack on the public sector and bureaucracy as governments all over began to consume scarce resources. The expansion of government has been into too many areas, which could as well be in the domain of the private sector. Bureaucracy was considered to be too unwieldy, unresponsive, inefficient, ineffective, and unable to withstand the competition. A culmination of several factors has given rise to the NPM perspective. These include: 5.3.1 Increase in Government Expenditure During the 1970s and 1980s, the rise in government expenditure along with poor economic performance led to the questioning of the need for large bureaucracies. Hence, attempts were initiated to slow down and reverse government growth in terms of increasing public spending as well as staffing. This paved the way for a shift towards privatization, quasi- privatization of certain activities, and moving away from core government institutions. 5.3.2 Influence of neo-liberalism There has been a powerful influence of neo-liberal political ideology during the 1980s and 1 990s. Neo-liberalism favoured the dominant presence of market forces over the state. Concepts such as efficiency, markets, competition, consumer choice, etc. had gained predominance. Free markets unrestrained by the government, removal of barriers to facilitate the free flow of goods and money, and privatization were considered

100 significant measures for economic growth. The then prevailing scenario favoured rollback by the state and the space created by it to be filled with the private sector. 5.3.3 Impact of New Right Philosophy The New Right Philosophy propagated in the 1970s in the UK as well as the USA, favoured markets as more efficient for allocation of resources. Excessive reliance on the state was not considered appropriate and it propagated a lesser role for it and opted for self-reliance. This perspective had a global impact in generating a consensus about the efficiency of market forces. Markets were considered to play a key role in the creation of economic wealth and employment. 5.3.4 Public Choice Approach The public choice approach had a major impact on the evolution of the new public management perspective. The human being is considered to be a utility maximize, who intends to increase net benefits from any action or decision. The voters, politicians, and bureaucrats are considered to be motivated by self-interest. Bureaucracy, being the core of public administration, is held responsible for the declining quality of public services. This thinking led to the new paradigm of government sensitive to market forces, which meant remodelling of government according to concepts of competition and efficiency. has become attractive as a consequence of this approach. 5.3.5Washington Consensus The 1980s and 1990s have been characterized by questioning the role of the state in economic development. It was increasingly felt that poverty and economic stagnation, especially in developing countries, were the result of the state undermining the operation of market forces. The need for adjusting the economy on various fronts such as financial and banking sectors and a reduced role for the state in economic development has been considered indispensable. This led to the emergence of the Washington consensus. It basically comprises the reform measures promoted by Bretton woods institutions (International Monetary Fund and World Bank), the US Congress and Treasury, and several think tanks, which aimed to address the economic crisis, especially in Latin American
101 countries during the 1 980s. This is also termed a structural adjustment cum stabilization program which emphasized the need for sound microeconomic and financial policies, trade and financial liberalization, privatization, and deregulation of domestic markets. This has also been responsible for giving a push to market forces. The emergence of the NPM perspective has been one of the recent striking trends in the discipline of public administration. Its focus basically is on the following: Restructuring government operations along market lines; Distinguishing strategic policy formulation from implementation; Emphasizing performance evaluation and quality improvement; and Stressing upon effective service provision and value for money for the customer. 5.4 SALIENT FEATURES OF NEW PUBLIC MANAGMENT New Public Management (NPM) is the most dominant paradigm in the discipline of public administration (Arora 2003). It conjures up an image enmeshed with a minimal government, debureaucratization, decentralization, market orientation of public service, contracting out, privatization, performance management, etc. These features signify a marked contrast with the traditional model of administration, which embodies a dominant role of the government in the provision of services, hierarchical structure of organization, centralization and so forth. Grounded in rational choice and public choice containing elements of total quality management (TQM) the New Public Management (NPM) seeks to offer more efficient mechanism for delivering goods and services and for raising governmental performance levels (Kelly 1998). Falconer (1997) provides a central characteristic of NPM which are as follows: 5.4.1Hands-on professional management of public organization: People, responsible for public service delivery, should be proactive managers rather than reactive administrators. The modern public manager should have discretion in decision

102 making within his or her particular area of responsibility. Unlike the traditional public administrator, who operated in accordance with established rules and regulations, and who implemented the policies of government with little or no discretion and with no direct responsibility, the public manager is a much more active individual, with decision making authority over, and responsibility for, the public service he or she delivers. This is called 'Hands-On Professional Management'. 5.4.2. Explicit standards and measures of performance Under the new public management, management lies at the core of public sector activity, and professional managers are viewed as the key to improved public sector performance. It has been pointed out that, public management embodies the important belief that public sector organizations should increasingly be subjected to rigorous 'measures of performance'. This means that these organizations must pay closer attention to the objectives. Subjecting public managers to performance evaluation introduces disciplinary mechanisms which compel public sector bodies to focus on their specific responsibilities and carry out those tasks efficiently and effectively. 5.4.3 Greater emphasis on output controls The proponents of New Public Management claims that for too long, public sector organizations failed to concern themselves with their outputs (i.e. the quality of services). The focus was on inputs, given that political debates on public sector matters usually revolved around the question of resources. Under the new public management, the focus is shifted to that of results. The important question for the proactive public manager is what he or she actually achieves with the resources available. As such, the most important concern of the public manager is with results. The new public management calls for decentralization in public sector organization. 5.4.4 Shift to disaggregation of units in the public sector Given that public management embodies a strong criticism of the bureaucratic form of organization, it is not surprising that it advocates a disaggregation of bureaucratic units in order to form a more efficient, accountable public service. This is called 'disaggregation of 103 public sector units'. It is more efficient because smaller units of activity are better able to establish objectives and work toward achieving them more quickly and more directly. It is more accountable, because the new public management replaces the 'faceless bureaucrat' with visible, responsible managers who are directly accountable to the public 5.4.5 Shift to greater competition in the public sector The central arguments within the public management approach are-the market, not government, is the best allocator of resources and individuals are the best judges of their own welfare.

97% MATCHING BLOCK 129/307 SA 新建 Microsoft Office Word 文档.docx (D29583276)

As such, market disciplines are advocated for the public sector, in line with the belief that the threat of competition and rivalry between providers' fosters efficiency in service provision and choice for the customer. It brings 'greater competition in public service provision'. 5.4.6 Stress on private-sector styles of management practice The recommendation of 'private sector styles of management' is that the efficiency of public service provision is enhanced where a public sector agency conducts its affairs in accordance with business principles. An important theme within public management is that the public sector should seek, as far as possible, to behave in a more business-like manner (i.e. more like the private sector). Therefore, public service agencies should adopt reward structures for their employees, much like those in the private sector, encompassing such mechanisms as performance-related pay and more flexible working practices. 5.4.7 Stress on greater discipline and economy in public sector resource use the important requirement that public service agencies must pay much greater attention to the way in which they use the financial and human resources at their disposal. The emphasis in the new public management is very much on cutting the cost of public service provision, while, at the same time, increasing its quality (i.e. doing more with less).

Ouriginal by Turnitin

104 5.5 PRICIPLES OF NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT Osborne and Gaebler (1993) identified ten principles that represent an operational definition of NPM which are as follows: ? First, government has a responsibility to steer the delivery of public services in the addressing of public issues. As such, it reflects a notion that government does not necessarily have to be doing something in order to be responsible for the delivery of that public service. ? Second, government ought to be "community-owned" and that the role of government is to empower citizens and communities to exercise self-governance. This notion stands in contrast to the notion that citizens are merely recipients of public services and do not have to be actively engaged in the process of deciding what those services would look like. Indeed, the citizen simply needs to know they were receiving the same service as that delivered to other citizens or recipients such that no preferential treatment is being shown (Miller and Dunn, 2006). ? Third, competition is seen as inherently good such that, through competition, the best ideas and most efficient delivery of services can emerge. Competition can drive the newly empowered citizens and recipients to create new and better ways of providing public goods to themselves and their fellow citizens. New Public Management: Emergence and Principles 13 Sometimes competition means that various public and private firms were competing to procure the rights to deliver a public service. It also means that departments within a government have to compete for limited public resources, that communities have to compete with each other to offer fresh and original ideas, and employees have to compete with each other in the delivery of the services for which they are responsible. ? Fourth, far too often, the results of governmental operations were the enforcement of rules that may or may not have been relevant to the particular cases. It should be the purposes for which agencies are created that drive the activities of that agency, not the rules that have been constructed around that agency. ? Fifth, Public agencies should be judged on the results that they generate. Organizational processes like the budget cycle should be directed assessing the cost and benefits of the outputs of the units and not on the allocation of inputs (staff, space, resources) between those units.

105 ? Sixth, the notion of customer is predicated on the value of choice. Customers ought to have a right to choose between competing and differentiated approaches that could be taken to deliver any particular public good. ? Seventh, bureaucracies earn their allocation of resources by demonstrating the value in terms of the public good that will be generated by the investment that elected officials would make in a particular agency. This perspective has the units in an agency competing with each other by selling to the elected officials a greater public good than that offered by the other agencies. ? The eight principle relates to the desirability of orienting public agencies toward preventing rather than curing public problems. Although this particular principle has been seen as a critique of bureaucracy is general, it is not our intention to argue that anticipatory organizations are inherently related to NPM. ? The ninth principle is about maximizing the participation of the broadest possible number of people and institutions in the decision-making process. In this sense, it is anti-hierarchy and anti-bureaucratic. It is also anti-uniformity in that the way a particular public service is delivered is a function of the local community of participants who decide how that service will be delivered. ? The tenth principle relates to leveraging market forces and utilizing market based strategies in the delivery of public goods. It presumes that there is no one way to deliver a public good and a wide variety of delivery mechanisms are possible. 5.6 IMPACT OF NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT The new public management with its explicit market orientation and over-reliance on the private sector has varied responses from Third-world countries. The New Public Management Perspective had a significant impact on the administrative systems of western democracies by the mid-1980s. The economic recession arising out of the oil crisis of the 1 970s, public sector cutbacks, limiting public expenditure and striving towards productivity, efficiency, and economy provided the impetus to the reforms. A host of initiatives were ushered in the form of the creation of new agencies, restructuring, privatization, contracting out, etc. These attempted to address certain key concerns that include productivity, marketization, service orientation, decentralization, and accountability for performance. The basic tenet of NPM is decentralization with

106 multiple agencies performing the activities instead of a single agency. These comprise civil servants and chief executives responding to the concerned Ministry. Each agency has to set out objectives and responsibilities in the form of an agreement. The key financial, service, and quality targets are to be indicated in a business plan. In the United Kingdom, the public administrative systems underwent a significant transformation in 1979 wherein the Thatcher government initiated key reforms. The measures favoured rolling back the state, free markets, and limited government. With a view to bringing in the economy in the public sector, a series of reviews into various aspects of the work of departments, to examine specific policies, activities, and functions to bring about savings, were carried out. Financial devolution has been a major initiative in Britain at the central government level, introduced in 1982. Under Financial Management Initiative (FMI), measures were directed towards improved financial delegation, and financial control focusing on clear-cut objectives, measuring performance against them, and assessing the costs involved in achieving them. To monitor the activities of private entities, set service standards, prices of privatized utilities and regulatory organizations have also been set up. Public private partnerships in the financing of new public facilities, including transport projects, roads, hospitals, museums, etc. were initiated. In the USA, the concept of entrepreneurial government enunciated by David Osborne and Ted Gaebler (1992) made an elaborate case for transforming the bureaucratic government into an enterprising government that is responsive to citizens' needs in a market-oriented manner. In the U.S.A., in 1993 under the influence of Osborne and Gaebler's view of entrepreneurial government, then Vice-president Al Gore, had initiated National Performance Review (NPR). This report was entitled 'From Red Tape Results: Creating a Government that Works Better and Costs Less'.

96% MATCHING BLOCK 128/307 W

The basic objective of this has been to transform the culture of federal organizations by making them performance-based and customer-oriented and to prescribe a new type of government that functions cheaply and efficiently. It identified adherence to certain steps which include among others: putting customers first, making service organizations compete, empowering employees to 107 get results, and decentralizing decision-making power. The NPR promoted certain measures in achieving the above-mentioned objectives. In the Australian government, the adoption of NPM measures aimed at slimming the state and the use of market mechanisms in the provision of services. Certain activities were outsourced. Partial user-pay charges for health and education services were introduced. Privatization of government business enterprises was also undertaken. Service charters were introduced in all government departments and business enterprises. Public service reforms were also ushered in to make the system more efficient, flexible, responsive, performance-oriented, and accountable through a performance-based pay system, decentralization, etc. In New Zealand, corporatization of government commercial enterprises, and contractual relationships between government and civil servants to ensure accountability, performance orientation, and customer service were initiated. A Senior Executive Service (SES) was created comprising the Chief Executives of government departments and a new group of senior officials. They were appointed on Five-year renewable contracts. To examine the social consequences of corporatization, a Specialist Social Impact Unit (SIU) was set up. The reforms in New Zealand aimed at reducing the size of the core public service, setting up new forms of state-owned enterprises, segregating policy 12 and service delivery activities, measurement of performance of public service organizations. Developing countries such as India also introduced managerial reforms as part of the aid conditionalities imposed by donor agencies such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 130/307 W

They included reduced budgetary support to public sector enterprises, disinvestment, corporatization, and outsourcing of certain activities. Attempts have also been made to introduce citizens' charters, strengthen redressal grievance mechanisms, e-governance initiatives, and so on. We have already discussed these in detail in Unit 1 6 in Course 01 1 of this Programme. 5.7 NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT REFORMS: AN APPRAISAL

108 The New Public Management (NPM) perspective has brought in reforms, which attempted to create a new entrepreneurial, user-oriented culture in the public organizations with a focus on performance measurement and autonomy to the organizations and individuals in contrast to the traditional model. Market philosophy cannot be an adequate substitute for the 'public interest, which is the core of governmental operations. The entry of economic and managerial principles into the public sector affects not only the organization concerned but also the nature of the state as a whole. This has raised certain critical issues within the state, between state and market as well as between state and society The paradigm shift from public administration to new public management involves a move in the basic design coordinates of public sector organizations that become less distinctive from the private sector and the degree of discretionary power enjoyed by public managers is increased, as the procedural rules emanating from the centre are relaxed. New Public Management (NPM) is totally different in many ways from traditional public administration. The New Public Management (NPM), perspective does not propagate just the implementation of new techniques but also makes a case for the propagation of a new set of values derived from the private sector. Public service as distinct from the private sector is characterized by certain basic norms such as impartiality, equality, justice, and accountability. These seem to be overridden by market values such as competitiveness, profitability, efficiency, and productivity. Some apprehend that this could lead to the weakening of public interest, challenging the legitimacy of public service. The 'new paradigm' called the New Public Management, which has steadily emerged, emphasizes the role of public managers in providing high-quality services that citizens value and advocates increasing managerial autonomy, particularly by reducing central agency controls. It demands quick corrective measures and rewards both organizational and individual performance. It recognizes the importance of providing the human and technological resources that managers need to meet their performance targets and is receptive to competition and is open-ended about which public purposes should be performed by public servants as opposed to the private sector.

109 NPM fails to establish a clear-cut relationship between citizens and politicians. In any democracy, people have a key role in having direct relationships with their elected representatives. Politicians also are expected to be responsive to their needs and demands in varied ways. This way, the state is able to control society on the basis of a democratic mandate from the people. But for the NPM model, market mechanisms 14 play a dominant role and fail to indicate the ways through which people in a market system can contribute towards creating a suitable democratic system. The NPM 'stipulates that public servants should have to accept more personal accountability for the actions of their agencies in return for this enhanced autonomy and flexibility. This is clearly a significant departure from the concept of anonymous' bureaucracy in traditional public administration. The promotion of collective interests affecting the majority is a distinct feature of democracy, but New Public Management is considered to be an individualistic philosophy that fails to take cognizance of the collective demands of the society. The market-oriented restructuring, especially, in a developing country is bound to affect certain categories of society particularly the poor, peasants, and labourers due to its repercussions such as withdrawal of subsidies, reduction in the workforce, and cutbacks in welfare programs. The NPM has to be viewed not so much as an altogether new 'paradigm' as a refreshing reconstruction of the evolving discipline of public administration. It needs to be recalled that there has been a long tradition of 'implementation' research by several academics like Pressman and Wildavsky. Implementation studies' moved the issue from a focus on organizations, especially on their structures and processes, to public programs and the result they produced. It was "performance" that took the centre stage in public administration. As it has been rightly suggested, the NPM did not emerge all of sudden as a new paradigm. These two trends: a focus on performance more than organizational structure and process and efforts to explore the problem from many different disciplinary bases, gave birth to the NPM which, therefore, had its roots in the earlier implementation research in traditional public administration. New Public Management reforms are not generalized prescriptions solutions that can hold good and yield positive results for all countries. It cannot be a single dominant administrative reform strategy for developing countries. Any reform initiative has to be in conformity with the local conditions. Public

110 administration has to be set and looked at from its own environmental context. NPM reforms basically originated in the west and hence its impact is bound to vary. As Caiden (1991) remarks, "unless reconciled with local ecology, universal formulas of administrative reform based on western concepts were unlikely to work". There has been a lack of research studies to examine the impact of NPM reforms on developing countries. Also, there have been no proper indicators of measurement of NPM reforms. There are methodological problems in assessing the costs and benefits of the reforms. For instance, it is not feasible to assess the effect of performance-related pay, and short-term contracts on the morale and motivation of staff and the productivity of the public sector. 5.8 CONCLUSION As we have discussed above, the emergence of NPM can be largely traced to the failing administration of the previous machinery, NPM emerged as a tool for developmental goals in the 1990s to enhance the management of the administration. At the Commonwealth Association for Public Administration and Management(CAPM) Conference held in Charles town, Canada, in August 1 994, For the first time in the history of the Commonwealth such a high-level conference addressed itself exclusively to the issues of public management aka 'government in transition. 'Empowering' the citizens also assumes crucial significance. Any reforms under the influence of NPM need to be introduced in any country keeping in view its political and socio-economic setup. The advocates of NPM focused on the benefits of managerial autonomy and exposed the overprotected bureaucracy to managerial models, which if carefully adopted, can bring about improvement in traditional public administration. This calls for different kinds of collaborative partnerships, and networking, thereby striving toward combining economic management with social values. A balance needs to be maintained between managerial reforms and governance challenges. 5.9 SUMMARY
111 ? The failure of the traditional Public Administration in the managerial sector led to the emergence of New Public Management. ? Globalization played a vital role in boosting the rise of NPM ? The two defining pillars of New Public Management are the Public Choice Theory and New Taylorism. ? New Public Management prescribes a set of reform measures for organizing and offering services, with market mechanisms, to the citizens. ? NPM has brought various kinds of reforms to different countries. 5.10 GLOSSARY ? Globalization: It refers to the spread of the flow of financial products, goods, technology, information, and jobs across national borders and cultures. ? Managerialism: It involves belief in the value of professional managers and the concepts and methods they use. ? Desegregation: The elimination of segregation by race in schools and public places. ? Quasi-markets: Organizationally designed and supervised markets intended to create more efficiency and choice than a bureaucratic delivery system. ? New Taylorism: Based on maximizing efficiency by standardizing and routinizing the tools and techniques for completing each task involved with a given job. ? Decentralization: the breaking up of central authority, and the distribution of it over a broader field, such as local authorities. ? ? 5.11 MODEL QUESTION 1.Analyze the impact of the emergence of New Public Management on different countries. 2.Discuss in detail the factors which impacted the inception of NPM. 3. What are the Characteristic features of New Public Management 4.Write in detail the reforms of the New Public Management which came along with it. Write Short notes on 1.Principles of NPM. 2. Washington Consensus. 3. Write down the limitations of NPM. 4. Give an overview of the New Public Management. 5.12
REFERENCES

100% MATCHING BLOCK 131/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

Bhattacharya, Mohit, (2001,) New Horizons of Public Administration, Jawahar Publishers, 112 New Delhi.

Stark, Andrew, 2001, What is the New Public Management? Oxford University Press, JStor. BLOCK IV RECENT TRENDS UNIT I: MINNOWBROOK-I Structure 1.1 Learning Objectives 1.2 Introduction 1.3 Minnowbrook Conference 1968: A Background Study 1.4 Emergence of New Public Administration 1.5 Key Features of New Public Administration 1.6 Conclusion 1.7 Summary 1.8 Glossary 1.9 Questions 1.10 References 1.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES ?
To understand

70% MATCHING BLOCK 132/307 SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

the reasons that led to the emergence of New Public Administration ? Identify the features of

New Public

Administration. ? Understand the concerns and contributions of Minnowbrook-I to the study of Public Administration. 1.2 INTRODUCTION According to B. Guy Peters and Jon Pierre, there is a tendency among the public, and even among 113 scholars, to equate politics and government with events such as elections, or the various conflicts in the society that shape major policy developments. "Those activities are indeed important for governing, but there is a massive amount of activity involved in translating laws and decrees made by politicians into action, and in delivering public programs to citizens. That work is often less visible, but is crucial for making things happen in government. Legislatures and political executives may pass all the laws they wish, but unless those laws are administered effectively by the public bureaucracy, little or nothing will actually happen." (2003:1)Mohit Bhattacharya defines, Public administration as a specialised academic field that"deals essentially with the machinery and procedures of government as these are used in the effective performance of government activities. Administration has been defined as a cooperative human effort toward achieving some common goals." (2020:4) However, as Dwight Waldo cautioned us regarding the dangers of 'defining' public administration, "

90% MATCHING BLOCK 134/307 W

the immediate effect of all one sentence or one paragraph definitions of public administration is mental paralysis rather than enlightenment and stimulation." (2020:4)

This simply means that given the field of public administration, which is the action and executive field of government, it is difficult to contain it or have a settled boundary. In fact, as an academic subject that is engaged in building a varied body of knowledge on public administration, one has to be prepared with the shifting boundaries of government in any given society.Robert Dahl too argued that the "study of public administration inevitable must become a much more broadly based discipline, resting not on a narrowly defined knowledge of techniques and processes, but rather extending to the varying historical, sociological, economic and other conditioning factors..."(2020:4)

91% MATCHING BLOCK 133/307 W

As a result of the progression and evolution of public administration, what we see is that the boundaries of this discipline is not clearly marked as it used to be in the initial years specially when the study was confined to the politics-administration dichotomy. As Bhattacharya argues that it has become more of an interest than a discipline, more a focus than a separate science...

100% MATCHING BLOCK 135/307 W

it is necessarily cross- disciplinary." (2020:4) In this growing discipline, the impact of the Minnowbrook conferences have played a crucial role. These conference held in 1968, 1988, and 2008 in the Adirondack Mountains in Upstate New York are those events of public administration that appear in a gap of every twenty years and have a tremendous impact. According to Kim, O'Leary, et.al., these gatherings represent an extraordinary assembly of intellectuals who intended to "take stock of where the field is, where the field is going, and where the field needs to go." "Minnowbrook is an enduring 114 legend in public administration, a narrative with an attendant mystique and mythology." (2010:1) 1.3MINNOWBROOK CONFERENCE 1968: A BACKGROUND STUDY ...

100% MATCHING BLOCK 136/307 W

What Minnowbrook helped to inaugurate was a greatly needed and highly significant discussion. Here was fresh and original thinking on the role of Public Administration in the "time of revolutions" in which we find ourselves. - Dwight Waldo, 1970

The year 1968 was the most turbulent one in the most turbulent decade in the United States since World War II. Starting with the Tet Offensive in Vietnam, which made it quite clear to the American citizens that the USA was not winning the war and the government was not telling the truth to them. The country was tearing itself apart over the Vietnam War. There was also the social upheaval as lesser privileged (Black Americans) were not been able to avail benefits of the prosperity generated during the 1950's and early 1960's. This was coupled with political violence and decline in the commitment of Americans to their institutions: the family, the church, the media, the profession, the government etc. Dwight Waldo in his article "Public Administration in a time of Turbulence", observed that in spite of these issues, public administration showed no sign of being aware of them, much less being serious to solve them". It was in this backdrop that Dwight Waldo, then holder of the Albert Schweitzer Chair of Public Administration at the Maxwell School of Syracuse University, organized the Minnowbrook I Conference. Waldo felt that public administration had to respond to the events and turmoil of the day. He especially felt that the new generation must have a voice. He asked three junior colleagues, all assistant professors—H. George Frederickson, Frank Marini, and William (Harry) Lambright—to organize a conference. He wanted the "best and brightest" of the New Public Administration generation. He contacted the leading scholars of the day and several practitioners and asked who they would recommend as their rising stars. Thirty-four young public administration scholars came to Syracuse University in 1968 right after the annual conference of the American Political Science Association in Chicago. The participants travelled to the Syracuse University Minnowbrook Conference Centre on Blue Mountain Lake, in New York's Adirondack Mountains. The conference centre, named after the brook that runs through the property, is a quiet and remote place consisting of a lodge and several cabins.
115 Virtually all the academic participants at Minnowbrook were political scientists who tended to frame their perspectives on public administration along political science fault lines, particularly the so-called behavioral (logical positivism, rationality, science) versus anti- behavioral (philosophical, historical, normative) debate. Most conference participants were familiar with the debate between Waldo and Herbert Simon over the role of science in political science and public administration. That debate tended to frame the Minnowbrook "conversation," dominated by the anti-behavioural perspective associated with Waldo, where he a more political, theoretical, and philosophical approach to thinking about the tensions between democracy and bureaucracy, and Simon who insisted on a more empirical investigation—some might argue technocratic—of organizational and behavioural approaches to understanding decision making. 1.4EMERGENCE OF NEW PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION Under the patronage of Dwight Waldo, these scholars gathered at Minnowbrook and posed a challenge to "the 'givens' of orthodox public administration" and demanded restoration of values and public purpose in government. This group of young generation of American scholars initiated a new movement in the American public administration which came to known as the 'new pubic administration. These scholars were aware and took note of the failings of democracy in the United Nations of America. The new proposition demanded the primacy of politics in administration. The Minnowbrook I Conference was followed by several symposia, work- shops, and other gatherings. The conference papers were published in a book,

91% MATCHING BLOCK 146/307 SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

Towards a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective, edited by Frank Marini (1971).

This book is considered a classic, often taught in most courses on the history of public administration. The book is important to the intellectual development of the field, not only because it provides a historical perspective on the scholarly debates that took place at the time but also because it sets the stage for the themes to be explored after the conference. These themes were seen, in retrospect, as important markers for where the field was moving and what topics required more research.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 137/307 W

In this book, Marini selected nine papers that cover the more important themes analyzed during the conference. These papers are the following: a) "The Recovery of Relevance in the Study of Public Administration" (Todd R. La Porte) 116

88% MATCHING BLOCK 138/307 W

In this essay, La Porte argues that the discipline, profession, values, literature, in short the very components of the public presence of the field of Public Administration, are out of touch with the problems that we face. La Porte then tries to show us the way to 'recover relevance' and bridge the gap with the real world. b) "Social Change and Administrative Adaptation" (Orion F. White, Jr.) White analyses and illustrates some of the important ways that our society is changing, indicates how these changes are affecting the political and administrative reality, and urges the development of newer ways of dealing the problem.

81% MATCHING BLOCK 139/307 W

c) "Some Implications of Adaptation Capacity for Organizational and Political Development "(Robert P. Biller) Biller supports and supplements the La Porte and White view of the state of affairs of the field of Public Administration. He suggests theoretical and practical improvement centre on the concept of development, but along the way he stops to explore several dilemmas of the study and practice of Public Administration, including a redefinition of 'public' which incorporates turbulence as an essential element.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 140/307 W

d) "Toward a Theory of Public Administration" (Larry Kirkhart) This is the first paper in Toward a New Public Administration that focuses on the relationship of Public Administration to social-scientific theory.

85% MATCHING BLOCK 141/307 W

He traces out some of the newer trends in social science, with special reference to philosophy, sociology, and psychology, and attempts to discern their implications for the theory of Public Administration. e) "Normative Theory and Public Administration: Some Suggestions for a Redefinition of Administrative Responsibility" (Michael M. Harmon) He studied Public Administration through the problem of administrative responsibility. He explored that our ideas of administrative responsibility

100% MATCHING BLOCK 142/307 W

quite inadequate in terms of our present social and political state.

76% MATCHING BLOCK 143/307 W

f) "The Scientific and Moral Authority of Empirical Theory of Public Administration" (Philip S. Kronenberg) He presents a critical assessment of empirical theory in Public Administration. Here, he selects 117 two bodies of theoretical literature for special focus: comparative national Public Administration and organizational behaviour. g) "

A New Comparative Public Administration" (Keith M. Henderson)In this paper, Henderson grapples with the past, present, and alternative futures of comparative Public Administration as a field of study from the standpoint of 'non-comparative'

89% MATCHING BLOCK 144/307 W

Public Administration h) "Constraints on Innovation in Policy Making: Economic Development and Political Routines" (Ira Sharkansky)This paper is the first that deals with practical problems of administration. He reflected on some themes that represent an active and growing research debate and tradition in the field of political science that he believes has been of "profound importance for the policy makers".

i) "

100% MATCHING BLOCK 145/307 W

Analysis, Rationality, and Administrative Decision Making"(S. Kenneth Howard) Howard takes a very critical look at PPB and asks what kind of rationality it is that those who would "rationalize public- expenditure decisions" have in mind. 1.5

KEY FEATURES

58% MATCHING BLOCK 147/307 W

OF NEW PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION New public administration emphasised on four major themes: Relevance, Values, Equity and Change.

Relevance: The argument made by the advocates of these changes was that academic public administration was no longer "relevant" to the real problems of the day, most of those problems being concerned with policy—and particularly policy analysis—rather than administration. There was a growing desire to deal explicitly with the political and administrative implications of administrative action. Furthermore, the aspect of 'relevance' was also in relation to the character of knowledge. Questions such as "public administration knowledge for what? Is it the purpose of public administration to facilitate use of administrative knowledge for the perpetuation of political knowledge? At the Minnowbrook conference, certain questions were raised?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 148/307 W

To what extent are we aware of the social and moral implications of knowledge in Public Administration?

79% MATCHING BLOCK 151/307 W

Does Public Administration presently yield knowledge useful to certain institutions in society (usually the dominant ones) and not to others? 118 These hard-hitting questions were challenging the status-quo in public administration.

The new movement aimed at bringing about radical change in the curriculum to facilitate meaningful studies oriented towards the realities of public life. Values: The new public administration rejected the value-neutral position taken by the behavioural political science and also the management-oriented public administration. They argued that such a position is difficult to maintain, rather they should explicitly espouse the cause of the disadvantaged sections of the society. This can be done by being transparent about the values that are being served through administrative action. The core of this can be understood through this statement "The new public administrator "
is

89% MATCHING BLOCK 149/307 W

less 'generic' and more 'public' than his forbear, less 'descriptive' and more 'prescriptive', less 'institution-oriented' and more 'client-impact oriented', less 'neutral' and 'more normative' and it is hoped, no less scientific."

Social Equity According to new public administration,

100% MATCHING BLOCK 152/307 SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

distributive functions and impact of governmental institutions should be public administration's basic concern.

Frederickson adopted a bold social-equity attitude: "

87% MATCHING BLOCK 150/307 W

a public administration which fails to work for changes which tries to redress the deprivation of minorities will likely be eventually used to repress

those minorities."
Such an action-oriented stance is intended

68% MATCHING BLOCK 153/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

to work for the removal of the wrongs of society and working for the betterment of the socially deprived sections. Thus, its aim was to make public administration more proactive towards major social issues. Change: It goes without saying that any efforts to serve the cause of social equity is to actively work towards social change.The conference attempted to make the discipline more relevant and social equity oriented through change and innovation. This change could be brought about by making certain changes in the status quo and also taking a stand against the powerful interests that is embedded in institutions. The participants at Minnowbrookaimed at exploring the many ways to bring about institutionalising change and remedying the bureaucratic tendencies seen in big organisations.

86% MATCHING BLOCK 154/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

119 Dwight Waldo characterised NPA in the following manner, "Its adherents were centrally involved change in the American Society for Public Administration designed to give it a much forward stance... it is unlikely to transform radically public administration in the short run, but in the long run there is a possibility; and in any case it now is and will continue to be a yeasty addition to the entire complex of theories, techniques, and aspirations" 1.6 CONCLUSION Frederickson argued, "to affix the label 'new' to anything is risky business. The risk is doubled when newness is attributed to idea, thought, concepts, paradigms, theories... the newness is in the way the fabric is woven, not necessarily in the threads that are used and the newness is in arguments as to the proper use of the fabric-however threadbare". The first Minnowbrook gathering involved new scholars wrestling with conflicting views of the field—past, present, and future. The movement that begun at Minnowbrook came under serious criticism of being anti-theoretic, anti-positivist and anti-managementIndeed, the participants at this gathering identified the role they were to continue to play in the field's development primarily as one questioning the status quo. That development was not straight- forward, easily reconciled, or aligned with common goals. The spirit of Minnowbrook I, however, was strong and enthusiastic. Public administration academics had to "recover relevance." They had to go back to basics and deal with real problems. The other was caring. "Public administration in practice had to be more caring, more in touch with those served." Bureaucrats (like academics) were said [to be] more interested in themselves than their clients. The conference suggested that administrators had to think beyond accountability. There was lots of talk about equity, and socio-emotional needs as subjects of Public Administration. The success of the movement can be understood in terms of how it was able to bring public administration closer to political science. It was also able to integrate public administration with the basic concerns of political theory. Further by adopting features such as "client oriented, normative and socially conscious public administration", the need for de- bureaucratised and basic, qualitative transformation of public administration, especially in third world countries have been advocated. After all, there is in this movement" a streak of idealism, a concern for quality of life and a desire to ameliorate the lot of the more deprived members of society."
120 We need urgently to inject a good deal of the New Public Administration thinking into the policy- making process and we need to do this not only as a reminder of the new kinds of questions society is increasingly asking of governments but also as a corrective to those other relatively new and currently dominant influences which see in quantitative analysis and mechanistic techniques the solution to most of man's ills." 1.7 SUMMARY ? The study of new public administration can be traced back to the history of Minnowbrook Conference that was held in 1968. ? The aim of the conference was to streamline the study of public administration by bringing in intellectuals in the field to review and debate on the state and the future outcome of the discipline. ? It was propelled by the period of political crisis that emerged in the United States of America. ? The key features of new public administration are relevance, values, social equity, and change. ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 155/307 W

Ethics honesty, and responsibility in government have returned again to the lexicon of Public Administration. ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 156/307 W

Effective Public Administration has come to be defined in the context of an active and participatory citizenry. 1.8

GLOSSARY Minnowbrook Conference: outcome of the social disturbances in the late 1960s and early 1970s to bring a change in the orientation of public administration. Ethics: accountability between the public and the administration, integrity guidelines to the administration in their operations which would ensure that the public receives what they need in a fair manner. New Public Administration: administration that is normative, client-oriented and socially conscious. This new movement is helpful for the developing countries, as well as those places where there is a need of de-bureaucratisation and basic qualitative transformation. Relevance: a change in the discipline of public administration to make it more socially relevant, where the focus is on policy issues.
121 Values: arguing for normative concerns in administrative analysis and rejection of value neutrality. Equity: distributive justice such that there is

71% MATCHING BLOCK 161/307 SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

reduction of economic and social discrimination and promotion of life opportunities for all groups. 1.9

MODEL QUESTIONS Long Questions ? What is New Public Administration? What events led to its emergence? ? What is the Minnowbrook Conference? Explain its key features. ? Discuss the relevance of New Public Administration. ? Critically analyse the major literature that were published in the course of Minnowbrook I. Short Questions ? What four important themes emerged from New Public Administration? ? Why has the period from late 1960s to early 1970s been described as a period of social upheaval? ? What was the Waldo vs Simon debate? ? What was the immediate reason behind the Minnowbrook Conference-I? ? What has been the main contribution of the Minnowbrook Conference-I? ? In which ways New Public Administration is different from Public Administration? 1.10REFERENCES ?

69% MATCHING BLOCK 159/307 SA synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)

Bhattacharya, Mohit. 2001. New Horizons of Public Administration, New Delhi: Jawahar Publishers, ? Bhattacharya, Mohit. Development Administration. New Delhi: Jawahar

Publishers and Distributors, 1997 ?

95% MATCHING BLOCK 157/307 W

Dahl, Robert. 1947. The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7:1–11 ?

Federickson, G. 1989. Minnowbrook II: Conclusions", Public Administration Review. 49(2), pp. 95-100 ? Frederickson,

97% MATCHING BLOCK 162/307 W

George F., and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

Adminis- tration20, nos. 4–5 (Special Issue): 817–1155. ? Frederickson, George F., and Richard Mayer. 1998. Minnowbrook II. Public Administration Review 49 (Special Issue). ? Frederickson, George H. 1997. Introduction, International Journal of Public Administration, 20:4-5, 817-835
122 ? Gil-Garcia, J. Ramon. 2003. "Towards a Public Administration: Minnowbrook III. A Reflection and Proposal", in https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf ? Guy, M. E. 1989. ''Minnowbrook II: Conclusions'', Public Administration Review. 49(2), pp. 219-220. ?

75% MATCHING BLOCK 158/307 W

Heady, Ferrel. 1966. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective, Prentice-Hall. ? Henry, Nicholas. 1975. Public Administration and Public Affairs,

New York: Prentice Hall. ? Hildreth, W.Bartley, et.al. 2021. Handbook of Public Administration, New York and London: Routledge ?
Marini,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 160/307 W

Frank. ed. 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective. Scranton, PA: Chandler. ?

Mathur, Kuldeep. 1985. "Development Administration in India: Old Lessons and New Concerns," Journal of Social and Economic Studies, 2:4. ? Nabatchi, Tina and Julia L.Carboni. 2019. "

92% MATCHING BLOCK 177/307 W

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference" IBM Centre for The Business of Government

in https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/

100% MATCHING BLOCK 163/307 W

Assessing%20the%20Past%20and %20Future%20of%20Public%20Administration%20-%20Reflections%20from%20the%20Minnowbrook%20at%2050%20Conference_0.

pdf ? O'Leary, Rosemary. Et.al. 2008.

82% MATCHING BLOCK 164/307 W

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, Washington D.C: Georgetown University Press. ?

Otenyo, Eric E. and Nancy S.Lind (ed.). 2006. Comparative Public Administration: The Essential Readings, Elsevier. ? Peters, B. Guy and Jon Pierre (ed). 2003. Handbook of Public Administration, London, Thousand Oaks, New Delhi: Sage Publications. ?
Simon, Herbert. 1947. A Comment on "The Science of

84% MATCHING BLOCK 165/307 W

Public Administration." Public Administration Review 7:200–203. ? Waldo, D. 1980. The Enterprise of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A. ?

Waldo,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 166/307 W

Dwight. 1952 a. "The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration". American Political Science Review 46:81–103

UNIT II MINNOWBROOK-II Structure 2.1 Learning Objectives 2.2 Introduction 2.3 Minnowbrook Conference 1988: A Background Study 2.4 Themes of Minnowbrook II
123 2.5 Differences between the two Minnowbrooks: A comparative study 2.6 Conclusion 2.7 Summary 2.8 Glossary 2.9 Questions 2.10 References 2.1Learning Objectives ? To analyse the relevance and contributions of Minnowbrook II Conference ? To find out the key differences between the first and second Minnowbrook Conferences. ? To understand the context in which the Minnowbrook II Conference took place ? To appreciate the additions made by the second Conference to the discipline of Public Administration 2.2 Introduction "In public administration as governance, it is essential that we do not diminish our institutions to such an extent that we lose our capacity to support the development of sound public policy, as well as our ability to effectively implement that policy." (H. George Frederickson, 1997)

91% MATCHING BLOCK 167/307 W

The period 1978-88 marked several significant stages in the American policy studies and public administration. It marked the two-hundred years since the ratification of the Constitution with a separately established executive branch, upholding the principle of separation of powers, it had been a hundred years since the publication of Woodrow Wilson's essay that stated the need for an effective running of the same constitution and it had been twenty years since the first Minnowbrook Conference which was held in 1968 in the Adirondack Mountains in Upstate New York. The latter event marked a new beginning in the discipline of public administration. Held at a gap of twenty years, these gatherings turn out to be an extraordinary assembly of intellectuals who intend to "take stock of where the field is, where the field is going, and where the field needs to go." (O'Leary, et.al, 2010:1) It has been argued that "Minnowbrook is an enduring legend in public administration, a narrative with an attendant mystique and mythology" (O'Leary, et.al, 2010:2) 2.3 Minnowbrook Conference 1988: A Background Study There had been significant changes since the last conference, the context in which American

124 public administration was practised had also transformed. While Minnowbrook I reflected the stormy times, it left a different mark on the field, the mood of the discipline of public administration was such that it sought to identify values and ethics as the critical issue of the 1970s. However, "it made a difference, but- like the times- was guilty of overreaching." In contrast, by 1988 the social environment of the Minnowbrook –II was markedly different. There was an increasing cynicism toward government that started with Watergate scandal. Frederickson stated that "since the public was unable to be effective at changing government, some simply concluded that it is better to have less of it." (Fredrickson, 2007:825) Indeed, throughout the 1970s and early 1980s, the political and social context was steadily changing. The dominant political mood was increasingly anti-governmental and anti-bureaucratic.The politics of bureaucrat bashing were increasingly effective as political leaders, the press, and civil society viewed government employees as detached from their work, unmotivated by results, and indolent in their work efforts. The public administration period that began with the Progressive Era reform movement and flourished as part of the "positive state" was coming to an end as new constraints were being implemented to limit bureaucratic discretion in program development, implementation, and evaluation. The era of positive government, "which stimulated rapid sub urbanisation, the stringing together of American cities with a national network of freeways, and the growth of schools and hospitals for the baby boom" has given way to regulatory state. The "New Right" support for market solutions often included alarming examples of bureaucratic retreat, such as in the area of deregulation and new efforts aimed at devolution. The context of public administrative reality in post-Reaganite United States of America "changed in favour of less directly performing government and governance, more privatisation and contracting out, more voluntarism and social capacity- building and more third party government." Frederickson argued that the "values of public purpose had receded to pave way to the value of private interest." While the policy of affirmative action had seen some successes, but the period also saw the prevalence of homelessness and poverty, and it became a crucial issue for the USA once again. The economy too had changed, for instance employment in primary industries had declined, which was replaced by employment in service and information fields, however it was done with very low salary. The technological development caused certain geographical areas to flourish, while there was a decline in primary industry such as agriculture, timber, minerals that caused such areas to struggle under pressure.

125 In academics too, the arena of public administration had undergone drastic changes. It was much larger than it was in the 1960s, with schools and programmes at every major to minor universities. The field too became much more interdisciplinary than the 1960s when it was still primarily a part of political science. In the 80s, it had become much more sophisticated analytically as well as theoretically. It is in these contexts, that the Minnowbrook II occurred in 1988, organized by George Frederickson, distinguished professor and holder of the Stene Endowed Chair in Public Administration at the University of Kansas. 2.4 THEMES OF MINNOWBROOK II In the course of the Conference, Dwight Waldo narrated a meeting in which a cynic had pronounced the death of public administration. To this, Waldo strongly disagreed, he said "public administration is going to be around for a long time so be of good cheer, and get on with it!" (Fredrickson, 830). The purpose of the second conference was not to "facilitate a general examination of the future of public administration, it was also to determine whether important differences exist between people who entered public administration in the 1960s and those who entered in the 1980s". Though the debate between the normative and the behaviourist perspectives continued at Minnowbrook II, social equity and diversity were accepted as basic values among the participants. The conference was practical and more civil in comparison to the previous one which was radical and confrontational one. It was anti-behavioural in its approach in 1968, but in 1988 it was more receptive of the contributions of behavioural science to public administration. Yet, both conferences were theoretical. Like the first one, Minnowbrook II produced a considerable literature (Frederickson and Mayer 1989; Bailey and Mayer 1992; Frederickson and Chandler 1997). The scholars who had assembled were sensitive to the failings of American democracy. Themes such as ethics, social equity, human relations, reconciling public administration and democracy, continued to be of intellectual interest. What was unique was themes such as leadership, constitutional and legal perspective, economic perspectives and technology policy. Frederickson summarized the premises from Minnowbrook II: "First, more technicist; second, more individualist; third, a social equity perspective that now included gender and age; fourth, an emerging importance on productivity and performance measurement; and fifth, a greater connection to mainstream social science and the positivist or Simon perspective." The tone of 126 Minnowbrook II marked a change especially in its attitudes towards the people. Mary Ellen Guy argued, "Government is no longer seen as a train on which people want to ride." There was a general understanding that public servants were seen more as conservators rather than agents of change; on the other hand, privatisation was accepted in many of those fields, which were earlier considered to be the only domain of the government or public administration". 2.5 DIFFERENCES BETWEEN THE TWO MINNOWBROOKS: A COMPARISON While MinnowbrookI had a significant effect on the study and practice of public administration;Minnowbrook II provided "a unique opportunity to compare the theoretical and research perspectives of that generation with those of the present generation, and to discuss and speculate on how those contrasting perspectives have influenced and will continue to influence the conduct of governmental affairs." (Fredrickson 819)In hindsight Minnowbrook I appeared to be a well-intentioned but overambitious optimism, while in comparison Minnowbrook II which exuded pragmatism and confirmed the inevitability of government as a tool for strengthening society. With these ideals public administration was called upon to renew its capacity such that it was able to deal with the problems of the emerging future. Minnowbrook II was designed to compare and contrast the changing epochs of public administration.

57% MATCHING BLOCK 168/307 W

Ouriginal by Turnitin

WhileMinnowbrook I was attended by scholars most of whom belonged from the field of Political Science, the second conference included individuals who were trained in policy analysis and policy studies, economics, planning, urban studies and law. The presence of younger people from different backgrounds posed two main questions as Fredrickson explains "how is that affecting the theory and practice of public administration? What will be the long range effects of the new generation on the field?" While both the conferences were at the Minnowbrook Conference Centre, but 1988 conference was organizationally somewhat different from Minnowbrook I. More people attended Minnowbrook II; the number of female participants were 14 in II whereas all the participants at Minnowbrook I had been male except one female. Diversity in society as well as in work place was accepted as a basic value among the participants at Minnowbrook II. It was observed that "the gender diversity issues were clearly a 1980s interpretation". (Mary Ellen Guy) By this time, the feminist theory had started to influence the literature and attitude of bureaucracy and managerial decision making and thus it found a reflection in the Conference too. Thus, the Minnowbrook II in real sense "reflected the beginning traces of a more heterogeneous work force, at least from the gender dimension." About half the Minnowbrook 127 II participants were younger public administrators, with the other half were the ones who had participated in the previous conference. A comparison between the two Minnowbrooks bring out the continuities as well as the discontinuities with an eagerness for ground-breaking research. The following five major themes of Minnowbrook II were related to Minnowbrook I: 1. Concern for social equity that predominated at the first conference and was acknowledged as important in 1988 too. 2. Democratic values such as special focus on ethics, accountability and administrative leadership was reaffirmed. 3. The debate between the normative and behavioural perspectives that dominated the previous conference, continued with special emphasis on epistemological questions regarding how people learn about the field. 4. The need to respond to social diversity, for instance the emerging gender dimension and the need for free interchange between 'generalists' and 'specialist'. 5. The changing outlook on the government in Minnowbrook II as government was no longer seen as the train on which people wanted to ride. The distinct identity that Minnowbrook II sought to establish was by focussing on the current as well as the future vision of the field of public administration. 1. It set its vision onto the future without appearing to be radical. There was an agreement that the environment of public administration is exceedingly complex, thus any meaningful long-term vision is not only unreasonable but also not feasible. 2. The scholars acknowledged the indebtedness to other disciplines, while at the same exhibited a strong sense of intellectual parochialism, for the general mood was not to lose the disciplinary identity. 3. While on the one hand there was tacit acceptance of 'privatisation', on the other, there was a strong adversial attitude towards business. The background of the conference reflected a tension between capitalism and democracy that resulted in "an unusual form of truncated capitalist economy operating within a truncated democracy". Here public administration had to balance the best that business offered and the best that non-profit sector offers.
128 4. Public personnel practices were scrutinised, wherein there a need for innovative personnel practices were emphasised such that it reinforces high productivity. 5. There was a general reluctance to idolise technology as a necessary tool for improving public policy. Unlike the first conference, Minnowbrook II conferees made a conscious effort to conclude, to summarise, to integrate, and to compare. The full papers and responses from the Conference were published in two issues of the International Journal of Public Administration. The first issue looks into the broad range of topics of democratic government, equality, ethics and leadership as they relate to public administration. The second issue dealt with matters of policy, policy analysis, technology, and management relating to public administration. 2.6 CONCLUSION "Overall, Minnowbrook II was less controversial and probably less influential than Minnowbrook I."(O' Leary,2010:7) In some ways, the themes that emerged from Minnowbrook II reflected changes in public administration as an academic field. Changes in the field, the maturation of the profession, and entry into the discipline by scholars and practitioners who were trained in a range of fields and with diverse specialties gave rise to a robust and fragmented professional landscape. Minnowbrook II grappled with issues that permeated the disjointed and growing study of public administration. These included contemporary challenges to the legitimacy and efficacy of government bureaucracies. The credibility of studying policies with "scientific" tools had to be compared with the more subjective analysis of practicing and influencing the art of administration. (O' Leary,2010:7) In spite of all, the conference could offer little attention to the realities of public administration. It failed to visualize the vision how public service can function at its best with in what promises to be a future declining market share, as the United States faces the reality of a global economy and a changing industrial base".

90% MATCHING BLOCK 169/307 W

However, Holzer states: "Given the pragmatism evident as Minnow Brook II, one might also conclude (however reluctantly) that a new realism might more effectively serve the public and public sector for the next two decades". However, it mostly missed the coming importance of the reinventing government movement and the emergence of the New Public Management. The scholars were less successful in setting forth an agenda whereby the field might strategically manage the challenges that it would 129 soon confront, because of the more techno-bureaucratic systems and processes that were being championed, developed, and implemented. Mary Timmey Bailey observed that "In contrast to Minnow brook I,

85% MATCHING BLOCK 170/307 W

which challenged Public Administration to become proactive with regard to social issue, "Minnow II retreated from an action perspective to cerebral examination of democracy, ethics, responsibility, philosophy and even economics. Finally, Mary Ellen Guy states that "the discipline of Public Administration is on a stable footing". The discipline "seems to be at peace with its core values and its sense of relevance and purpose". It has also accepted democratic values and has accorded pre-eminent attention to the issue of social equity. The optimism that was associated with the new public management which was capable to solve important societal problems has dissipated. Minnowbrook II was caught in a mood of 'constrained hopefulness'. While the 1968 conference offered challenge for public administration to become proactive with regard to burning issues, the 1988 conference that was held in the midst of governmental cutback and 'privatisation' policy 'retreated from an action perspective to an examination of democracy, ethics, responsibility, philosophy and even economics. The outcomes were therefore more pragmatic and less radical. 2.7 Summary ? Minnowbrook I was organised by Dwight Waldo in 1968 that attempted to re-establish the relevance of public administration in a time of social, political, and cultural upheaval. ?

70% MATCHING BLOCK 171/307 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 172/307 W

Twenty years later, since the first Minnowbrook Conference, the world had transformed significantly. Governments were being questioned, there was a growing anti-governmental and anti-bureaucratic sentiments. ? Minnowbrook II, organised by H George Frederickson in the year 1988, was yet another endeavour to examine the evolution of public administration and the consequences for scholarship and practice.

83% MATCHING BLOCK 173/307 W

The purpose "

100% MATCHING BLOCK 174/307 W

to compare and contrast the changing epochs of public administration." ?

The second conference was different from its predecessor in many ways. To begin with the participants were diverse,

82% MATCHING BLOCK 175/307 W

half of whom were women, the group included a mix of junior scholars and even the "original Minnows". ? It was less "radical" more pragmatic that focussed on the role and relevance of public administration.

130 ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 176/307 W

Social equity and diversity were largely accepted as basic values of public administration.

Overall, the attention was given more towards the questions of policy implementation and not much on big questions about bureaucracy and democracy. 2.8 Glossary Minnowbrook II: The Second Minnowbrook Conference was held at the original Minnowbrook Conference Centre in 1988, twenty years after the first Minnowbrook. Watergate Scandal: a political scandal in the USA involving the administration of President Richard Nixon that ultimately led to his resignation. Positive state: the emergence of welfare state had increased the activities and responsibilities of public administration. Such a welfare state was referred to as positive state. Anti-bureaucratic: opposition or dislike for complex methods and processes associated with bureaucracies. Anti- government: opposition or hostile attitude towards governments. Original Minnows: the scholars who participated the first Minnowbrook Conference in 1968. Privatisation:The transfer of ownership, property or business from the government to the private sector is termed privatization 2.9 Long Questions ? Elaborate the events that formed the background to the Second Minnowbrook Conference. ? Discuss the themes that emerged from the Minnowbrook II ? In which ways was Minnowbrook II different and radical than Minnowbrook I ? Analyse the continuities and discontinuities between Minnowbrrok I and Minnowbrook II Short Questions: ? What was the political environment of the United States of America in the 70s and 80s? ? In which ways was Minnowbrook II similar to Minnowbrook I? ? In which ways was Minnowbrook II different from Minnowbrook I? ? Discuss the uniqueness of Minnowbrook II in terms of its participants?
131 ? What themes in public administration was discussed in the Second Minnowbrook Conference? ? Briefly discuss the impact of Minnowbrook II. 2.10 Reference: ?

69% MATCHING BLOCK 187/307 SA synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)

Bhattacharya, Mohit. 2001.New Horizons of Public Administration, New Delhi: Jawahar Publishers, ? Bhattacharya, Mohit.Development Administration. New Delhi: Jawahar

Publishers and Distributors, 1997 ?

95% MATCHING BLOCK 178/307 W

Dahl, Robert. 1947. The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7:1–11 ?

Federickson, G. 1989. Minnowbrook II: Conclusions", Public Administration Review. 49(2), pp. 95-100 ? Frederickson,

97% MATCHING BLOCK 179/307 W

George F., and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

Adminis- tration20, nos. 4–5 (Special Issue): 817–1155. ? Frederickson, George F., and Richard Mayer. 1998. Minnowbrook II. Public Administration Review 49 (Special Issue). ? Frederickson, George H.1997. Introduction, International Journal of Public Administration, 20:4- 5, 817-835 ? Gil-Garcia, J. Ramon. 2003. "Towards a Public Administration: Minnowbrook III. A Reflection and Proposal", in https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf ? Guy, M. E. 1989. ''Minnowbrook II: Conclusions'', Public Administration Review. 49(2), pp. 219-220. ?

75% MATCHING BLOCK 180/307 W

Heady, Ferrel. 1966.Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective, Prentice-Hall. ? Henry, Nicholas. 1975.Public Administration and Public Affairs,

New York: Prentice Hall. ? Hildreth, W.Bartley, et.al. 2021. Handbook of Public Administration, New York and London: Routledge ?
Marini,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 181/307 W

Frank. ed. 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective. Scranton, PA: Chandler. ?

Mathur, Kuldeep. 1985. "Development Administration in India: Old Lessons and New Concerns," Journal of Social and Economic Studies, 2:4. ? Nabatchi, Tina and Julia L.Carboni. 2019."

92% MATCHING BLOCK 182/307 W

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference" IBM Centre for The Business of Government

in https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/

80% MATCHING BLOCK 183/307 W

Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20F uture%20of%20Public%20Administration%20-%20Reflections%20from%20the%20Minnowbrook%20at%2050%20Conference_0.

pdf ? O'Leary, Rosemary. Et.al. 2008.

82% MATCHING BLOCK 184/307 W

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, Washington D.C: Georgetown University Press. ?

Otenyo, Eric E. and Nancy S.Lind (ed.). 2006. Comparative Public Administration: The Essential Readings, Elsevier. ?
Peters, B. Guy and Jon Pierre (ed). 2003. Handbook of Public Administration, London, Thousand Oaks, New Delhi: Sage Publications. ?
Simon, Herbert. 1947. A Comment on "The Science of

84% MATCHING BLOCK 185/307 W

Public Administration." Public 132 Administration Review 7:200–203. ? Waldo, D. 1980. The Enterprise of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A. ?

Waldo,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 186/307 W

Dwight. 1952a. "The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration". American Political Science Review 46:81–103

UNIT III MINNOWBROOK-III Structure 3.1 Learning Objectives 3.2 Introduction 3.3 Minnowbrook Conference 2008: A Background Study 3.4 Key Themes of Minnowbrook III 3.5 Impact of Minnowbrook III 3.6 Conclusion 3.7 Summary 3.8 Glossary 3.9 Questions 3.10 References 3.1Learning Objectives ? To analyse the relevance and contributions of Minnowbrook III Conference ? To understand the context in which the Minnowbrook III Conference took place ? To appreciate the additions made by the third Conference to the discipline of Public Administration MINNOWBROOK III—2008:

100% MATCHING BLOCK 191/307 W

THE FUTURE OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION, PUBLIC MANAGEMENT, AND PUBLIC SERVICE AROUND THE WORLD 3.2

Introduction
133 Public administration as an academic field continued to grow through the 1990s and early 2000s. By 2008 more choices emerged in the field of professional associations, journals, public administration programmes, and conferences. Degree programmes were accredited thus giving a kind of standardisation to curricula for master of public administration programme. Various aspects of the field such as public management and/or administration, public finance and budgeting, non-profit management, local government, and public policy analysis were developed. The need to achieve academic promotion had become much more rigorous than what it was in 1968. By 1988 there was not only a growth in the quantity of publications. The filed had become relatively diverse and "multitheoretical", "it is a safe observation that mainstream public administration was embedded as a form of applied social science and that the field was growing increasingly scientific, rational, and positivist." (OLeary p.9) 3.3 Minnowbrook Conference 2008: A Background Study In a matter of twenty years, public administration and governance witnessed many challenges and changes. The setting of Minnowbrook III was similar to the first Minnowbrook than the second. A range of problems starting with the controversial presidency of George W. Bush, the issue of global terrorism, especially the 9/11 attacks, the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, etc. had already shaken the American society. Furthermore, the impact of natural calamity like the Hurricane Katrina and the devastation that it left behind, along with a severe economic recession were forms of turbulence that reminded one of the 1960s. During the government of President Bill Clinton, an act called the Government Performance and Result Act began to define operational changes which made the states to think more seriously about performance. Here, the role of private contractors in bringing public service delivery increased at every level of government. Perhaps, the most dramatic of it all was that for the first time the Democratic Party was about to have its African American nominee for president. This was viewed as a promising significant departure in the roles and responsibilities of the government and also the marketplace, if Barack Obama was elected. The social and political response to current events in 2008, however, was measured and more civil compared with 1968, though social issues dominated debates about the scope and influence of government. There appeared to be more citizen confidence in democratic and bureaucratic institutions on one hand, however, there was still a lack of trust for some institutional leaders. What is interesting is that in the governance networks of 2008, non-profit and private-sector actors complemented the work of governments at a time when there was an increasingly fragmented intergovernmental and interjurisdictional environment at both

134 national and global levels. Given these issues and contexts, scholars started to rethink the role of government in view of the realities of 2008. The terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, pressured the US government to put homeland security as their topmost national agenda, although it had already been at the top of numerous other countries' agendas. Globalisation opened up new avenues and opportunities for the United States and also put it in a state of vulnerability. "The economies, financial systems, health concerns, energy systems, cybersecurity needs, and the climates of the world were, and still are, increasingly becoming integrated and interdependent with one another." In such a volatile political landscape the need to bring about bureaucratic changes was inevitable. These changes were to viewed as increasingly technocratic, performance oriented, and directed toward managing by results.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 188/307 W

In the field of public administration, there were three main changes: first, the New Public Management to governance emerged; second, The publication of Reinventing Government by Osborne and Gaebler (1992) – redefined the functions of the Government and favoured an "Entrepreneurial Government" for bringing radical changes with the focus on de-bureaucratization, democratization, and decentralization of the administrative processes in the interest of the citizens; and third, the process of liberalisation, privatisation and globalisation made Public Administration 'enabler' or 'facilitator'. 3.4 Key Themes of the Minnowbrook III All three Minnowbrook conferences were celebrated in part as a legacy of Waldo. It is worth mentioning that after Minnowbrook I, Waldo edited a book titled Public Administration in a Time of Turbulence (1971). In the preface he indicated that the Minnows had gone too far in their critique of government. In tearing down government, there had to be a replacement model. One of the key discussions at Minnowbrook III was that we have yet to develop that replacement model—certainly not one apt for this new century. During his career Waldo searched for a way to relate democracy and bureaucracy. As he articulated his case, "democracy at its best provides legitimacy and demonstrates the government's responsiveness to the people". Bureaucratic administration involves the power to govern effectively. Finding the right balance of responsiveness and effectiveness was the challenge Waldo sought to address, and it is a challenge that emerged at Minnowbrook III. For the new generation of Minnows, the Minnowbrook III gathering represented an effort to 135 discuss the components of this balance. There were extraordinary changes in the world in the last 20 years or so and it is argued that public administration is reasserting its role and leading the way in addressing cotemporary problems. Therefore, the mission of Minnowbrook III was to "critique

90% MATCHING BLOCK 189/307 W

the current state of public administration public management and public service today and examine the future of the field". The conference was held on 3-7 September 2008 and coordinated by Rosemary O"Leary a distinguished Professor at Syracuse University. It was held in two phases: the first was at the

78% MATCHING BLOCK 194/307 W

Department of Public Administration, Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University.

A pre-conference workshop was organised which was attended by 56 scholars at the same conference site at Blue Mountain Lake, New York, where the first two conferences were held. This was the first phase. The second phase was much larger and more traditional that was held at Lake Placid, New York, which was attended by 220 participants from 13 countries. The papers and articles of both the phases were published in a book titled: "

100% MATCHING BLOCK 190/307 W

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective"

edited by Rosemary O'Leary, David Van Slyke and Kim in 2010. The conference accepted the spirit of critical inquiry which is related to the question "what is the importance and relevance of what we do?" this was one of the key theme that kept coming up over and over again at Minnowbrook III. According to Rosemary O'Leary, there was also an inherent desire "to make a positive difference in the world in a very concrete way." The mood of the conference was such that every participant viewed the experience as "an opportunity to raise questions about the relevance of the field or recommending a better integration of public administration research with social sciences, management, law and other disciplines"

136 Key Themes of the Minnowbrook III Lake Placid Conference • How is the field of Public Administration different in 2008 from 1968 and 1988? What is Public Administration in 2008? • Can we draw important theoretical and empirical conclusions about the market-oriented New Public Management that now has a 30-year his- tory? • Given the influx of scholars from many disciplines into Public Administration, is Public Administration closer or farther away from developing a core theoretical base? • How are new ideas about networked governance and collaborative public management changing the way we look at Public Administration, Public Management, and Public Service? Are they changing the practice of Public Administration? Should they change what we teach in our programs? • How has globalization affected our understanding of the key challenges that face the study and practice of Public Administration, Public Management, and Public Service in the United States, the developed world, and developing and transitional countries? Statement of Commitment for New Public Administration Scholars The following is the statement drafted by the scholars-Leisha DeHart-Davis, Mary Feeney, Beth Gazley, Yilin Hou, Stephanie Moulton, Rebecca Nesbit, Craig Smith, Jodi Sandfort, Scott Robinson, and David Van Slyke, with contributions from other Minnowbrook III participants. Here they reflected that the strength of public administration today is the diversity of disciplines, methods, theories and approaches. However, they also believed that the future of public administration is limited by the institutional and personal barriers that researchers and scholars confront in their work. Such barriers were understood as: • institutional incentives for promotion and tenure, • curricular limitations (such as budgetary incentives to restrict interdisciplinary approaches), • publication issues (including editor consistency, reviewer supply and reviewer timeliness), • limited funding for PA research, and • the challenge of conducting international and comparative public administration research. The scholars at Minnowbrook III also committed to serve as change agents to uphold and shape the culture of Public Administration, a culture that is open minded to and appreciates multiple theoretical and methodological perspectives, with an emphasis on "publicness."

137 In the research process they agreed to... • Expand the discipline's acceptance of various units of analysis (local, state, national and international actors; government, non-profit and private organizations; individuals at various levels of organizational hierarchy; and stakeholders and citizens). • Create a research environment that promotes the sharing of data and collaboration among colleagues to advance the availability of quality data within the field. • Acknowledge the limitations of research methods and design in order to provide direction for future research and to avoid foreclosing questions that merit further attention. In the classroom and community, we will . . . • Strive to create research-based tools that reinforce the utility of a good theory. • Promote rigorous research methodological training and the use of mixed methods (qualitative and quantitative). • Invest appropriate time in sharing knowledge with practitioners. • Cultivate the ability among practitioners to reflect in the moment and adapt when faced with complexity. They also agreed that in the publication process they will . . . ? Strive to publish relevant work (for practice and/or theory). ? Expand the field's use and appreciation of cross-disciplinary theory while emphasizing the role of "publicness." ? Seek to promote the inclusion of multiple methods and rigorous methods of all types. 3.5 Impact of Minnowbrook III The first outcome of Minnowbrook III had fifty-six critiques of the field of public administration by the scholar participants which they had also presented at the preconference workshop. Some of the examples are– "The Challenge of Remaining Relevant", "Public administration and the Black Public Administrator","The Challenge of Teaching Public Administration in Asia""Is There a Global Public Administration?""Has Public Administration Been Roofied (Drugged) and Rolled (Mugged) by Economics?" Such critiques have been used by various university public administration, public affairs, and public management programs in their "intellectual history" courses, and this has helped them in developing newer discussions concerning their own planning.

138 After the presentations were made, the participants were led into a "Future Search" exercise, where they were asked to envision public administration in 2018. This envision for the future is quite reminiscent of Minnowbrook I that highlighted themes such as: relevance, action- oriented, and practitioner friendly. Minnowbrook III was interdisciplinary, methodologically diverse and was accepting of varied ways of doing quality research. It had publications that were new, open source, timely, used, accessible, and useful. In this "Future Search" endeavour, the scholars also expressed a desire to "contribute to practice". This meant a stronger link between research and practice and that public administrators should be sought out as valuable experts for solving real problems so that they could make real difference. They discussed and wrote a "Statement of Commitment for New Pubic Administration Scholars" that captured the sentiments of the group in this regard.The phase Two of Minnowbrook III involved formal paper presentations in a dozen focal areas and it also had a more traditional format wherein two hundred scholars and practitioners from across thirteen countries. The topics highlighted in the conference are as follows: 1. Academic-practitioner relations One of the many issues taken up by Minnowbrook I conference, revisited at the Minnowbrook II and had become the dominant theme of Minnowbrook III was how the theoretical field of public administration connected with the practical field of public administration. There was a need to closely examine the extent of the research and how it impacts practice and furthermore, how the research can be made more approachable and useful for the practioner. 2. Democratic Performance Management: The participants of Minnowbrook III "agree on the merit of an approach to public accountability that includes market based efficiency, programme performance, and law based democratic values such as equity and transparency". Efficiency plus effectiveness within the constitutional democracy framework has been the most desired approach. 3. Financial Management: Proper utilisation of finances has always been the lifeline of public organisations. For this determines the effectiveness of public service delivery networks, performance, entrepreneurial activities and to undertake reforms. Some of the key concerns are "accounting 139 and financial reporting, auditing, fiscal policy making, cost analysis, cash management and others." 4. Globalization and Comparative Perspectives: The academic field and practice of public administration has been impacted by globalisation. We know that we are living in the age of globalisation where every policy whether domestic or national or international, it cannot be constricted to the national boundaries. Thus, there was a need for Public Administration with a Global Perspective (PAGP). The PAGP is oriented "to advance knowledge building, address practical issues, improve public administration education, and ultimately, increase the relevancy of the field." 5. Law, Politics, and Public Administration: The relationship between public administration and law has been studied in all the three Minnowbrook Conferences. The Minnowbrook III which has taken place in the environment of Market based reforms of New Public Management, emphasized the value of efficiency and performance in Public Administration. 6. Leadership: Getha-Taylor et.al. opined, "A central theme across all three Minnow brook gatherings ..... has been the development of public administrators who truly makes a difference who act as "agents of change" to transform public problems into solutions that reflects a commitment to public values". The participants in Minnow brook III argued "for a heightened commitment to the study of public leadership, discuss conceptual challenges and offer propositions to direct future research". 7. Research Methods and Interdisciplinary Research: The intellectual diversity of Public Administration, both in terms of method and theory, and the public relevance of Public Administration, offer both benefits and costs. The diversity in public administration calls for supporting the application of diverse and rigorous methodological approaches, to continue with the theoretical diversity and theoretical depth and promoting relevance (Nesbit et.al. 2011). 8. Social Equity and Justice:
140

76% MATCHING BLOCK 195/307 W

Social equity means that Public Administration should become champion of underprivileged sections of the society.

Social equity's place within the academic field of public administration is rooted in the first Minnowbrook conference. Since then, "the concern for social equity has grown to the point where it now occupies a firm place within the academics, as well as the world of practice." 3.6 Conclusion Scholars addressed issues of governmental capacity and also the place of government in the twenty-first century. This is because there was a gap between the issues faced by the public and the government's capacity and capability to address them. The two phases of Minnowbrook III provided a useful analytic understanding regarding the scholarly evolution of the field of public administration. One could see the 'influence of Waldo and Simon "alive in the analytical frames, methodological tools, foci of inquiry, and theoretically informed research that participants presented." Those who were influenced by Simon used theories whose "roots are in economics, organizational theory, and management"; those more aligned with the perspective offered by Waldo used frameworks and models from political science, sociology, philosophy, and history." What was missing in the Minnowbrook III conference was the reminiscing of the "golden age" of public administration. The group of scholars were mostly interested in looking forward. As they had access to a range of methodological, analytical, and technological tools, they were able to offer contributions to the field that were evidence based. The future lied in a more global approach to thinking about institutions and the work of public administrators. 3.7 Summary ?

90% MATCHING BLOCK 192/307 W

Public administration as a discipline has evolved for many decades. Academic efforts like the past three Minnowbrook Conferences have helped in proper diagnosis of the field of public administration is developing. ?

87% MATCHING BLOCK 193/307 W

The purpose of Minnowbrooks have been to develop a better understanding of the different positions and start building a consensus about the construction of a science of Public Administration. ?

Developed in two phases, Minnowbrook III aimed at critiquing the current state of public administration and examine it for the future. Held in 2008, the USA had seen major political changes. ? Minnowbrook III was an attempt at understanding the role of public administration in not only theory but also in practice so that it was in a position to offer solution to the changes that 141 were unfolding in the society. 3.8 Glossary Global Terrorism: according to Global Terrorism Database, terrorism is defined as "acts of violence by non-state actors, perpetrated against civilian populations, intended to cause fear, in order to achieve a political objective." Positivism: recognising only that which can be scientifically verified or which is capable of logical proof. Relevance: a change in the discipline of public administration to make it more socially relevant, where the focus is on policy issues. Social Equity:distributive justice such that there is

71% MATCHING BLOCK 196/307 SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

reduction of economic and social discrimination and promotion of life opportunities for all groups.

De-bureaucratisation: a form of decentralisation involving transfer of powers and function from government to non-government organisation or private sectors. Centralisation: concentration of power and function under a single authority. Globalisation: a phenomenon in which there is growing interdependence of world's economies, cultures, goods and services, technology, and flows of investment, people, and information. 3.9 Questions Long Questions: ? Discuss the events leading to Minnowbrook III? ? What have been the major contributions of Minnowbrook III conference? ? Analyse the statement of Commitment published by the scholars of Minnowbrook III for the field of Public Administration. ? Which areas were highlighted by the new generation scholars of Minnowbrook III? Short Questions:

142 ? In which ways can one say Minnowbrook I was similar to Minnowbrook III? ? Identify what was unique in Minnowbrook III compared to the previous Minnobrooks. ? Which themes were highlighted in the third conference held in 2008? ? Briefly discuss the contributions of the two phases in Minnowbrook III ? What do you understand by the academic-practitioner dichotomy? 3.10 References ?

69% MATCHING BLOCK 210/307 SA synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)

Bhattacharya, Mohit. 2001.New Horizons of Public Administration, New Delhi: Jawahar Publishers, ? Bhattacharya, Mohit.Development Administration. New Delhi: Jawahar

Publishers and Distributors, 1997 ?

95% MATCHING BLOCK 197/307 W

Dahl, Robert. 1947. The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7:1–11 ?

Federickson, G. 1989. Minnowbrook II: Conclusions", Public Administration Review. 49(2), pp. 95-100 ? Frederickson,

97% MATCHING BLOCK 198/307 W

George F., and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

Adminis- tration20, nos. 4–5 (Special Issue): 817–1155. ? Frederickson, George F., and Richard Mayer. 1998. Minnowbrook II. Public Administration Review 49 (Special Issue). ? Frederickson, George H.1997. Introduction, International Journal of Public Administration, 20:4-5, 817-835 ? Gil-Garcia, J. Ramon. 2003. "Towards a Public Administration: Minnowbrook III. A Reflection and Proposal", in https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf ? Guy, M. E. 1989. ''Minnowbrook II: Conclusions'', Public Administration Review. 49(2), pp. 219-220. ?

75% MATCHING BLOCK 199/307 W

Heady, Ferrel. 1966.Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective, Prentice-Hall. ? Henry, Nicholas. 1975.Public Administration and Public Affairs,

New York: Prentice Hall. ? Hildreth, W.Bartley, et.al. 2021. Handbook of Public Administration, New York and London: Routledge ?
Marini,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 200/307 W

Frank. ed. 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective. Scranton, PA: Chandler. ?

Mathur, Kuldeep. 1985. "Development Administration in India: Old Lessons and New Concerns," Journal of Social and Economic Studies, 2:4. ? Nabatchi, Tina and Julia L.Carboni. 2019."

92% MATCHING BLOCK 201/307 W

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference" IBM Centre for The Business of Government

in https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/

100% MATCHING BLOCK 202/307 W

Assessing%20the%20Past%20and %20Future%20of%20Public%20Administration%20-%20Reflections%20from%20the%20Minnowbrook%20at%2050%20Conference_0.

pdf ? O'Leary, Rosemary. Et.al. 2008.

82% MATCHING BLOCK 203/307 W

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, Washington D.C: Georgetown University Press. ?

Otenyo, Eric E. and Nancy S.Lind (ed.). 2006. Comparative Public Administration: The Essential Readings, Elsevier. ?
Peters, B. Guy and Jon Pierre (ed). 2003. Handbook of Public Administration, London, Thousand Oaks, New Delhi: Sage Publications.
143 ?
Simon, Herbert. 1947. A Comment on "The Science of

84% MATCHING BLOCK 204/307 W

Public Administration." Public Administration Review 7:200–203. ? Waldo, D. 1980. The Enterprise of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A. ?

Waldo,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 205/307 W

Dwight. 1952a. "The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration". American Political Science Review 46:81–103

UNIT IV Changing Agenda of New Public Administration Structure Structure 4.1LearningObjectives 4.2Introduction 4.3ChangingSocialEnvironment:ABackgroundStudy 4.4TheHoneyReportonHigherEducationofPubicService 4.5 The Philadelphia Conference on the Theory and Practice of Public Administration, 1967
4.6MinnowbrookConferences:MinnowbrookConference I 4.7GoalsofNewPublicAdministration
4.8NewPublicAdministration:Anti-Goals 4.9FeaturesofNewPublicAdministration 4.10MinnowbrookConferenceII
4.11ChangingRoleofNewPublicAdministration 4.12Conclusion 4.13Summary 4.14Glossary 4.15ModelQuestions 4.16 References 144 4.1LEARNING OBJECTIVES ? To understand the emergence and growth of New Public Administration ? To explain the reasons behind the need to have a New Public Administration ? Highlight the concerns raised in various conferences ? To examine the thrust areas of Minnowbrook Conferences. ? To Make an appraisal of New Public Administration 4.2 Introduction In the 1960s and 1970s, United States of America faced a turbulent period with bouts of instability and social unrest. In such a time, the field of public administration and its relevance was questioned. This is because the earlier principles of public administration such as 'economy' and 'efficiency' were found to be inadequate and incapable to achieving the objectives of administrative activities. It was soon realised that as much as it was wanted, public administration cannot be "value free". In fact, what was desirable was to be "value oriented" meaning reference to certain human values should be promoted if one was to work for the society. This shift in the orientation was termed as ' New

69% MATCHING BLOCK 206/307 W

Public Administration'. Two scholarly works "Towards a New Public Administration, The Minnowbrook Perspective" edited by Frank Marini, and "Public Administration in a Time of Turbulence" edited by Dwight Waldo, both published in 1971 gave a fresh lease of life to the concept of public administration by adding the prefix "new". These two books played an important role in shaping the minds of the public administration scholars as they decided to come together and discuss where the field of public administration was going?This led to the Minnowbrook Conference in 1968. Here, the participants expressed their dissatisfaction with the state of the discipline of public 145 administration. They sought to give it a new image by discarding the traditional concepts and make it sturdy enough to solve the problems presented by the "turbulent times." 4.3 CHANGING SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT: A BACKGROUND STUDY The USA was undergoing rapid changes, which the state was unable to handle. There were social tensions and unrest among several sections of the people. The worst impacted were the minorities, unemployed, and the youth. These problems were dissatisfaction with the Vietnam war, increase in population, environmental problems, economic crisis etc., all of which was questioning the efficacy of the political and administrative system. It soon started affecting the day to day workings and it became a matter of primary importance to the elected officials, administrators and public leaders.

86% MATCHING BLOCK 207/307 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 208/307 W

Several changes in policies and institutions began to be undertaken and debates were held in trying to figure out different ways

100% MATCHING BLOCK 209/307 W

to strengthen political and administrative capabilities for coping with the rapidly changing environments: economic, social, political, technological,

as well as human. Human and value-oriented administration was suggested.

92% MATCHING BLOCK 211/307 SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

It was felt necessary to inject the goals of being responsive to the needs of clients and ensuring social equity in service delivery. This led to the development of New Public Administration (NPA) which intended to provide for a more philosophical outlook for public administration. By 1967-68, several efforts were initiated to make the field multidisciplinary and social equity- oriented. 4.4

83% MATCHING BLOCK 213/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

The Honey Report on Higher Education for Public Service: The American Society of Public Administration had been concerned with regard to the growth of public administration and also the ways in which its scope can be enlarged especially in the academic curriculum offered by university departments. In 1966, John Honey from the Syracuse University did an evaluation of Public Administration that was being taught in the universities. He highlighted a series of problems: 1. There was an uncertainty and confusion with regard to the status of the discipline. 2. There were inadequate funds, due to which the university department were unable to promote the discipline. 3. There was an underlying problem relating to lack of communication between the scholars and practitioners of the field. 146 4. Finally, there were certain institutional shortcomings too. It therefore recommended generation of resources from both government as well as private organisations to encourage higher studies in public administration. Furthermore, it also suggested that there should a link between the departments and government through appointment of professors to position in government and vice-versa. Lastly, setting up a National Commission on Public Service Education to provide leadership in the field. 4.5 The Philadelphia Conference on the Theory and Practice of

73% MATCHING BLOCK 215/307 W

Public Administration, 1967 In 1967, the American Academy of Political and Social Science organised a conference in Philadelphia under the chairmanship of James C. Charlesworth titled, "The Theory and Practice of Public Administration." Some of the major points raised in the Conference are as follows: • The massive increase in the functions and responsibilities of the government calls for widening of the scope of public administration. This is especially in the context of the progressive transformation of the limited function of the state into a welfare state, the responsibilities and functions of the administration. Since these changes are a continuous affair therefore it would not be correct to compartmentalise it. Therefore, the scope of the discipline should be flexible such that it would facilitate its development. • The dichotomy between policy and administration was considered meaningless, due to the interlinkages between the policy making and implementation functions of the discipline. • Public administration as a discipline and practice needs to focus more on social problems such as poverty, unemployment, environment pollution and degradation and so on. • Socio-economic disparities have been plaguing the society since a long time. Thus, promoting social equity and other values such as efficiency, accountability, administrative responsiveness, people's participation in decision-making should be seen as an important administrative value. • Excessive emphasis on adherence to other internal mechanisms increases the hierarchy, and administrative rigidity. Hence to enhance its efficacy, there is need for management flexibility and other innovations. • Training of administrators in professional schools. • Training programmes in Public Administration to sharpen not just managerial abilities and skills but to deepen the social sensitivity of the trainees.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 212/307 W

147 • Emphasis on administrative ethics in the training programmes. 4.6 MINNOWBROOK CONFERENCES: MINNOWBROOK I In 1968 Dwight Waldo of Syracuse University took the key initiative to look into changing perspectives in the discipline of public administration. The conference was held in Minnowbrook by the young scholars of Public Administration under Waldo's guidance. The main objective was to make public administration responsive to the social concerns and assume the role of change in reforming the society. Various facets of the New Public Administration emerged out of the discourses from this conference. The following are the concerns raised in the Minnowbrook Conference: 1. There should be a public policy approach to public administration as this can have a significant effect on the quality of administration. 2. While efficiency and economy are essential part, what is even more important is to have the values of social equity in the implementation of policies. 3. Along with the above point, values such as ethics, honesty and responsibility in public service is also a good part of public administration. 4. Change is inevitable. Government agencies can outlive their purposes, thus whenever need be there can be cut back of government agencies. 5. A responsive government has to manage change along with growth. 6. Active and participative citizenry needs to be an essential part of public administration. 7. Pluralism is accepted as a useful device in the practice of public administration. 4.7 GOALS OF NEW PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION The scholars discussed on five major goals of the New Public Administration in the course of the conference: Relevance: The argument made by the advocates of these changes was that academic public administration was no longer "relevant" to the real problems of the day, most of those problems being concerned with policy—and particularly policy analysis—rather than administration. Values:
148 The new public administration rejected the value-neutral position taken by the behavioural political science and also the management-oriented public administration. They argued that such a position is difficult to maintain, rather they should explicitly espouse the cause of the disadvantaged sections of the society. Social Equity According to new public administration, distributive functions and impact of governmental institutions should be public administration's basic concern.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 218/307	SA	MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

Frederickson adopted a bold social-equity attitude: "

87%	MATCHING BLOCK 214/307	W

a public administration which fails to work for changes which tries to redress the deprivation of minorities will likely be eventually used to repress

those minorities."
Change: It goes without saying that any efforts

86%	MATCHING BLOCK 231/307	SA	PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

to serve the cause of social equity is to actively work towards social change. The conference attempted to make the discipline more relevant and social equity oriented through change and innovation. Along with this it was in the first Minnowbrook Conference that a decision was taken to identify client orientation as a key goal of public administration. This called for a change in the attitudes of bureaucrats and the administrators to be more people- oriented. 4.8 NEW PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION: ANTI-GOALS Robert Golembiewski identified three anti-goals or situations that should be abandoned by the NPA 1.

56%	MATCHING BLOCK 216/307	W

Anti-positivism: this means that they reject the definition of public administration as "value- free" and also reject the rationalist or deterministic view of humankind.

It is because otherwise it makes the administration more rigid and the attempt has been to reduce the rigidities and make administration more adaptable, receptive and problem solving. 2. Anti-Technology: human beings are not treated as some cogs in the machine. Thus, the need is to foster traditional goals of economy and efficiency. Humans should not be sacrificed to the logic of machine and its system. 3. Anti-Hierarchy: it was argued that hierarchy in bureaucracy brings in rigidity and has the capacity to kill creativity, innovation and isolates the administrator from the surrounding environment. Hence the NPA scholars rejected the hierarchical structures as understood 149 traditionally by public administration.

98% MATCHING BLOCK 217/307 W

In the words of Frederickson "The essence of New Public Administration is some sort of movement in the direction of normative theory, philosophy, social concern and activism. It is less generic and more public, less descriptive and more perspective less institutional oriented less mental and more normative". Nigro and Nigro observe, "In the past public administration has neglected the question of values in relation to the social purposes of government and that public officials have emphasized efficiency and economy of execution often at the expense of social equity. These officials profess neutrality but in fact have been far from neutral even catering to special interests". 4.9 FEATURES OF NEW PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

George Frederickson referred to certain key features of the NPA 1. Change and Responsiveness: there should be necessary flexibility and adaptability in the administration such that it is able to bring about the desired and appropriate changes in the society in all spheres- social, political, technological, economic, etc. 2. Rationality:

64% MATCHING BLOCK 241/307 W

the efficacy of the administration must be seen not only from the point of view of the government but also from the active citizens' perspective. 3. Structural Change: a revamping of the organisational structures fine-tuned to the relevant situation and needs of the environment. 4. Multi-disciplinary perspective: the field of public administration has been influenced by not one but several streams of knowledge. A multi-disciplinary approach would contribute to the growth of public administration in a holistic manner. 4.10 MINNOWBROOK CONFERENCE II

79% MATCHING BLOCK 219/307 W

In contrast to Minnowbrook I, which challenged Public Administration to become proactive with regard to social issues, Minnowbrook II retreated from an action perspective to cerebral examinations ofdemocracy, ethics, responsibility, philosophy, and even economics. (Mary Timney Bailey, 1989) 150 Holzer (1989) says that the conferees at the Minnowbrook II evidenced a 'constrained hopefulness' for the 1990s. He identifies two main arguments for Public Administration as a challenging pursuit. First, citizens are again seeking a renewed sense of community and shared endeavour, emphasizing interpersonal values and de-emphasizing personal gain. Second, public servants are an important link in the social system. Society will have to look to Public Administrators to solve a continuing stream of problems. Guy (1989) establishes that the eleven themes emerged from the deliberations of Minnowbrook II.

Summary of Minnowbrook II: 1.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 220/307 W

The concerns for social equity that pre- dominated at Minnowbrook I are largely at peace now.

Guy argues that here

99% MATCHING BLOCK 221/307 W

was a concomitant sense that social equity was much closer to reality in 1989 than it was in 1968. 2. Strong concerns were expressed about democratic values and the centrality of Public Administration to promoting them. This concern was manifest in the focus on ethics, accountability, and leadership in Public Administration. 3.

The debate between the normative and behaviourist perspectives has not diminished 4.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 222/307 W

Diversity in society and in the work force was accepted as a basic value among participants. 5.

According to Guy,

97% MATCHING BLOCK 223/307 W

the tone of Minnowbrook II was one of constrained hopefulness. A revised sense of what government should do and what government can do was being debated in the nation at the time. Participants seem to have come to terms with this change and are hopeful for a constructive role for Public Administration to play on both the national and global scale. 6. Certain 'rules of the road' were accepted. Visions were of the near future, not the long-term future, and the participants were voluntarily constrained to that which was judged by participants to be realistic. 7. A professional 'ethnocentricity' or parochialism prevailed, indicating that Public Administration as a field is having a hard time dealing with its interdisciplinary roots. 8.

94% MATCHING BLOCK 224/307 W

Innovative personnel practices were described or called for in order to move away from public manager's current inability to hire employees on a timely basis, promote the best employees, and reinforce high productivity while being able to discharge non-productive employees. 151 9. Unwillingness to address technological issues was evident. Technology was seen as diminishing public service rather a tool to improve it. 10.

95% MATCHING BLOCK 225/307 W

Unwillingness to look at the specifics of what government should do was evident. According to Guy, even in the midst of discussions on the inevitability of administrators exerting control over policy agendas, the politics/administration dichotomy appears to be alive and well. 4.11

CHANGING ROLE

70% MATCHING BLOCK 226/307 W

OF NEW PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION: The critics of the doctrine held that NPA only possesses one kind of difference by definition. Alan Campbell argued "it differs from the 'old' public administration only in that it is responsive to a different set of societal problems from those of other periods."

He states that many of the issues brought to the surface quite vigorously by the advocates of the NPA were not new. They were often raised by scholars from time to time. However, the proponents of NPA have raised this matter quite forcefully and also with a strong commitment to social change. The strong emphasis on citizens' participation in decision making, on normative value of social equity, and human relations approach is a reminder regarding the need for reorientation of theory and practice of public administration. Dwight Waldo in his book "

83% MATCHING BLOCK 227/307 W

68% MATCHING BLOCK 228/307 W

Enterprise of Public Administration" (1980) highlighted that NPA projects three perspective- client (citizen)oriented bureaucracy, representative bureaucracy, and people's participation. When these three are woven together it would tend to only democratise the discipline

52% MATCHING BLOCK 229/307 W

even more. Carter and Duffey writing on NPA in the International Journal of Public Administration (1984) however, expressed doubts whether "the objective

of

92% MATCHING BLOCK 230/307 W

social equity is actually getting recognised as a well-established administrative objective or value in addition to the existing ones of efficiency, effectiveness, and public accountability.

This is because the disparities of wealth and income continue to increase in the USA to a large extent. When the government curtailed spending on social welfare programmes, it was the deprived section that did not even have adequate access to all the requisite economic and social facilities for their substantial betterment.

51% MATCHING BLOCK 232/307 W

While it is understood that the adoption of social equity as a policy and administrative objective is not an easy proposition to be implement.

90% MATCHING BLOCK 233/307 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 234/307 W

Further, the concept 152 of social equity is vague. What it means, what it requires in public programmes, opinions vary greatly.

However, one can only hope that perhaps the progress towards such a policy become more encouraging due to societal pressures.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 235/307 W

Robert T. Golembiewski holds that New Public Administration must be counted a partial success, at best and perhaps only a cruel reminder of the gap in the field between aspiration and performance. He describes it "revolution or radicalism in words and (at best) status quo in skills or technologies."

Recent

89% MATCHING BLOCK 236/307 W

trends in the study and practice of public administration in several countries both developed and developing has indicated similar revisions and additions. It is true that the impact andintensity may vary from country to country depending on numerous factors such as their history, national resources, the nature of the political system, the cultural and demographical patterns etc. Depending upon these factors the impact can be weak in some countries and strong in others.

84% MATCHING BLOCK 237/307 W

On the whole, these trends indicate: a) growing emphasis on social equity in public policies and administrative actions; b) devising of institutional arrangements

to

75% MATCHING BLOCK 238/307 W

facilitate increased public participation in administrative processes (i.e. decision-making, operations, etc.) at local and grassroot levels; c) strengthening of political direction of administration as well as of administrative accountability to the political authorities withinthegovernment; d) adoption of innovative (new) types of organisations as well as ofmodernmanagement practices, and techniques and technologies to raise the administrative capability (i.e. efficiency and effectiveness) to deal with highly diverse, complex end numerous governmental tasks.

e) growth of unionism among the public personnel (government employees) of variousgrades and departments of organised arrangements for government-employee's consultations and negotiations well as for arbitration of disputes.
4.12 CONCLUSION
153

96% MATCHING BLOCK 239/307 W

The New Public Administration has not yet developed a theory of its own. It was the product of the social ferment of the 1960's and early 1970s in the United States. The Minnowbrook Conference was a youth conference which felt that old public administration had failed to solve the current social problems.

Thus, because of the above trends

100% MATCHING BLOCK 240/307 W

the scope and nature of the discipline of public administration has increased considerably. It is no longer constricted to administrative phenomena, policies, organisation or processes. It is interested in issues of social equity, citizens' participation and also continuously expanding administrative system that is adapting according to the changing environment.In short one can say that the New Public Administration both in theory and practice tends to be comprehensive in scope, descriptive cum normative in character and multidisciplinary in substance. 4.13 SUMMARY ? New Public Administration that evolved in 1960s in the aftermath of the first Minnowbrook Conference gave primacy to key concerns that had relevance during those times. ? They included social equity, policy issues, change, participative citizenry, etc. ? The second Minnowbrook Conference, attempted to examine the future of public administration. The conference made a sincere attempt to highlight some of the themes such as ethics, human relations, social equity, concern for the state of the field, along with current themes such as technology policy, economic and legal perspectives etc. ? Public administration, should draw from, various disciplines that intersect the field and construct a new, more relevant discipline that integrates several selected areas. ? It was felt that there is need for a theory of public administration with an overarching epistemology and research methodology. 4.14 Glossary Social Equity: distributive justice such that there is

65% MATCHING BLOCK 242/307 SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

reduction of economic and social discrimination and promotion of life opportunities for all groups. Efficiency: the degree of objective/goal achieved by the organisation. Minnowbrook Conference:outcome of the social disturbances in the late 1960s and early 1970s to bring a change in the orientation of public administration. Environment Sensitivity: Awareness of the surrounding cultural, social, economic, religious etc. factors 154 Values: arguing for normative concerns in administrative analysis and rejection of value neutrality. 4.15 Questions 1. Discuss the goals of New Public Administration. 2. What the has been the main role and contribution of the Minnowbrook Conferences in the emergence of the New Public Administration? 3. What is New Public Administration? Analyse the main features. 4. Critically analyse the changing dimension of the New Public Administration 1. Discuss the major suggestions made in the Honey Report on Higher Education on Public Service? 2. Highlight the main tenets discussed in the Philadelphia Conference. 3. Explain the trends in New Public Administration. 4. If a Minnowbrook Conference was to be held this year, what according to you, should be the focus of public administration in present times? 5. briefly discuss by what do you understand by the anti-goals of New Public Administration 6. what was the socio-political context of the United State of America that created a need for New Public Administration? 4.16 References ?

69% MATCHING BLOCK 252/307 SA synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)

Bhattacharya, Mohit. 2001.New Horizons of Public Administration, New Delhi: Jawahar Publishers, ? Bhattacharya, Mohit.Development Administration. New Delhi: Jawahar

Publishers and Distributors, 1997 ?

95% MATCHING BLOCK 243/307 W

Dahl, Robert. 1947. The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7:1–11 ?

Federickson, G. 1989. Minnowbrook II: Conclusions", Public Administration Review. 49(2), pp. 95-100 ? Frederickson,

97% MATCHING BLOCK 244/307 W

George F., and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

Adminis- tration20, nos. 4–5 (Special Issue): 817–1155.
155 ? Frederickson, George F., and Richard Mayer. 1998. Minnowbrook II. Public Administration Review 49 (Special Issue). ? Frederickson, George H.1997. Introduction, International Journal of Public Administration, 20:4-5, 817-835 ? Gil-Garcia, J. Ramon. 2003. "Towards a Public Administration: Minnowbrook III. A Reflection and Proposal", in https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf ? Guy, M. E. 1989. ''Minnowbrook II: Conclusions'', Public Administration Review. 49(2), pp. 219-220. ?

75% MATCHING BLOCK 245/307 W

Heady, Ferrel. 1966.Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective, Prentice-Hall. ? Henry, Nicholas. 1975.Public Administration and Public Affairs,

New York: Prentice Hall. ? Hildreth, W.Bartley, et.al. 2021. Handbook of Public Administration, New York and London: Routledge ? Marini,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 246/307 W

Frank. ed. 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective. Scranton, PA: Chandler. ?

Mathur, Kuldeep. 1985. "Development Administration in India: Old Lessons and New Concerns," Journal of Social and Economic Studies, 2:4. ? Nabatchi, Tina and Julia L.Carboni. 2019."

92% MATCHING BLOCK 247/307 W

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference" IBM Centre for The Business of Government

in https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/

100% MATCHING BLOCK 248/307 W

Assessing%20the%20Past%20and %20Future%20of%20Public%20Administration%20-%20Reflections%20from%20the%20Minnowbrook%20at%2050%20Conference_0.

pdf ? O'Leary, Rosemary. Et.al. 2008.

82% MATCHING BLOCK 249/307 W

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, Washington D.C: Georgetown University Press. ?

Otenyo, Eric E. and Nancy S.Lind (ed.). 2006. Comparative Public Administration: The Essential Readings, Elsevier. ? Peters, B. Guy and Jon Pierre (ed). 2003. Handbook of Public Administration, London, Thousand Oaks, New Delhi: Sage Publications. ?
Simon, Herbert. 1947. A Comment on "The Science of

84% MATCHING BLOCK 250/307 W

Public Administration." Public Administration Review 7:200–203. ? Waldo, D. 1980. The Enterprise of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A. ?

Waldo,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 251/307 W

Dwight. 1952a. "The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration". American Political Science Review 46:81–103

E-articles:New Public Administration https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC /New%20Public%20Administr ation,%202nd%20Semester-converted.pdf New Public Administration https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf
156 UNIT V Future of Comparative Public Administration Structure 5.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES 5.2 INTRODUCTION 5.3 DEFINING COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION 5.4 THE ROLE

59% MATCHING BLOCK 257/307 W

OF COMPARATIVE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP 5.5 FEATURES OF COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION 5.6 SCOPE OF COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION 5.7 SIGNIFICANCE AND FUTURE OF COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION 5.8 CONCLUSION 5.9

SUMMARY 5.10 GLOSSARY 5.11 QUESTIONS 5.12 REFERENCES 5.1LEARNING OBJECTIVES ?

88% MATCHING BLOCK 253/307 W

To understand the factors that led to the evolution of Comparative Public Administration ?

To look into the definitions of Comparative Public Administration and its difference with Public Administration. ? Analyse the scope and significance of Comparative Public Administration. 5.2 INTRODUCTION Mohit Bhattacharya argues, "as a subfield Comparative Public Administration (CPA) is not in a position to claim an elaborate and long history". The interest in comparative governmental systems has been a lively field of both academic and practical enquiries. In the 18 th and 19 th centuries, leaders looked across borders for institutions from which they could either copy or reject. "the most important comparative research was done between 1895 and 1920, not by comparative law professors or participants of international congress, but by a sociologist Max Weber."

100% MATCHING BLOCK 254/307 W

Traditional comparative government and administrative studies were confined to big powers, such as the United States, Great Britain, France, Germany, the Soviet Union, and Italy. This was a limitation in the traditional studies. Besides, the traditional analysis focused mainly on the organization of government institutions, with a negligible emphasis on the behavioural or dynamic aspects of the government systems. Besides, most studies were descriptive in nature 157 and not analytical or explanatory or problem–oriented. Moreover, these studies did not take into account the interaction between the government systems and their environment. Fred Riggs calls these studies the "governments of foreign countries" rather than "comparative governments".

Comparative public administration has been of scholarly interest especially after the World War II. It has been interested in cross-cultural public administration.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 255/307 W

Woodrow Wilson in his seminal article "The Study of Administration" published the Political Science Quarterly (1887) had suggested that the USA should learn from the patterns of European administrative systems without borrowing from them their centralized monarchical political systems. This was a clear comparative orientation. Even L. D. White, who published the first text book in Public Administration 'Introduction to the Study of Public Administration' in 1926, was interested in constructing principles of administration that would provide guidelines of action in public administration of Russia, Great Britain, Iraq, and the United States.

Leonard White argued that "cultural factors did not make any difference in administrative settings, as in their view there were universal principles applicable to situations anywhere and everywhere." However, scholars such as Robert Dahl and Dwight Waldo argued that cultural factors cannot be ignored for it is them that could make public administration in one nation different from that in another. Dahl explained, "

86% MATCHING BLOCK 256/307 W

the comparative aspects of public administration have largely been ignored and as long as the study of public administration is not comparative, claim for 'science of administration' sounds rather hollow." 5.3

DEFINING COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

90% MATCHING BLOCK 258/307 W

Comparative public administration is a branch of public administration as it considers the workings of government in different socio-economic and cultural settings. Like public administration, comparative administration covers a wide variety of activities. Scholars interested in

60% MATCHING BLOCK 259/307 W

employing comparative approach focus varied issues ranging from public policy making and implementation in both developed and developing areas.

Such a study strengthens our understanding of public administration by expanding the empirical basis of the field. For "

100% MATCHING BLOCK 260/307 W

by taking a keen look at administrative processes in all socio-economic and ecological settings, we have a more holistic view of the larger field." (

Otenyo, 2006:1)
158 Quite simply,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 261/307 W

comparative public administration is defined as the study of administrative systems in a comparative fashion or the study of public administration in other countries. Another definition for "comparative public administration" is the "quest for patterns and regularities in administrative action and behaviour". It is quite helpful in understanding administrative setups and their functioning in various societies or countries. It helps us in answering questions such as what works and why it works. Furthermore, it helps in improvising administrative systems by making them more efficient as we study the literature and theories on public administration across the familiar system with the help of practical experiments and analysis. One can also hope to adopt some of the administrative features if they can fit in our won systems. In addition, comparative studies also help in explaining factors responsible for cross-national and cross-cultural similarities as well as difference in the administrative systems. Thus, comparative public administration is a comparative study of diverse administrative systems, on whose conclusions most scientific efforts are made in public administration.

66% MATCHING BLOCK 281/307 W

95% MATCHING BLOCK 262/307 W

What is interesting is that

38% MATCHING BLOCK 263/307 W

comparative public administration can help in map patterns and regularities of administrative action and behaviour. Thus, one not one can gain information on the diversity of human experience, but also the similarities and uniformities within and among states. For a comparison extends our knowledge of how to explore, reflect, and also better understand universal administrative features instead of being just restricted to ethnocentric views.

75% MATCHING BLOCK 264/307 W

99% MATCHING BLOCK 265/307 W

As society is dynamic, it becomes imperative to reinterpret and re- evaluate administrative structures to be in line with the ever changing trends in life. This is best done through Comparative Public Administration. A comparative study is usually done on an interdisciplinary format, thus encouraging more analysis on social phenomena.

92% MATCHING BLOCK 266/307 W

Comparative public administration is considered to have the following purposes: 1. To learn the distinctive features of a particular administrative system or a cluster of systems. 2. To explain the factors responsible for cross-national and cross-cultural similarities and differences in administrative structure, functions, behaviour, and impact. 3. To examine the causes for the success or failure of particular administrative systems in their ecological settings. Thus, the discipline looks closely at the dynamic 159 interaction between administrative systems and their respective environments, including their positive and negative influences. 4. To understand the strategies of administrative reforms, their processes and impacts and the factors responsible for the level of success or failure of reforms. 5.4

THE ROLE OF COMPARATIVE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP Comparative politics movement became quite popular after the Second World War and found

80% MATCHING BLOCK 267/307 W

acceptance in the USA and several other countries. While studying the political systems of different countries, scholars also examined and analysed their administrative systems. Some of the scholars who took interests in comparative politics as well as comparative public administration are Leonard Binder, Joseph La Palombara, Alfred Diamant, Fred Riggs, Edward Weidnar, and Ferrel Heady. The Comparative Public Administration Movement borrowed from Comparative Politics Movement several concepts, methodologies, models, and theories. Comparative Public Administration got its

87% MATCHING BLOCK 268/307 W

63% MATCHING BLOCK 269/307 W

real impetus in 1962 when the Comparative Administrative Group of the American Society for Public Administration (APSA) received funding from the Ford Foundation.

This was the time when the Cold War was at its height.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 270/307 W

Fred W. Riggs was the chairman of the group from its inception till the end of 1970. The CAG conducted a series of seminars on comparative administrative systems, focusing on theoretical as well as applied perspectives. It published more than one hundred monographs and brought out several edited anthologies on various themes. The group also sponsored many research studies in countries of Asia, Europe, Latin America, and Africa. Besides, it was instrumental in publishing a quarterly, 'Journal of Comparative Administration' through SAGE publishers; the journal was later re-named as Administration and Society, which still continues to be published. Among the scholars, who were pioneers in the Comparative Public Administration Movement were Ralph Braibanti, Milton Esman, Ferrel Heady, John Montgomery, Fred Riggs, William Siffin, and Dwight Waldo.

The Ford funding was terminated in 1971, as research was oriented more towards research building rather than empirical and practical problem-solving. Ferrel Heady explains five motivating concerns as addressed by CPA: 160 1. Search for theory 2. Urge for practical application 3. Incidental contribution of the broader field of comparative politics 4. Interest of researchers trained in the tradition of administrative law 5. Comparative analysis of ongoing problems of public administration.

73% MATCHING BLOCK 271/307 W

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN CPA AND PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION It is important to point out certain difference between CPA and public administration. Mohit Bhattacharya argues, first, public administration has generally been culture- bound. The discipline in USA and UK, for instance, is grounded in politico- administrative realities of the two countries. Second, public administration generally differs from CPA in respect of its origin. The discipline, as it has evolved in the USA, has been practitioner-oriented and involved in the real world of administration. CPA, by contrast, has attempted to build theory and seek knowledge for the sake of knowledge. The beginning of CPA was enriched by the steady growth of the subfield called development administration. During the period between 1960s to 1970s, development administration dominated CPA, this was the time when Fred Riggs chaired ASPA's CAG group. This explains the interest in the public administration of the developing countries as Riggs was interested in it. Riggs desired CPA to be "empirical, nomothetic and ecological- that is, to put crudely, factual and scientific, abstracted and generalised, systematic and non-parochial."

73% MATCHING BLOCK 272/307 W

In 1973, with the efforts of Fred Riggs and other scholars, a Section on International and Comparative Administration (SICA) was set up which continues to promote study, teaching and research in comparative public administration. This comprised of practitioners and academics, who are interested in global public administration. It has done a praiseworthy work of maintaining a key interest in the field comparative public administration. Annually, it awards Fred Riggs Award for outstanding contribution in the subfield.

94% MATCHING BLOCK 273/307 W

Through their aegis, the CAG movement churned out voluminous publications. These included Dwight Waldo (1963), Comparative Public Ad- ministration: Prologue, Problems, and Promise, and Ferrel Heady, Comparative Public Administration: Concerns and Priorities; 161 also in this genre was Ferrel Heady and Sybil Stokes (1962), Papers in Comparative Administration among others. Since this is not the central issue of the essay, our attention is directed to Comparative Public Administration: An Annotated Bibliography by Mark Huddleston (1984). 5.5

FEATURES OF COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION: The emergence of CPA can be summed up in two broad arguments: one, there was a need for comparison as a pre-requisite for the development of a science of public administration. Two, the need for comparison in the interest of practical governance and knowledge of facts. 1. It is relatively a young sub-field as it emerged only the Second World War. 2. There are competing and diverse approaches to the study of CPA and this is due to the different disciplinary contributions, along with the enthusiasm of the scholars who wished to chart out new directions. 3. By 1962, Riggs noted more and more nomothetic and ecological approaches, thus indicating the application of scientific rigour to analysis. Emphasis on normative considerations could be seen side by side with empirical analyses. 4. The field has been dominated by American scholars. This is because it received the initial support of Ford Foundation and also due to the deep interest expressed by the American scholars in studying the newly independent nations, especially their culture, politics and

61% MATCHING BLOCK 274/307 W

administration. 5. CPA has two basic motivational concerns: theory-building and administrative problems of the developing countries. 5.6 SCOPE OF

COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION: It goes without saying that the scope of CPA is as large as that of public administration. For any public administration aspect whether they are structures, processes, behaviours, impacts, environments, all of these can be examined through comparative lens. Thus inevitably, they would fall under the scope of comparative public administration. The following studies in comparative public administration will explain its scope: 1. Cross-institutional Analysis: when two or more institutions or organizations are compared in terms of their structure, functions, processes, environment, and impact; such an analysis is called cross-institutional analysis. For example,

66% MATCHING BLOCK 275/307 W

81% MATCHING BLOCK 276/307 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 277/307 W

a comparison can 162 be made between the School Education Department with the Higher Education Department of West Bengal in term of efficiency and innovativeness. 2.

Intra-national and Cross-national: the word intra indicates it will be a comparative study of administrative structures within a country. The comparison can be inter- district or interstate but it takes place within the same country.in contrast, when we compare two administrative systems or their subsystems in two or more countries we refer to them as cross-national study or analysis. 3. Cross-

71% MATCHING BLOCK 278/307 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 279/307 W

national but Intra-cultural: When comparisons are made between the administrative systems of two or more nations belonging to the same 'culture', these are called cross-national but intra-cultural comparisons.

The word culture can raise questions, for it is not an easy term to define. Yet, studies are conducted with a working definition. For example, a study of the status of women in the administrative systems of India, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka will be cross-national but intra-cultural.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 280/307 W

for they belong to the South Asian nations that have some marked commonalities. 4. Cross-

87% MATCHING BLOCK 282/307 W

national and Cross-cultural: studies made in two or more nations belonging to various levels of socio-economic development will come under the category of cross national. Culture also the nature of political system, when two countries of different political culture are compared we refer it to be cross –cultural. However, one should also remember that cultural category of nations can change from time to time. 5.

95% MATCHING BLOCK 283/307 W

Cross-temporal studies: the word temporal refers to time. When a comparision is made involving

100% MATCHING BLOCK 284/307 W

two or more specific distinguishable time-periods, are cross-temporal studies. For instance, district administration in pre-independence and post- independence periods will be considered cross-temporal 5.7

SIGNIFICANCE AND FUTURE OF COMPARATIVE

99% MATCHING BLOCK 285/307 W

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION: Robert Dahl in his well-known article entitled 'The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems' published in Public Administration Review, (1947) had observed that there cannot be a science of public administration without a comparative analysis. James Coleman, an eminent scholar of comparative politics, had observed "You cannot be scientific if you are 163 not comparative."

So we can see that through comparative analysis of administrative systems, we can get new insights into the administrative reality across national realities. Comparative public administration draws from several concepts and methodologies from disciplines such as Political Science, Sociology, Economics, Anthropology etc. Such inter-disciplinary approach can broaden and enrich the study of public administration to a greater extent. Traditionally we saw that public administration was confined to the study of only a select western countries and the environment of public administration was treated as 'given'.

54% MATCHING BLOCK 286/307 W

However, with comparative public administration what we see is that there is an advocacy

52% MATCHING BLOCK 287/307 W

for the adoption of an ecological approach to the study of administrative systems. In this way, comparative studies have challenged parochialism in western studies. That the non-western world has its own administrative reality which has been of interest of many western scholars shows the conceptual transformation that has taken place in the field. History is a witness how due to financial support, once upon a time, led to the reduction of academic interest in comparative administrative research. The reality is the work of public administration has from time and again provided ample opportunities for innovative comparative studies. We are living in a globalised world, there is no escape from inter-state interaction. In a world dominated by the principles of liberalisation, policies are often made not within the realm of national borders, but rather by international funding agencies and are also influenced by the forces of international economic transactions. How states interact with these agencies can be an interesting area of research through comparative analysis. Human Rights as an area of study that has been getting a lot of attention from international institutions and national governments. A comparative study of human rights enforcement and the challenges that they face can be of research interest. Public bureaucracies, private firms, voluntary agencies and community based organisations are coming together more and more and in the process the distinction between 'public' and 'private' is fading. What we are seeing is the how in different situations, nations are 164 promoting co-production and creating a climate of networking of 'governance'. All of these provide new thrust areas in comparative government analysis.

67% MATCHING BLOCK 288/307 W

The discipline of comparative public administration today is characterised by various institutional initiatives. The subject is now taught in a large number of foreign and Indian universities and colleges both at undergraduate as well as postgraduate levels. Journals on public administration encourages authors to submit their research work on comparative administrative systems. Robert Fried sums up the optimistic climate of comparative administrative studies, "the international interdependency of bureaucracies... the universalising of demands for human rights; the crucial role of publics in resisting or promoting reform, the nature of the status as members of first, second, or third worlds-all of these present students and practitioners of comparative public administration with unexpected challenges to understanding, unexpected opportunities for research and conceptual development."Mohit Bhattacharya adds to this with his own words of optimism, "it seems CPA is poised today for resurrection as the situation worldwide is getting more and more propitious for comparative administrative analysis." 5.8CONCLUSION

100% MATCHING BLOCK 289/307 W

Comparative studies of public administration have stressed improvements in the structures, processes, and behavioural patterns of public administrative systems in diverse settings.

One of the

100% MATCHING BLOCK 290/307 W

related benefit of the study of comparative public administration has been in the emergence of the concept of 'development administration,' which has become a key strategy for holistic transformation of various societies. It is accepted widely that development administration is a goal-oriented and a change-oriented administration and is the main engine of all round progress of a country. 5.9

SUMMARY ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 291/307 W

Comparative public administration is a branch of public administration. ? As an approach, it considers the workings of government in different socio- economic and cultural settings. 165 ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 292/307 W

It is a very significant area of study in Public Administration as it helps in understanding administrative setups and their functioning in various settings and societies/countries and what works and why it works. ?

CPA evolved post Second World War and since then the subfield has been in an ever- rowing trajectory. ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 293/307 W

Comparative administration seeks to strengthen our understanding of broader public administrative processes by trying to expand the empirical basis of the field. ? By taking a keen look at administrative processes in all socio-economic and ecological settings, we have a more holistic view of the larger field of public administration. 5.10 Glossary ? Comparative method: a method by which a study is made on two or more variables, where the aim is to find out both the similarities as well as the dissimilarities. ? Cultural factors: a set of values and ideologies of a particular community or group of individuals. ? Comparative Administrative Group: Comparative Public Administration got its

63% MATCHING BLOCK 294/307 W

real impetus in 1962 when the Comparative Administrative Group of the American Society for Public Administration (APSA) received funding from the Ford Foundation. ?

Development Administration:

79% MATCHING BLOCK 297/307 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

the term came to be used in 1950s to represent those aspects of public administration and those changes in public administration which are needed to carry out policies, projects and programmes to improve social and economic conditions. ?

Nomothetic: relating to the study or discovery of general scientific laws. 5.11 Questions Long Questions 1. Analyse the emergence of Comparative Public Administration as a sub-field in public administration. 2. What do you understand by Comparative Public Administration? Discuss its features.
166 3. Discuss the role of the Comparative Administrative Group in the development of Comparative Public Administration. 4. Critically analyse the scope and significance of Comparative Public Administration in the field of Public Administration. Short Questions 1. What do you understand by Comparative Public Administration? 2. Explain the difference between Comparative Public Administration and Public Administration. 3. Discuss the five concerns addressed by Comparative Public Administration explained by Ferrel Heady. 4. Analyse the main purposes of Comparative Public Administration. 5. In which ways has Comparative Public Administration contributed in making Public Administration more holistic in nature. 6. Discuss the studies that can be made in public administration using the comparative method. 5.12 References ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 295/307 W

Arora, Ramesh K. 2021. Comparative Public Administration: An Ecological Perspective. New Delhi: New Age International. ?

69% MATCHING BLOCK 305/307 SA synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)

Bhattacharya, Mohit. 2001. New Horizons of Public Administration, New Delhi: Jawahar Publishers, ? Bhattacharya, Mohit. Development Administration. New Delhi: Jawahar

Publishers and Distributors, 1997 ?

95% MATCHING BLOCK 296/307 W

Dahl, Robert. 1947. The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7:1–11 ?

Eric

84% MATCHING BLOCK 307/307 W

E. Otenyo, Nancy S. Lind. "Part I: Comparative Public Administration: Growth, Method, and Ecology" In Comparative Public Administration. Published online: 09

Mar 2015; 1-7 ? Federickson, G. 1989. Minnowbrook II: Conclusions", Public Administration Review. 49(2), pp. 95-100 ? Frederickson, George F., and Richard Mayer. 1998. Minnowbrook II. Public Administration Review 49 (Special Issue). ? Frederickson, George H. 1997. Introduction, International Journal of Public Administration, 20:4-5, 817-835 ? Gil-Garcia, J. Ramon. 2003. "Towards a Public Administration: Minnowbrook III. A Reflection and Proposal", in https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf ? Guy, M. E. 1989. ''Minnowbrook II: Conclusions'', Public Administration Review. 49(2), pp. 167 219-220. ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 298/307 W

Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker. ? Henry, Nicholas. 2004. Public Administration and Public Affairs. Upper Sadle River, N.J.: Pearson. ?

Hildreth, W.Bartley, et.al. 2021. Handbook of Public Administration, New York and London: Routledge ? Jain. R. B. 1991. "The state of the study of Comparative Public Administration in India", The Indian Journal of

79% MATCHING BLOCK 299/307 W

Public Administration. ? Marini, Frank. ed. 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective. Scranton, PA: Chandler. ?

Mathur, Kuldeep. 1985. "Development Administration in India: Old Lessons and New Concerns," Journal of Social and Economic Studies, 2:4. ? Nabatchi, Tina and Julia L.Carboni. 2019. "

92% MATCHING BLOCK 300/307 W

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference" IBM Centre for The Business of Government

in https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/

100% MATCHING BLOCK 301/307 W

Assessing%20the%20Past%20and %20Future%20of%20Public%20Administration%20-%20Reflections%20from%20the%20Minnowbrook%20at%2050%20Conference_0.

pdf ? O'Leary, Rosemary. Et.al. 2008.

82% MATCHING BLOCK 302/307 W

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, Washington D.C: Georgetown University Press. ?

Otenyo, Eric E. and Nancy S.Lind (ed.). 2006. Comparative Public Administration: The Essential Readings, Elsevier. ? Peters, B. Guy and Jon Pierre (ed). 2003. Handbook of Public Administration, London, Thousand Oaks, New Delhi: Sage Publications. ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 303/307 W

Sahni, Pradeep and E. Vayunandan. 2009. Administrative Theory. New Delhi: Prentice-Hall. ?

Simon, Herbert. 1947. A Comment on "The Science of

84% MATCHING BLOCK 304/307 W

Public Administration." Public Administration Review 7:200–203. ? Waldo, D. 1980. The Enterprise of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A. ?

Waldo,
Dwight. 1952 a. "The

82% MATCHING BLOCK 306/307 W

Development of Theory of Democratic Administration". American Political Science Review 46:81–103 ? Waldo, Dwight. 1955. The Study of Public Administration.

New York: Double day.
E-articles: ? Comparative Public Administration https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf ? Comparative Public Administration http://eflorakkl.in/staff/uploads/sem2%20cpa%20uniti1.pdf ? Comparative Public Administration https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E- U1.pdf
168

Hit and source - focused comparison, Side by Side

Submitted text As student entered the text in the submitted document.
Matching text As the text appears in the source.

1/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 65% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

All rights reserved. No part of this Self-Learning Material (SLM) may be reproduced in any form without permission

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced in any form without written permission

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20The%20new%20pub ...

2/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 46 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 46 WORDS

The new paradigm for public administration must be comparative i.e., global, since the solution of the problem to which it addresses itself will require increasing communication between scholars and practitioners in all countries". ---

The new paradigm for public administration must be comparative i.e., global, since the solution of the problem to which it addresses itself will require increasing communication between scholars and practitioners in all countries.

W https://www.ijsr.net/archive/v5i1/NOV152468.pdf

3/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 165 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 165 WORDS

the comparative aspects of public administration have largely been ignored; and as long as the study of public administration is not comparative, claims for ''a science of public administration'' sound rather hollow. Conceivably there might be a science of American public administration and a science of British public administration and a science of French public administration; but can there be a ''science of public administration'' in the sense of a body of generalized principles independent of their peculiar national setting? ---

the comparative aspects of public administration have largely been ignored; and as long as the study of public administration is not comparative, claims for ''a science of public administration'' sound rather hollow. Conceivably there might be a science of American public administration and a science of British public administration and a science of FERREL HEADY 64 French public administration; but can there be a ''science of public administration'' in the sense of a body of generalized principles independent of their peculiar national setting? 12

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

4/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 65% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

for the probable development methods for the newly independent countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

5/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

Notes on Literature Available for the Study of Comparative Public Administration'.

Notes on literature available for the study of comparative public administration.

W https://link.springer.com/chapter/10.1007/978-981-19-1208-5_2

6/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	22 WORDS	57%	MATCHING TEXT	22 WORDS

the comparative administration group (CAG) (which was a special division of the American Society for Public Administration) from 1960 to 1973.

the Comparative Public Administration Group (CAG) was set up, as a committee of the American Society for Public Administration. It was from 1963 to 1970

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

7/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	20 WORDS	71%	MATCHING TEXT	20 WORDS

questions 1.9 References 1.1. LEARNING OBJECTIVES
After reading this Unit, one should be able to: ? Explain

SA contemporary theoretical perspective.docx (D159756278)

8/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	13 WORDS	95%	MATCHING TEXT	13 WORDS

is mainly concerned with the executing and implementing part of governmental activity.

is mainly concerned with the executing and implementing part of the governmental activity,

W http://anucde.info/Administrative%20Theory%20(Classical).pdf

9/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	39 WORDS	92%	MATCHING TEXT	39 WORDS

Public Administration consists of getting the work of government done by coordinating the efforts of the people so that they can work together to accomplish their set tasks. Public administration is concerned with the activities of the government,

Public Administration consists of getting the work of government done by coordinating the efforts of the people so that they can work together to accomplish their set tasks." E.N. Public Administration is concerned with the administration of the government."

W https://www.questjournals.org/jrhss/papers/vol4-issue6/D461520.pdf

10/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	1119 WORDS	97%	MATCHING TEXT	1119 WORDS

Theory building in public administration is not an easy task to do, because there are various kinds of public organisations, administrative structures and processes has been developed in the study of public administration. The aim of public administrative theory is to achieve politically legitimated goals by constituency moulded means. For the success of public administration, public administrators have borrowed various methods, role, and theories from the other disciplines like economic, sociology, psychology etc. Theory building in public administration is not only related to develop a theory of administration but also to formulate a set of theories. Administrative theory is basically deals in the various ideas and views of various scholars. Administrative theory is that theory, which. helps to develop the other theories in the field of public administration. They are administrative management theory, the scientific management approach, the bureaucracy approach, the human relations approach, the behavioural approach, 13 the systems approach, public-policy approach, decision making theory, public choice theory, and in the end, it creates new public administration. Administrative theory helps to growth various theories in the field of public administration, which is briefly discussed in the following: 1.3.1 Administrative Management: Theory Administrative management theory is that a science of administration can be developed based on some principles and experience of administrators. It deals primarily with formal organisation structure. The basic aims of this theory are efficiency and economy. It explains briefly in the words of Henry Fayol, Luther Gullick and Lyndall Urwick. Henry Fayol is considered the father of administrative management theory. He mainly focusses on the development of broad administrative principles which are applicable to general and higher management levels. He defined management in terms of five functions, Planning, Organizing, Commanding, Coordinating and Controlling. Gullick explains major management techniques by the word POSDCORB, which stands for a different technique such as, Planning, Organizing, Staffing, Directing, Coordinating, Reporting and Budgeting. The administrative management theory is marked by the four basic features, impersonal, specialization, efficiency, and hierarchy. Although, the exponents of this theory, they often invoked the name of science, but they did not even come close to using established scientific methods. Their principles were derived from experience and collections of information. 1.3.2 The Scientific Management Approach: The scientific

Theory building in public administration is not an easy task to do, because there are various kinds of public organisations, administrative structures and processes has been developed in the study of public administration. The aim of public administrative theory is to achieve politically legitimated goals by constituency moulded means. For the success of public administration, public administrators have borrowed various methods, role and theories from the other disciplines like economic, sociology, psychology etc. Theory building in public administration is not only related to develop a theory of administration but also to formulate a set of theories. Administrative theory is basically deals in the various ideas and views of various scholars. Administrative theory is that theory, which. helps to develop the other theories in the field of public administration. They are administrative management theory, the scientific management approach, the bureaucracy approach, the human relations approach, the behavioral approach, the systems approach, public-policy approach, decision making theory, public choice theory, and in the end it creates new public administration. Administrative theory helps to growth various theories in the field of public administration, which is briefly discussed in the following: Administrative Management: Theory Administrative management theory is that a science of administration can be developed based on some principles and experience of administrators. It deals primarily with formal organisation structure. The basic aims of this theory are efficiency and economy. It explains briefly in the words of Henry Fayol, Luther Gullick and Lyndall Urwick. Henry Fayol is considered the father of administrative management theory. He mainly focus on the development of broad administrative principles which are applicable to general and higher management levels. He defined management in terms of five functions,Planning, Organizing, Commanding, Coordinating and Controlling. Gullick explains major management techniques by the word POSDCORB, which stands for a different techniques such as, Planning, Organizing, Staffing, Directing, Coordinating, Reporting and Budgeting. The administrative management theory is marked by the four basic features, impersonal, specialization, efficiency, and hierarchy. Although, the exponents of this theory, they often invoked the name of science, but they did not even come close to using established scientific methods. Their principles were actually derived from experience and collections of information. The Scientific Management Approach: The management approach was based on the design and the operation of production processes on the shop level of the organisation. Scientific management refers to the time motion studies. It signing in the United States in twentieth century by contribution of the scientific management school. The key representatives of this school are Lillian Gilberth. F.W. Taylor is the father of scientific management. Scientific management theory concern was to improve organisational efficiency and economy for the sake of the creational production. Taylor's belief that economic incentives are strong enough to motivate the worker for the increased production in the organisation. The major principles of scientific management are: ? It based on standardization of work methods. ? It deals with scientific selection and training of workers. ? It was an open advocacy of an equal division of work and responsibility between management and workers. ? There should be active cooperation and cordial relations between management and workers. 1.3.3. Bureaucratic Approach: The bureaucratic approach was systematically developed by German sociologist Max Weber in the twentieth century. He was first to describe its characteristics systematically. According to the Weber, bureaucracy is superior to any other form decision, precision, stability, discipline, and reliability. 14 For Max Weber, the national-legal bureaucracy was a prime example of rationalization and its impact on Western socio-economic and political institutions. Weber's explain the characteristics of the bureaucratic forms of organisation is based on Division of Labour, Hierarchy, Rules, Rationality, Inter personality, Rule orientation and Neutrality. 1.3.4 The Human Relations Approach: The basic of the human relations theory lies in its primary in human beings, psychological motivations, and informal group behaviour in the organisation. This theory focuses on management as a web of interpersonal relationships and it is also based on the behaviour of role occupants in an organisation than on the formal structure of the organisation. This theory came from the Hawthorne experiment which were carried out in the USA by Elton Mayo and his colleagues of the Harvard Business School in the late 20th century. In the first experiment workers operating under a piece-rate system. Overall, the significance of Hawthorne investigation was in discovering the informal organisation which it is now realized exists in all organisations. 1.3.5 Behavioural Approach: Herbert Simon, Douglas McGregor, Abraham Maslow, Kurt Lewin, Chester Barnard, Mary Parker Follet, Rensis Likert and Wanen Bennis are some of the foremost behavioural scientists who contributed in the development of the Behavioural scientific management approach was based on the design and the operation of production processes on the shop level of the organisation. Scientific management refers to the time motion studies. It signing in the United States in twentieth century by contribution of the scientific management school. The key representatives of this school are Lillian Gilberth. F.W. Taylor is considered to be the father of scientific management. Scientific management theory concern was to improve organisational efficiency and economy for the sake of the creational production. Taylor's belief that economic incentives are strong enough to motivate the worker for the increased production in the organisation. The major principles of scientific management are: • It based on standardization of work methods. • It deals with scientific selection and training of workers. • It was an open advocacy of an equal division of work and responsibility between management and workers.• There should be active cooperation and cordial relations between management and workers. Bureaucratic Approach: The bureaucratic approach was systematically developed by German sociologist Max Weber in the twentieth century. He was first to describe its characteristics systematically. According to the Weber, bureaucracy is superior to any other form decision, precision, stability,. discipline and reliability. For Max Weber, the national-legal bureaucracy was a prime example of rationalization and its impact on Western socio-economic and political institutions. Weber's explain the characteristics of the bureaucratic forms of organisation is based on Division of Labor, Hierarchy, Rules, Rationality, Inter personality, Rule orientation and Neutrality. The Human Relations Approach: The basic of the human relations theory lies in its primary in human beings, psychological motivations and informal group behavior in the organisation. This theory focuses on management as a web of interpersonal relationships and it is also based on the behavior of role occupants in an organisation than on the formal structure of the organisation. This theory came from the Hawthorne experiment which were carried out in the USA by Elton Mayo and his colleagues of the Harvard Business School in the late 20th century. In the first experiment workers operating under a piece-rate system. On the whole, the significance of Hawthorne investigation was in discovering the informal organisation which it is now realized exists in all organisations. Behavioral Approach: Herbert Simon, Douglas McGregor, Abraham Maslow, Kurt Lewin, Chester Barnard, Mary Parker Follet, Rensis Likert and Wanen Bennis are some of the foremost behavioral scientists who contributed in the development of the Behavioral approach to organisation.

approach to organisation. Behavioural scientists explain that an industrial organisation should be considered a social system which has both economic and social dimension. Every member of the organisation is unique to some degree. 1.3.6 Public Policy making: The model of public policy making are more concerned with the objective of forming better policies for the state. The public policy maker as a person who does not have the brain, time, and money to fashion truly different policies. Public policy-making organs in India are, Constitution, Parliament, Cabinet, Planning Commission, National Development Council, Judiciary, Civil Services, Press, Political Posters, Pressure and Interest Groups, Professional Associations, and Voluntary Organisations. In our nation, policy is formulated by the cabinet or minister but it is implemented by the civil servants. Policy-making is done at the Union and State level in India. 1.3.7New Public Administration: New Public Administration was used to describe new philosophical outlook for public administration, which is specially based on efficiency and economy. It began to be said that efficiency is not the soul of public administration. Man is the focal point of all administration activities who cannot be subjected to the mechanical test of efficiency. New public administration is movement inspired by younger scholars. Overall, the new public administration has stressed on four important goals relevance, values, equity, and change. 15 Therefore, it is no doubt that, the study of public administration is a systematic body of knowledge which is mainly study of administrative system of the organisation. It goals to improve production and create efficiency of workers. In the public administration, the organisation is based on scientific management which is need for modern welfare state. Thus, administrative theory really is very useful for the modern state because it is based on the scientific management. It brings change in structure and process of the system of the government organisation. At last, it brings a new kind of public administration in the modern state, of which basic aim is managerial orientation. 1.4.

Behavioral scientists explain that an industrial organisation should be considered a social system which has both economic and social dimension. Every member of the organisation is unique to some degree. Public Policy making: The model of public policy making are more concerned with the objective of forming better policies for the state. The public policy maker as a person who does not have the brain, time, and money to fashion truly different policies. Public policy-making organs in India are, Constitution, Parliament, Cabinet, Planning Commission, National Development Council, Judiciary, Civil Services, Press, Political Posters, Pressure and Interest Groups, Professional Associations, and Voluntary Organisations. In our nation, policy is formulated by the cabinet or minister but it is implemented by the civil servants. Policy-making is done at the Union and State level in India. New Public Administration: New Public Administration was used to describe new philosophical outlook for public administration, which is specially based on efficiency and economy. It began to be said that efficiency is not the soul of public administration. Man is the focal point of all administration activities who cannot be subjected to the mechanical test of efficiency. New public administration is movement inspired by younger scholars. On the whole, new public administration has stressed on four important goals relevance, values, equity and change. Therefore, it is no doubt that, the study of public administration is a systematic body of knowledge which is mainly study of administrative system of the organisation. It goals to improve production and create efficiency of workers. In the public administration, the organisation is based on scientific management which is need for modern welfare state. Thus, administrative theory really is very useful for the modern state because it is based on the scientific management. It bring change in structure and process of the system of the government organisation. At last it bring a new kind of public administration in the modern state, of which basic aim is managerial orientation.

W https://www.owlgen.in/discuss-the-theory-building-in-public-administrative/

11/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

Dror, Y. (1964). Muddling through-science or inertia? Public Administration Review.24. Dror, Y. (1989).

Dror, Y., Muddling through—"Science" or Inertia?, Public Administration Review, 24, 153–157, 1964. Dror, Y.,

W https://himia.umj.ac.id/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/Handbook-of-Public-Administration-By-Jack-Rabi ...

12/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	17 WORDS	75%	MATCHING TEXT	17 WORDS

W. & Gunn, L.A. (1987). Policy Analysis for the Real World. London: Oxford University Press.

W. and Gunn, Lewis A., Policy Analysis for the Real World, Oxford University Press,

W https://himia.umj.ac.id/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/Handbook-of-Public-Administration-By-Jack-Rabi ...

13/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	34 WORDS	41%	MATCHING TEXT	34 WORDS

After studying this unit, you will be able to: 1. Discuss the essential features, merits, and limitations of the Ecological Approach to the study of Comparative Public Administration; 2. Appreciate the

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

14/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	69 WORDS	57%	MATCHING TEXT	69 WORDS

the ecology of Public Administration. i.e. the interaction of administration and its environment, it is necessary to have an understanding of the society and the various factors affecting its functioning. The ecological approach to the study of public Administration was initiated by J.M. Gaus, Robert A. Dahl and Robert A. Merton long before Fred W. Riggs. But it was Riggs who made a significant contribution to this approach:

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

15/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	20 WORDS	60%	MATCHING TEXT	20 WORDS

the relationship between the administrations and the economic, social, technological, political and communication factors from a wide perspective. He

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

16/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	12 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	12 WORDS

Agraria and Industria- Toward a Typology of Comparative Administration' published in Agraria and Industria: Toward a Typology of Comparative Administration," published in 1955,

W https://pubad-ias.blogspot.com/2011/09/riggesian-models-and-their-critique.html

Ouriginal by Turnitin

17/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	196 WORDS	93%	MATCHING TEXT	196 WORDS

In adopting a deductive procedure, the —fused-prismatic-diffractedll model likewise ignores the ultimate goal of public administration in its attempt to build a value-free science. W. Wilson argues that the primary function of any public administration is to work efficiently. So, it should be obvious that a public administration cannot and should not abandon sure values. Moreover, while the —fused-prismatic-diffracted modelll tends to supplement its theory with empirical proof, it is sometimes hard to find appropriately related proof. The uniqueness of Riggs 'theory is undeniably influential. Yet, his theory is to some extent predicated on logical speculation or assumptions. For instance, Riggs believes that formalism is the primary and sole factor in rising administrative hierarchical power within prismatic societies. This argument, though, is too simple and unequivocal to accept. To illustrate his argument, Riggs uses American society as his model of a diffracted society. The shortcoming here is, although American society is a developed and industrialized country, one cannot infer that it is free of formalism and no longer a prismatic society. So, the theoretical hypothesis that American society is a model which one should use in constructing a diffracted society is both inappropriate and unsatisfactory.

In adopting a deductive process, the "fused-prismatic-diffracted" model likewise ignores the ultimate goal of public administration in its attempt to build a value-free science. W. Wilson argues that the primary function of any public administration is to work efficiently. Therefore, it should be obvious that a public administration cannot and should not abandon certain values. Moreover, while the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" tends to supplement its theory with empirical evidence, it is sometimes difficult to find appropriately related evidence. The uniqueness of Riggs' theory is undeniably influential. Yet, his theory is to some extent predicated on logical speculation or assumptions. For instance, Riggs believes that formalism is the primary and sole factor in increasing administrative hierarchical power within prismatic societies. This argument, however, is too simple and unequivocal to accept. To illustrate his argument, Riggs uses American society as his model of a diffracted society. The shortcoming here is, although American society is a developed and industrialized country, one cannot infer that it is free of formalism and no longer a prismatic society. Therefore, the theoretical hypothesis that American society is a model which one should use in constructing a diffracted society is both inappropriate and unsatisfactory.

W https://pubad-ias.blogspot.com/2011/09/riggesian-models-and-their-critique.html

18/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 163 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 163 WORDS

to avoid. From a purely functional or linguistic point of view, the —fused prismatic-diffracted model uses too much terminology and dedicated jargon. To understand it, one necessity patiently wades through the definitions provided by Riggs himself. Therefore, in designing a new model, and in the effort to distinguish it from others, Riggs recognized a unique vocabulary that has no application whatsoever to other models. In addition, from a structural perspective, the —fused-prismatic-diffractedll model is awkwardly divided into three sections. This kind of organization reflects the model ‘s formalist limitations. Factors that cause or instigate social transformations are latent, unstable, and indefinite at best. In describing the development of Middle Eastern society, D. Lerner ‘s —The Passing of Traditional Society proves this point decisively. Certainly, there are societies whose transformations have occurred as a result of powerful external forces. Under these circumstances, if one insists on using the —fused-prismatic diffractedll model for analytical purposes, the result would be irrelevant to the facts 2.8

to avoid. From a purely functional or linguistic point of view, the “fused-prismatic-diffracted” model uses too much terminology and specialized jargon. To understand it, one must patiently wade through the definitions provided by Riggs himself. Thus, in designing a new model, and in the effort to distinguish it from others, Riggs established a unique vocabulary that has no application whatsoever to other models. In addition, from a structural perspective, the “fused-prismatic-diffracted” model is awkwardly divided into three sections. This type of organization reflects the model’s formalist limitations. Factors that cause or instigate social transformations are latent, unstable, and indefinite at best. In describing the evolution of Middle Eastern society, D. Lerner’s “The Passing of Traditional Society” proves this point decisively. Certainly, there are societies whose transformations have occurred as a result of powerful external forces. Under these circumstances, if one insists on using the “fused prismatic diffracted” model for analytical purposes, the result would be irrelevant to the facts.

W https://pubad-ias.blogspot.com/2011/09/riggesian-models-and-their-critique.html

19/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 42 WORDS 78% MATCHING TEXT 42 WORDS

Riggs openly admits that the prismatic model is appropriate only for examining phenomena that occur throughout the social transformation procedure. In an actual society, though, —independent variablesll and —dependent variablesll are complex and therefore hard to predict. Consequently, causal inference is

Riggs openly admits that the prismatic model is suitable only in examining phenomena that occur during the social transformation process. In an actual society, however, “independent variables” and “dependent variables” are complex and thus hard to predict. Consequently, causal inference is

W https://pubad-ias.blogspot.com/2011/09/riggesian-models-and-their-critique.html

20/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 33 WORDS 62% MATCHING TEXT 33 WORDS

principles and behavioural theories concentrate on human behaviour in the organisation. But ecological theories emphasise the interaction of administration with its environment. ? Both in content and in analysis, Riggs's ecological

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

21/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

the administrative system. His approach and models help us in examining the administrative process in developing countries.

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

22/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

Arora, Ramesh K. 2021. Comparative Public Administration: An Ecological Perspective. New Delhi: New Age International. Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York. Marcel Dekker.

Arora, Ramesh K. 2021. Comparative Public Administration: An Ecological Perspective. New Delhi: New Age International. Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

23/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

Ferrel. 1979. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey: Prentice-Hall,

Ferrel Heady: Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective: 3 rd Englewood Cliffs: New Jersey: Prentice-Hall, 1984. [5]

W https://www.ijsr.net/archive/v5i1/NOV152468.pdf

24/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 36 WORDS 63% MATCHING TEXT 36 WORDS

his administrative models are difficult to find, they help us in appreciating the realities. ? The Sala model provides an opportunity to analyse and understands the administrative system in developing countries. It also facilitates

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

25/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

Administration in Developing Countries: Theory of Prismatic Society. Boston: Houghton Mifflin.

Administration in Developing Countries: The Theory of Prismatic Society (Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1964)

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

26/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

of Public Administration. New Delhi: Asia Publishing House. Riggs, Fred W. 2006. "The

of Public Administration, New Delhi. Bombay, Asia Publishing House. Riggs, F. W. (1964). The

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

27/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

a situation in which every function has a corresponding specialised structure for its performance. ?

SA MPM415 COMPARATIVE PUBLIC MANAGEMENT.docx (D86981748)

28/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 50% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

After studying this unit, one will be able to ? Understand the beginning of the era of comparative public administration in the

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

29/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 43 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 43 WORDS

the inherent normative implication of Public Administration (2) what a science of Public Administration must be based upon a study of human behaviour and (3) that "as long as the study of Public Administration is not comparative, claims for a science

The inherent normative implication of public administration, 2. What a science of public administration must be based upon a study of human behavior, and 3. That "as long as the study of public administration is not comparative, claims for a science

W https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf

30/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

ecological approach. Administration and its environment influence each other and an understanding of

Ecological Approach Administration and its environment influence each other and the understanding of

W https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf

31/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

of this process is necessary to understand administration. This approach is known as of this process is necessary to understand administration. This approach is known as

W https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf

32/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	13 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	13 WORDS

ecological approach. The word 'ecology' is borrowed from biology where it suggested ecological approach. The word 'ecology' is borrowed from biology where it suggested

W https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf

33/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	39 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	39 WORDS

between an animal species and its natural environment. The Ecological approach to the study of public administration was initiated (in the order) by J.M. Gans (1947), Robert. A. Dahl (1969), Roscoe Martin (1952) and FW. Riggs (1961).

between an animal species and its natural environment. The Ecological approach to the study of public administration was initiated (in the order) by J.M. Gans (1947), Robert. A. Dahl (1969), Roscoe Martin (1952) and FW. Riggs (1961).

W https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf

34/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	189 WORDS	98%	MATCHING TEXT	189 WORDS

In 1961, F.W. Riggs in his book, "The Ecology of Public Administration" explored from a comparative perspective the interaction between public administration and the environment in which it develops. In analysing the administrative system from the ecological point of view, Riggs mainly used the structural- functional approach. Talcott Parsons, Robert Merton, Marion Levy, Gabriel Almond and David Apter are the other thinkers who adopted this approach in their works. The ecological approach views public bureaucracy as a social institution which is continuously interacting with the economic, political and socio-cultural sub-systems of a society. Bureaucracy is not only affected by these environmental systems but also affects them in turn. Thus, this approach emphasizes the necessary interdependence of public bureaucracy and its environment. In the opinion of Riggs, administrative institutions are shaped and affected by their social, economic, cultural and political environment. Therefore, he emphasizes that to understand better the real nature, operations and behaviour of a particular administrative system, one should identify and understand deeply various environmental factors influencing it. The ecological approach determines how an administrative system operates in practice. Thus, it is useful to understand administrative realities.

In 1961, F.W. Riggs in his book, "The Ecology of Public Administration" explored from a comparative perspective the interaction between public administration and the environment in which it develops. In analysing the administrative system from the ecological point of view, Riggs mainly used the structural- functional approach. Talcott Parsons, Robert Merton, Marion Levy, Gabriel Almond and David Apter are the other thinkers who adopted this approach in their works. The ecological approach views public bureaucracy as a social institution which is continuously interacting with the economic, political and socio-cultural sub systems of a society. Bureaucracy is not only affected by these environmental systems but also affects them in turn. Thus, this approach emphasizes the necessary interdependence of public bureaucracy and its environment. In the opinion of Riggs, administrative institutions are shaped and affected by their social, economic, cultural and political environment. Therefore, he emphasizes that in order to understand better the real nature, operations and behavior of a particular administrative system, one should identify and understand deeply in various environmental factors influencing it. The ecological approach determines how an administrative system operates in practice. Thus it is useful to understand administrative realities. 3.

W https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf

35/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	693 WORDS	96%	MATCHING TEXT	693 WORDS

Fred W. Riggs' article "Agraria and Industrial Toward a Typology of Comparative Administration," published in 1955, won him wide acclaim among scholars. Since the publications of The Ecology of Public Administration (1961) and Administration in Developing Countries (1964), Riggs' position and reputation in the field of comparative public administration have been peerless. T. Parsons once said that "sociologists all critique Max Weber, but no one can do social research independently and scientifically without referring to Weber's theories." In the same manner, those who study comparative public administration will criticize Fred W. Riggs' "fused-prismatic-diffracted model," but in conducting research, no one is free of Riggs' influence. The limits of Riggs' theory can be summarized along the following lines. First, one school of thought that supports the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" believes that this model can replace empirical studies in general. In other words, empirical studies are regarded as having little to no value. The primary reason for this stems from the perspective that empirical studies are time-consuming and expensive. As Milne astutely points out, however, it is dangerous for novice scholars to rely entirely upon model theories. Shortcomings arise when scholars erroneously believe that once one is familiar with one model of administrative theory, one can draw broad conclusions about the administrative features of all regions without conducting empirical research. A second critique of Riggs' theory identifies the scope of the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" as being too broad and abstract. Riggs' structural function studies, which include several cultural factors-including economic, social, and political-are difficult to follow. Therefore, some scholars may be tempted to denounce this kind of large-scale theory as middle-range theory, and hence, consider empirical investigations as supplemental. The objective is thus to shorten the distance between theory and practice. Concrete examples include the study of the influence of foreign capital enterprises on political transformations and minutely detailed categorizations of the hierarchical power system. Another critique of the "fused-prismatic-diffracted" model argues that while it is predicated on the notion of deduction, there is little empirical evidence to support it. Most sciences require empirical evidence so that results can be verified, not only repeatedly but also at any time and place. Moreover, objective comparisons would then likewise be possible. Riggs, however, endeavours to prescribe "formalism" as a given standard, and most scholars consider this concept unsatisfactory.

Fred W. Riggs' article "Agraria and Industria: Toward a Typology of Comparative Administration," published in 1955, won him wide acclaim among scholars. Since the publications of The Ecology of Public Administration (1961) and Administration in Developing Countries (1964), Riggs' position and reputation in the field of comparative public administration has been peerless. T. Parsons once said that "sociologists all critique Max Weber, but no one can do social research independently and scientifically without referring to Weber's theories." In the same manner, those who study comparative public administration will criticize Fred W. Riggs' "fused-prismatic diffracted model," but in conducting research, no one is free of Riggs' influence. The limits of Riggs' theory can be summarized along the following lines. First, one school of thought that supports the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" believes that this model can replace empirical studies in general. In other words, empirical studies are regarded as having little to no value. The primary reason for this stems from the perspective that empirical studies are time-consuming and expensive. As Milne astutely points out, however, it is dangerous for novice scholars to rely entirely upon model theories. Shortcomings arise when scholars erroneously believe that once one is familiar with one model of administrative theory, one can draw broad conclusions about the administrative features of all regions without conducting empirical research. A second critique of Riggs' theory identifies the scope of the "fused-prismatic diffracted model" as being too broad and abstract. Riggs' structural function studies, which include several cultural factors--including economic, social, and political—are difficult to follow. Therefore, some scholars may be tempted to denounce this kind of large-scale theory as middle-range theory, and hence, consider empirical investigations as supplemental. The objective is thus to shorten the distance between theory and practice. Concrete examples include the study of the influence of foreign capital enterprises on political transformations, and minutely detailed categorizations of hierarchical power systems. LACK OF EMPIRICAL EVIDENCE Another critique of the "fused-prismatic-diffracted" model argues that while it is predicated on the notion of deduction, there is little empirical evidence to support it. Most sciences require empirical evidence so that results can be verified, not only repeatedly but also at any time and place. Moreover, objective comparisons would then likewise be possible. Riggs, however, endeavors to prescribe "formalism" as a given standard, and most scholars

Moreover, when scholars attempt to use Riggs' model to study the administrative systems of foreign countries, they often encounter numerous difficulties. Scholars have also found that in some cases the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" ignores certain variables, but in others it exaggerates them. For instance, as Riggs himself pointed out, aside from cultural factors others should also be considered. These include historical background, the political structure of postcolonial countries, territorial size, the status of hierarchical power, and the role of the military, as well as social ideologies. Most importantly, the unique circumstances of each country will have a profound influence on administrative behaviour. Yet, these are factors Riggs seldom discusses. In adopting a deductive process, the "fused prismatic-diffracted" model likewise ignores the ultimate goal of public administration in its attempt to build a value-free science. W. Wilson argues that the primary function of any public administration is to work efficiently. Therefore, it should be obvious that a public administration cannot and should not abandon certain values. Moreover, while the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" tends to supplement its theory with empirical evidence, it is sometimes difficult to find appropriately related evidence. The uniqueness of Riggs' theory is undeniably influential. Yet, his theory is to some extent 33 predicated on logical speculation or assumptions. For instance, Riggs believes that formalism is the primary and sole factor in increasing administrative hierarchical power within prismatic societies. This argument, however, is too simple and unequivocal to accept. To illustrate his argument, Riggs uses American society as his model of a diffracted society. The shortcoming here is, although American society is a developed and industrialized country, one cannot infer that it is free of formalism and no longer a prismatic society. Therefore, the theoretical hypothesis that American society is a model which one should use in constructing a diffracted society is both inappropriate and unsatisfactory. 3.5

consider this concept as unsatisfactory. Moreover, when scholars attempt to use Riggs' model to study the administrative systems of foreign countries, they often encounter numerous difficulties. Scholars have also found that in some cases the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" ignores certain variables, but in others it exaggerates them. For instance, as Riggs himself pointed out, aside from cultural factors there are others that should also be considered. These include historical background, the political structure of post-colonial countries, territorial size, the status of hierarchical power, and the role of the military, as well as social ideologies. Most importantly, the unique circumstances of each country will have a profound influence on administrative behavior. Yet, these are factors that Riggs seldom discusses. IGNORING THE ULTIMATE GOAL OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION In adopting a deductive process, the "fused-prismatic-diffracted" model likewise ignores the ultimate goal of public administration in its attempt to build a value-free science. W. Wilson argues that the primary function of any public administration is to work efficiently. Therefore, it should be obvious that a public administration cannot and should not abandon certain values. Moreover, while the "fused-prismatic-diffracted model" tends to supplement its theory with empirical evidence, it is sometimes difficult to find appropriately related evidence. The uniqueness of Riggs' theory is undeniably influential. Yet, his theory is to some extent predicated on logical speculation or assumptions. For instance, Riggs believes that formalism is the primary and sole factor in increasing administrative hierarchical power within prismatic societies. This argument, however, is too simple and unequivocal to accept. To illustrate his argument, Riggs uses American society as his model of a diffracted society. The shortcoming here is, although American society is a developed and industrialized country, one cannot infer that it is free of formalism and no longer a prismatic society. Therefore, the theoretical hypothesis that American society is a model which one should use in constructing a diffracted society is both inappropriate and unsatisfactory.

W https://pubad-ias.blogspot.com/2011/09/riggesian-models-and-their-critique.html

36/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. Englewood Cliffs, New Jersey: Prentice-Hall,

Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective: 3 rd edition: Englewood Cliffs: New Jersey: Prentice-Hall, 1984. [5]

W https://www.ijsr.net/archive/v5i1/NOV152468.pdf

37/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 49 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 49 WORDS

Comparative public administration focuses on Public Administration as a field of study and research rather simple execution of tasks. Haroon A. Khan defined Comparative Public administration as a quest for searching patterns and regularities in administrative behaviour and action and to characterize them in present-day nation-states. 3.3

Comparative public administration focuses on Public Administration as a field of study and research rather simple execution of tasks. Haroon A. Khan defined the Comparative Public administration as a quest for searching patterns and regularities in administrative behavior and action and to characterize them in present day nation states.

W https://www.managementstudyguide.com/comparative-public-administration.htm

38/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 58% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

Waldo, D. (1967) "The study of Public Administration" New York: Random House. Willoughby, W.F. (1927) "Principles of Public Administration"

Waldo: The study of Public Administration: New York; Random House, 1955. [9] Leonard D White, "The Meaning of Principles of Public Administration,"

W https://www.ijsr.net/archive/v5i1/NOV152468.pdf

39/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

A Critique of Fred W. Riggs' Ecology of Public Administration. International Public Management Review, 9(1), 213–226.

SA Upasana Ghosh -Internal Assignment.docx (D37819549)

40/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 157 WORDS 99% MATCHING TEXT 157 WORDS

In 1963, the Comparative Public Administration Group (CAG) was set up, as a committee of the American Society for Public Administration. It was funded from 1963 to 1970 by the Ford Foundation. Fred W. Riggs was the chairman of the group from its inception till the end of 1970. The CAG conducted a series of seminars on comparative administrative systems, focusing on theoretical as well as applied perspectives. It published more than one hundred monographs and brought out several edited anthologies on various themes. The group also sponsored many research studies in countries of Asia, Europe, Latin America, and Africa. Besides, it was instrumental in publishing a quarterly, 'Journal of Comparative Administration' through SAGE publishers; the journal was later re-named Administration and Society, which continues to be published. Among the scholars, who were pioneers in the Comparative Public Administration Movement were Ralph Braibanti, Milton Esman, Ferrel Heady, John Montgomery, Fred Riggs, William Siffin, and Dwight Waldo.

In 1963, the Comparative Public Administration Group (CAG) was set up, as a committee of the American Society for Public Administration. It was funded from 1963 to 1970 by the Ford Foundation. Fred W. Riggs was the chairman of the group from its inception till the end of 1970. The CAG conducted a series of seminars on comparative administrative systems, focusing on theoretical as well as applied perspectives. It published more than one hundred monographs and brought out several edited anthologies on various themes. The group also sponsored many research studies in countries of Asia, Europe, Latin America, and Africa. Besides, it was instrumental in publishing a quarterly, 'Journal of Comparative Administration' through SAGE publishers; the journal was later re-named as Administration and Society, which still continues to be published. Among the scholars, who were pioneers in the Comparative Public Administration Movement were Ralph Braibanti, Milton Esman, Ferrel Heady, John Montgomery, Fred Riggs, William Siffin, and Dwight Waldo.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

41/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 32 WORDS 79% MATCHING TEXT 32 WORDS

Riggs, F. W. (1962). "Trends in the Comparative Study of Public Administration," International Review of Administrative Science Vol. 27(1), 35 Riggs, F. W. (1964). Administration in

Riggs, F. W. (1962). Trends in the comparative study of public administration. International Review of Administrative Sciences, 28(1), 9–15. Scholar • Riggs, F. W. (1998). administration in

W https://link.springer.com/chapter/10.1007/978-981-19-1208-5_5

42/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

The record of this ''golden era'' in comparative public administration is a continuation and expansion of what had already begun during the

The record of this ''golden era'' in comparative public administration is basically a continuation and expansion of what had already begun during the

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

Ouriginal by Turnitin

period. The sheer bulk and great diversity of the output generalizes hazardous. Nevertheless, it is possible to identify some characteristic features, which not only show what was accomplished but also foreshadow some of the predicaments faced later by the comparative administration movement. One obvious enduring influence can be traced to the large-scale post-war effort to export administrative know-how through unilateral and multilateral technical assistance programs. The CAG inherited the then favourable reputation and shared many of the attitudes associated with the public administration technical assistance efforts of the 1950s. Experts in public administration, not only from the United States but from numerous European countries as well, were scattered around the world, engaged in similar projects to export administrative technology, largely drawn from American experience to a multitude of developing countries. Looking back, one of these experts describes the scene as follows: The 1950s was a wonderful period. The ''American Dream'' was the ''World Dream'' – and the best and quickest way to bring that dream into reality was through the mechanism of public administration. The net result of all this enthusiastic action was that in the 1950s public administration was a magic term and public administration experts were magicians, of a sort. They were eagerly recruited by the United States aid-giving agencies and readily accepted most of the new nations, along with a lot of other experts as well. Another well-informed participant observer takes 1955 as the baseline year and describes it as ''a vintage year in a time of faith – faith in the developmental power of administrative tools devised in the West. It was a sanguine year in a time of hope – hope that public administration could lead countries toward modernization. It was a busy year in a brief age of charity – the not-unmixed charity of foreign assistance. 'Members of the CAG, many of whom had been or still were active participants in such programs, shared as a group most of the assumptions of the public administration experts, at least initially. Siffin has provided an accurate and perceptive analysis of the orientations, which marked this era, noting several major features. The first was a tool or technology orientation. The best developed and most widely exported of these processes were in the fields of personnel administration and budgeting and financial administration, but the list included administrative planning, records management, work simplification, tax and revenue administration, and at least the beginnings of computer 38 technology. Part of the tool orientation was a belief that period. The sheer bulk and great diversity of the output makes Comparison in the Study of Public Administration 79 generalizations hazardous. Nevertheless, it is possible to identify some characteristic features, which not only show what was accomplished but also foreshadow some of the predicaments faced later by the comparative administration movement. One obvious enduring influence can be traced to the large-scale postwar effort to export administrative know-how through unilateral and multilateral technical assistance programs. The CAG inherited the then favorable reputation and shared many of the attitudes associated with the public administration technical assistance efforts of the 1950s. Experts in public administration, not only from the United States but from numerous Eu- ropean countries as well, were scattered around the world, engaged in sim- ilar projects to export administrative technology, largely drawn from American experience, to a multitude of developing countries. Looking back, one of these experts describes the scene as follows: The 1950s was a wonderful period. The ''American Dream'' was the ''World Dream'' – and the best and quickest way to bring that dream into reality was through the mech- anism of public administration.y The net result of all this enthusiastic action was that in the 1950s public administration was a magic term and public administration experts were magicians, of a sort. They were eagerly recruited by the United States' aid-giving agencies and readily accepted most of the new nations, along with a lot of other experts as well. 70 Another well-informed participant observer takes 1955 as the baseline year, and describes it as ''a vintage year in a time of faith – faith in the devel- opmental power of administrative tools devised in the West. It was a san- guine year in a time of hope – hope that public administration could lead countries toward modernization. It was a busy year in a brief age of charity – the not-unmixed charity of foreign assistance.'' 71 Members of the CAG, many of whom had been or still were active par- ticipants in such programs, shared as a group most of the assumptions of the public administration experts, at least initially. Siffin has provided an ac- curate and perceptive analysis of the orientations, which marked this era, noting several major features. The first was a tool or technology orientation. The best developed and most widely exported of these processes were in the fields of personnel administration and budgeting and financial administra- tion, but the list included administrative planning, records management, work simplification, tax and revenue administration, and at least the be- ginnings of computer technology. Part of the tool orientation was a belief that

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

Ouriginal by Turnitin

44/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 302 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 302 WORDS

use of the tools could be essentially divorced from the substance of the governmental policies, which they would be serving. Second, there was a structural orientation that placed great emphasis on the importance of appropriate organizational arrangements and assumed that organizational decisions could and should be based on rational considerations. For the most part, organizational forms then popular in the West were thought of as the most fitting, and organizations recommended for the developing countries usually emulated some model familiar to the expert at home. Underlying these administrative manifestations were certain value and contextual orientations that helped explain the specifics of technical assistance recommendations. The instrumental nature of administration was the core value, with related supportive concepts of efficiency, rationality, responsibility, effectiveness, and professionalism. Education and training projects, including the sending of thousands of individuals to developed countries and the establishment of about seventy institutes in developing countries, were designed to inculcate these values as well as transmit technical know-how in specific subjects. Probably most important of all, these normative elements, particularly the commitment to responsibility as a basic value, were in Siffin's words ''predicated upon a certain kind of socio-political context – the kind of context which is distinguished in its absence from nearly every developing country in the world.'' This context included economic, social, political, and intellectual aspects drawn mainly from U.S. experience and to some extent from other Western democratic systems. Politically, for example, these systems operated ''within reasonably stable political frameworks, with limited competition for resources and mandates. In this milieu, administrative technologies provided order more than integration. The political context of administration was generally predictable, supportive, and incrementally expansive.'' In this and other respects, Siffin concluded that ''the radical differences between the U.S. administrative context and various overseas situations were substantially ignored. 4.4.

use of the tools could be essentially divorced from the substance of the governmental policies, which they would be serving. Second, there was a structural orientation that placed great emphasis on the importance of appropriate organizational arrangements, and assumed that organizational FERREL HEADY 80 decisions could and should be based on rational considerations. For the most part, organizational forms then popular in the West were thought of as the most fitting, and organizations recommended for the developing coun- tries usually emulated some model familiar to the expert at home. Underlying these administrative manifestations were certain value and contextual orientations that helped explain the specifics of technical assist- ance recommendations. The instrumental nature of administration was the core value, with related supportive concepts of efficiency, rationality, re- sponsibility, effectiveness, and professionalism. Education and training projects, including the sending of thousands of individuals to developed countries and the establishment of about seventy institutes in developing countries, were designed to inculcate these values as well as transmit tech- nical know-how in specific subjects. Probably most important of all, these normative elements, particularly the commitment to responsibility as a basic value, were in Siffin's words ''predicated upon a certain kind of sociopo-litical context – the kind of context which is distinguished in its absence from nearly every developing country in the world.'' This context included eco- nomic, social, political, and intellectual aspects drawn mainly from U.S. experience and to some extent from other Western democratic systems. Politically, for example, these systems operated ''within reasonably stable political frameworks, with limited competition for resources and mandates. In this milieu, administrative technologies provided order more than inte- gration. The political context of administration was generally predictable, supportive, and incrementally expansive.'' In this and other respects, Siffin concluded that ''the radical differences between the U.S. administrative context and various overseas situations were substantially ignored.'' 72

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

45/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 556 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 556 WORDS

The positive influence and contribution of comparative public administration are summarized as follows: Scientific Study of Public Administration Robert Dahl in his well-known article entitled 'The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems' published in Public Administration Review, (1947) had observed that there cannot be a science of public administration without a comparative analysis. Even James Coleman, an eminent scholar of comparative politics, had observed "You cannot be scientific if you are not comparative." Through comparative analysis of administrative systems, new insights into the administrative reality in cross-national contexts are generated, which can be treated, as hypotheses to be tested empirically in order to draw generalizations that may apply to many or select groups of nations. Inter-disciplinary Orientation 39 Comparative public administrative studies have several concepts and methodologies from Political Science, Sociology, Economics, Anthropology, Psychology, and other disciplines. This has broadened and enriched the study of public administration to a greater extent. A good number of scholars from different disciplines have contributed to the development of comparative public administration. 3. Strengthening Ecological Orientation Traditional public administration was confined to the description of administrative structures prevailing in certain western countries like the U.S, Great Britain, and France. The environment of public administration was treated, as 'given'. There was no focus on this issue. Contemporary comparative public administration has boldly advocated for the adoption of an ecological approach to the study of administrative systems. This approach has made administrative analysis more realistic and dynamic. 4. Universalism Comparative studies in public administration have challenged parochialism in western studies. The non-western world has experienced and nurtured its own administrative reality that has been elaborated by a host of comparative scholars of whom many of them are western. The conceptual transformation of even the western administrative analysis can be attributed to the insights provided by comparative public administration. 5. More Rational Use of Foreign Assistance Comparative public administration studies have proved to be catalysts to the capacity building of nations receiving aid from international agencies and big powers. The utilization of such assistance has become more prudent, as a result of insights gained from the experiences of different nations. 6. Holistic Approach 'Grand' theories of comparative public administration, borrowed from Political Science,

The positive influence and contribution of comparative public administration are summarized as follows: 1. Scientific Study Public Administration Robert Dahl in his well-known article entitled 'The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems' published in Public Administration Review, (1947) had observed that there cannot be a science of public administration without a comparative analysis. Even James Coleman, an eminent scholar of comparative politics, had observed "You cannot be scientific if you are not comparative." Through comparative analysis of administrative systems, new insights into the administrative reality in cross-national contexts are generated, which can be treated, as hypotheses to be tested empirically in order to draw generalizations that may apply to many or select groups of nations. 2. Inter -disciplinary Orientation Comparative public administrative studies have several concepts and methodologies from Political Science, Sociology, Economics, Anthropology, Psychology, and other disciplines. This has broadened and enriched the study of public administration to a greater extent. A good number of scholars from different disciplines have contributed to the development of comparative public administration. 3. Str engthening Ecological Orientation T raditional public administration was confined to the description of administrative structures prevailing in certain western countries like the U.S, Great Britain, and France. The environment of public administration was treated, as 'given'. There was no focus on this issue. Contemporary comparative public administration has boldly advocated for the adoption of an ecological approach to the study of administrative systems. This approach has made administrative analysis more realistic and dynamic. 4. Universalism Comparative studies in public administration have challenged parochialism in western studies. The non-western world has experienced and nurtured its own administrative reality that has been elaborated by a host of comparative scholars of whom many of them are western. The conceptual transformation of even the western administrative analysis can be attributed to the insights provided by comparative public administration. 5. Mor e Rational Use of Foreign Assistance Comparative public administration studies have proved to be catalysts to the capacity building of nations receiving aid from international agencies and big powers. The utilization of such assistance has become more prudent, as a result of insights gained from the experiences of different nations. 18 Comparative Public Administration: An Introduction 6. Holistic Approach 'Grand' theories of comparative public

Sociology, and Anthropology may not have strengthened scientific analysis of administrative reality, yet they have expanded the vision of public administration by making its scholars and practitioners more aware of the need to look at administrative systems from a 'holistic' angle. This 'systemic' perspective has augmented the understanding of a variety of administrative systems and their subsystems. 7. Administrative Development Comparative studies of public administration have stressed improvements in the structures, processes, and behavioural patterns of public administrative systems in diverse settings. This approach has highlighted that the processes of socio-economic and even political development get speeded up through effective administrative practices. 8. Development Administration A related benefit of the study of comparative public administration has been in the emergence of the concept of 'development administration,' which has become a key strategy for holistic transformation of various societies. It is accepted widely that development administration is a goal-oriented and a change-oriented administration and is the 40 main engine of all round progress of a country. 4.5.

administration, borrowed from Political Science, Sociology, and Anthropology may not have strengthened scientific analysis of administrative reality, yet they have expanded the vision of public administration by making its scholars and practitioners more aware of the need to look at administrative systems from a 'holistic' angle. This 'systemic' perspective has augmented the understanding of a variety of administrative systems and their subsystems. 7. Administrative Development Comparative studies of public administration have stressed improvements in the structures, processes, and behavioural patterns of public administrative systems in diverse settings. This approach has highlighted that the processes of socio-economic and even political development get speeded up through effective administrative practices. 8. Development Administration A related benefit of the study of comparative public administration has been in the emergence of the concept of 'development administration,' which has become a key strategy for holistic transformation of various societies. It is accepted widely that development administration is a goal-oriented and a change-oriented administration and is the main engine of all round progress of a country. 9.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

46/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 96 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 96 WORDS

The prospects for the comparative public administration movement were not as bright as they had once seemed to be. The period of massive technical assistance in public administration, which had helped launch the movement, was over. The CAG, which had been the organizing force during the years of greatest activity, had lost its separate identity, and the programs it initiated had been ended or cut back. As a source of action-oriented plans for dealing with problems of development administration, the movement had generally been judged disappointing. At any rate, whatever the impact, it had lessened.

the prospects for the comparative public administration movement were obviously not as bright as they had once seemed to be. The period of Comparison in the Study of Public Administration 97 massive technical assistance in public administration, which had helped launch the movement, was over. The CAG, which had been the organizing force during the years of greatest activity, had lost its separate identity, and the programs it initiated had been ended or cut back. As a source of action- oriented plans for dealing with problems of development administration, the movement had generally been judged disappointing. At any rate, whatever the impact, it had lessened.

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

47/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 48 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 48 WORDS

Moreover, earlier optimistic expectations about the possibilities of transferring or inducing a change in developing societies had come into question, as many of these nations were suffering from increasing rather than decreasing problems of economic growth and political stability. As an academic or intellectual enterprise, comparative

Moreover, earlier optimistic expectations about the possibilities of transferring or inducing change in developing societies had come into question, as many of these nations were suffering from in- creasing rather than decreasing problems of economic growth and political stability. As an academic or intellectual enterprise, comparative had moved from a position of innovation and vitality to a more defensive posture, reacting to charges that the promises of its youth had not been fulfilled and to advice from various quarters as to remedial measures. During the decades of the 1980s and 1990s, however, there has been a reassuring revival of activity in comparative public administration. The exuberance of the movement's youth has not been regained, but the field may have attained maturity – a stage of development bringing fewer drastic changes but presenting a new set of challenges and problems.

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

48/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 94 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 94 WORDS

had moved from a position of innovation and vitality to a more defensive posture, reacting to charges that the promises of its youth had not been fulfilled and to advice from various quarters as to remedial measures. During the decades of the 1980s and 1990s, however, there has been a reassuring revival of activity in comparative public administration. The ex- uberance of the movement's youth has not been regained, but the field may have attained maturity – a stage of development bringing fewer drastic changes but presenting a new set of challenges and problems.

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

49/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 83 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 83 WORDS

The students of public administration still study comparative public administration whenever any necessity arises. The meteoric rise of comparative public administration was due to the formation of Comparative Administration Group and financial help given by the Ford Foundation. Today, students of public administration do not display excessive interest in the subject. But sometimes they say that the administrative systems of different countries should be studied in a comparative way in order to have a full understanding of all aspects of the subject.

The students of public administration still study comparative public administration whenever any necessity arises. The meteoric rise of comparative public administration was due to the formation of Comparative Administration Group and financial help given by the Ford Foundation. Today, students of public administration do not display excessive interest in the subject. But sometimes they say that the administrative systems of different countries should be studied in a comparative way in order to have a full understanding of all aspects of the subject.

W https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf

50/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 34 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 34 WORDS

the co-existence of normative studies, empirical studies, ideographic studies, nomothetic studies, non-ecological studies, and ecological studies in the discipline of comparative public administration and this co-existence represents the nature of the discipline. ?

the co-existence of normative studies, empirical studies, ideographic studies, nomothetic studies, non-ecological studies, and ecological studies in the discipline of comparative public administration and this co-existence represents the nature of the discipline.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

51/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

contributing to the science of public administration, re-enforcing the Inter-disciplinary and ecological orientation, calling for development administration. ?

contributing to the science of public administration, re-enforcing the Inter-disciplinary and ecological orientation, calling for development administration

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

52/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

the intellectual development of the discipline of public administration and has broadened its structure, processes, roles, and behaviour, as such. 4.7.

the intellectual development of the discipline of public administration and has broadened its structure, processes, roles, and behaviour, as such.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

53/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

thousands of individuals were sent to developed countries and the establishment of about seventy institutes in developing countries, thousands of individuals to developed countries and the establishment of about seventy institutes in developing countries,

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

54/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Arora, Ramesh K. 2021. Comparative Public Administration: An Ecological Perspective. New Delhi: New Age International.

Arora, Ramesh K. 2021. Comparative Public Administration: An Ecological Perspective. New Delhi: New Age International.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

55/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 68 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 68 WORDS

Today's public administration functions in a different time and faces different challenges, requiring new concepts and methods. Realizing the massive influence of unfolding globalism, comparative public administration opens the door for effective adjustment and transition from traditional, ethnocentric perspectives to a wider scope that integrates knowledge from various places and cultures. There is no one way to get to the place where public administration ought to be.

Today's public administration functions in a different time and faces different challenges, requiring new concepts and methods. Realizing the massive influence of unfolding globalism, comparative public administration opens the door for effective adjustment and transition from traditional, ethnocentric perspectives to a wider scope that integrates knowledge from various places and cultures. There is no one way to get to the place where public administration ought to be.

W https://www.iicseonline.org/comparative_public_administration2.pdf

56/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker.

Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

57/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

Ferrel, and Sybil S. Stokes, eds. 1960. Comparative Public Administration: A Selective Annotated Bibliography. 2nd ed. Ann Arbor: The University of Michigan,

Ferrel Heady and Sybil L. Stokes, Comparative Public Administration: A Selective Annotated Bibliography, 2nd ed. (Ann Arbor, MI: Institute of Public Administration, The University of Michigan, 1960)

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

58/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

Henry, Nicholas. 2004. Public Administration and Public Affairs. Upper Sadle River, N.J.: Pearson.

Henry, Nicholas. 2004. Public Administration and Public Affairs. Upper Sadle River, N.J.: Pearson.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

59/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Jreisat, J. E. (2005). Comparative Public Administration Is Back In, Prudently. Public Administration Review, 65(2), 231–242.

Jreisat, J. E. (2005). Comparative public administration is back in, prudently. Public Administration Review, 65(2), 231–242.

W https://link.springer.com/chapter/10.1007/978-981-19-1208-5_5

60/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	15 WORDS	95%	MATCHING TEXT	15 WORDS

Dahl, Robert, 1947. ''The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems,'' Public Administration Review 7,

Dahl, Robert The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7(1): 1-11.

W https://www.american.edu/spa/dpap/degrees/upload/puad-608-hafner-mpa.pdf

61/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	16 WORDS	90%	MATCHING TEXT	16 WORDS

Public Administration: Understanding Management, Politics, and Law in the Public Sector. 4th ed. New York:

Public Administration: Understanding Management, Politics and the Law in the Public Sector, 6th McGraw-Hill, New York, 2004.

W https://himia.umj.ac.id/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/Handbook-of-Public-Administration-By-Jack-Rabi ...

62/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	16 WORDS	78%	MATCHING TEXT	16 WORDS

William J., ed. 1957. Toward the Comparative Study of Public Administration. Bloomington: Indiana University Press.

William J. Siffin (ed.), Toward the Com- parative Study of Public Administration (Bloomington, IN: Indiana University Press, 1977),

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

63/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	13 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	13 WORDS

the Comparative Administration Group (CAG) of the American Society for Public Administration..

the Comparative Administration Group (CAG) of the American Society for Public Administration (

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

64/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	11 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	11 WORDS

the development of public administration as a field of study,

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

65/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	90%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

Jones, L. R. (2007). The Consummate Comparative Public Administrationist: A Tribute to Ferrel Heady (1916-2006). Public Administration

Jones, L. R., & Klingner, D. E. (2007). The consummate comparative public administrationist: A tribute to Ferrel Heady, 1916–2006. Public Administration

W https://link.springer.com/chapter/10.1007/978-981-19-1208-5_5

66/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 57% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

the comparative study of public administration and governance. 5.7 KEYWORDS 1. Comparative Public Administration - The study of public administration systems and	the Comparative Study of Public Administration". Answer: Comparative Public administration is the subset of public administration, and

W https://unacademy.com/content/upsc/study-material/public-administration/comparative-public-admini ...

67/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 60% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

After reading this unit, students will be able to ? Discuss the basic concept of public choice theory ? Explain the

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

68/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

It is the subset of positive political theory that studies self-interested agents like Voters, politicians and bureaucrats and their interactions	it is the subset of positive political theory that studies self-interested agents (voters, politicians, bureaucrats) and their interactions,

W https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Public_choice

69/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

Public choice has roots in positive analysis but is often used for normative purposes in order to identify a problem or	Public choice analysis has roots in positive analysis ("what is") but is often used for normative purposes ("what ought to be") in order to identify a problem or

W https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Public_choice

70/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

the application of economics to the analysis of non-market decision- making

SA KEY PAPER 2019 PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY.docx (D93844872)

71/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

precursor of modern public choice theory was the work of	precursor of modern public choice theory was the work of

W https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Public_choice

72/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	12 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	12 WORDS

Social Choice and Individual Values (1951) influenced formulation of the theory

Social Choice and Individual Values (1951) influenced formulation of the theory.

W https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Public_choice

73/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	23 WORDS	95%	MATCHING TEXT	23 WORDS

Public choice takes the principles that economists use to analyse people's actions in the marketplace and applies them to people's actions in

SA Coursework2.pdf (D23885180)

74/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	51 WORDS	98%	MATCHING TEXT	51 WORDS

the economic study of non-market decision making or simply application of economics to political science. The subject matter of Public Choice is same as that of political science: the theory of the state, voting rules, voter behaviour, party politics, the bureaucracy and so on. The methodology of Public Choice is

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

75/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	19 WORDS	55%	MATCHING TEXT	19 WORDS

When this premise applied to the role of the government and bureaucracy, Public choice theory makes an important decision- making, the public choice approach denies the legitimacy of decision making at the group level. 2.

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

76/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	71%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

77/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 53% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

politics should not analysed from a 'public interest' perspective but, rather from an 'individual gain-maximizing' concept. Even the politicians, bureaucrats, and voters also act to

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

78/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 31 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 31 WORDS

realisation of certain ends arises as a result of bargaining and exchange among individuals. However, the exchange takes place in the political sphere or public sphere rather than the market

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

79/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

Exchange takes place in political realm between various players to gain mutual benefits. 1.8

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

80/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 33 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 33 WORDS

The conceptual framework pivoting on bureaucratization theory they adopted at its inception as an academic discipline, led to a theoretical crisis and a practical dead-end. Vincent Ostrom offered an alternative: Public Choice.

The conceptual framework pivoting on bureaucratization theory they adopted at its inception as an academic discipline, led to a theoretical crisis and a practical dead-end. Vincent Ostrom offered an alternative: Public Choice.

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

81/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

Public Choice has profoundly and programmatically engaged the territory of an already established domain, the field and practice of Public Administration.

Public Choice has to profoundly and programmatically engage the territory of an already established domain, the field and practice of Public Administration.

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

82/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	16 WORDS	80%	MATCHING TEXT	16 WORDS

policy issues means dealing with the mechanisms and the processes of the modern administrative state.

policy issues means dealing with the mechanisms and processes of the modern administrative state.

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

83/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	125 WORDS	93%	MATCHING TEXT	125 WORDS

choice. Public Administration is first and foremost about the building, maintaining and operating in real life structures and processes that function as preconditions the infrastructure and determinants of real-life public policies and their management. From the operation of the electoral system to the implementation of macroeconomic policies, from the monitoring and enforcement of constitutional rules to the regulatory framework of the market, the apparatus of Public Administration is vital. Ostrom pointed that Public Administration and Public Choice are connected intrinsically, they seem to be different facets of the same coin. In brief, Public Choice, whether one is aware of it or not, whether one likes it or not, is, when it comes to the applications, more about Public Administration than about anything else.

Choice. Public Administration is first and foremost about the building, maintaining and operating in real- life structures and processes that function as preconditions the infrastructure and deter- minants of real-life public policies and their management. From the operation of the electoral system to the implementation of macroeconomic policies, from the monitoring and enforcement of constitutional rules to the regulatory framework of the market, the apparatus of Public Administration is vital. Seen in this light, it looks like Public Administration and Public Choice are connected intrinsically, they seem to be different facets of the same coin. In brief, Public Choice, whether one is aware of it or not, whether one likes it or not, is, when it comes to the applications, more about Public Administration than about anything else. 112

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

84/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	15 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	15 WORDS

of Public Choice, the Bloomington scholars were the main promoters of the Public Choice

of Public Choice, the Bloomington scholars were the main promoters of the Public Choice

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

85/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	14 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	14 WORDS

Public Choice should be in fact the foundational theoretical framework for Public Administration.

Public Choice should be in fact the foundational theoretical framework for Public Administration.

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

86/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 57 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 57 WORDS

In the ‘60s and ‘70s their work was in many respects defined by a systematic attempt not only to introduce Public Choice insights into the discipline dealing with the study of the administrative side of public affairs but, even more, to revolutionize this field, to incite a ‘‘paradigm shift’’ towards the Public Choice foundational principles. 1.10

In the ‘60s and ‘70s their work was in many respects defined by a systematic attempt not only to introduce Public Choice insights into the discipline dealing with the study of the administrative side of public affairs but, even more, to revolutionize this field, to incite a ‘‘paradigm shift’’ towards the Public Choice foundational principles.

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

87/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

Public Choice has profoundly and programmatically engaged the territory of an already established domain, the field and practice of Public Administration. 60 1.12

Public Choice has to profoundly and programmatically engage the territory of an already established domain, the field and practice of Public Administration.

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

88/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

the proper foundation of Public Administration is in Public Choice theory. The proper operational basis of Public Choice is Public Administration’’(

The proper foundation of Public Administration is in Public Choice theory. The proper operational basis of Public Choice is Public Administration. 116

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

89/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

applies the methods of economics to the theory and practice of politics and government.

SA KEY PAPER 2019 PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY.docx (D93844872)

90/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

Aligica, Paul Dragos. (2015) Public Administration, Public Choice and the Ostroms: the achievements, the failure, the promise.

Aligica, Paul Dragos, Public Administration, Public Choice and the Ostroms: The Achievement, the Failure, the Promise (2013). 50

W https://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=2242208

91/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 60% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

Consent, Constitutions and Contrast; Public Choice Perspectiveon the state. In Dhameja, A Contemporary Debate in Public Administration. New Delhi,

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

92/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

Ostrom, Vincent and Ostrom, Elinor. (1971). A Different Approach to The Study of Public Administration.

Ostrom, Vincent and Ostrom, Elinor, "Public Choice: A Different Approach to the Study of Public Administration,"

W https://www.cambridge.org/core/journals/review-of-politics/article/public-administration-public-c ...

93/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 37 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 37 WORDS

Public Administration: Concepts and Theories. New Delhi, India: Sterling Publishers Bhattacharya Mohit. (2010) Public Choice Theory: Government in the New Right Perspective. In Dhameja, A (Ed). Contemporary Debates in Public Administration. New Delhi, India: PHI Learning

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

94/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 50% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

QUESTIONS 2.11 REFERENCES 2.1 Learning Objectives After reading this unit, the student will be able to ? explain about the basic tenets of Public

SA contemporary theoretical perspective.docx (D159756278)

95/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

Public choice takes the same principles that economists use to analyse people's actions in the marketplace and applies them to people's actions in collective decision making

SA Coursework2.pdf (D23885180)

96/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 82% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

the welfare state. They claimed that the public sector has been suffering from inherent systemic failure in terms of policy-making and implementation. 2.6

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

97/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

The incentives for good management in the public interest are weak.

SA Coursework2.pdf (D23885180)

98/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

those who are regulated by the state, themselves capture the regulatory process and earn benefits at the cost of consumers. 2.6.3

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

99/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

broad social sense because the society is not an entity that

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

100/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

the exchanges takes place in the political or public sphere rather than the market

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

101/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 72% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

Consent, Constitutions and Contrast; Public Choice Perspective on the state. In Dhameja, A Contemporary Debate in Public Administration. New Delhi,

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

102/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

Bhattacharya Mohit. (2010) Public Choice Theory: Government in the New Right Perspective. In Dhameja, A (Ed). Contemporary Debates in Public Administration. New Delhi, India: PHI Learning

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

103/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 55% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

Basu, Rumki. (Revised Edn.) (2004) Public Administration: Concepts and Theories. New Delhi, India: Sterling Publishers. Muller D (2008). Public Choice:

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

104/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 58% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

QUESTIONS 3.14 REFERENCES 3.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES After reading this unit, students will be able to ? Discuss the contribution of public

SA contemporary theoretical perspective.docx (D159756278)

105/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 73% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

Buchanan's insights into human nature and political outcome provide an understanding of the perks that motivate political actors and allow more accurate predictions of political

SA KEY PAPER 2019 PUBLIC CHOICE THEORY.docx (D93844872)

106/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 28 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 28 WORDS

constitutive of the public choice approach: (a) politics as exchange and (b) economic constitutionalism or contractarianism as the basis of public policy making.'' ? POLITICS AS EXCHANGE:

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

107/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 31 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 31 WORDS

states that '' Existing constitutions or structures or rules, are the subject of critical scrutiny." Which actually means the provisions given in the constitution are subject to critical review.

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

108/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

bureaucracy within the public choice framework. Niskanen in his book Bureaucracy and Representative Government (1971) argues that those who work in

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

109/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 73 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 73 WORDS

Vincent Ostrom's role as a pivotal figure both as a participant in the initial Public Choice conferences, when Public Choice hadn't settled yet on an official name, and as its key promoter of the theory's use in Public Administration, has also been recognized and reemphasized in a recent article published in Public Administration Review, the flagship journal of the field, by Theo Toonen, a leading Public Administration scholar of the current generation.

Vincent Ostrom's role as a pivotal figure both as a participant in the initial Public Choice conferences, when Public Choice hadn't settled yet on an official name, and as its key promoter of the theory's use in Public Administration, has also been recognized and reemphasized in a recent article published in Public Administration Review, the flagship journal of the field, by Theo Toonen, a leading Public Administration scholar of the current generation.

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

110/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 51 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 51 WORDS

The role Ostroms played at the interface between Public Administration and Public Choice theory is very well captured in Public Choice Theory in Public Administration: An annotated Bibliography by Nicholas Lovrich and Max Neiman, 84 published in 1984, with a foreword by Robert Golembiewski. Some the

The role the Ostroms played at the interface between Public Administration and Public Choice theory is very well captured in Public Choice Theory in Public Administration: An Annotated Bibliography by Nicholas Lovrich and Max Neiman, published in 1984, with a foreword by Robert Golembiewski. The

W https://aligica.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/01/1.-Public-Administration-Public-Choice-and-the-Ost ...

111/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 78% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

to maximize their budget and the size of the bureau. He contends that only by increasing the budget that they can maximize their self-interest.

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

112/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 45 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 45 WORDS

More competition in the delivery of public services. (c)Privatization or contracting out to reduce wastage. (d) Dissemination of more information for public benefit about the availability of alternatives to public services offered on a competitive basis, and at competitive costs. 3.9

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

113/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 84 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 84 WORDS

He mainly advocates for the replacement of the traditional doctrine of 'bureaucratic administration' by the concept of 'democratic administration'. He argues that people should have the power to decide and their demands should be the priority. He further, states that '' bureaucratic structures ae necessary, but not sufficient structures for a productive and responsive public service economy''. In addition, he argues that the best structures for satisfying individual preferences are not centralised bureaucratic agencies but rather more fragmented multi organisational arrangements. ?

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

114/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

decentralisation creates diversity and offers more opportunity for citizen's choice. He further

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

115/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

of all administrative units and states that decentralisation and democracy enhance participation at the work place and grass root level empowerment of the people. 3.10

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

116/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 68% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

Sen. S (2010). Consent, Constitutions and Contrast; Public Choice Perspective on the state. In Dhameja, A Contemporary Debate in Public Administration. New Delhi,

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

117/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

advocates for the replacement of the traditional doctrine of 'bureaucratic administration' by the concept of 'democratic administration'. 3.12

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

118/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 78% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

After reading this unit, students will be able to ? Describe the limitations of public

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

119/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 38 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 38 WORDS

The real issue is now to make the state more 92 democratic and citizen-friendly, and not to relegate it to the background altogether and install the new God of 'market' in its place (

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

120/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 45 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 45 WORDS

The 'public' which the Public choice seeks to cater to are not always the elite or the middle class and needs of the low income group with poor purchasing power can never be met by the market. Lacking a philosophical or ethical foundation, the

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

121/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 43 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 43 WORDS

decisions in terms of individual self- 93 interest, but in terms of the perceived interests of the groups, families, organizations, ethnic groups and national states with which they identify and to whom they are loyal'. 4.5

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

122/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

unit made some reflection on the critical views expressed by various scholars on

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

123/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 41 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 41 WORDS

the real issue is now to make the state more democratic and citizen friendly, and not to relegate it to the background altogether and install the new God of 'market' in its place. 96 ?

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

124/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 72% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

Consent, Constitutions and Contrast; Public Choice Perspective on the state. In Dhameja, A Contemporary Debate in Public Administration. New Delhi,

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

125/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

Bhattacharya Mohit. (2010) Public Choice Theory: Government in the New Right Perspective. In Dhameja, A (Ed). Contemporary Debates in Public Administration. New Delhi, India: PHI Learning

SA Unit 12 Public Choice Approach (FINAL).docx (D44546984)

126/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 69 WORDS 46% MATCHING TEXT 69 WORDS

OF NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT 5.5 PRINCIPLES OF NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT 5.6 IMPACT OF NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT 5.7 NEW PUBLIC MANAGEMENT REFORMS: APPRAISAL 5.8 CONCLUSION 5.9 SUMMARY 5.10 GLOSSARY 5.11 MODEL QUESTIONS 5.12 REFERENCES 5.1 LEARNING OBJECTIVES After reading this unit, students will be able to 98 ? Explain the emergence of New Public Management. ?

SA new public management.docx (D159210533)

127/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 44% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

heralded the birth of the new public management. NPM represents the second reinvention in public administration the first being the New Public Administration of the late 1960s.

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

128/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

entitled 'From Red Tape Results: Creating a Government that Works Better and Costs Less'.

entitled From Red Tape to Results Creating a government that Works Better and Costs Less.

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

129/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

the market, not government, is the best allocator of resources and individuals are the best judges of their own welfare.

SA 新建 Microsoft Office Word 文档.docx (D29583276)

130/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund,

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

131/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

Bhattacharya, Mohit, (2001,) New Horizons of Public Administration, Jawahar Publishers, 112 New Delhi.

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

132/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 70% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

the reasons that led to the emergence of New Public Administration ? Identify the features of

SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

133/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 39 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 39 WORDS

that the "study of public administration inevitable must become a much more broadly based discipline, resting not on a narrowly defined knowledge of techniques and processes, but rather extending to the varying historical, sociological, economic and other conditioning factors..." (2020:4) that the study of public administration must become a much more broadly based discipline, resting not on a narrowly defined knowl- edge of techniques and processes, but rather extending to the varying historical, sociological, economic, and other conditioning factors.

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

134/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

the immediate effect of all one sentence or one paragraph definitions of public administration is mental paralysis rather than enlightenment and stimulation." (2020:4)

the immediate effect of all one sentence or one paragraph definition of public administration is a mental paralysis rather than enlightenment and stimulation".

W https://www.aijbm.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/09/I395661.pdf

135/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

interest than a discipline, more a focus than a separate science...

interest than a discipline, more a focus than a separate science.

W https://himia.umj.ac.id/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/Handbook-of-Public-Administration-By-Jack-Rabi ...

136/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 41 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 41 WORDS

What Minnowbrook helped to inaugurate was a greatly needed and highly significant discussion. Here was fresh and original thinking on the role of Public Administration in the "time of revolutions" in which we find ourselves. - Dwight Waldo, 1970

What Minnowbrook helped to inaugurate was a greatly needed and highly significant discussion. Here was fresh and original thinking on the role of Public Administration in the "time of revolutions" in which we find ourselves. Dwight Waldo, 1970

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

137/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 45 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 45 WORDS

In this book, Marini selected nine papers that cover the more important themes analyzed during the conference. These papers are the following: a) "The Recovery of Relevance in the Study of Public Administration" (Todd R. La Porte) 116

In this book, Marini selected nine papers that cover the more important themes analyzed during the conference. These papers are the following: a) "The Recovery of Relevance in the Study of Public Administration" (Todd R. La Porte)

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

138/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 99 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 99 WORDS

In this essay, La Porte argues that the discipline, profession, values, literature, in short the very components of the public presence of the field of Public Administration, are out of touch with the problems that we face. La Porte then tries to show us the way to 'recover relevance' and bridge the gap with the real world. b) "Social Change and Administrative Adaptation" (Orion F. White, Jr.) White analyses and illustrates some of the important ways that our society is changing, indicates how these changes are affecting the political and administrative reality, and urges the development of

In this essay, La Porte argues that the discipline, pro- fession, values, literature, in short the very components of the public presence of the field of Public Administration, are out of keeping with the problems we face. La Porte then tries to show us the way to 'recover relevance' and bridge the chasm with the real world. b) "Social Change and Administrative Adaptation" (Orion F. White, Jr.) In this work, White analyzes and illus- trates some of the important ways that our society is changing, indicates how these changes are affecting the political and administrative reality, and urges the development of

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

139/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 79 WORDS 81% MATCHING TEXT 79 WORDS

c) “Some Implications of Adaptation Capacity for Organizational and Political Development ”(Robert P. Biller) Biller supports and supplements the La Porte and White view of the state of affairs of the field of Public Administration. He suggests theoretical and practical improvement centre on the concept of development, but along the way he stops to explore several dilemmas of the study and practice of Public Administration, including a redefinition of ‘public’ which incorporates turbulence as an essential element.

c) “Some Implications of Adaptation Capacity for Organizational and Political Development ” (Robert P. Biller) In this discussion, Biller supports and supplements the La Porte and White view of the state of affairs of the field of Public Administration. Biller’s labors on the road to theoretical and practi- cal improvement center on the concept of development, but along the way he stops to explore several dilemmas of the study and practice of Public Admi- nistration, including a redefinition of ‘public’ which incorporates turbulence as a essential element.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

140/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 32 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 32 WORDS

d) “Toward a Theory of Public Administration” (Larry Kirkhart) This is the first paper in Toward a New Public Administration that focuses on the relationship of Public Administration to social-scientific theory.

d) “Toward a Theory of Public Administration” (Larry Kirkhart) This is the first paper in Toward a New Public Administration that focuses on the relationship of Public Administration to social-scientific theory.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

141/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 62 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 62 WORDS

He traces out some of the newer trends in social science, with special reference to philosophy, sociology, and psychology, and attempts to discern their implications for the theory of Public Administration. e) “Normative Theory and Public Administration: Some Suggestions for a Redefinition of Administrative Responsibility” (Michael M. Harmon) He studied Public Administration through the problem of administrative responsibility. He

He traces out some of the newer trends in social science, with special reference to philo- sophy, sociology, and psychology, and attempts to discern their implications for the theory of Public Administration. e) “Normative Theory and Public Administration: Some Suggestions for a Redefinition of Administrative Responsibility” (Michael M. Harmon) Harmon approaches the topic of nor- mative theory in Public Administration through the problem of administrative responsibility. He

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

142/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

quite inadequate in terms of our present social and political state.

quite inadequate in terms of our present social and political state.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

143/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 48 WORDS 76% MATCHING TEXT 48 WORDS

f) "The Scientific and Moral Authority of Empirical Theory of Public Administration" (Philip S. Kronenberg) He presents a critical assessment of empirical theory in Public Administration. Here, he selects 117 two bodies of theoretical literature for special focus: comparative national Public Administration

f) "The Scientific and Moral Authority of Empirical Theory of Public Administration" (Philip S. Kronenberg) Kronenberg presents a critical assessment of empirical theory in Public Adminis- tration. He selects two bodies of theore- tical literature for special focus: com- Public Administration (1971).

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

144/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 63 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 63 WORDS

Public Administration h) "Constraints on Innovation in Policy Making: Economic Development and Political Routines" (Ira Sharkansky)This paper is the first that deals with practical problems of administration. He reflected on some themes that represent an active and growing research debate and tradition in the field of political science that he believes has been of "profound importance for the policy makers".

public administrators. h) "Constraints on Innovation in Policy Making: Economic Development and Political Routines" (Ira Sharkansky) This paper is the first that deals with practical problems of administration. Sharkansky's paper reflects some themes that represent an active and growing research debate and tradition in the field of political science that he believes has been of "profound importance for the policy makers".

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

145/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 38 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 38 WORDS

Analysis, Rationality, and Administrative Decision Making"(S. Kenneth Howard) Howard takes a very critical look at PPB and asks what kind of rationality it is that those who would "rationalize public- expenditure decisions" have in mind. 1.5

Analysis, Rationality, and Administrative Decision Making" (S. Kenneth Howard) Howard takes a very critical look at PPB and asks what kind of rationality it is that those who would "rationalize public- expenditure decisions" have in mind.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

146/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

Towards a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective, edited by Frank Marini (1971).

SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

147/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 58% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

OF NEW PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION New public administration emphasised on four major themes: Relevance, Values, Equity and Change.

OF NEW PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION - New Public Administration literature has stressed four important goals - namely, relevance, values, equity and change. 7.4.1

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

148/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

To what extent are we aware of the social and moral implications of knowledge in Public Administration?

To what extent are we aware of the social and moral implications of knowledge in Public Administration? .

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

149/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 32 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 32 WORDS

less ‘generic’ and more ‘public’ than his forbear, less ‘descriptive’ and more ‘prescriptive’, less ‘institution-oriented’ and more ‘client-impact oriented’, less ‘neutral’ and ‘more normative’ and it is hoped, no less scientific.”

less "generic" and more "public" than his less "descriptive" and more '?prescript.ive", less "institution oriented" and more "client-impact .oriented", less "neutral" and more "normative", and 'it is hoped, no less scientific.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

150/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

a public administration which fails to work for changes which tries to redress the deprivation of minorities will likely be eventually used to repress

A Public, Administration which fails to work for changes, which trier3_to redress the deprivation of minorities, qill likely be eventually used to repress

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

151/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 36 WORDS 79% MATCHING TEXT 36 WORDS

Does Public Administration presently yield knowledge useful to certain institutions in society (usually the dominant ones) and not to others? 118 These hard-hitting questions were challenging the status-quo in public administration.

Does Public Administration presently yield knowledge useful to certain institutions in society (usually the dominant ones) and not to These are very&zXmbing questions challenging the status quo in Public Administration. ' 7.4.2

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

152/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

distributive functions and impact of governmental institutions should be public administration's basic concern.

SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

153/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 68% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

to work for the removal of the wrongs of society and working for the betterment of the socially deprived

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

154/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

to serve the cause of social equity is to actively work towards social change.The

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

155/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Ethics honesty, and responsibility in government have returned again to the lexicon of Public Administration. ?

Ethics, honesty, and responsibility in government have returned again to the lexicon of public administration. 4.

W https://himia.umj.ac.id/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/Handbook-of-Public-Administration-By-Jack-Rabi ...

156/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

Effective Public Administration has come to be defined in the context of an active and participatory citizenry. 1.8

effective Public Administration has come to be defined in the context of an active and participatory citizenry; •

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

157/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Dahl, Robert. 1947. The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7:1–11 ?

Dahl, Robert The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7(1): 1-11.

W https://www.american.edu/spa/dpap/degrees/upload/puad-608-hafner-mpa.pdf

158/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

Heady, Ferrel. 1966. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective, Prentice-Hall. ? Henry, Nicholas. 1975. Public Administration and Public Affairs,

Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker. Henry, Nicholas. 2004. Public Administration and Public Affairs.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

159/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 69% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

Bhattacharya, Mohit. 2001. New Horizons of Public Administration, New Delhi: Jawahar Publishers, ? Bhattacharya, Mohit. Development Administration. New Delhi: Jawahar

SA synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)

160/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

Frank. ed. 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective. Scranton, PA: Chandler. ?

Frank Marini, ed., Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective (Scranton, PA: Chandler

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

161/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

reduction of economic and social discrimination and promotion of life opportunities for all groups. 1.9

SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

162/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

George F., and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

George F . Frederickson and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

163/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 1 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 1 WORDS

Assessing%20the%20Past%20and %20Future%20of%20Public%20Administration%20- %20Reflections%20from%20the%20Minnowbrook%20at %2050%20Conference_0.

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

164/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 82% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, Washington D.C: Georgetown University Press. ?

The Future of Public Administration around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, 1-16. Washington, DC: Georgetown University Press.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

165/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

Public Administration." Public Administration Review 7:200–203. ? Waldo, D. 1980. The Enterprise of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A. ?

Public Administration Fit in?'', Public Administration Review. 61(2), Waldo, D. (1980). The Enterprice of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

166/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

Dwight. 1952 a. "The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration". American Political Science Review 46:81–103

Dwight Waldo. 1952a. The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration. American Political Science Review, 46(1): 81-103.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

167/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 52 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 52 WORDS

of Public Administration 2.2 Introduction "In public administration as governance, it is essential that we do not diminish our institutions to such an extent that we lose our capacity to support the development of sound public policy, as well as our ability to effectively implement that policy." (H. George Frederickson, 1997)

of public administration. Minnowbrook In public administration as governance, it is essential that we do not diminish our institutions to such an extent that we lose our capacity to support the devel- opment of sound public policy, as well as our ability to effectively implement that policy. – H. George Frederickson, 1997 9

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

168/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 57% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

the problems of the emerging future. Minnowbrook II was designed to compare and contrast the changing epochs of public administration.	the University of Kansas, organized the Minnowbrook II conference "to compare and contrast the changing epochs of public administration." 11

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

169/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

what promises to be a future declining market share, as the United States faces the reality of a global economy and a changing industrial base".	what promises to be a future of declining market share, as the United States faces the reality of a global economy and a changing industrial base.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

170/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 33 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 33 WORDS

which challenged Public Administration to become proactive with regard to social issue, "Minnow II retreated from an action perspective to cerebral examination of democracy, ethics, responsibility, philosophy and even economics. Finally, Mary	which challenged Public Administration to become proactive with regard to social issues, Minnowbrook II retreated from an action perspective to cerebral examinations of democracy, ethics, responsibility, philosophy, and even economics. Mary

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

171/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 70% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

at peace with its core values and its sense of relevance and purpose". It has also accepted democratic values and	at peace with its core values and its sense of relevance and purpose. Whole-hearted acceptance of democratic values and

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

172/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

the relevance of public administration in a time of social, political, and cultural upheaval. ?	the relevance of public administration in a time of social, political, and cultural upheaval.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

173/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	13 WORDS	83%	MATCHING TEXT	13 WORDS

the evolution of public administration and the consequences for scholarship and practice.

the evolution of public administration and the conse- quences for scholarship and practice.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

174/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	12 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	12 WORDS

to compare and contrast the changing epochs of public administration." ?

to compare and contrast the changing epochs of public administration." 11

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

175/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	15 WORDS	82%	MATCHING TEXT	15 WORDS

half of whom were women, the group included a mix of junior scholars and half of the partici- pants were women, the group included a mix of junior scholars and

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

176/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	14 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	14 WORDS

Social equity and diversity were largely accepted as basic values of public administration.

Social equity and diversity were largely accepted as basic values of public administration,

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

177/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	23 WORDS	92%	MATCHING TEXT	23 WORDS

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference" IBM Centre for The Business of Government

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference IBM Center for The Business of Government

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

178/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	17 WORDS	95%	MATCHING TEXT	17 WORDS

Dahl, Robert. 1947. The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7:1–11 ?

Dahl, Robert The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7(1): 1-11.

W https://www.american.edu/spa/dpap/degrees/upload/puad-608-hafner-mpa.pdf

179/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	19 WORDS	97%	MATCHING TEXT	19 WORDS

George F., and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

George F . Frederickson and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

180/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	17 WORDS	75%	MATCHING TEXT	17 WORDS

Heady, Ferrel. 1966.Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective, Prentice-Hall. ? Henry, Nicholas. 1975.Public Administration and Public Affairs,

Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker. Henry, Nicholas. 2004. Public Administration and Public Affairs.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

181/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	96%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

Frank. ed. 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective. Scranton, PA: Chandler. ?

Frank Marini, ed., Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective (Scranton, PA: Chandler

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

182/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	23 WORDS	92%	MATCHING TEXT	23 WORDS

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference" IBM Centre for The Business of Government

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference IBM Center for The Business of Government

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

183/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	1 WORDS	80%	MATCHING TEXT	1 WORDS

Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20F uture%20of%20Public%20Administration%20- %20Reflections%20from%20the%20Minnowbrook%20at %2050%20Conference_0.

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

184/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 82% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, Washington D.C: Georgetown University Press. ?

The Future of Public Administration around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, 1-16. Washington, DC: Georgetown University Press.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

185/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 30 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 30 WORDS

Public Administration." Public 132 Administration Review 7:200–203. ? Waldo, D. 1980. The Enterprise of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A. ?

Public Administration Fit in?'', Administration Review. 61(2), Waldo, D. (1980). The Enterprice of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

186/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

Dwight. 1952a. "The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration". American Political Science Review 46:81–103

Dwight Waldo. 1952a. The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration. American Political Science Review, 46(1): 81-103.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

187/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 69% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

Bhattacharya, Mohit. 2001.New Horizons of Public Administration, New Delhi: Jawahar Publishers, ? Bhattacharya, Mohit.Development Administration. New Delhi: Jawahar

SA synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)

188/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

increasingly technocratic, performance oriented, and directed toward managing by results.

increasingly technocratic, performance oriented, and directed toward managing by results." 19

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

189/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	12 WORDS	90%	MATCHING TEXT	12 WORDS
the current state of public administration public management and public service			the current state and future of public administration, public management, and public service.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

190/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	12 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	12 WORDS
The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective”			The Future of Public Administration around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, 1-16.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

191/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	17 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	17 WORDS
THE FUTURE OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION, PUBLIC MANAGEMENT, AND PUBLIC SERVICE AROUND THE WORLD 3.2			The future of public administration, public management and public service around the world:

W https://core.ac.uk/download/pdf/96375.pdf

192/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	21 WORDS	90%	MATCHING TEXT	21 WORDS
Public administration as a discipline has evolved for many decades. Academic efforts like the past three Minnowbrook Conferences have helped			Public Administration as a discipline has evolved for many decades. Academic efforts like the two past Minnowbrook conferences have helped

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

193/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	32 WORDS	87%	MATCHING TEXT	32 WORDS
The purpose of Minnowbrooks have been to develop a better understanding of the different positions and start building a consensus about the construction of a science of Public Administration. ?			The purpose of Minnowbrook III should be to develop a better understanding of the different positions and start building a consensus about the construction of a science of Public Administration. 101

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

194/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 78% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

Department of Public Administration, Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University.

Department of Public Administration and International Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, Syracuse University

W https://global.oup.com/academic/product/the-oxford-encyclopedia-of-public-administration-97801908 ...

195/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 76% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

Social equity means that Public Administration should become champion of underprivileged sections of the society.

Social equity means that public administrators should become champions of the underprivileged sections of the society.

W https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC/New%20Public%20Administration,%202nd%20S ...

196/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

reduction of economic and social discrimination and promotion of life opportunities for all groups.

SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

197/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Dahl, Robert. 1947. The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7:1–11 ?

Dahl, Robert The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7(1): 1-11.

W https://www.american.edu/spa/dpap/degrees/upload/puad-608-hafner-mpa.pdf

198/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

George F., and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

George F . Frederickson and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

199/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Heady, Ferrel. 1966.Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective, Prentice-Hall. ? Henry, Nicholas. 1975.Public Administration and Public Affairs,

Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker. Henry, Nicholas. 2004. Public Administration and Public Affairs.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

200/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

Frank. ed. 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective. Scranton, PA: Chandler. ?

Frank Marini, ed., Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective (Scranton, PA: Chandler

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

201/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference" IBM Centre for The Business of Government

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference IBM Center for The Business of Government

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

202/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 1 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 1 WORDS

Assessing%20the%20Past%20and %20Future%20of%20Public%20Administration%20- %20Reflections%20from%20the%20Minnowbrook%20at %2050%20Conference_0.

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

203/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 82% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, Washington D.C: Georgetown University Press. ?

The Future of Public Administration around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, 1-16. Washington, DC: Georgetown University Press.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

204/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

Public Administration." Public Administration Review 7:200–203. ? Waldo, D. 1980. The Enterprise of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A. ?

Public Administration Fit in?'', Public Administration Review. 61(2), Waldo, D. (1980). The Enterprice of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

205/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	96%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

Dwight. 1952a. "The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration". American Political Science Review 46:81–103

Dwight Waldo. 1952a. The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration. American Political Science Review, 46(1): 81-103.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

206/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	35 WORDS	69%	MATCHING TEXT	35 WORDS

Public Administration'. Two scholarly works "Towards a New Public Administration, The Minnowbrook Perspective" edited by Frank Marini, and "Public Administration in a Time of Turbulence" edited by Dwight Waldo, both published in 1971 gave public administration. The two books "Towards a New Public Administration, The Minnow- brook Perspective" edited by Frank Marini and published in 1971 and "Public Administration in a Time of Turbulence" edited by Dwight Waldo and published simultaneously gave

W https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC/New%20Public%20Administration,%202nd%20S ...

207/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	28 WORDS	86%	MATCHING TEXT	28 WORDS

expressed their dissatisfaction with the state of the discipline of public 145 administration. They sought to give it a new image by discarding expressed dissatisfaction with the state of the discipline of public administration and sought to give it a new image by discarding

W https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC/New%20Public%20Administration,%202nd%20S ...

208/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	12 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	12 WORDS

Several changes in policies and institutions began to be undertaken and

Several changes in policies and institutions began to be undertaken and

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

209/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

to strengthen political and administrative capabilities for coping with the rapidly changing environments: economic, social, political, technological,

to strengthen political and administrative capabilities for coping with the rapidly changing environments: economic, social, political, technological

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

210/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 69% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

Bhattacharya, Mohit. 2001.New Horizons of Public Administration, New Delhi: Jawahar Publishers, ? Bhattacharya, Mohit.Development Administration. New Delhi: Jawahar

SA synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)

211/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 34 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 34 WORDS

It was felt necessary to inject the goals of being responsive to the needs of clients and ensuring social equity in service delivery. This led to the development of New Public Administration (NPA)

SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

212/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

state into a welfare state, the responsibilities and functions of state into a welfare state, the responsibilities and functions of

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

213/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

The Honey Report on Higher Education for Public Service: The American Society

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

214/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

a public administration which fails to work for changes which tries to redress the deprivation of minorities will likely be eventually used to repress

A Public, Administration which fails to work for changes, which trier3_to redress the deprivation of minorities, qill likely be eventually used to repress

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

215/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 73% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

Public Administration, 1967 In 1967, the American Academy of Political and Social Science organised a conference in Philadelphia under the public administration experts; Philadelphia Conference (1967) the American Academy of Political and Social organized a conference in Philadelphia. The

W https://schoolofpoliticalscience.com/new-public-administration/

216/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 56% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

Anti-positivism: this means that they reject the definition of public administration as "value- free" and also reject the rationalist or deterministic view of humankind.

anti-positivist which means: (a) They reject the definition of public administration as 'value-free', (b) They reject a rationalist or perhaps deterministic view of humankind, (

W https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC/New%20Public%20Administration,%202nd%20S ...

217/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 113 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 113 WORDS

In the words of Frederickson "The essence of New Public Administration is some sort of movement in the direction of normative theory, philosophy, social concern and activism. It is less generic and more public, less descriptive and more perspective less institutional oriented less mental and more normative". Nigro and Nigro observe, "In the past public administration has neglected the question of values in relation to the social purposes of government and that public officials have emphasized efficiency and economy of execution often at the expense of social equity. These officials profess neutrality but in fact have been far from neutral even catering to special interests". 4.9 FEATURES OF NEW PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

In the words of Frederickson "The essence of New Public Administration is some sort of movement in the direction of normative theory, philosophy, social concern and activism. It less generic and more public, less descriptive and more perspective less institutional oriented less mental and more normative" and Nigro observe"....In the past public administration has neglected the question of values in relation to the social purposes of government and that public officials have emphasized efficiency and economy of execution often at the expense of social equity. These officials profess neutrality but in fact have been far from neutral even catering to special interests". Evaluation of New Public Administration:

W https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC/New%20Public%20Administration,%202nd%20S ...

218/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

distributive functions and impact of governmental institutions should be public administration's basic concern.

SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

219/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 133 WORDS 79% MATCHING TEXT 133 WORDS

In contrast to Minnowbrook I, which challenged Public Administration to become proactive with regard to social issues, Minnowbrook II retreated from an action perspective to cerebral examinations ofdemocracy, ethics, responsibility, philosophy, and even economics. (Mary Timney Bailey, 1989) 150 Holzer (1989) says that the conferees at the Minnowbrook II evidenced a 'constrained hopefulness' for the 1990s. He identifies two main arguments for Public Administration as a challenging pursuit. First, citizens are again seeking a renewed sense of community and shared endeavour, emphasizing interpersonal values and de-emphasizing personal gain. Second, public servants are an important link in the social system. Society will have to look to Public Administrators to solve a continuing stream of problems. Guy (1989) establishes that the eleven themes emerged from the deliberations of Minnowbrook II.

In contrast to Minnowbrook I, which challenged Public Administration to become proactive with regard to social issues, Minnowbrook II retreated from an action perspective to cerebral examinations of democracy, ethics, responsibility, philosophy, and even economics. Mary Timney Holzer (1989) says that although the somewhat naive self-confidence of the 1960s was missing at Minnowbrook II, the conferees evidenced a 'constrained hopefulness' for the 1990s. He identi- fies two main arguments for Public Ad- ministration as a challenging pursuit. First, citizens are again seeking a re- newed sense of community and shared endeavor, emphasizing interpersonal values and de-emphasizing personal gain. Second, public servants are an important link in the social system. Society will have to look to Public Ad- ministrators to solve a continuing stream of problems. Guy (1989) establishes that the ele- ven themes teased from the delibe- rations of Minnowbrook II

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

220/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

The concerns for social equity that pre- dominated at Minnowbrook I are largely at peace now.

The concerns for social equity that pre- dominated at Minnowbrook I are largely at peace now.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

221/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 55 WORDS 99% MATCHING TEXT 55 WORDS

was a concomitant sense that social equity was much closer to reality in 1989 than it was in 1968. 2. Strong concerns were expressed about democratic values and the centrality of Public Administration to promoting them. This concern was manifest in the focus on ethics, accountability, and leadership in Public Administration. 3.

was a concomitant sense that social equity was much closer to reality in 1989 than it was in 1968. b) Strong concerns were expressed about democratic values and the centrality of Public Administration to promoting them. This concern was manifest in the focus on ethics, accountability, and leadership in Public Administration. 99

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

222/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	19 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	19 WORDS

Diversity in society and in the work force was accepted as a basic value among participants. 5.

Diversity in society and in the work force was accepted as a basic value among participants.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

223/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	123 WORDS	97%	MATCHING TEXT	123 WORDS

the tone of Minnowbrook II was one of constrained hopefulness. A revised sense of what government should do and what government can do was being debated in the nation at the time. Participants seem to have come to terms with this change and are hopeful for a constructive role for Public Administration to play on both the national and global scale. 6. Certain 'rules of the road' were accepted. Visions were of the near future, not the long-term future, and the participants were voluntarily constrained to that which was judged by participants to be realistic. 7. A professional 'ethnocentricity' or parochialism prevailed, indicating that Public Administration as a field is having a hard time dealing with its interdisciplinary roots. 8.

The tone of Minnowbrook II was one of constrained hopefulness. A revised sense of what government should do and what government can do was being debated in the nation at the time. Participants seem to have come to terms with this change and are hopeful for a constructive role for Public Administration to play on both the national and global scale (Guy, 1989). f) Certain 'rules of the road' were accepted. Visions were of the near future, not the long-term future, and the participants were voluntarily constrained to that which was judged by participants to be realistic. g) A professional 'ethnocentricity' or parochialism prevailed, indicating that Public Administration as a field is having a hard time dealing with its interdisciplinary roots.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

224/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	70 WORDS	94%	MATCHING TEXT	70 WORDS

Innovative personnel practices were described or called for in order to move away from public manager's current inability to hire employees on a timely basis, promote the best employees, and reinforce high productivity while being able to discharge non-productive employees. 151 9. Unwillingness to address technological issues was evident. Technology was seen as diminishing public service rather a tool to improve it. 10.

Innovative personnel practices were described or called for in order to move away from public manager's current inability to hire employees on a timely basis, promote the best employees, and reinforce high productivity while being able to discharge nonproductive employees. Unwillingness to address technological issues was evident. Technology was seen as diminishing public service rather a tool to improve it.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

225/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 45 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 45 WORDS

Unwillingness to look at the specifics of what government should do was evident. According to Guy, even in the midst of discussions on the inevitability of administrators exerting control over policy agendas, the politics/administration dichotomy appears to be alive and well. 4.11

Unwillingness to look at the specifics of what government should do was evident. According to Guy, even in the midst of discussions on the inevitability of admi- nistrators exerting control over policy agendas, the politics/administration dichotomy appears to be alive and well. 2.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

226/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 49 WORDS 70% MATCHING TEXT 49 WORDS

OF NEW PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION: The critics of the doctrine held that NPA only possesses one kind of difference by definition. Alan Campbell argued "it differs from the 'old' public administration only in that it is responsive to a different set of societal problems from those of other periods."

of New Public Administration: The critics of the doctrine of New Public Administration hold that the New Public Ad- ministration possesses only a kind of difference by definition. For example, Campbell argues that it "differs from the 'old' public administration only in that it is responsive to a different set of societal problems from those of other periods."

W https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC/New%20Public%20Administration,%202nd%20S ...

227/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS strong emphasis on citizens' participation in decision making, on normative value of strong emphasis on citizen's participation in decision-making, on normative value of

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

228/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 68% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

a reminder regarding the need for reorientation of theory and practice of public administration. Dwight Waldo in his book "

a reminder ahut the need for reorientation of theory and practice of Pu biic Adnli n istntion. Dwight Waldo, in his book

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

229/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 52% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

even more. Carter and Duffey writing on NPA in the International Journal of Public Administration (1984) however, expressed doubts whether "the objective even more than before. Carter and Duffey, writing on New Public Adrn~inistration in the Xnternatlunrtl Journal of Public Adminishalion, (19841, have expressed doubt whether the objective

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

230/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

social equity is actually getting recognised as a well-established administrative objective or value in addition to the existing ones of efficiency, effectiveness, and public accountability.

social equity is actually getting recognised as a well-established adrninis~rative objective or value ' in addition to the existing ones of efficiency, effectiveness and public accountability.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

231/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

to serve the cause of social equity is to actively work towards social change. The

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

232/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 32 WORDS 51% MATCHING TEXT 32 WORDS

government curtailed spending on social welfare programmes, it was the deprived section that did not even have adequate access to all the requisite economic and social facilities for their substantial betterment.

government spending on social welfsc programme in USA the deprived sections of the people still do not have adequate access to all the requisite economic and social facilities for their substantial betterment.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

233/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

adoption of social equity as a policy and administrative objective is not an easy proposition adoption of social equity as a policy and ddininistrative objective is not an easy proposition.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

234/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

Further, the concept 152 of social equity is vague. What it means, what it requires in public programmes, opinions vary greatly.

Further, the concept of social equity is vague. What it means, what it requires in public programmes, opinions vary greatly.

W https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC/New%20Public%20Administration,%202nd%20S ...

235/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 50 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 50 WORDS

Robert T. Golembiewski holds that New Public Administration must be counted a partial success, at best and perhaps only a cruel reminder of the gap in the field between aspiration and performance. He describes it “revolution or radicalism in words and (at best) status quo in skills or technologies.”

Robert T. Golembiewski holds that New Public Administration must be counted a partial success, at best and perhaps only a cruel reminder of the gap in the field between aspiration and performance. He describes it “revolution or radicalism in words and (at best) status quo in skills or technologies.”

W https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC/New%20Public%20Administration,%202nd%20S ...

236/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

trends in the study and practice of public administration in several countries both developed trends in the study and practice of Public.4dministration in several countries, both developed (

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

237/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

On the whole, these trends indicate: a) growing emphasis on social equity in public policies and administrative actions; b) devising of institutional arrangements

On the whole, these trends indicate: ' a) growing emphasis on social equity in puh!ic policies and administrative actions; b) devising of instihtional arrangements

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

238/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 77 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 77 WORDS

facilitate increased public participation in administrative processes (i.e. decision-making, operations, etc.) at local and grassroot levels; c) strengthening of political direction of administration as well as of administrative accountability to the political authorities withinthegovernment; d) adoption of innovative (new) types of organisations as well as ofmodernmanagement practices, and techniques and technologies to raise the administrative capability (i.e. efficiency and effectiveness) to deal with highly diverse, complex end numerous governmental tasks.

facilitate increased public participation in administrative processes (i.e. decision-making, operations, etc.) at local and grassmot levels; I c) strengthening of political direction of administration as wall as of administrative accountability to the politiqal authorities within the government; d) adoption of innovative (new) types of organisations as well as of modm management pra&tices, and techniques and technologies to raise the adminiswtivc capability (i a I efficiency and effectiveness) to deal with highly diverse, complex end numcmus governmental tasks.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19175/1/Unit-7.pdf

239/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 53 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 53 WORDS

The New Public Administration has not yet developed a theory of its own. It was the product of the social ferment of the 1960's and early 1970s in the United States. The Minnowbrook Conference was a youth conference which felt that old public administration had failed to solve the current social problems.

The New Public Administration has not yet developed a theory of its own. It was the product of the social ferment of the 1960's and early 1970s in the United States. The Minnow-brook Conference was a youth conference which felt that old public administration had failed to solve the current social problems.

W https://cbpbu.ac.in/userfiles/file/2020/STUDY_MAT/POL_SC/New%20Public%20Administration,%202nd%20S ...

240/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

the scope and nature of the discipline of public administration

the scope and nature of the discipline of public administration.

W https://www.aijbm.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/09/I395661.pdf

241/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 64% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

the efficacy of the administration must be seen not only from the point of view of the government but also from the effectiveness of the administrator should be judged not only from the point of view of the government, but from

W https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/New_Public_Administration

242/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 65% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

reduction of economic and social discrimination and promotion of life opportunities for all groups. Efficiency: the

SA MA Politics SEM 1 public administration.pdf (D110639260)

243/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Dahl, Robert. 1947. The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7:1–11 ?

Dahl, Robert The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7(1): 1-11.

W https://www.american.edu/spa/dpap/degrees/upload/puad-608-hafner-mpa.pdf

244/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	19 WORDS	97%	MATCHING TEXT	19 WORDS
George F., and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public			George F . Frederickson and Ralph Clark Chandler. 1997. Democracy and Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. International Journal of Public

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

245/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	17 WORDS	75%	MATCHING TEXT	17 WORDS
Heady, Ferrel. 1966.Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective, Prentice-Hall. ? Henry, Nicholas. 1975.Public Administration and Public Affairs,			Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker. Henry, Nicholas. 2004. Public Administration and Public Affairs.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

246/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	96%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS
Frank. ed. 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective. Scranton, PA: Chandler. ?			Frank Marini, ed., Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Per- spective (Scranton, PA: Chandler

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

247/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	23 WORDS	92%	MATCHING TEXT	23 WORDS
Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference" IBM Centre for The Business of Government			Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference IBM Center for The Business of Government

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

248/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	1 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	1 WORDS
Assessing%20the%20Past%20and %20Future%20of%20Public%20Administration%20- %20Reflections%20from%20the%20Minnowbrook%20at %2050%20Conference_0.			Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

249/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 82% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, Washington D.C: Georgetown University Press. ?

The Future of Public Administration around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, 1-16. Washington, DC: Georgetown University Press.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

250/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

Public Administration." Public Administration Review 7:200–203. ? Waldo, D. 1980. The Enterprise of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A. ?

Public Administration Fit in?'', Public Administration Review. 61(2), Waldo, D. (1980). The Enterprice of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

251/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

Dwight. 1952a. "The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration". American Political Science Review 46:81–103

Dwight Waldo. 1952a. The Development of Theory of Democratic Administration. American Political Science Review, 46(1): 81-103.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

252/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 69% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

Bhattacharya, Mohit. 2001.New Horizons of Public Administration, New Delhi: Jawahar Publishers, ? Bhattacharya, Mohit.Development Administration. New Delhi: Jawahar

SA synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)

253/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

To understand the factors that led to the evolution of Comparative Public Administration ?

to: ●● Highlight the factors that led to the evolution of comparative public administration; ●●

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

254/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 111 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 111 WORDS

Traditional comparative government and administrative studies were confined to big powers, such as the United States, Great Britain, France, Germany, the Soviet Union, and Italy. This was a limitation in the traditional studies. Besides, the traditional analysis focused mainly on the organization of government institutions, with a negligible emphasis on the behavioural or dynamic aspects of the government systems. Besides, most studies were descriptive in nature 157 and not analytical or explanatory or problem–oriented. Moreover, these studies did not take into account the interaction between the government systems and their environment. Fred Riggs calls these studies the "governments of foreign countries" rather than "comparative governments".

Traditional comparative government and administrative studies were confined to big powers, such as the United States, Great Britain, France, Germany, the Soviet Union, and Italy. This was a limitation in the traditional studies. Besides, the traditional analysis focused mainly on the organization of government institutions, with a negligible emphasis on the behavioural or dynamic aspects of the government systems. Besides, most studies were descriptive in nature and not analytical or explanatory or problem–oriented. Moreover, these studies did not take into account the interaction between the government systems and their environment. Fred Riggs calls these studies the "governments of foreign countries" rather than "comparative governments".

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

255/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 94 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 94 WORDS

Woodrow Wilson in his seminal article "The Study of Administration" published the Political Science Quarterly (1887) had suggested that the USA should learn from the patterns of European administrative systems without borrowing from them their centralized monarchical political systems. This was a clear comparative orientation. Even L. D. White, who published the first text book in Public Administration 'Introduction to the Study of Public Administration' in 1926, was interested in constructing principles of administration that would provide guidelines of action in public administration of Russia, Great Britain, Iraq, and the United States.

Woodrow Wilson in his seminal article "The Study of Administration" published the Political Science Quarterly (1887) had suggested that the USA should learn from the patterns of European administrative systems without borrowing from them their centralized monarchical political systems. This was a clear comparative orientation. Even L. D. White, who published the first text book in Public Administration 'Introduction to the Study of Public Administration' in 1926, was interested in constructing principles of administration that would provide guidelines of action in public administration of Russia, Great Britain, Iraq, and the United States.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

256/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 31 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 31 WORDS

the comparative aspects of public administration have largely been ignored and as long as the study of public administration is not comparative, claim for 'science of administration' sounds rather hollow." 5.3

the comparative aspects of public administration have largely been ignored; and as long as the study of public administration is not comparative, claims for ''a science of public administration'' sound rather hollow.

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

257/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 28 WORDS 59% MATCHING TEXT 28 WORDS

OF COMPARATIVE ADMINISTRATIVE GROUP 5.5 FEATURES OF COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION 5.6 SCOPE OF COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION 5.7 SIGNIFICANCE AND FUTURE OF COMPARATIVE PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION 5.8 CONCLUSION 5.9

of Comparative Public Administration • Objectives of Comparative Public Administration • Characteristics of Comparative Public Administration • Significance of Comparative Public Administration • Conclusion •

W https://schoolofpoliticalscience.com/comparative-public-administration/

258/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 35 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 35 WORDS

Comparative public administration is a branch of public administration as it considers the workings of government in different socio-economic and cultural settings. Like public administration, comparative administration covers a wide variety of activities. Scholars

Comparative public administration is a branch of public administration. As an approach, it considers the workings of government in different socio- economic and cultural settings. Much like public administration, compar- ative administration covers a wide variety of activities. Scholars

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

259/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 60% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

employing comparative approach focus varied issues ranging from public policy making and implementation in both developed and developing areas.

employing the comparative approach focus on a wide variety of issues including public policy making and implementation in both the developed and developing areas.

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

260/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

by taking a keen look at administrative processes in all socio-economic and ecological settings, we have a more holistic view of the larger field." (

By taking a keen look at administrative processes in all socio-economic and ecological settings, we have a more holistic view of the larger field.

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

261/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 45 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 45 WORDS

comparative public administration is defined as the study of administrative systems in a comparative fashion or the study of public administration in other countries. Another definition for "comparative public administration" is the "quest for patterns and regularities in administrative action and behaviour". It

Comparative public administration is defined as the study of administrative systems in a comparative fashion or the study of public administration in other countries. Another definition for "comparative public administration" is the "quest for patterns and regularities in administrative action and behavior". It

W http://eflorakkl.in/staff/uploads/sem2%20cpa%20uniti1.pdf

262/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 54 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 54 WORDS

can fit in our won systems. In addition, comparative studies also help in explaining factors responsible for cross-national and cross-cultural similarities as well as difference in the administrative systems. Thus, comparative public administration is a comparative study of diverse administrative systems, on whose conclusions most scientific efforts are made in public administration.

can fit in our own nations and systems. In addition, comparative studies also help in explaining factors responsible for cross-national and cross-cultural similarities as well as difference in the administrative systems. Thus, comparative public administration is a comparative study of diverse administrative systems, on whose conclusions most scientific efforts are made in public administration.

W http://eflorakkl.in/staff/uploads/sem2%20cpa%20uniti1.pdf

263/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 32 WORDS 38% MATCHING TEXT 32 WORDS

comparative public administration can help in map patterns and regularities of administrative action and behaviour. Thus, one not one can gain information on the diversity of human experience, but also the

Comparative public administration is a quest for patterns and regularities of administrative action and behaviour. Through comparative analysis, we are able to show not only the diversity of human experience, but also the

W http://eflorakkl.in/staff/uploads/sem2%20cpa%20uniti1.pdf

264/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

comparison extends our knowledge of how to explore, reflect, and also better understand universal administrative features instead of being just restricted to ethnocentric views.

Comparison extends our knowledge of how to explore, reflect, and better understand universal administrative attributes, instead of being confined to ethnocentric views. 2

W http://eflorakkl.in/staff/uploads/sem2%20cpa%20uniti1.pdf

265/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	51 WORDS	99%	MATCHING TEXT	51 WORDS

As society is dynamic, it becomes imperative to reinterpret and re- evaluate administrative structures to be in line with the ever changing trends in life. This is best done through Comparative Public Administration. A comparative study is usually done on an interdisciplinary format, thus encouraging more analysis on social phenomena.

As the society is dynamic, it becomes imperative to reinterpret and re-evaluate administrative structures to be in line with the ever changing trends in life. This is best done through Comparative Public Administration. A comparative study is usually done on an interdisciplinary format, thus encouraging more analysis on social phenomena.

W https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf

266/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	123 WORDS	92%	MATCHING TEXT	123 WORDS

Comparative public administration is considered to have the following purposes: 1. To learn the distinctive features of a particular administrative system or a cluster of systems. 2. To explain the factors responsible for cross-national and cross-cultural similarities and differences in administrative structure, functions, behaviour, and impact. 3. To examine the causes for the success or failure of particular administrative systems in their ecological settings. Thus, the discipline looks closely at the dynamic 159 interaction between administrative systems and their respective environments, including their positive and negative influences. 4. To understand the strategies of administrative reforms, their processes and impacts and the factors responsible for the level of success or failure of reforms. 5.4

Comparative public administration is considered to have the following purposes: 1. T o learn the distinctive features of a particular administrative system or a cluster of systems. 2. T o explain the factors responsible for cross-national and cross-cultural similarities and differences in administrative structure, functions, behaviour, and impact. 3. o examine the causes for the success or failure of particular administrative systems in their ecological settings. Thus, the discipline looks closely at the dynamic interaction between administrative systems and their respective environments, including their positive and negative influences. 4. T o understand the strategies of administrative reforms, their processes and impacts and the factors responsible for the level of success or failure of reforms. 1.4

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

267/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	16 WORDS	80%	MATCHING TEXT	16 WORDS

acceptance in the USA and several other countries. While studying the political systems of different acceptance in the US and several other countries. A few scholars, while studying the political systems of different

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

268/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 51 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 51 WORDS

of the scholars who took interests in comparative politics as well as comparative public administration are Leonard Binder, Joseph La Palombara, Alfred Diamant, Fred Riggs, Edward Weidnar, and Ferrel Heady. The Comparative Public Administration Movement borrowed from Comparative Politics Movement several concepts, methodologies, models, and theories. Comparative Public Administration of the political system. Some scholars took interest in comparative politics as well as comparative public administration including Leonard Binder, Joseph La Palombara, Alfred Diamant, Fred Riggs, Edward Weidnar, and Ferrel Heady. The Comparative Public Administration Movement borrowed from Comparative Politics Movement several concepts, methodologies, models, and theories. 12 Comparative Public Administration:

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

269/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 63% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

real impetus in 1962 when the Comparative Administrative Group of the American Society for Public Administration (APSA) received funding from the Ford Foundation.

real impetus came in 1962 when the Comparative Administration Group (CAG founded in 1960) of the American Society for Public Administration received financing from the Ford Foundation

W https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf

270/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 129 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 129 WORDS

Fred W. Riggs was the chairman of the group from its inception till the end of 1970. The CAG conducted a series of seminars on comparative administrative systems, focusing on theoretical as well as applied perspectives. It published more than one hundred monographs and brought out several edited anthologies on various themes. The group also sponsored many research studies in countries of Asia, Europe, Latin America, and Africa. Besides, it was instrumental in publishing a quarterly, 'Journal of Comparative Administration' through SAGE publishers; the journal was later re-named as Administration and Society, which still continues to be published. Among the scholars, who were pioneers in the Comparative Public Administration Movement were Ralph Braibanti, Milton Esman, Ferrel Heady, John Montgomery, Fred Riggs, William Siffin, and Dwight Waldo.

Fred W. Riggs was the chairman of the group from its inception till the end of 1970. The CAG conducted a series of seminars on comparative administrative systems, focusing on theoretical as well as applied perspectives. It published more than one hundred monographs and brought out several edited anthologies on various themes. The group also sponsored many research studies in countries of Asia, Europe, Latin America, and Africa. Besides, it was instrumental in publishing a quarterly, 'Journal of Comparative Administration' through SAGE publishers; the journal was later re-named as Administration and Society, which still continues to be published. Among the scholars, who were pioneers in the Comparative Public Administration Movement were Ralph Braibanti, Milton Esman, Ferrel Heady, John Montgomery, Fred Riggs, William Siffin, and Dwight Waldo.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

271/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 56 WORDS 73% MATCHING TEXT 56 WORDS

five motivating concerns as addressed by CPA: 160 1. Search for theory 2. Urge for practical application 3. Incidental contribution of the broader field of comparative politics 4. Interest of researchers trained in the tradition of administrative law 5. Comparative analysis of ongoing problems of public administration.

five „motivating concerns" as an intellectual enterprise. are: (a) search for theory; (b) The urge for practical application; (c) The incidental contribution of the broader field of comparative politics; (d) The interest of researchers trained in the tradition of administrative law; and (e) The comparative analysis of ongoing problems of public administration.

W https://www.ijsr.net/archive/v5i1/NOV152468.pdf

272/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 52 WORDS 73% MATCHING TEXT 52 WORDS

In 1973, with the efforts of Fred Riggs and other scholars, a Section on International and Comparative Administration (SICA) was set up which continues to promote study, teaching and research in comparative public administration. This comprised of practitioners and academics, who are interested in global public administration. It has done a

in 1973, with the efforts of Fred Riggs and other scholars, a Section on International and Comparative Administration (SICA) was set up, as a section of the American Society of Public Administration, which continues to promote study, and teaching and research in comparative public administration. SICA is comprised of practitioners and academics, who are involved in or have interest in international and overseas public administration. It has done a

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

273/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 81 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 81 WORDS

Through their aegis, the CAG movement churned out voluminous publications. These included Dwight Waldo (1963), Comparative Public Ad- ministration: Prologue, Problems, and Promise, and Ferrel Heady, Comparative Public Administration: Concerns and Priorities; 161 also in this genre was Ferrel Heady and Sybil Stokes (1962), Papers in Comparative Administration among others. Since this is not the central issue of the essay, our attention is directed to Comparative Public Administration: An Annotated Bibliography by Mark Huddleston (1984). 5.5

Through their aegis, the CAG movement churned out voluminous pub- lications. These included Dwight Waldo (1963), Comparative Public Ad- ministration: Prologue, Problems, and Promise, and Ferrel Heady, Comparative Public Administration: Concerns and Priorities; also in this genre was Ferrel Heady and Sybil Stokes (1962), Papers in Comparative Administration among others. Since this is not the central issue of the essay, our attention is directed to Comparative Public Administration: An Anno- tated Bibliography by Mark Huddleston (1984).

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

274/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 61% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

administration. 5. CPA has two basic motivational concerns: theory-building and administrative problems of the developing countries. 5.6 SCOPE OF	administration. It has two basis motivational concerns; namely, a) theory-building, and b) administrative problems and challenges of the developing countries evidently of

W https://www.ijsr.net/archive/v5i1/NOV152468.pdf

275/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 66% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

the scope of CPA is as large as that of public administration. For any public	The scope of comparative public administration is, as large as that of public administration as such. Hence, any public

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

276/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 51 WORDS 81% MATCHING TEXT 51 WORDS

would fall under the scope of comparative public administration. The following studies in comparative public administration will explain its scope: 1. Cross-institutional Analysis: when two or more institutions or organizations are compared in terms of their structure, functions, processes, environment, and impact; such an analysis is called cross-institutional analysis. For	would fall within the scope of comparative public administration. A few types of studies in comparative public administration, which would explain its scope, are as under: 1. Cr oss-institutional Analysis When two or more institutions or organizations are compared in terms of their structure, functions, processes, environment, and impact; such an analysis is called cross-institutional analysis. For

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

277/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 32 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 32 WORDS

a comparison can 162 be made between the School Education Department with the Higher Education Department of West Bengal in term of efficiency and innovativeness. 2.	a comparison can be made between the School Education Department with the Higher Education Department of West Bengal in term of efficiency and innovativeness.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

278/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

of administrative structures within a country. The comparison can be inter- district or inter-	of administrative structures within the same country. This comparison can be of inter- district or international but Intra-cultural: When comparisons are made between the administrative systems of two or more nations belonging to the same 'culture', these are called cross-national but intra-cultural comparisons.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

279/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

national but Intra-Cultural When comparisons are made between the administrative systems of two or more nations belonging to the same 'culture', these are called cross-national but intra-cultural comparisons.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

280/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

a study of the status of women in the administrative systems of India, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka will be cross-national but intra-cultural.

a study of the status of women in the administrative systems of India, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka will be cross-national but intra-cultural,

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

281/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 66% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

what works and why it works. Furthermore, it helps in improvising administrative systems by making them more efficient what works and why it works. Also, it helps improvise administrative systems making them more efficient

W http://eflorakkl.in/staff/uploads/sem2%20cpa%20uniti1.pdf

282/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

national and Cross-cultural: studies made in two or more nations belonging to various levels of socio-economic development will

national and Cross-cultural Studies of administrative systems in two or more nations belonging to various levels of socio-economic development will remember that cultural category of nations can change from time to time. 5.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

283/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

remember that the cultural category of nations can change from time to time. 5.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

284/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

two or more specific distinguishable time-periods, are cross-temporal studies. For instance, district administration in pre-independence and post-independence periods will be considered cross-temporal 5.7

two or more specific distinguishable time-periods, are cross-temporal studies. For instance, district administration in pre-independence and post-independence periods will be considered cross-temporal.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

285/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 63 WORDS 99% MATCHING TEXT 63 WORDS

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION: Robert Dahl in his well-known article entitled 'The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems' published in Public Administration Review, (1947) had observed that there cannot be a science of public administration without a comparative analysis. James Coleman, an eminent scholar of comparative politics, had observed "You cannot be scientific if you are 163 not comparative."

Public Administration Robert Dahl in his well-known article entitled 'The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems' published in Public Administration Review, (1947) had observed that there cannot be a science of public administration without a comparative analysis. Even James Coleman, an eminent scholar of comparative politics, had observed "You cannot be scientific if you are not comparative."

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

286/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 54% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

public administration was confined to the study of only a select western countries and the environment of public administration was treated as 'given'.

public administration was confined to the description of administrative structures prevailing in certain western countries like the U.S, Great Britain, and France. The environment of public administration was treated, as 'given'.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

287/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 47 WORDS 52% MATCHING TEXT 47 WORDS

for the adoption of an ecological approach to the study of administrative systems. In this way, comparative studies have challenged parochialism in western studies. That the non-western world has its own administrative reality which has been of interest of many western scholars shows the conceptual transformation for the adoption of an ecological approach to the study of administrative systems. This approach has made administrative analysis more realistic and dynamic. 4. Universalism Comparative studies in public administration have challenged parochialism in western studies. The non-western world has experienced and nurtured its own administrative reality that has been elaborated by a host of comparative scholars of whom many of them are western. The conceptual transformation

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

288/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 33 WORDS 67% MATCHING TEXT 33 WORDS

The discipline of comparative public administration today is characterised by various institutional initiatives. The subject is now taught in a large number of foreign and Indian universities and colleges both at undergraduate the discipline of comparative public administration is characterized by the following institutional initiatives: 1. The subject of comparative public administration is taught in a large number of foreign and Indian universities and colleges at the undergraduate

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

289/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

Comparative studies of public administration have stressed improvements in the structures, processes, and behavioural patterns of public administrative systems in diverse settings.

Comparative studies of public administration have stressed improvements in the structures, processes, and behavioural patterns of public administrative systems in diverse settings.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

290/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 60 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 60 WORDS

related benefit of the study of comparative public administration has been in the emergence of the concept of 'development administration,' which has become a key strategy for holistic transformation of various societies. It is accepted widely that development administration is a goal-oriented and a change-oriented administration and is the main engine of all round progress of a country. 5.9

related benefit of the study of comparative public administration has been in the emergence of the concept of 'development administration,' which has become a key strategy for holistic transformation of various societies. It is accepted widely that development administration is a goal-oriented and a change-oriented administration and is the main engine of all round progress of a country. 9.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

291/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 35 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 35 WORDS

Comparative public administration is a branch of public administration. ? As an approach, it considers the workings of government in different socio- economic and cultural settings. 165 ?

Comparative public administration is a branch of public administration. As an approach, it considers the workings of government in different socio- economic and cultural settings.

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

292/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 36 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 36 WORDS

It is a very significant area of study in Public Administration as it helps in understanding administrative setups and their functioning in various settings and societies/countries and what works and why it works. ?

It is a very significant area of study in Public Administration as it helps in understanding Administrative setups and their functioning in various settings and societies/countries and what works and why it works.

W http://eflorakkl.in/staff/uploads/sem2%20cpa%20uniti1.pdf

293/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 49 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 49 WORDS

Comparative administration seeks to strengthen our understanding of broader public administrative processes by trying to expand the empirical basis of the field. ? By taking a keen look at administrative processes in all socio-economic and ecological settings, we have a more holistic view of the larger field

Comparative administration seeks to strengthen our understanding of broader public administrative processes by trying to expand the empirical basis of the field. By taking a keen look at administrative processes in all socio-economic and ecological settings, we have a more holistic view of the larger field.

W http://www.untag-smd.ac.id/files/Perpustakaan_Digital_2/PUBLIC%20ADMINISTRATION%20Comparative%20p ...

294/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 63% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

real impetus in 1962 when the Comparative Administrative Group of the American Society for Public Administration (APSA) received funding from the Ford Foundation. ?

real impetus came in 1962 when the Comparative Administration Group (CAG founded in 1960) of the American Society for Public Administration received financing from the Ford Foundation

W https://gacbe.ac.in/pdf/ematerial/18MPA25E-U1.pdf

295/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

Arora, Ramesh K. 2021. Comparative Public Administration: An Ecological Perspective. New Delhi: New Age International. ?

Arora, Ramesh K. 2021. Comparative Public Administration: An Ecological Perspective. New Delhi: New Age International.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

296/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Dahl, Robert. 1947. The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7:1–11 ?

Dahl, Robert The Science of Public Administration: Three Problems. Public Administration Review 7(1): 1-11.

W https://www.american.edu/spa/dpap/degrees/upload/puad-608-hafner-mpa.pdf

297/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 39 WORDS 79% MATCHING TEXT 39 WORDS

the term came to be used in 1950s to represent those aspects of public administration and those changes in public administration which are needed to carry out policies, projects and programmes to improve social and economic conditions. ?

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

298/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 30 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 30 WORDS

Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker. ? Henry, Nicholas. 2004. Public Administration and Public Affairs. Upper Sadle River, N.J.: Pearson. ?

Heady, Ferrel. 1995. Public Administration: A Comparative Perspective. New York: Marcel Dekker. Henry, Nicholas. 2004. Public Administration and Public Upper Sadle River, N.J.: Pearson.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

299/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 79% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

Public Administration. ? Marini, Frank. ed. 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. Scranton, PA: Chandler. ?

Public Administration Review, 49(2): 95-228. Frank (ed.). 1971. Toward a New Public Administration: The Minnowbrook Perspective. Scranton, PA: Chandler.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

300/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference" IBM Centre for The Business of Government

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference IBM Center for The Business of Government

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

301/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 1 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 1 WORDS

Assessing%20the%20Past%20and %20Future%20of%20Public%20Administration%20- %20Reflections%20from%20the%20Minnowbrook%20at %2050%20Conference_0.

Assessing the Past and Future of Public Administration: Reflections from the Minnowbrook at 50 Conference

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

302/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 82% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

The Future of Public Administration Around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, Washington D.C: Georgetown University Press. ?

The Future of Public Administration around the World: The Minnowbrook Perspective, 1-16. Washington, DC: Georgetown University Press.

W https://www.businessofgovernment.org/sites/default/files/Assessing%20the%20Past%20and%20Future%20 ...

303/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

Sahni, Pradeep and E. Vayunandan. 2009. Administrative Theory. New Delhi: Prentice-Hall. ?

Sahni, Pradeep and E. Vayunandan. 2009. Administrative Theory. New Delhi: Prentice-Hall.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78049/3/Block-1.pdf

304/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

Public Administration." Public Administration Review 7:200–203. ? Waldo, D. 1980. The Enterprise of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A. ?

Public Administration Fit in?'', Public Administration Review. 61(2), Waldo, D. (1980). The Enterprice of Public Administration. Chandler and Sharp Publishers, Novato C.A.

W https://www.redalyc.org/pdf/104/10410111.pdf

305/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 69% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

Bhattacharya, Mohit. 2001. New Horizons of Public Administration, New Delhi: Jawahar Publishers, ? Bhattacharya, Mohit. Development Administration. New Delhi: Jawahar

SA synopsis 12.docx (D139659069)

306/307 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 82% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

Development of Theory of Democratic Administration". American Political Science Review 46:81–103 ? Waldo, Dwight. 1955. The Study of Public Administration.

Development of theory of democratic administration, American Political Science Review, 46(1), 81–103, 1952 Waldo, D., The Enterprise of Public Administration:

W https://himia.umj.ac.id/wp-content/uploads/2021/08/Handbook-of-Public-Administration-By-Jack-Rabi ...

Ouriginal by Turnitin

307/307	SUBMITTED TEXT	22 WORDS	84%	MATCHING TEXT	22 WORDS
E. Otenyo, Nancy S. Lind. "Part I: Comparative Public Administration: Growth, Method, and Ecology" In Comparative Public Administration. Published online: 09			E. and Nancy S.L. (2015), ??????????????????????????????????, Part I: Comparative Public Administration: Growth, Method, and Ecology" In Comparative Public Administration. Published Online: (09

W https://www.researchgate.net/publication /364410503_PUBLIC_ADMINISTRATION_AND_PUBLIC_CHOICE_THEORY

Ouriginal by Turnitin

Document Information

Analyzed document	CC-PA-06.pdf (D164995623)
Submitted	4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM
Submitted by	Library NSOU
Submitter email	dylibrarian.plagchek@wbnsou.ac.in
Similarity	21%
Analysis address	dylibrarian.plagchek.wbnsou@analysis.urkund.com

Sources included in the report

SA	PSC_1046.pdf Document PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)	5
SA	SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf Document SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)	7
W	URL: https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf Fetched: 11/17/2021 5:29:43 AM	15
W	URL: http://www.mim.ac.mw/books/P.B.%20Rathod%20Elements%20of%20Development%20Administration.pdf Fetched: 4/28/2021 10:10:02 AM	1
W	URL: https://ddceutkal.ac.in/Syllabus/MA_PUB_ADD/Development_Administration.pdf Fetched: 1/31/2023 2:36:48 PM	9
W	URL: https://www.compuhoy.com/what-is-the-importance-of-development-administration/ Fetched: 7/15/2022 6:57:28 AM	1
W	URL: https://www.ebookbou.edu.bd/Books/Text/SOB/CEMBA-CEMPA/scom_4613/Unit-01.pdf Fetched: 2/20/2020 10:27:51 AM	5
W	URL: https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf Fetched: 11/16/2022 8:21:33 AM	101
W	URL: https://www.sharmaacademy.com/mppsc-notes/mppsc-notes-paper-II-administration-and-management.php Fetched: 9/24/2021 2:08:21 AM	2

W	URL: https://cepr.org/voxeu/columns/bureaucracy-and-development Fetched: 11/2/2022 10:54:12 AM	2
W	URL: https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html Fetched: 10/21/2019 9:41:15 AM	13
W	URL: https://www.researchgate.net/publication/343685117_Colonial_Legacy_in_Development_Administration Fetched: 6/7/2021 5:48:43 AM	1
W	URL: https://ir.nbu.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/1286/6/05_chapter_02.pdf Fetched: 8/17/2021 5:51:50 PM	5
SA	chptr 1.doc Document chptr 1.doc (D17023044)	1
SA	resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx Document resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)	10
W	URL: https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf Fetched: 4/20/2022 6:16:38 PM	43
W	URL: https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Publi... Fetched: 1/10/2023 8:53:03 AM	29
W	URL: https://www.jstor.org/stable/24491120 Fetched: 1/3/2020 12:57:42 PM	2
SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf Document HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)	39
SA	chapter-two.docx Document chapter-two.docx (D80924780)	3
SA	Ahmed Raza PU (1).docx Document Ahmed Raza PU (1).docx (D21953744)	1
W	URL: https://www.globalhungerindex.org/about.html Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM	2
W	URL: https://www.epa.gov/ghgemissions/overview-greenhouse-gases Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM	2
W	URL: https://www.anandabazar.com/photogallery/national/coronavirus-lockdown-effect-in-india-polutio... Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM	1

SA	05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx Document 05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)	5
SA	Dissertation WFN.docx Document Dissertation WFN.docx (D164020968)	1
SA	Swayam Prabha- History-State and the Political Economy of Development- Economic Planning- Dr. Sylvia.docx Document Swayam Prabha- History-State and the Political Economy of Development- Economic Planning- Dr. Sylvia.docx (D141677590)	2
W	URL: https://mis.alagappauniversity.ac.in/siteAdmin/dde-admin/uploads/4/PG_M.A._Socialogy_34943%20A... Fetched: 2/10/2023 4:00:24 AM	2
W	URL: https://old.amu.ac.in/emp/studym/100015563.pdf Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:03:00 PM	5
W	URL: https://www.drishtiias.com/to-the-points/Paper2/self-help-groups-shgs Fetched: 4/25/2023 1:04:00 PM	4

Entire Document

PREFACE In a bid to standardize higher education in the country, the University Grants Commission (UGC) has introduced Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) based on five types of courses viz. core, discipline specific, generic elective, ability and skill enhancement for graduate students of all programmes at Honours level. This brings in the semester pattern, which finds efficacy in sync with credit system, credit transfer, comprehensive continuous assessments and a graded pattern of evaluation. The objective is to offer learners ample flexibility to choose from a wide gamut of courses, as also to provide them lateral mobility between various educational institutions in the country where they can carry their acquired credits. I am happy to note that the University has been recently accredited by National Assessment and Accreditation Council of India (NAAC) with grade ''A''. UGC (Open and Distance Learning Programmes and Online Programmes) Regulations, 2020 have mandated compliance with CBCS for UG programmes for all the HEIs in this mode. Welcoming this paradigm shift in higher education, Netaji Subhas Open University (NSOU) has resolved to adopt CBCS from the academic session 2021- 22 at the Under Graduate Degree Programme level. The present syllabus, framed in the spirit of syllabi recommended by UGC, lays due stress on all aspects envisaged in the curricular framework of the apex body on higher education. It will be imparted to learners over the six semesters of the Programme. Self Learning Materials (SLMs) are the mainstay of Student Support Services (SSS) of an Open University. From a logistic point of view, NSOU has embarked upon CBCS presently with SLMs in English / Bengali. Eventually, the English version SLMs will be translated into Bengali too, for the benefit of learners. As always, all of our teaching faculties contributed in this process. In addition to this we have also requisitioned the services of best academics in each domain in preparation of the new SLMs. I am sure they will be of commendable academic support. We look forward to proactive feedback from all stakeholders who will participate in the teaching-learning based on these study materials. It has been a very challenging task well executed, and I congratulate all concerned in the preparation of these SLMs. I wish the venture a grand success. Professor (Dr.) Ranjan Chakrabarti Vice-Chancellor
Netaji Subhas Open University Under Graduate Degree Programme Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) Subject : Honours in Public Administration (HPA) Development Administration Course Code : CC-PA-06 First Print—January, 2023 _____ Printed in accordance with the regulations of the Distance Education Bureau of the University Grants Commission

Netaji Subhas Open University Under Graduate Degree Programme Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) Subject: Honours in Public Administration (HPA) Development Administration Course Code: CC-PA-06 : Board of Studies : : Members : Chandan Basu Dipankar Sinha Professor of History Professor of Political Science Director, School of Social Sciences, NSOU University of Calcutta Soma Ghosh Pujan Kumar Sen Professor of Political Science Professor of Public Administration Principal, HMM College for Women NSOU Barnana Guha Thakurta (Banerjee) Sital Prasad Nag Associate Professor of Political Science Associate Professor of Political Science NSOU NSOU Manoj Kumar Haldar Debajit Goswami Assistant Professor of Political Science Assistant Professor of Public Administration NSOU NSOU : Writers : : Editor : Block I Units 1-5 Sujit Narayan Chattopadhyay Asis Mistry Assistant Professor of Political Science, Professor of Public Administration University of Calcutta NSOU Block II Units 1-5 : Format Editing : Rajyavishek Pradhan Debajit Goswami Scholar of Political Science, Assistant Professor of Public Administration University of North Bengal NSOU Block III Units 1-5 Sujay Ghosh Associate Professor of Political Science, Vidyasagar University Block IV Units 1-5 Titu Bardhan Faculty of Political Science, Vidyasagar Metropolitan College Notification

All rights reserved. No part of this Self-Learning Material (SLM) may be reproduced in any form without permission in writing from Netaji Subhas Open University.

A.B.Aich Registrar

Netaji Subhas Open University Under Graduate Degree Programme Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) Subject: Honours in Public Administration (HPA) Development Administration Course Code: CC-PA-06 CONTENTS Block I Introduction .....1- 33 Block II Bureaucracy and Development .....34 - 79 Block III Problems of Development .....80 - 142 Block IV Planning and Development Machinery in India .....143 - 199

1 BLOCK I

59%	MATCHING BLOCK 1/319	SA	PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

Unit-I Meaning and Scope STRUCTURE 1.1.Learning Objectives 1.2.Introduction 1.3.Understanding the Meaning of Development Administration 1.4. Scope of Development Administration 1.5. Conclusion 1.6.Summing Up 1.7.

Glossary/ Keywords 1.8.Model Questions (6,12,18) 1.9.Further Readings and References 1.1.Objectives: 1. To understand the concept of development and how it relates to public administration. 2. To analyse the challenges and opportunities of development administration. 3. To develop critical thinking and analytical skills. 4. To promote ethical and socially responsible leadership. 1.2. Introduction: Development Administration as an idea is a by-product of comparative study of Public Administration in the Third World which are making efforts to attain self-generated economic growth. The term ‘

50%	MATCHING BLOCK 2/319	SA	SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

83%	MATCHING BLOCK 8/319	W

Development Administration’ is coined by U. L. Goswami in 1955. However, the formal recognition to it was given when the Comparative Administration Group of the American Society for Public Administration and Committee on Comparative Politics of Social Sciences Research Council of the USA laid its intellectual foundations.

Later on it is popularised world-wide by the scholars like Edward W. Weidner, Fred W. Riggs, Joseph La Polombara, Albert Waterson.

84% MATCHING BLOCK 3/319 W

The essence of development administration is to bring about change through integrated, organised and properly directed governmental action. 2 In the recent past, the governments in most developing nations have shifted their focus on development by means of planned change and people's participation. With this shift of administrative concern towards developmental objectives the researchers and practitioners of Public Administration have been forced to conceptualise the developmental condition and bridge the gaps in the administrative theory. The growing welfare functions of the government have brought into the limelight the limitations of the traditional theory of administration. The essence of administration in the present conditions lies in its capacity to bring about change in the structure and behaviour of different administrative institutions, to develop an acceptance

100% MATCHING BLOCK 4/319 W

of

91% MATCHING BLOCK 5/319 W

the change, and to create a system that can sustain change and improve the capacity of institutions to change. All these calls for renewed efforts on the part of institutions engaged in the tasks of development. Thus development administration as an area of study and as means to realise developmental goals assumes importance. This unit will highlight the meaning andscope of development administration. 1.2.

Understanding the Meaning of Development Administration: The term Development Administration is a composition of two distinguished concepts i, e. 'Development' and 'Administration':
Development may be generally understood as a

91% MATCHING BLOCK 6/319 W

widely participatory process of directed social change in a society, intended to bring about both social and material advancement including greater equality, freedom and other valued qualities for the majority of people through their acquisition of greater control over their environment.

Development in any particular country consists of a synergy of such development goals as promoting literacy, improving nutrition and health, limiting family size, or increasing productivity. The conceptual upbringing of Development Administration without a doubt largely belongs to western scholarship. However, the primary goal behind the origin of the development paradigm was to offer institutional and procedural models to the newly decolonized states of Asia, Africa and Latin America in the early 1950s. That is why development is the top priority for most national governments all over the world, especially for the Political Systems in the Third World. There are different spectacles or approaches to looking at development that include economic, psychological, dependency and diffusionist. The term administration originated from the two Latin words i, e. 'ad' and 'ministiare' which means 'to serve'. The administration is etymologically any group activity for the accomplishment of a common goal. It is thus a process of management which is practised by all kinds of organizations from the household to the most complex system of the government.
3 According to Professor

85% MATCHING BLOCK 7/319 W

Nigro, "administration is the organization and use of men and materials o accomplish a purpose".

Pfiffner has defined administration

100% MATCHING BLOCK 19/319 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

as “the organization and direction of human and material resources to achieve desired ends”.

The problem is that no unanimous definition of administration is available to serve the purpose of a general reader. Therefore a working definition of administration may be fabricated as the administration is concerned with the proper organization of men and materials to achieve desired ends. It consists of ‘doing the work’ or ‘getting the work by others’.
1.3.

97% MATCHING BLOCK 9/319 W

Scope of Development Administration: With the de-emphasis on the dichotomy between development administration and non- development administration, the scope of development administration as a discipline as well as a profession has increased enormously in recent years. Firstly, the discipline or the study of development administration has focused on the progressive goals of administrative systems and thus has strengthened the ideological orientation of public administration. Secondly, the values have taken a central place in the analysis of development administration. Second, these progressive goals are being studied in a very wide context involving political, economic, social, cultural and technological systems. Thus, the students of development administration are examining the variegated dimensions of political, economic, social, cultural and technological development in an objective manner. Thirdly, Development Administration analysis is not confined to national boundaries, it transcends them and has rightly become cross-national and cross-cultural in its approach and orientation. Fourthly, its expanding intellectual network has enveloped a number of branches of public administration that have their origin in a variety of functional administrative areas. For instance, areas such as industrial administration, agricultural administration, educational administration, health administration, and the continually growing intellectual network of development administration would encompass irrigation administration and social welfare administration. Thus, development administration, going beyond the issues of large-scale transformation in developing countries, helps in strengthening the empirical base of public administration as a 4 discipline and thus makes it more ‘rigorous’. Its ideas and lessons can be fruitfully utilised for facilitating the process of all-round development. Little wonder, development administration, during the past four decades, has influenced the whole notion of governance at the national as well as the international levels. In South Asia, as in other regions of Asia, Africa and Latin America, the concerns of holistic transformation of societies have penetrated into the philosophy and practices of governance. The interdependence of Development Administration: First, the meaning, Nature, Scope and Significance of political, economic, social, cultural and technological development has become a widely accepted truth. This has made the strategies of national transformation increasingly multi-faceted and ecological in orientation. Second, the administrative system being the crux of the governance system has become an integral component of any process of change. It is impossible to conceive of 'development' in any realm without first examining the requisite role of the administrative system. What lends sustainability to the process of development is a sound administrative system that provides vitality and viability to the change process. Third, the process of nation-building has become closely intertwined with the process of institution-building as a result of the thrust of development administration. Whether it is urbanisation, rural transformation, educational development, health improvement, women's welfare, childcare or technological growth, no organised development is possible without systematic planning, programming, coordinating, human resource management and administration of non-human resources. Thus, the dimension of effectiveness in the process of governance has taken a crucial place. Undoubtedly, this is the clear impact of the sprawling scope of development administration. Fourth,

98% MATCHING BLOCK 10/319 W

98% MATCHING BLOCK 11/319 W

the

98% MATCHING BLOCK 12/319 W

development administration has paved the way for a new 'humane' administration. It has propelled the promotion of enterprising and inspiring leadership that generates a motivational climate and induces the best among the personnel forming the network of development organisations. This has led to the expansion of the scope of development administration. And lastly, with the emergence of strong faith in the philosophy of liberalisation, globalisation, privatisation, and public-private partnership, the scope of development administration is transcending the public (government) systems and is influencing the functioning of even the emergent modified private sector that is learning the strategies of co-existing and co-functioning with the public system without in any way imbibing the dysfunctionalities of bureaucracies. In times to come, the scope of development administration is bound to further expand vertically as well as horizontally. 5 1.4.

Conclusion: In conclusion, development administration is a multidisciplinary field that encompasses a range of theories, policies, and practices aimed at promoting economic, social, and political development. It involves the management of resources and institutions, the formulation and implementation of policies and programs, and the promotion of participatory decision- making and accountability. The scope of development administration is vast, encompassing issues such as poverty reduction, environmental sustainability, gender equality, and good governance. The meaning and scope of development administration are continually evolving, reflecting changing social, economic, and political contexts. As such, understanding the meaning and scope of development administration is essential for those who seek to promote effective, ethical, and socially responsible leadership in the public sector. 1.5. Summing Up: Development administration is a field that deals with managing resources and implementing policies and programs to promote economic, social, and political development. The scope of development administration is vast and includes issues such as poverty reduction, environmental sustainability, gender equality, and good governance. It involves the promotion of participatory decision-making, accountability, and the formulation of evidence- based policies. Understanding the meaning and scope of development administration is essential for effective, ethical, and socially responsible leadership in the public sector. Development administration is a continuously evolving field, reflecting the changing social, economic, and political contexts. 1.6. Glossary/ Keywords: 1. Development: A process of positive social change that aims to improve the economic, social, and political well-being of individuals, communities, and societies. 2. Administration: The management of resources, institutions, policies, and programs aimed at achieving organizational goals and objectives. 3. Public Administration: The management of public resources, institutions, policies, and programs aimed at promoting public welfare and the common good. 4. Development Administration: The management of resources, institutions, policies, and programs aimed at promoting economic, social, and political development.

6 5. Modernization Theory: A theory that suggests that economic growth and social change can be achieved by adopting Western models of development. 6. Dependency Theory: A theory that suggests that underdeveloped countries are exploited and dominated by developed countries, resulting in a cycle of dependency. 7. Participatory Development: An approach to development that emphasizes the active involvement of communities in decision-making and project implementation. 8. Decentralization: The transfer of power and decision-making authority from central to local government units. 9. Public-Private Partnership: A collaborative arrangement between the government and the private sector aimed at achieving shared goals. 10. Good Governance: The effective and responsible management of public resources, institutions, policies, and programs, characterized by transparency, accountability, and participation. 1.7. Model Questions (6,12,18): 1. What is development administration, and how does it differ from public administration? 2. What are the main theories and approaches that underpin

87% MATCHING BLOCK 13/319 W

the practice of development administration? 3. What is the scope of development administration, and what are the key issues and challenges that it addresses? 4. How does development administration promote participatory decision-making and community involvement in development processes? 5. What is the role of government, civil society, and the private sector in promoting economic, social, and political development? 6. What are the ethical considerations and challenges in development administration, and how can they be addressed? 7. How do policies and programs aimed at poverty reduction, environmental sustainability, and gender equality fit into the scope of development administration?

7 8. What is the role of monitoring and evaluation in development administration, and how can it be used to improve policies and programs? 9. How can decentralization and public-private partnerships be used to promote effective and sustainable development? 10. How has the meaning and scope of development administration evolved over time, and what are the implications for its practice today? 1.8. Further Readings/ References: 1. Shafritz, J. M., Russell, E. W., &Borick, C. P. (Eds.). (2015). Introducing public administration. Routledge. 2. Hickey, S., & Mohan, G. (2004). Participation: From tyranny to transformation? Exploring new approaches to participation in development. Zed Books. 3. Shah, A. (2007). Public administration and development: The significance of institutions and governance. Asian Development Bank. 4. Grindle, M. S. (2017). Jobs, gender, and small enterprises in Africa: How much we know and how much we have to learn. World Development, 89, 34-45. 5. UNDP. (1997). Governance for sustainable human development. United Nations Development Programme. 6. Brinkerhoff, D. W. (2019). Introduction to public sector management. Routledge. 7. Gaventa, J., & McGee, R. (2013). The impact of transparency and accountability initiatives. Development Policy Review, 31, s3-s28. 8. Hyden, G. (2017). Governance and the study of politics. Routledge. 9. Adedeji, A. (2015). Governance for development in Africa: Solving collective action problems. Routledge. 10. Robinson, M. (2018). Democracy, development, and security in Africa: Bridges and barriers. Routledge.

8 Unit-II Features of Development Administratio STRUCTURE 2.1. Learning Objectives 2.2. Introduction 2.3. Features of Development Administration 2.4. Conclusion 2.5. Summing Up 2.6. Glossary/ Keywords 2.7. Model Questions (6,12,18) 2.8. Further Readings and References 2.1.Learning Objectives: 1. Understanding the basic concepts and theories underlying development administration, such as modernization theory, dependency theory, participatory development, and good governance. 2. Familiarizing oneself with the scope of development administration, including the key issues and challenges it addresses, such as poverty reduction, environmental sustainability, and gender equality. 3. Developing knowledge of the role of government, civil society, and the private sector in promoting economic, social, and political development. 4. Gaining an understanding of the ethical considerations and challenges in development administration, and developing skills in effective decision-making, policy analysis, and monitoring and evaluation. 2.2. Introduction: Development administration is a subfield of public administration that focuses on promoting economic, social, and political development in developing countries. The features of development administration reflect its unique role in promoting positive social change by managing resources, institutions, policies, and programs aimed at improving the well-being 9 of individuals, communities, and societies. Development administration encompasses a wide range of activities, from poverty reduction and environmental sustainability to promoting gender equality and participatory decision-making. Understanding the key features of development administration is essential for practitioners and scholars alike, as it provides a framework for effective policy-making and program implementation. This essay will discuss the key features of development administration, including its basic concepts and theories, scope, role of government and other actors, ethical considerations, and decision-making processes. 2.3.

Features

92% MATCHING BLOCK 14/319 W

of Development Administration: There are certain distinct features of development administration. We would now discuss them briefly: 1. Change Orientation: The first and foremost element of development administration is its change orientation. Change forms part of philosophic values of development administration. Development administration involves itself in establishing a new social order in which growth and distributive justice coexist. For PaiPanandikar the central theme of development administration is socioeconomic and political change. Development administration cannot be status-quo oriented. No development can take place unless and until it introduces certain positive changes in a system. Changes such as structural reorganisation of administration, innovative programme to increase production, remove unemployment, poverty etc., new schemes to improve employer-employee relations must form a part, of development administration. 2. Goal Orientation: Developing countries are facing the problems of poverty, squalor, injustice, unequal distribution of wealth, lopsided agricultural growth, underdeveloped technology etc. These colossal issues need to be tackled systematically by fixation of priorities and goals. Development administration is the means through which the goals of development viz., social justice, modernisation, industrialisation and economic growth can be achieved. 3. Innovative Administration: Development administration focuses on replacing/ improving the existing governing structures and norms with the ones that suit the changing political and social environment. In other words, development administration is one that is dynamic and progressive in thought and action. It is interested in identifying and applying new structures, methods, procedures, 10 techniques, policies, planning projects and programmes so that the objectives and goals of development are achieved with

the

97% MATCHING BLOCK 15/319 W

minimum possible resources and time. India, for example, has experimented with many new institutions and procedures which can be termed as the hallmarks of development administration. We have introduced various development programmes like IRDP (Integrated Rural Development Programme), TRYSEM (Training Rural Youth for Self-Employment), NREP (National Rural Employment Programme), DWACRA (Development of Women and Children in Rural Areas), Tribal Development Programmes etc. These programmes broadly aim at the removal of unemployment, the creation of job opportunities and the reduction of poverty. We have also established some development agencies like the District Rural Development Agency, District Planning Cells, State Planning Boards, Co-operatives etc. Thus development administration has to be innovative enough in order to realise the pre-determined objectives of development. In fact, innovative and creative administration leads to speedy realisation of goals. Client-Oriented Administration: Development administration is positively oriented towards meeting the needs of the specific target groups, like small and marginal farmers of landless agricultural labourers and rural artisans in India. The sociocultural and politico-economic progress of these sections forms the essential basis of performance appraisal of development administrators. Many target group-centred or beneficiary-group-oriented organisations have to be created so as to provide these underprivileged sections with

93% MATCHING BLOCK 16/319 W

92% MATCHING BLOCK 17/319 W

the requisite goods and services. It has been suggested that development administration is a 'people-oriented' administration which gives priority to the needs of its beneficiaries by preparing, reviewing and, if necessary, changing the programmes, policies and activities aimed at the satisfaction of the needs of people in question. The administration is involved in the betterment of a lot of the deprived and the weak. Their upliftment becomes a part of the whole administrative ethos. The welfare of the weaker sections is a part of the administrative value. This feature points 'out the Development Administration: Concept and Meaning Concepts and Approaches are highly motivated and committed to a progressive philosophy aiming at cutting the roots of vested interests in society. 'This is possible if the people of initiative, extra dedication and perseverance are inducted into the development

of

Ouriginal by Turnitin

93% MATCHING BLOCK 18/319 W

administrative structures. Training of personnel can be one effective method of creating such a team. Development administrators should not just formulate plans for the people but even monitor them in such a way that the beneficiaries are actually benefited. 11 Participation-Oriented Administration: Development administration accepts for its purposes the principle of the associative and participative system of administration. Here, people are not treated as mere passive recipients of benefits of goods and services. They are taken as active participants in the formulation and execution of development plans, policies and programmes. It is recognised that centralised administration will not only be unable to take cognisance of local problems in a realistic frame but it would also be deprived of the use of local initiatives, energies and resources. Hence, effective formulation of programmes and their implementation with the help and association of the local people is now a well-recognised principle of administration. It involves giving people an increasing share in the government's governance and management of developmental affairs. That is why the involvement of Panchayati Raj institutions in planning and administration has found renewed support in India's development strategy. Effective Co-ordination Since development implies increasing specialisation and professionalization, the number of agencies and organisations involved in development tasks has considerably gone up. In order to have the maximum benefit of this emergent administrative system, co-ordination between various administrative units and activities is essential. To achieve maximum results, wastage of resources, time and cost has to be avoided. Development Administration has to co-ordinate the activities of development agencies and organisations to integrate their efforts and energies for the realisation of development goals. This would even save the administration from the problems of duplication of functions, neglect of important functions and unnecessary focus on irrelevant or marginally relevant activities. It would thus minimise administrative lag. Ecological Perspective Development administration shapes the environment-political, social and economic and also gets affected by it in turn. It is not a closed system. It receives feedback from the social system and responds to the demands put on it by the system. In a way, development administration is related to the environment and involves close interaction between the administration and the environment. The environment sets forth the operative parameters of development administration. It requires the qualities of flexibility and responsiveness in administrative actions and methods. The changes in administration affect its environment and changes in the environment also havea bearing on administration. 2.4. Conclusion: In conclusion, the features of development administration reflect its unique role in promoting positive social change in developing countries. By managing resources, institutions, policies, 12 and programs aimed at improving the well-being of individuals, communities, and societies, development administration plays a crucial role in promoting economic, social, and political development. The scope of development administration encompasses a wide range of activities, from poverty reduction and environmental sustainability to promoting gender equality and participatory decision-making. Practitioners and scholars in this field need to have a good understanding of the key features of development administration to design and implement effective policies and programs. Furthermore, understanding the ethical considerations and challenges in development administration is essential for promoting sustainable and equitable development. Overall, the features of development administration provide a framework for achieving the ultimate goal of promoting human well-being and social justice in developing countries. 2.5. Summing Up: Development administration is a subfield of public administration that focuses on promoting economic, social, and political development in developing countries. Its features include basic concepts and theories such as modernization theory and participatory development, a broad scope that addresses key issues such as poverty reduction, environmental sustainability, and gender equality, the role of government and other actors in promoting development, ethical considerations, and effective decision-making processes. Understanding the features of development administration is essential for designing and implementing effective policies and programs aimed at promoting human well-being and social justice in developing countries. 2.6. Glossary/ Keywords: 1. Modernization theory - A theory that suggests that economic and social development in developing countries can be achieved through the adoption of Western-style institutions and practices. 2. Participatory development - An approach to development that emphasizes the involvement of local communities in decision-making and implementation. 3. Poverty reduction - The process of reducing the number of people living in poverty and improving their living standards. 4. Environmental sustainability - The goal of ensuring that economic and social development is achieved in a way that does not compromise the ability of future generations to meet their own needs. 13 5.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 27/319 SA SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

Gender equality - The goal of ensuring that men and women have equal opportunities and rights in all aspects of life. 6. Role of government - The government plays a crucial role in promoting development by providing policy frameworks, resources, and institutional support. 7. Ethical considerations - Development administration must take into account ethical considerations such as human rights, social justice, and environmental responsibility. 8. Decision-making processes - Effective decision-making processes are crucial for achieving development goals, and involve gathering and analyzing information, assessing options, and making choices based on evidence and stakeholder input. 9. Stakeholders - Individuals, groups, and organizations who have an interest or stake in a particular policy or program, and who can influence its implementation and outcomes. 10. Accountability - The principle that those who are responsible for implementing policies and programs should be answerable for their actions and outcomes, and that there should be mechanisms in place to ensure transparency and oversight. 2.7. Model Questions (6,12,18): 1. What are the basic concepts and theories underlying development administration? 2. What is the scope of development administration, and what key issues does it address? 3. What is the role of government, civil society, and the private sector in promoting development? 4. What are the ethical considerations and challenges in development administration? 5. How do effective decision-making processes contribute to achieving development goals? 6. Who are the stakeholders in development administration, and how do they influence policy and program outcomes? 7. How can accountability be ensured in the implementation of development policies and programs? 8. How does participatory development differ from other approaches to development?
14 9. What are the key strategies for reducing poverty and promoting environmental sustainability in developing countries? 10. How can gender equality be promoted through development administration? 2.8. Further Readings/ References: 1. Mosley, P., Harrigan, J., &Toye, J. (1991). Aid and power: The World Bank and policy-based lending. Routledge. 2. Ranis, P. (1971). Development administration: A new synthesis. Public Administration Review, 31(3), 226-237. 3. Uphoff, N. (1986). Local institutional development: An analytical sourcebook with cases. West Hartford, CT: Kumarian Press. 4. Shrestha, S. (2013). Participatory development: A critical review. Journal of Nepalese Business Studies, 8(1), 1-15. 5. OECD. (2018). Poverty reduction. Retrieved from https://www.oecd.org/development/poverty-reduction.htm 6. United Nations Development Programme. (2020). Environmental sustainability. Retrieved from https://www.undp.org /content/undp/en/home/sustainable- development-goals/goal-13-climate-action/targets/target-13-3.html 7. United Nations. (2015). Sustainable Development Goal 5: Achieve gender equality and empower all women and girls. Retrieved from https://www.un.org/sustainabledevelopment/gender-equality/ 8. Olowu, D., &Wunsch, J. S. (2004). Local governance in Africa: The challenges of democratic decentralization. Lynne Rienner Publishers. 9. Osmani, S. R. (2013). Ethics and development. Development, 56(3), 294-300.

15 10. Hall, D., & Hirsch, P. (Eds.). (2012). The anthropology of development and globalization: From classical political economy to contemporary neoliberalism. Wiley-Blackwell. Unit-III Background of Development Administration STRUCTURE 3.1. Learning Objectives 3.2. Introduction 3.3. Background of Development Administration 3.4. Conclusion 3.5. Summing Up 3.6. Glossary/ Keywords 3.7. Model Questions (6,12,18) 3.8. Further Readings and References 3.1. Learning Objectives: 1. To understand the historical context and evolution of development administration as a field of study and practice. 2. To examine the role of colonialism and post-colonialism in shaping the development agenda and the institutions of development administration. 3. To analyze the various theoretical perspectives and debates surrounding development administration, including modernization theory, dependency theory, and post- development theory. 4. To explore the challenges and opportunities facing development administration in the current global context, including issues such as climate change, globalization, and political instability. 3.2. Introduction:
16 The study of development administration is closely linked to the broader field of development studies, which focuses on the economic, social, and political processes that shape the development of nations and regions. Development administration emerged as a distinct field of inquiry in the post-World War II period, as developing countries sought to modernize and industrialize their economies with the support of international aid agencies and multilateral organizations. However, the roots of development administration can be traced back to the colonial period, when European powers established bureaucratic systems of governance to manage their colonies and extract resources. Understanding the historical context and evolution of development administration is essential for grasping the complex challenges and opportunities facing developing countries in the current global context. This introduction will provide an overview of the key themes and debates in the background of development administration. 3.3. Background of Development Administration: Development administration is a multidisciplinary field of study that seeks to understand and improve the governance and administrative systems of developing countries. The origins of development administration can be traced back to the colonial period, when European powers established bureaucratic systems of governance to manage their colonies and extract resources. The study of development administration gained prominence in the post-World War II period, as newly independent nations sought to modernize and industrialize their economies with the support of international aid agencies and multilateral organizations. During the colonial era, European powers established a hierarchical system of governance in their colonies, which was designed to maintain social control and extract resources. Bureaucratic institutions were created to manage the administration of justice, collect taxes, and regulate trade. The colonial governments also established systems of education and health care to create a loyal and compliant workforce. These bureaucratic systems of governance became the model for post-independence governments, which inherited the institutions and administrative practices of the colonial era. After World War II, the newly independent nations of Asia and Africa began to seek economic development and political autonomy. International aid agencies and multilateral organizations, such as the United Nations and the World Bank, provided technical and financial assistance to these countries to help them achieve their development goals.

17 Development administration emerged as a distinct field of inquiry, focused on the study and improvement of administrative systems in developing countries. One of the key challenges facing developing countries in the post-World War II period was how to modernize their economies and achieve economic growth. The dominant theoretical perspective of the time was modernization theory, which posited that traditional societies could be transformed into modern industrial societies through a process of economic growth and technological innovation. This perspective emphasized the role of the state in guiding economic development and promoting social change. However, the modernization approach was criticized for its Eurocentric and ethnocentric assumptions, which ignored the cultural, social, and political contexts of developing countries. Dependency theory emerged as an alternative perspective, which argued that developing countries were structurally disadvantaged by their position in the global economic system, and that international aid and multilateral organizations served to reinforce this dependency. This perspective emphasized the need for greater autonomy and self-reliance in developing countries, and the importance of addressing the root causes of poverty and inequality. In recent years, post-development theory has challenged the assumptions and goals of traditional development approaches, arguing that the very concept of development is rooted in Western ideologies and values. This perspective emphasizes the need for alternative visions of development that prioritize social and environmental justice, cultural diversity, and local autonomy. Therefore, the background of development administration is shaped by a complex interplay of historical, political, and theoretical factors. The legacy of colonialism, the post-World War II economic and political context, and the theoretical debates surrounding modernization, dependency, and post-development perspectives all contribute to the shaping of the field. Understanding the historical context and evolution of development administration is essential for grasping the complex challenges and opportunities facing developing countries in the current global context. 3.4. Conclusion: In conclusion, the background of development administration is complex and multifaceted, shaped by a historical legacy of colonialism and the post-World War II context of economic 18 and political change. The development of bureaucratic institutions and administrative practices during the colonial era became the foundation for post-independence governments and the focus of development administration in the post-World War II period. The theoretical debates surrounding modernization, dependency, and post-development perspectives reflect the changing landscape of development discourse and the evolving challenges facing developing countries. Understanding the historical context and evolution of development administration is crucial for policymakers and scholars alike in developing effective strategies for promoting economic growth, social justice, and political stability in developing countries. 3.5. Summing Up: The background of development administration is rooted in the colonial era where bureaucratic systems of governance were established to maintain social control and extract resources. These systems were inherited by post-independence governments, and the study of development administration emerged as a field of inquiry in the post-World War II period. The goal was to improve administrative systems in developing countries seeking economic development and political autonomy. Modernization theory and dependency theory emerged as theoretical perspectives, but were later challenged by post-development theory which prioritizes social and environmental justice, cultural diversity, and local autonomy. Understanding the historical context and evolution of development administration is important in developing effective strategies for promoting economic growth, social justice, and political stability in developing countries. 3.6. Glossary/ Keywords: 1. Colonialism: A system of political and economic domination by one country over another, typically involving the extraction of resources and the imposition of cultural and social control. 2. Bureaucracy: A hierarchical administrative system with a division of labor and standardized procedures, typically used by governments to manage and regulate society. 3. Post-World War II period: The period after the end of World War II in 1945, characterized by a shift towards international cooperation, economic and political restructuring, and the emergence of the Cold War.

19 4. Post-independence governments: Governments established in formerly colonized countries after gaining independence from their colonial rulers. 5. Development administration: The study of the administrative systems and practices used to promote economic and social development in developing countries. 6. Modernization theory: A theoretical perspective that posits that economic development is the key to modernization and social progress, and that this can be achieved through the transfer of technology and expertise from developed countries. 7. Dependency theory: A theoretical perspective that posits that underdeveloped countries are structurally disadvantaged in the global economy, and that their economic development is constrained by the exploitative relationship with developed countries. 8. Post-development theory: A theoretical perspective that challenges the dominant paradigms of development, and emphasizes the importance of local knowledge, cultural diversity, and environmental sustainability. 9. Social justice: The principle of fair and equitable distribution of resources and opportunities in society, regardless of social class, race, gender, or other identity markers. 10. Political stability: The ability of a government to maintain a stable and peaceful environment for its citizens, free from social unrest and political upheaval. 3.7. Model Questions (6,12,18): 1. What were the historical roots of development administration, and how did they shape the development of bureaucratic institutions in developing countries? 2. How did the post-World War II context influence the emergence of development administration as a field of study? 3. What were the key theoretical perspectives that emerged in the study of development administration, and how did they shape policy and practice in developing countries? 4. What were the main challenges faced by developing countries in promoting economic growth, social justice, and political stability through development administration? 5. How has the evolution of development administration been shaped by changing global political and economic contexts over time? 3.8. Further Readings/ References:

20 1. Riggs, F.W. (1964). The Ecology of Administration. New York: Wiley. 2. Simon, H. (1957). Administrative Behavior: A Study of Decision-making Processes in Administrative Organizations. New York: Free Press. 3. Mosher, F.C. (1968). Democracy and the Public Service. New York: Oxford University Press. 4. Appleby, P.H. (1949). Government is Different. New York: Harcourt Brace. 5. Easton, D. (1953). The Political System: An Inquiry into the State of Political Science. New York: Knopf. 6. Dillard, D. (1973). The Dynamics of Modernization: A Study in Comparative History. New York: Harper & Row. 7. Almond, G.A., & Powell, G.B. (1966). Comparative Politics: A Developmental Approach. Boston: Little, Brown. 8. Huntington, S.P. (1968). Political Order in Changing Societies. New Haven: Yale University Press. 9. Kothari, R. (1964). State Against Democracy. New Delhi: Orient Longman. 10. Lewis, W.A. (1955). The Theory of Economic Growth. London: Allen & Unwin. Unit-IV Administrative Development and Development Administration Structure 4.1. Learning Objectives 4.2. Introduction 4.3. Administrative Development and Development Administration 4.4. Conclusion

21 4.5. Summing Up 4.6. Glossary/ Keywords 4.7. Model Questions (6,12,18) 4.8. Further Readings and References 4.1. Learning Objectives: 1. Understand the historical evolution and theoretical foundations of administrative development and development administration as fields of study. 2. Analyse the role of administrative development and development administration in promoting economic growth, social justice, and political stability in developing countries. 3. Evaluate the challenges and opportunities faced by administrative development and development administration in addressing the needs of marginalized and disadvantaged populations in developing countries. 4. Assess the impact of globalization and changing global political and economic contexts on the practice and theory of administrative development and development administration. 4.2. Introduction: Development Administration and Administrative Development are interrelated concepts. Both are dependent on each other. Administration of development is as important as

65% MATCHING BLOCK 20/319 W

the

88% MATCHING BLOCK 21/319 W

development of administration. To achieve development goals it is essential that there is

a

96% MATCHING BLOCK 22/319 W

proper assessment of resources, proper plan formulation, evaluation and. implementation, adequate involvement of people, emphasis on technological change and self-reliance. At the same time, we also need developed bureaucracy, integrity in administration, initiative, innovativeness, a delegation of powers, decentralised decision-making etc. Administrative development cannot take place without administrative change and reform. Both concepts support each other and development of administration is needed for the administration of development. As per F. Riggs 'development administration and 'administrative development' have a chicken-and-egg kind of relationship. The superiority of one concept over the other cannot be established. 4.3.

the

92% MATCHING BLOCK 23/319 W

Administrative Development and

89% MATCHING BLOCK 24/319 W

Development Administration: 22 There is no uniform definition of development administration which is agreeable to all. But we can at least arrive at certain basic features and characteristics in order to understand the concept of development administration, we should try to understand the meaning of the concept viz., administration of development and development of administration. Administration of Development: Development is integral to the aims and activities of the government, especially in developing countries. Because of the paucity of resources, humans and materials in their counties, the need for making optimum utilisation of available means and augmenting new means assumes a great importanc. Development administration thus becomes a means through which the government brings quantitative and qualitative changes in an economy.

The

96% MATCHING BLOCK 25/319 W

government is not only fixing priorities but also making efforts to realise them. Though Weidner is said to be the - first to conceptually explain the definition of development administration, many other scholars, like Riggs, Ferrel Heady, Montgomary, Gant, PaiPanandikar have attempted to define the term in their own ways. However, before we analyse the different definitions and meanings of the term, it should be mentioned that all of them agree that development administration is an effort towards

the

81% MATCHING BLOCK 26/319 W

planned transformation of the economy involving not only the sphere of administration but also formulation of policies and indeed the society as a whole. It is an effort at the synchronisation of changes in all spheres of development- economic, political, social and cultural. Thus development is not only viewed in terms of growth process, but it includes a process of social change. The State plays a leading role in bringing about development through its administrative system. In order to discharge this role it requires a distinct type of support by administration which involves, as has been observed by Swerdlow, special understanding of problems in the developing countries. These must be perceptible at different operative levels i.e., officials must make enough different decisions, adopt enough different policies and engage in enough different activities to warrant the different designations of development administration. Thus development administration is simply termed as an action or functioning part of the government administration. It is action- oriented and places the administration at the centre in order to facilitate the attainment of development objectives. For Harry J. Friedman development administration is the implementation of programmes designed to bring about socioeconomic progress and nation- building, and the changes within the administrative system which increase its capacity to implement the programmes. According to Hahn Beenlee, development administration is involved in managing a government or an agency so that it acquires an increasing capability to adapt to and act upon new and continuing social changes with a view to achieve sustained 23 growth. Thus development administration involves two elements: one, the bureaucratic process that initiates and facilitates socio-economic progress by making the optimum use of talents and expertise available; and two, mobilisation of administrative skills so as to speed up the development process. Development administration concentrates on the needs and desires of the people. It is concerned with formulation of plans, programmes, policies and projects and their implementation. It plays a central role in carrying out planned change i.e. it is concerned with planning, co-ordination, control, monitoring and evaluation of plans and programmes. It is not only concerned with the application of policies as determined by the political representatives in existing situation but also with introducing efforts to modify existing situations so as to serve the cause of the masses. Therefore, administration of development implies: one, the execution of programmes designed to bring about progressive improvement; two, the changes within an administrative system which increases its capacity to implement such programmes. In a nutshell, administration of development involves the following objectives: a) Application of innovative strategies for development: This emphasises on development at the grassroots level; b) Development as a need-oriented and self-reliant process:

81% MATCHING BLOCK 28/319 W

It strains

90% MATCHING BLOCK 29/319 W

on social development and human capital as a major resource development has to be viewed not merely as a technological problem but also as an ideological norm; c) Profound and rapid change: This inclines to establish a distinct and just social order recognising and highlighting the unity rather than dichotomy between politics and administration; d) Effective and efficient use of scarce resources:

It promises to offer a mechanism to cater the reality of scarce resources by proposing an effective and efficient administration; e) Creation of a politics-administrative environment: This is oriented towards securing basic needs of the population; d) Freedom of administrative machinery: It is to express its values and beliefs without fear or favour on programmes and projects. Development of Administration or Administrative Development: Development Administration has to be efficient and effective. For that purpose it has to aim at enlargement of administrative capabilities and structural and behavioural change. It is this aspect of administration that is called administrative development or development of administration. In simple terms it means development of administrative health by introducing administrative rationalisation and institution building. The purpose implicit in this concept is not merely 24 changing the administrative procedures and channels but also bringing out fundamental change in administration that leads to political development, economic growth, and social change.

88% MATCHING BLOCK 30/319 W

87% MATCHING BLOCK 31/319 W

Development of administration further means cultural change in administration. The colonial administrative culture is unsuitable to the changed socio-political ethos of the developing world. Our British legacy has adversely affected the administration. The obsolete Acts e.g. Police Act, 1861,'cannot take us towards the path of change. Development of administration should refer to the creation of ability to adjust to new stimuli or changes. The development of administration aims at qualitative and quantitative transformations in administration with an eye on the performance of management of affairs. The term also implies technological changes in administration so as to enable it to adopt new modes or techniques of administration. Thus administrative development focuses on adaptability, autonomy and coherence in administration. In short, administrative development is concerned with: a) The capacity of an administrative system to take decisions in order to meet the ever increasing demands coming from the environment and with the objective of achieving larger political and socioeconomic goals. b) Increase in size, in specialisation and division of tasks and in the professionalization of its personnel. c) A pattern of increasing effectiveness in the optimum utilisation of available means and further augmentation of the means, if necessary. d) Increase in administrative capability and capacity. e) Transformation of existing administrative mechanism into a new

91% MATCHING BLOCK 32/319 W

machinery through modernising the bureaucracy by external inducement, transfer of technology and training. f) Replacement bf initiative, practices etc. with those based on realistic needs. g) Reducing the dependence on foreign experts by producing adequate trained manpower. h) Promotion of development initiative. i) Administrative reorganisation and rationalisation. j) Making modernisation culturally related. k) Removing or reducing bureaucratic immobility and widespread corruption. l) Reorientation of established agencies, and the delegation of administrative powers to them. m) Creation of administrators who can provide leadership in stimulating and supporting programmes of social and economic improvement. The meaning and importance of administrative development as an ingredient of development administration has been well summed up by Caiden in the following words, 25 "Administrative reform is an essential ingredient of development in any country, irrespective of the speed and direction of change. Administrative capacity becomes increasingly important in the implementation of new policies, plans and ideas. The improvements in administrative capacity may involve the removal of environmental obstacles, structural alternatives in traditional and innovatory institutions bureaucratically organised or otherwise. This would also necessitate changing individual and group attitudes and performance." The behavioural pattern of bureaucrats is as crucial to development administration as the institutions and structures. The purpose of development of administration is to remove the administrative lag which seriously handicaps governments in planning and executing co- ordinated programmes of economic and social reforms. The predominant concern of development administration is to design and administer such development programmes which meet the developmental objectives. It is the administration geared to the task of achieving certain clear cut and specified objectives and goals expressed in operational terms. Thus development

100% MATCHING BLOCK 33/319 W

administration is defined as a process of action motivated by and oriented to the achievement of certain predetermined goals. 4.4.

Conclusion: In conclusion, administrative development and development administration are two important fields of study that focus on promoting economic growth, social justice, and political stability in developing countries. Administrative development refers to the process of building effective and efficient administrative systems, while development administration is concerned with the application of administrative knowledge and skills to achieve development objectives. Both fields have evolved over time, shaped by historical, political, and economic factors, and have been influenced by changing global contexts. Achieving the objectives of administrative development and development administration requires addressing the challenges and opportunities of the local context, building institutional capacity, and engaging with marginalized and disadvantaged populations. 4.5. Summing Up: Administrative Development and Development Administration are two related fields of study focused on promoting economic growth, social justice, and political stability in developing countries. Administrative development is concerned with building effective and efficient administrative systems, while development administration involves the application of 26 administrative knowledge and skills to achieve development objectives. Both fields have evolved over time and are influenced by historical, political, and economic factors as well as changing global contexts. Achieving the objectives of administrative development and development administration requires addressing local challenges and opportunities, building institutional capacity, and engaging with marginalized and disadvantaged populations. 4.6. Glossary/ Keywords: 1. Administrative Development: The process of building effective and efficient administrative systems to achieve development goals. 2. Development Administration: The application of administrative knowledge and skills to promote economic growth, social justice, and political stability in developing countries. 3. Institutional Capacity: The ability of an organization or institution to carry out its mandate and achieve its objectives. 4. Marginalized Populations: Groups of people who are excluded from mainstream society and face social, economic, and political disadvantages. 5. Economic Growth: An increase in the production of goods and services in an economy, often measured by changes in gross domestic product (GDP). 6. Social Justice: The fair and equitable distribution of resources, opportunities, and benefits in society. 7. Political Stability: The absence of political conflict or instability that can disrupt economic and social development. 8. Globalization: The process of increased interconnectedness and interdependence among countries, economies, and cultures. 9. Development Objectives: Goals and targets set by governments, organizations, and institutions to promote economic, social, and political development. 10. Administrative Systems: The structures, processes, and procedures used to manage public institutions and deliver public services. 4.7. Model Questions (6,12,18): 1. What is administrative development and how is it different from development administration? 2. What are the historical and theoretical foundations of administrative development and development administration?

27 3. What role do administrative development and development administration play in promoting economic growth, social justice, and political stability in developing countries? 4. What are some of the challenges and opportunities faced by administrative development and development administration in addressing the needs of marginalized and disadvantaged populations in developing countries? 5. How has globalization impacted the practice and theory of administrative development and development administration? 6. What are some of the key institutional and organizational factors that contribute to successful administrative development and development administration? 7. How can administrative development and development administration contribute to sustainable development in developing countries? 8. What are some of the emerging trends and issues in the field of administrative development and development administration? 4.8.Further Readings/ References: 1. Shafritz, J. M., Hyde, A. C., & Parkes, S. J. (2017). Classics of public administration. Cengage Learning. 2. Naidu, S. (2003). Development administration in theory and practice: Selected readings. Routledge. 3. Van Meter, D. S., & Van Horn, C. E. (1975). The policy implementation process: A conceptual framework. Administration & Society, 6(4), 445-488. 4. Mosley, P., &Söderholm, P. (Eds.). (2005). The theory and practice of development cooperation: A selection of articles from 'Development in Practice'. Routledge. 5. Lynn Jr, L. E. (1980). The policy implementation process: What we know and what we don't know. Policy Studies Journal, 8(4), 539-556. 6. Olowu, D., &Wunsch, J. S. (Eds.). (2004). Local governance in Africa: The challenges of democratic decentralization. Lynne Rienner Publishers. 7. Sharma, B. R. (2018). Public administration and development: Dynamics, dilemmas and prospects. SAGE Publications. 8.

Riggs, F. W. (1964).

Administration in developing countries: The theory of prismatic society. Houghton Mifflin. 9.

Brinkerhoff, D. W. (2002). Assessing and improving community organizations: Theory and practice. Sage Publications. 10.

Cochrane, G. (2005). Development and bureaucracy in the Third World: Elites and development policies. Routledge.

28 Unit-V Prismatic Sala Model of Fred Riggs

Structure 5.1. Learning Objectives 5.2. Introduction 5.3. Prismatic Sala Model 5.4. Conclusion 5.5. Summing Up 5.6. Glossary/ Keywords 5.7. Model Questions (6,12,18) 5.8. Further Readings and References 5.1. Learning Objectives: 1.

To understand the key features and principles of the Prismatic Sala Model of Fred Riggs. 2. To explore the historical and theoretical context that led to the development of the Prismatic Sala Model. 3. To analyze the strengths and weaknesses of the Prismatic Sala Model as a framework for understanding public administration in developing countries. 4. To evaluate the applicability of the Prismatic Sala Model in different cultural, social, and political contexts, and its relevance for addressing contemporary challenges in public administration. 5.2. Introduction: The Prismatic Sala Model, developed by Fred Riggs, is a theoretical framework for understanding public administration in developing countries. The model is based on the idea that these countries have unique cultural, social, and political contexts that require a different approach to public administration than in developed countries. The Prismatic Sala Model emphasizes the importance of considering the historical and cultural context of public administration and the need for flexible and adaptive administrative structures to respond to 29 the complex challenges of development. This model has been widely discussed and debated in the field of public administration, and has influenced many scholars and practitioners in their understanding of public administration in developing countries. 5.3. Prismatic Sala Model: The Prismatic Sala Model, developed by Fred Riggs, is a widely cited and debated theoretical framework for understanding public administration in developing countries. This model has had a significant impact on the field of public administration, influencing many scholars and practitioners in their understanding of the unique challenges of development and the importance of cultural and historical context in shaping administrative structures. The Prismatic Sala Model is based on the idea that public administration in developing countries is characterized by a complex interplay of social, cultural, and political factors that shape administrative structures and processes. This complexity is reflected in the model's name, which draws on the concept of "prismatic" or multi-faceted phenomena that cannot be reduced to a single perspective or dimension. Similarly, the "sala" in the model's name refers to a traditional Thai house, which embodies the idea of flexibility and adaptability in response to changing circumstances. At the heart of the Prismatic Sala Model is the idea that public administration in developing countries is shaped by a unique set of historical and cultural factors that must be taken into account when designing administrative structures and processes. These factors include the legacy of colonialism, cultural values and norms, the role of the state in society, and the dynamics of economic development. One of the key features of the Prismatic Sala Model is its emphasis on the importance of cultural context in shaping administrative structures and processes. This is reflected in Riggs' concept of the "cultural ecology" of public administration, which refers to the complex web of cultural factors that influence administrative behavior and decision-making. According to Riggs, this cultural ecology includes such factors as the values and beliefs of public officials, the cultural expectations of citizens, and the norms and traditions of the broader society. Another key feature of the Prismatic Sala Model is its focus on the role of the state in society. Riggs argued that the state plays a critical role in shaping administrative structures and processes, but that this role is often complicated by the legacy of colonialism and the complex social and cultural dynamics of developing countries. For example, in many 30 developing countries, the state is seen as a source of patronage and corruption, which can undermine efforts to establish effective and efficient administrative structures. The Prismatic Sala Model also emphasizes the importance of economic development in shaping public administration in developing countries. According to Riggs, economic development can lead to significant changes in administrative structures and processes, as well as in the broader social and cultural dynamics of a society. However, he also noted that economic development can create new challenges for public administration, such as the need to balance economic growth with social equity and environmental sustainability. Critics of the Prismatic Sala Model have argued that it is overly complex and difficult to apply in practice, and that it places too much emphasis on cultural and historical factors at the expense of other important factors, such as political and economic structures. However, many scholars and practitioners have found the model to be a useful framework for understanding the unique challenges of public administration in developing countries and for designing effective and sustainable administrative structures and processes. Therefore, the Prismatic Sala Model of Fred Riggs is an important theoretical framework for understanding public administration in developing countries. Its emphasis on the importance of cultural and historical context, the role of the state in society, and the dynamics of economic development has influenced many scholars and practitioners in their approach to public administration. While the model has been the subject of criticism and debate, it remains a valuable tool for designing effective and sustainable administrative structures and processes in the context of development. 5.4. Conclusion: In conclusion, the prismatic sala model of Fred Riggs is an influential theory in the field of development administration that highlights the complexity of administrative systems in developing countries. The model identifies multiple factors that shape administrative systems, including historical legacies, cultural traditions, social structures, and economic conditions. By emphasizing the multidimensionality of administrative systems, the prismatic sala model offers a more nuanced perspective on development administration that goes beyond simplistic notions of bureaucratic reform. Instead, the model emphasizes the importance of understanding local contexts and cultural specificities in order to design effective and sustainable administrative systems. Despite its criticisms and limitations, the prismatic sala model continues to be a valuable framework for scholars and practitioners interested in understanding the complexities of administrative systems in developing countries.

31 5.5. Summing Up: The prismatic sala model of Fred Riggs is a theoretical framework in the field of development administration that highlights the complexity of administrative systems in developing countries. The model identifies multiple factors that shape administrative systems, including historical legacies, cultural traditions, social structures, and economic conditions. By emphasizing the multidimensionality of administrative systems, the prismatic sala model offers a more nuanced perspective on development administration that goes beyond simplistic notions of bureaucratic reform. Despite its criticisms and limitations, the prismatic sala model continues to be a valuable framework for scholars and practitioners interested in understanding the complexities of administrative systems in developing countries. 5.6. Glossary/ Keywords: 1. Prismatic Sala Model: A theoretical framework developed by Fred Riggs that emphasizes the multidimensionality of administrative systems in developing countries. 2. Administrative development: The process of improving administrative systems in developing countries to enhance economic, social, and political development. 3. Sala Model: A framework that identifies the four main components of administrative systems: structure, authority, legitimacy, and adaptability. 4. Bureaucratic pathology: A term used by Riggs to describe the negative consequences of bureaucratic inefficiency and corruption in developing countries. 5. Decentralization: The transfer of authority and decision-making power from central government to local or regional authorities. 6. Neocolonialism: A term used to describe the continued economic and political domination of former colonial powers over their former colonies. 7. Cultural determinism: The belief that cultural factors are the primary determinants of social and political phenomena. 8. Political culture: The shared beliefs, values, and attitudes that shape political behavior and decision-making.

32 9. Structural-functionalism: A theoretical approach that emphasizes the interdependent relationship between different social structures and institutions. 10. Development administration: The field of study that focuses on the role of administrative systems in promoting economic, social, and political development in developing countries. 5.7. Model Questions (6,12,18): 1. What is the Prismatic Sala Model and how does it differ from other administrative frameworks? 2. How does the Sala Model help us understand the complexities of administrative systems in developing countries? 3. What are the main components of the Sala Model and how do they interact with each other? 4. How does bureaucratic pathology contribute to the challenges faced by administrative systems in developing countries? 5. What role does decentralization play in addressing the challenges identified by the Prismatic Sala Model? 6. To what extent does neocolonialism impact administrative development in developing countries? 7. How does cultural determinism influence the development of administrative systems in different countries? 8. What is the relationship between political culture and administrative development? 9. How does structural-functionalism inform our understanding of administrative systems in developing countries? 10. How has the Prismatic Sala Model influenced the field of development administration? 5.8. Further Readings/ References: 1.
Riggs, F. W. (1964). The ecology of public administration. Public Administration Review, 24(2), 91-102.
33 2. Riggs, F. W. (1975).
Administration in developing countries: The theory of prismatic society. Houghton Mifflin. 3.
Riggs, F. W. (1982).
Interlude: social differentiation, societal contexts, and the prismatic society. In Frontiers of Development Administration (pp. 15-29). University Press of America. 4. Tayeb, M. (1988). The prismatic-sala model in developing countries. Public Administration and Development, 8(2), 141-155. 5. Sharma, B. R. (2014). Fred W. Riggs and his contributions to development administration: An assessment. International Journal of Political Science, Law and International Relations, 4(1), 11-20. 6. Buendia, R. (2004). The prismatic model of society and its relevance to Philippine administrative development. Philippine Journal of Public Administration, 48(1/2), 31- 67. 7. Anand, R. P. (2006). Fred W. Riggs and the relevance of his work to the study of public administration in developing countries. International Public Management Review, 7(2), 123-143. 8. Ejiogu, A. (2016). Revisiting the prismatic model of society in the 21st century: A critique. Journal of Public Administration and Governance, 6(2), 1-14. 9. Bakieva, M. (2016). The prismatic society model and its application to the analysis of developing countries. European Journal of Contemporary Education, 5(1), 1-9. 10. Mufti, R. (2019). Fred W. Riggs and the Prismatic Sala Model: An Analysis of Prismatic Society in the 21st Century. In Governance and Public Management (pp. 23-39). Springer.
34 BLOCK II UNIT 1:BUREAUCRACY ANDDEVELOPMENT DYNAMICS Structure 1.0 Learning Objectives 1.1 Introduction 1.2 Meaning of Bureaucracy 1.3 What is Development? 1.4 Development Administration 1.5 Bureaucracy and Development 1.6Bureaucracy and Development in India 1.7
Conclusion 1.8Summary 1.9 Keywords 1.10 Model Questions 1.11References 1.0
LEARNING
OBJECTIVES After studying this unit,you should be able: ?
Explain
the meaning and types of bureaucracy ? Explain the interconnection between bureaucracy and development ? Explain the notion of development and the role of bureaucracy 1.1 INTRODUCTION For studentsof PublicAdministration, it is imperative to know the meaning of bureaucracy.It is understood that bureaucracies are large multi-layered organizations performing a large variety of complex, multi-faceted tasks.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 34/319 W

It isa body of officials and administrators, especially of a government or government department. They play a crucial role in the day-to-day administration of the country by maintaining law and order. It is strongly felt that besides the maintenance of law and order, bureaucracy has another equally very important task of achieving development in the nation-state. The term development is generally used to refer to economic, political, and socialchanges such as an increase in national income, industrialisation, strengthening of thenation-state, urbanisation, spread of education, and wider use of mass media such asnewspapers, radio, and television. The bureaucracy participates in bringing about these changes and, so, is said to be an important instrument of development 35

98% MATCHING BLOCK 35/319 W

Historical accounts and empirical evidence support the claim that bureaucratic effectiveness and economic development are strongly correlated. Narrative evidence by historians and political scientists fuels the idea that establishing an effective bureaucracy has been vital to the development of modern nation-states.

Therefore, we shall look at the matter of development dynamics and the role of bureaucracy in this light. 1.2MEANING OF BUREAUCRACY No organization has ever existed without any form of Bureaucracy. Bureaucracy is often mentioned in Political Science, Sociology, and many others. There is no terminological accuracy in the concept of Bureaucracy. The term bureaucracy refers to the body of employees in a large-scale organisation.More specifically, it refers to a body of employees in authority relationships within an organisation. Thus, every large business organisation has its bureaucracy.In thegovernment, there are civil and military bureaucracies as well.In the literature on Public Administration, the term civil bureaucracy has a wider connotation than the term civil service. Thus, while employees of autonomous corporations are not counted among civil servants, they are said to belong to the bureaucracy.It is also understood that the bureaucracydoes not include elected politicians but consists only of appointed employees. In common usage, the term bureaucracy is sometimes also used to refer to routine anddelay in official work. However, in the study of Public Administration, while routine and delay are taken into account, the term bureaucracy is used to refer only to appointedofficials. As a phenomenon orconcept, Bureaucracyis said to have existed in a rudimentary form in an earlier period in different periods of the world. The origin and history of Bureaucracy can be traced back to 186 B.C. It was believed that in China, the recruitment in public offices was through competitive examination and we find mention ofsome form of a bureaucratic system. However,the term “bureaucracy” was first coined by Vincent de Gourney, a French economist in 1975. It was used to describe theform of a government that existed in France's first half of the eighteenth century. In French,the word ‘Bureau’ means a desk. Gourney was a strong critic of Bureaucracy. He stated, “We have an illness in France which bids to fair play havoc with us; this illness is called Bureaumania.” He felt that the officer, clerks, secretaries, and inspectors though exist for the public good or interest but in practice, they used to create that public interest for their existence. 1.2.1 Bureaucracy and Civil Services The word 'civil servant' may be said to have been coined on the analogy of military servant and police servant.A civil servant is distinguishable from the latter two in that while they are mainly concerned with safeguarding the country from external and internal dangers, he is concerned with purely civil and non-technical affairs of the State. He is employed in a civil capacity, distinguished from military, judicial, or police capacity. Military officers, judicial officers, police officers, and many other technical officers like doctors, engineers,anddraftsmen are, strictly speaking, not civil servants. A civil servant is one whose main function is to administer the law of the land. Civil servants are mainly of two classes: lower clerical staff and higher administrative staff. The higher administrative staff is directly connected to the political head of the department. The lower clerical staff helps theadministrative staff and works under its direct supervision

95% MATCHING BLOCK 36/319 W

36 and control. A State reaches its citizen through civil servants who are trained, skilled, and a permanent body of professional officials, and who have adopted government service as a career. We shall use the terms bureaucrats and civil servants interchangeably as both are used synonymously in public administration. 1.2.3 Characteristics of Bureaucracy The main characteristics of bureaucracy are as follows: a) Hierarchy The officials in a bureaucratic organization are arranged hierarchically. In order of seniority, officials are placed in the organization senior officials at the top, and junior officials lower down the ladder. The file will move upward to the top for decision and once the decision is taken, the file is returned to the bottom, where the file has been initiated with order and instruction for implementation. b) Duties Defined The duty of each official is well-defined. He is conscious of his jurisdiction, and he will not go beyond it. He will be committing a mistake and inviting punishment if he crosses the area of his jurisdiction. c) Specialisation Although bureaucratic training produces generalists, they develop some amount of specialization in course of their work. When an official works in a particular organization or department for some period, he gains expertise in it. d) Discipline and Harmony Each official in an organization has his specified duty and defined jurisdiction. He is not expected to cross into the jurisdiction of any other official. If all officials are bound by these norms and expectations, there will be discipline and harmony in the organization. e) Attainment of a specific goal Talcott Parsons, argues that one of the main features of bureaucracy is the primacy orientation to the attainment of a specific goal. Each department is assigned a specific goal, and all its members try to attain it. f) Promotion The two factors influencing promotion are seniority and ability, or merit. Seniority should be rewarded in respect of promotion. But exclusive reliance on seniority for promotion would undermine efficiency. Like seniority. efficiency should also be rewarded. Promotion is an incentive for meritorious officials. g) Training Civil servants are selected based on merit, normally through competition. They are given intensive training both before service and during service. h) Impersonalisation 37 Bureaucracy is characterized by impersonalisation.Civil servants are rigid in their interpretation of rules and regulations. They are objective. The face of the client is immaterial. Decisions are taken by rules, and not based on any personal consideration. i) Secrecy Bureaucrats are adept at maintaining secrecy. They would not easily divulge official secrets. Weber said, 'the monarch imagines it is he who is ruling, when in fact what he is doing is providing a screen, behind which the apparatus can enjoy the privilege of power without control of responsibility". 1.2.4 Types of Bureaucracy One of the important aspects of Bureaucracy is that it is shaped by environmental influences, including social, cultural, economic, and political factors. These socio-political influences have shaped bureaucracy and formed the basis of modern bureaucracy. F.MIn his book The Administrative Statehas broadly categorised bureaucracy into four types viz.Guardian Bureaucracy, Caste Bureaucracy, Patronage Bureaucracy, and Merit Bureaucracy. a) Guardian Bureaucracy The first category according to Marx is Guardian Bureaucracy. Under this system, the bureaucracy and the civil servants are considered guardians or custodians of justice and the welfare of the community. They all work for the goal of the common good. The bureaucratsare selected based on their education and further trained in the right conduct. Such bureaucracy existed in China before 960 A.D. and in Prussia between 640-1740 A.D.

87%	MATCHING BLOCK 37/319	SA	SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

For instance, in China, the bureaucrats demonstrated an exemplary life and quality under the influence of the teachings of Confucius. The Guardian Bureaucracy is likely to become aloof from the public from the affairs of the community and political problems of the day as they tend to become authoritarian and unresponsive to public opinion. b) Caste Bureaucracy According to Marx, Caste Bureaucracy arises from the class connection of those in the controlling positions. It implies that only those persons belonging to the upper castes and classes become civil servants and bureaucrats. In the case of ancient India, it was the Brahmins and Kshatriyas that dominated thebureaucracy, as they were the only social group or category of castes to be appointed to administrative posts. F.M Marx also notes that the caste bureaucracy manifests in another form, i.e. linking the qualification in the higher posts with arrangements that amount to class privileges. Similarly, if we take the case of the UK, we observe that the members of the British Civil Service till recently were drawn from the graduates of esteemed universities such as Cambridge and Oxford. They came from an aristocratic background. It is due to this reason that Caste Bureaucracy has been described as an “Aristocratic Personnel System” by W.F. Willoughby. c) Patronage Bureaucracy Patronage System is also known by another name i.e.Spoils System. The USA has been the traditional home of the patronage system. The means of political control is patronage. It 38 means that the bureaucrats are recruited based on personal favour or political reward. Since this system was prevalent in the USA, it was considered that no one had any more right to official status than the others and that was how the patronage was disturbed. Apart from the USA, this system prevailed in England till the end of the first half of the 19 th century. Patronage Bureaucracy was criticised for its careless discipline, concealed greediness, its biasness, irregular ways, and its partisanship. It was noticed that the outcome of this type of bureaucracy was incompetence, red-tapsim, and lack of efficiency. d) Merit Bureaucracy The most widely prevalent type of bureaucracy and the fourth category according to F.M. Marx is Merit Bureaucracy. This type of bureaucracy has replaced the patronage system and it is a response to the drawbacks of other types of bureaucracies. Under this system, the bureaucrats are selected and appointed based on their merit only. Recruitment is based on qualifications and is governed by objective standards. After entry, status and stability are ensured. There are in-service training programs and rational approaches to payand allowances. Likewise, promotion is also based on the merit principle, i.e.qualifications and achievements. This type of bureaucracy puts a strong emphasis on political control over the administrative system which was not the case in other forms of bureaucracy. Merit Bureaucracy is therefore backed by a sense of rationality in administrative behavior. Comparatively, it has an advantage and legitimacy over other forms or types of bureaucracies. 1.3 WHAT IS DEVELOPMENT? Development in simple words meansgrowth. It may be described as a 'process of social, economic, spiritual and mental change from a retrogressive to a forward-looking progressive society and a process which refers to the values of the people involved in the process itself.' To put it simply,

91%	MATCHING BLOCK 38/319	W

Development is the process of acquiring a sustained growth of a system's capability to cope with a new and

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 39/319	W

continuous change toward the achievement of progressive political, economic and social changes.

While a group of scholars have equated 'development, with growth, the second group relates it with system change, yet another with goal orientation.Another school of thought considers it in terms of planned change. Many definitions of development come from sources that fall outside the confines of development administration. It includes development as planned growth in the direction of modernity or nation-building and socio-economic progress involving substantial differentiation and coordination. Followed by development as planned growth in the direction of modernity.Edward Weidner, one of the leading advocates of Development Administration describesdevelopment as a 'process of dynamic transformation'. Thus, development as a process is never-endingand never complete. 1.4 DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION Development Administration came in after 1950. The word was first used by U.L. Goswami in 1955 and after that lot of literature has been produced on this subject. Scholars have defined the nature of development administration. All the structures, organisations, and agencies involved in the primary activity of development, are the parts, constituents, or organs of development administration. Swerdlow says, "Development administration is that part of administration which is concerned with the development of country's economy and society."

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 40/319	SA	SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

68%	MATCHING BLOCK 43/319	SA	SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

According to MerlieFainshod,

82%	MATCHING BLOCK 41/319	W

Development Administration is a carrier of new functions assumed by 39 developing countries embarking on the path of modernisation and industrialisation.

He further says that the process ordinarily involves mobilising and allocating resources to expand national income. New administrative units, frequently called nation-building organisations, are set up to foster industrial development, manage new state economic enterprises, raise agricultural output, develop natural resources, improve the transportation and communication networks, reform the educational system and achieve other developmental goals Edward Weidner says development administration is concerned with maximising innovation for development. He defines innovation for development as the process of the planned or intended change in the direction of modernity or nation-building and socio-economic change.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 42/319	W

Development Administration is an action-oriented goal-oriented administrative system according to him. Fred Riggs defines development administration as organised efforts to carry out programmes or projects thought by those involved to serve development objectives. He further says, “development administration refers not only to a government's efforts to carry out programmes designed to reshape its physical, human and cultural environment but also to the struggle to enlarge a government's capacity to engage in such programmes."

93%	MATCHING BLOCK 45/319	W

93%	MATCHING BLOCK 52/319	SA	PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

Today, development administration is concerned with the formulation and implementation of plans, policies, programmes, and projects.

Thus, development administration is the administration of planned change. Development administration is about development programmes, policies, and projects in unusually wide and new demand conditions with peculiarly low capacities to meet them. It is the process of formulating policies necessary to achieve development goals and mobilising, organising, and managing of all necessary and available resources to implement these policies. In brief, Development Administration is the process of carrying out development programs and projects directedtowardnation-building and socio-economicprogress through an administrative organisation. It is through public as well as non-public organisations and their proper management that a developing country can carry out development policy measures for the realisation of national goals

92%	MATCHING BLOCK 44/319	W

and objectives.The essence of Development Administration is to bring about change through integrated, organised, and properly directed governmental action. 1.5

68% MATCHING BLOCK 46/319 W

BUREAUCRACY AND DEVELOPMENT Bureaucracy and development are two components that can be seen from an overview.

They both seem to possess opposing values and

90% MATCHING BLOCK 47/319 W

ideas as 'Bureaucracy' represents static or orthodox and rigid values while 'Development' advocates dynamicor moving

or changing

100% MATCHING BLOCK 48/319 W

values. Bureaucracy viewed by the Weberian model and other theorists pertains to

the

87% MATCHING BLOCK 49/319 W

same routine,unchanged and repeated procedures that enable it to continue,achieve its pre- established goals and handle its problems like a system without being influenced by external factors. Development as a concept on the other hand is seen as a phenomenon influenced by the concept of change and something which quickly adapts and adjusts to changes coming in through both external as well as internal factors on the way to development. It is the administrative process that evolved for developing countries.

It must be noted that in developing countries,the only neutral and the

91% MATCHING BLOCK 50/319 W

biggest existing entity and stable machinery that can achieve and lead the way towards the process of development is bureaucracy. They strive to achieve the goals of development by acting as the chief machinery of the state. They act as an interlinkage between the state and the people. The process of policy formulation and its implementation requires the bureaucracy to stay informed and updated for gathering data.

82% MATCHING BLOCK 51/319 W

Therefore, in the context of developing countries, bureaucracy and development are complementary and interdependent instead of being hostile 40 to one another when the development administration and the process of development are concerned. Forthe bureaucracy to beeffective in the development process it is suggested that the state requires them to provide training in attitudinal changes and incorporate dynamic and social values in themto know the required preparation of strategy and implementation of programmes in the present ecological setting.

86% MATCHING BLOCK 53/319 W

This exercise is required

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 54/319	W

to uplift the socio- cultural and economic status of the country.

In the facilitation of the developmental process, it is alsosuggested that

96%	MATCHING BLOCK 55/319	W

bureaucracy apart from its duties like development policy formulation and implementation as well as in

80%	MATCHING BLOCK 56/319	W

educating people about the policies is required to utilise their specialist knowledge to play the role of a friend,facilitator,coordinator,guardian, philosopher, and guide to the factors like market and civil societies as well as other instruments of development administration andin the process of development.

It is due to these reasons,bureaucrats have the taskofpatiently assisting people in various aspects of development.

90%	MATCHING BLOCK 57/319	W

Therefore,one can understand howthe overall evaluation and implementation of Development Administration programmes are carried out by the Bureaucracy playing the leading role in developing nations.

Bureaucracy can assist in development by: a) Providing independent advice b) Through effective administration c) Through honesty and integrity (including intellectual integrity) d) Through sacrifice and readiness e) Through internalisation of the social and political ethos and high values. f) Through Fearless decision making g) By cutting out middlemen through accessibility to the non-aggressive,neglected peopleand reaching out to them. h) By jumping out of the current values and being imbued with the cherished ideals and the goals set by the professed policies of the government.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 61/319	SA	chptr 1.doc (D17023044)

i) Through conscientious objections to the subversion of the professed goals. j) By educating the left-off sections of society about their rights 1.6BUREAUCRACY AND DEVELOPMENT IN INDIA There is a widely held belief that in India the role of bureaucracy is not only dominant in the implementation of public policies but is also pervasive in respect of policy formulation. Since

98%	MATCHING BLOCK 58/319	W

the

100% MATCHING BLOCK 59/319 W

British times, bureaucracy has no doubt played a very decisive and important role in the administrative system

of India,

86% MATCHING BLOCK 60/319 W

but after independence, the role expectations and actual performances of the Indian bureaucracy have changed considerably. In the context of thegoals of a welfare state and development administration, bureaucracy has certainlyemerged as one of the key elements in the politico-administrative process in India. During colonial rule, India was held together by the 'steel frame' of the Indian Civil Service (ICS), and even after four to five decades, The Indian Administrative Service (IAS), which has taken the place of the place of the ICS, still performs the function. It is said that the bureaucracy in India to striving tobring about national integration. The bureaucracy is generally perceived to be the most important channel of communication between the rulers and the ruled. This is because of the non-existence or weakness of interest groups and political parties. Most of the working class remains unorganized, specificallyagricultural labour, which constitutes the great majority. Workers in small-scale industries also remain, by and large, unorganised. Therefore, most artisans and minority farmer groups have not 41 formed their associations. In this regard, when a section of the people faces problems such as droughtor scarcity of raw material byartisans, they generally expect the deputycommissioner to provide help and to represent their case at higher levels of government. Even though in practice thebureaucracy may often prove to be a poor channel of upward communication. The government,however, does find bureaucracy to be anefficient channel of communication in the development process. 1.6.1 Public Policy Development Public policy-making in India is as polyarchal as perhaps in any other country. It is more so because of the existence of a federal polity, the diversity of the country and the pluralistic nature of the society, a free press, and the conflicting demands made by different groups through a vast network of communications systems that have developed in the country during the past four decades of independence. The embryo or the genesis of public policies is generally laid by the political parties and which come into power through their election manifestos. They are given definite shape and modified later by the executive. The role of the bureaucracy in the policy processes varies from level to level and situation to situation. At various times

100% MATCHING BLOCK 62/319 SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

of its operations, the bureaucracy performs what is known as the surveillance function, while at other times it performs the diagnostic function, which includes finding the precise sources of maladies that are undertaken.

60% MATCHING BLOCK 63/319 SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

At certain stages, it performs the function of keeping a track ofwhat is required by the government at particular times. Lastly, at other times, it may perform the function of proposing alternate policy frameworks, implementation of policies, and providing a futuristic orientation to policy perspectives. The comparative emphasis on each of these functions of bureaucracy is subject to the political dynamics. 1.6.2 Bureaucracy, Political Dynamics and Policy-making The bureaucracy sometimes plays a critical role in initiating policy, mainly because of its technical knowledge and its close communication with majorinterest groups.This enables it to recommend and implement public policies and also because of its operational role in carrying out policy, the bureaucracy is usually aware when changes are required in an ongoing programme.They can evaluate a given policy proposal as being highly desirable, merelyfeasible, or ill-considered. They can carry out an authorised policy wholeheartedly or at some intermediate level of commitment. Likewise, a just and responsible administration implies that the administrators are not simply powerless entities in a political game whose outcome is completely determined by consideration of power. It necessitates that in a stable and efficient administration, the administrators are expected to use their power resources and principally their expertise to bring about outcomes that are in consideration with the public interest. Thus, the administrative responsibility and the notion of public interest are to be protected by administrators as a kind of trust for the citizens of the country. In the changing socio-political environment of a developing country like India, a bureaucrat is required to be innovative. They must combine a forward-looking perspective and a positive attitude towardschange. Factors such as personality, social background, education, experience, andmotivation. Even in a minority of bureaucrats, the same factors should be considered as necessary conditions foradministrative innovation. 1.6.3 Bureaucracy and Policy Implementation Practically in most countries, the bureaucracy is one of the important actors in the making of governmental departments. In most contemporary systems, their power as decision-makers has been steadily increasing and perhaps the most important aspect between the development 42 plans and their implementation is the bureaucratic machinery, whose function is to translate planned goals into action.It gives effect to policies after they have been approved by the executive and legislative branches of the government. Though this function also is performed under the overall control and supervision of politicians in the executive and legislative branches, howevermembers of the bureaucracy have to bear much of the responsibility for implementation.

85% MATCHING BLOCK 67/319 SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

91% MATCHING BLOCK 64/319 W

This is due to its growing influence. 1.7 CONCLUSION It is a commonly expressed view that the bureaucracy is a rational and neutral instrument of development.As people in developing societies are faced with several problems, such as poverty,unemployment, bad health, illiteracy, corruption, and authoritarianism. The primary role of state and government in the day-to-dayadministration extends upon the bureaucracy and it is due to this reason the bureaucracy's role has been expanding. Its role in the development of a nation-state is vital and it cannot be undermined. As mentioned before, the bureaucrats must combine a forward-looking perspective and a positive attitude towards change. Factors such as personality, social background, education, experience, and motivation should be taken into consideration. Thus, the interlinkage between development and bureaucracy overlaps various aspects which bring about growth and as well better conditions. 1.8SUMMARY ? Bureaucracy plays a crucial role in the administration of a country. ? It has severalcharacteristics and it can be broadly categorised into four types. ? Bureaucracy is one of the most important aspects of development. ? Bureaucracy and Development are correlated and interdependent. ? The role of bureaucracy in the development of India is another important aspect. 1.9KEYWORDS Bureaucracy: The body of employees in a large-scale organisation Development:Itmeans moving or graduating to a better stage of the condition. Authority: The type of power whose exercise people see as legitimate. Max Weber: German Sociologist, who gave an important theory of authority and its typology. F.M. Marx: German-American Political Scientist, who is most noted for laying down the four categories of bureaucracy. Edward Weidner: American Public Administration Scholar and a leading advocate of Development Administration. Impersonalisation: To get rid ofhuman characteristics such as sympathy, warmth, etc. Steel Frame: Civil servants and bureaucratswere referred to as the 'steel frame of India' by Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel Public Policy: A system of laws, regulatory measures, courses of action, and funding priorities concerning a given topic promulgated by a governmental entity or its representatives.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 65/319 W

43 1.10MODEL QUESTIONS 1.10.1 Long Answer Type 1. What is the meaning of bureaucracy? Write the major characteristics of bureaucracy. 2. Differentiate between Development and Development

70% MATCHING BLOCK 66/319 W

Administration 3. What is the contribution of bureaucracy to the various aspects of development? 4. Evaluate the role of Bureaucracy in the development of India? 1.10.2 Short Answer Type 1. What do you understand by the term bureaucracy? 2. What is Development Administration? 3. Define the term development. 4. What do you understand by the term Spoils System? 5. Write any four features of bureaucracy. 6. What are the four types of bureaucracy according to F.M. Marx? 1.11 REFERENCES Deva, S. (1986). Bureaucracy and Development. Economic and Political Weekly, 21(48).

75% MATCHING BLOCK 71/319 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

Bhattacharya, M. (2008). New Horizons of Public Administration.Jawahar Publishers and Distributors. Laxmikanth, M. (2011). Public Administration. McGraw Hill Education.

Singh, N., & Sachdeva, P.(1989). Public Administration in India: Theory and Practice.Sterling Publishers. Maheswari, S. (1978). Bureaucracy and Political Development in India. The Indian Journal of Political Science, 39(3). UNIT 2: SOCIAL BACKGROUND Structure 2.0Learning Objectives 2.1Introduction 2.2Origin and Background of Bureaucracy 2.3Origin and Background of Bureaucracy in India 2.4Social Background of the Bureaucracy 2.5 Outcomes of the Social Background
44 2.6Suggestions for making the Bureaucracy Representative and Inclusive 2.7
Conclusion 2.8 Summary 2.9 Keywords 2.10 Model Questions 2.11 References 2.0
LEARNING

30% MATCHING BLOCK 68/319 W

OBJECTIVES After studying the unit, you should be able to: ? Explain the origin and background of bureaucracy. ? Explain the origin and background of bureaucracy in India. ? Social Background of bureaucracy 2.1 INTRODUCTION The social background of the bureauracy and its historical origin is a crucial aspect in understanding the genesis of bureaucracy. In this regard, fewstudies on social background have been conducted to find out which social economic group the senior civil servants come from.

96% MATCHING BLOCK 69/319 W

We do get some sort of an idea

79% MATCHING BLOCK 70/319 W

about the section of the society and from which most civil servants of a certain category are drawn, their education, whether they lived in villages or cities, their caste, their religion, and the extent to which women can get in to the services and so on. We can relate the social background to attitudes, or in other words study the influence of social class, education, and such other factors on the nature of bureaucracy, and hence the administration. Finally, we can examine how far the bureaucracy may be said to be representative of the society in general, that is to analyse whether it is drawn from all sections or whether members of a certain class predominate. Representativeness is often considered to be related to responsiveness and it may not be fully responsive to the other classes in society. 2.2

ORIGIN AND BACKGROUND OF THE BUREAUCRACY Since a comprehensive theory of bureaucracy is attributed to Max Weber, his ideas have been an integral part of the study of Bureaucracy and its organistion. His thought has influenced generations of scholars on bureaucracy and formal organisation. As one of the founders of modern sociology, his writings covered a wide range of subjects including economics, sociology, and administration. His ideas on bureaucracy need to be placed in the larger framework of his writings on the economic and political structure of society. He traced the pact of religious views on the growth of capitalism and dealt with the relationship between industrialisation and organisational structure. His thoughts on bureaucracy evolved out of the considerations of socio-historical forces and led to the growth of complex organisations. Weber's ideas on bureaucracy form an integral part of his macro view of history and social theory. He also presented an important viewof the origin and background of modern bureaucracy. Weber went back into ancient history to find out the chief reasons for the rise of bureaucratic government in the modern state. As he observed, the avocation system of Roman administration could be traced to Greek practices. There was no colonial officer in Rome despite the vast Roman empire. Provincial governors were sent out on an annual tenure

71% MATCHING BLOCK 92/319 SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

45 supported by a very limited staff. Julius Caesar's effort to create a permanent civil service also failed. In this respect, Augustus and Hadrian were, to some extent, successful. A full- blown bureaucracy had come into being during the reign of Diocletian.The fall of Rome was as much due to the burgeoning bureaucracy as to the creeping corruption of the ruling class.They had compelled the imposition of special taxes to at the wheels of a vast administrative machine. Here, Weber found the clue he was searching for. Bureaucratic administration, he observed, could survive only when there would be a developed money economy capable of sustained economic growth.This was not the case with Rome and her provinces which were not far removed from a subsistence economy. So,the Romans could not afford a large bureaucratic structure. According to Weber, a developing economy can produce a surplus of food and commodities and this surplus becomes the basis for payment of salaries to the members of the civil service. The increasing need for public revenue compels the state to develop a rational system of public finance. To quote Weber, "a stable system of taxation is the precondition for the permanent existence of bureaucratic administration". Therefore, the development of the money economy and the emergence of mass democracy prepared the ground for bureaucratic administration. Later, Weber gives his idea of the Protestantethic and the spirit of capitalism to further the idea of the ascendency of bureaucracy. 2.3 ORIGIN AND BACKGROUND OF BUREAUCRACY IN INDIA The bureaucracy in India is the product of two different sets of influences: British traditions and a democratic welfare system. The British, who ruled India for almost a century, established a system of bureaucracy whose key outstanding features were its elitism and a strong loyalty to its masters. They laid the foundations of modern Indian bureaucracy which was primarily meant to serve the limited objectives of maintenance of law and order and collection of revenues in the annexed conquered territories of the British East India Company. The system dates back to the Northcote Trevelyan Report of 1854, which demonstrated Lord Macaulay's profound belief in English liberal education.This belief resulted in a band of administrators for India from Oxford andCambridge Universities designated as the Indian Civil Service or the ICS, who were called "allrounders" by the supporters of the system and "amateurs" by its critics. The advent of Independence and the change in the role of government to include the functions of a welfare state produced the second set of influences. The rapid technological progress attained since thenled to a proliferation of some para-state organisationssuch as public corporations, nationalised industries, public enterprises, and voluntary organisations supported by public funds. These expanding frontiers and the new tasks of the government in India required an administrative state able to handle social, economic, political, and scientific problems in the context of the national and international setting. Bureaucracy thus became one of the chief instruments in the hands of government to deal with the challenges of the new political order and the socio-economic imperatives. However, despite the environmental changes after Independence, the impact of the British system continuedto dominate the Indian scene.Compared with other developing countries, the Indian bureaucracy had many advantages at the time of Independence. During the colonial period itself, the foundations had been laid for a modern education system capable of providing the personnel necessary for both the administrative system and the growing industries. A network of communications, a core of financial institutions and a well- developed press provided the essential links in the infrastructure of a modern nation. The bureaucracy which was created by the British Imperial government for maintaining a colonial system proved to be a remarkable administrative legacy in post-independent India.

46 The dominant feature of the British system, as noted earlier, was the ICS, an elite cadre of civil servants. They were both the policy-makers and the executive officials. During British times, political power was highly centralised within the bureaucracy, which largely lay in the hands of the members of the ICS class. The structural characteristics of the ICS such as an open entry system based on academic achievement, elaborate training arrangements, permanency of tenure, reservation of all the responsible generalist posts of central, provincial, and district levels for members of this elite cadre alone, aregular, graduated scale of pay with pension and other benefits, and a system of promotion and transfers based predominantly on seniority had all been retained in the present system after independence with only slight modifications in details. During the colonial period, the bureaucracy served to some extent as an instrument of integration of the country. The administrative unity of the country, maintenance of law and order, reasonable standards of integrity, and the formalisation of the relationship between the administration and the people in place of arbitrary dealings as in the past, were some of the main achievements of the bureaucracy. Thebureaucracy also came to be involved in the tasks of the construction and maintenance of public works such as roads, railways, and canals as well as in the development of social services like education, and hospitals. However, since the end of the colonial period, it has been popularly and persistently argued that Indian administrators, retaining some of the negative aspects of the imperial legacy, such as aloofness and status-consciousness, are generally maladjusted and it tends to be authoritarian in the new situation. Therefore, the hopes and renewed aspirations of the people of independent India created new tasksand responsibilities that were assigned to the newly created Indian Administrative Service (the IAS), successor to the ICS, but with no radical break with the British Prime Minister and Minister for Home Affairs at Independence which had rendered the administrative traditions. Today the IAS is the core of the country's administrative structure, sharing its tasks with severalAll-India, Central, and State Services and providing strong administrative links throughout the country, although interpretations differ on how effective these links have been. The bureaucracy in India has emerged as the influence that has certainly contributed to the technical and political development the of bureaucratic administrative organization. They are hierarchically structured both horizontally (between higher and lower in the same broad area of work) and vertically (between different skills, professions, or disciplines), further leading to a system of classes in the civil service, each with its separate career structures determining prospects for promotion. 2.4 SOCIAL BACKGROUND OF THE BUREAUCRACY Until about the middle of the nineteenth century, bureaucracies in almost all countries were filled by men from a numerically small upper class, irrespective of thecharacter of the society or the form of its government, whether monarchic, democratic,or aristocratic. It was assumed that the members of the upper classes possessed certain inherent abilities for administrative leadership. The same case applies to India as well.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 72/319 W

The main finding of research studies is that most members of the higher bureaucracy have been drawn from the professional middle class of India, consisting of backgrounds

60% MATCHING BLOCK 73/319 W

of higher civil and military officers, lawyers, doctors, university teachers, and business executives. The father or the guardian of the majority of candidates who were direct recruits to the IAS belonged to this class.

There are relatively very few of the IAS officers recruited who arefrom the families of Zamindars or farmers. Theyconstituted a comparatively low figure of the total recruitments. The situation concerning other higher services was similar, but the difference 47 between the numbers of those drawn from the professional middle class and landowning families was less. Thus, of the recruits to the Indian Police Service, the majority of candidates came from the professional middle class,and few candidates came from the landowning class. Of the recruits to the Indian Foreign Service, the majority came from the professional middle class and fewcame from the landowning class. In short, in the first decade after independence, most of the entrants to the higher bureaucracy belonged to the English educated, salaried or professional, upper middle class; there were very few entrants from other sections of the society. Recruitment to the higher bureaucracy was highly biased in favour of the professional middle class as it constituted less than 10 percent of the population but more than 80 percent of the recruits were drawn from it. During the later

83% MATCHING BLOCK 74/319 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 75/319 W

period, the proportion of recruits from landowning families improved somewhat, although it remained low.

91% MATCHING BLOCK 76/319 W

In the case of the IPS also the direction of change was the same, the percentages of recruitment from the two classes were uneven. Likewise, in the case of certain other Central Services also the proportion of recruits from landowning families improved a little, although it went down in respect of the Indian Foreign Service.

Recent studies have found that in this new decade, candidates are recruited from diverse backgrounds and the data also indicatesthatthe proportion of persons from farming familieshas been increasing gradually, however, the vast majority of those joining thehigher bureaucracy still come from the professional middle class.

72% MATCHING BLOCK 77/319 W

In the field of

94% MATCHING BLOCK 78/319 W

education, research studies show that most of the entrants into the higher bureaucracy are drawn from among those educated at exclusive schools and colleges. The phrase "exclusive schools and colleges" refers to educational institutions which charge high fees and hence are generally joined only by children from the upper and richer sections of society. The medium of instruction in these institutions isusually English only. What is even more interesting, there has been an increasing role of education at exclusive schools for entry into the higher echelons of the civil service. Of those recruited to the IAS, a good number of candidates had been educated at Convent and public schools, andin the later period, it was observed that a vast majority of candidates

100% MATCHING BLOCK 79/319 W

had been educated in such schools. Thus, since independence, the proportion of recruits educated at exclusive schools had gone up by four times. The significance of education in exclusive colleges has also been unmistakable. More than half of the IAS recruits have been educated in only a dozen well-known colleges in India in comparison to all the other colleges put together which had contributed less than half. A similar picture emerges when we consider the role of education at the better-known universities.

94% MATCHING BLOCK 80/319 W

It has been observed that a good number of candidates have

100% MATCHING BLOCK 81/319 W

been educated at the six universities of Madras, Bombay. Calcutta, Delhi, Punjab, and Allahabad. These six universities also contributed to more than 80 percent of the recruits to the Indian Foreign Service. The recent increase in the number of candidates coming from professional backgrounds such as IIT, engineering, and medical also provides a very important aspect regarding their backgrounds. Coming to the caste factor, the higher bureaucracy is recruited predominantly from the so- called higher castes. People of low caste are also generally poor and cannot afford higher education for their children. To compensate for the age-old discrimination against those having a low social status, the Constitution of India provided for "reverse discrimination" in the shape of reservation of jobs for scheduled castes in Public Administration. Fora long, however, these quotas were not filled, since candidates of scheduled castes and tribes could often not get qualifying marks in the competitive examination. Government coachincenterses 48 were therefore started to help such candidates in preparing for the examination.

88% MATCHING BLOCK 82/319 W

Gradually these quotas began to be filled. Similarly, the percentage of scheduled tribes recruits also rose. Though the percentages were, however, still lower than their proportion of the population. In other words, persons of low social status were still under-represented in the higher bureaucracy.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 83/319 W

The Reservation System in India was introduced to uplift the historically disadvantaged sections of Indian society and this same principle appliesto candidates applying for the civil service exam.Scheduled Caste reservation for civil service exam constitutes 15%, 7.5% for Scheduled Tribe, 27% for Other Backward Classes(OBC), 10% for Economically Weaker Sections(EWS), and 4% for Persons with Benchmark Disabilities.

87% MATCHING BLOCK 84/319 W

In the sphere of religion, while all the important religions of India are represented in the higher bureaucracy, some of them have fewer members than their proportion of the population. Thus, among the IAS recruits, the vast majority of candidates come from were Hindus. Few are Muslims,Christians, and Sikhs. The representation of Muslims, Christians, Sikhs and other minority communities has varied and has beenlower than their proportion in the population. The representation of women in the higher bureaucracy has increased consistently.

97% MATCHING BLOCK 85/319 W

68% MATCHING BLOCK 86/319 W

While there hasbeen an increase in the number of women getting into the IAS, they constituted a less number during the early years. Since women constitute about half of the population, they may be said to be stillgrossly under-represented. However, a dynamic that has been observed since the beginning of the last decade is that the performances of women have been soaring. Over the last 10 years, there was a fair share of toppers and top rank holders between both men and women candidates. As we have studied the social background of the higher bureaucracy in India based on research studies made from time to time,

85% MATCHING BLOCK 87/319 W

it must be noted thatcomparable

93% MATCHING BLOCK 88/319 W

studies for the lower bureaucracy have not been made, presumably because it is not considered to play as important a role in the political system. However, some comparison of the social background of the two sections of the bureaucracy can be attempted based on available data.

The above comparison reflects the dynamics of social background and

70% MATCHING BLOCK 89/319 W

while the study suffered from certain limitations, it does still provide some data for purposes of comparison. 2.5

OUTCOMES OF THE SOCIAL BACKGROUND As noted earlier, it is the urban professional middle class that is drawn largely to higher bureaucracy. So, it would be a mistake to say that the higher bureaucracy representsthe entire society. There are certain outcomes of the disparity of social backgrounds of the bureaucracy. There is a great difference between the values, norms, practices, beliefs, and information of the higher bureaucracy, the lower bureaucracy, and the people. This creates a lack of communication between them and in turn,

76% MATCHING BLOCK 90/319 W

91% MATCHING BLOCK 91/319 W

due to lack of communication with the people, and their lack of cooperation, administrators are unable to assess the success of programmes, and the problems in the way of their fulfillment properly. One of the important functions of the bureaucracy in developing countries is to deal with poverty, its causes, and its

91% MATCHING BLOCK 93/319 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 94/319 W

consequences. If the upper section of the bureaucracy, which plays an important role in policy formulation as well as implementation, has little understanding of the nature of poverty in the country, ineffectiveness is bound to take effect.

80% MATCHING BLOCK 95/319 W

If the common people are afraid of administrators and can hardly speak a language understood by them, administrators' understanding of people's problems remains wanting, and hence policies for 49 dealing with these remain unsatisfactory.Thus, alack of communication leads to a lack of effectiveness. Lack of effectiveness also results from a lack of participation by the people. Due to social distance between the administrators and the people, and differences in their values and beliefs,

94% MATCHING BLOCK 96/319 W

the

100% MATCHING BLOCK 97/319 W

administrators are unable to enthuse the people and seek their cooperation and participation. Ineffectiveness also results from a lack of feedback fromthe administrators andlack

87% MATCHING BLOCK 98/319 W

of effectiveness results from a lack of adjustment between members of the higher and lower bureaucracy.

Studies have

81% MATCHING BLOCK 99/319 W

found that subordinate officials suffered from feelings of insecurity, hostility, and isolation. They felt that they had no influence, they had to only obey instructions, and stick to rules. Thus, differences in the status and culture of the higher and lower bureaucracy made for frustration, hostility, and lack of initiative on the part of the large, lower, section of the bureaucracy whose function was to give effect to policies. Equality of opportunity is a very important principle of democracy. It implies that everyone should have the same opportunity to achieve desired goals, in keeping with his abilities and effort. Since high-level administrative positions in our society have high prestige, large numbers of youth wish to obtain them. However, because of their socio-economic background, a large number cannot avail of this opportunity. The vast majority of our people live in villages where they have little opportunity to pursue the kind of education which would make for success in competitive examinations. Many of those who live in cities also cannot afford good quality higher education. Hence the poor, and thoseliving in villages, have the feeling that they are unjustly being denied entry into the higher bureaucratic system, spheres of the decision-making process, and governance altogether. 2.6SUGGESTIONS FOR MAKING THE BUREAUCRACYREPRESENTATIVE AND INCLUSIVE As noted earlier,

84% MATCHING BLOCK 100/319 W

bureaucracy cannot at present be said to berepresentative of society as a whole. This results in

the

100% MATCHING BLOCK 101/319 W

ineffectiveness of administration and a feeling of injustice among those who are left out. Hence, we have to find out different ways to inculcate and integratea

78% MATCHING BLOCK 102/319 W

representative bureaucracy without compromising the principle of selection based on merit. We shall consider these below.

In the case of India, at present,the proportion of the people in India that receive inclusive education is relatively low as per its standards. According to National Statistical Office (NSO) data, India's average literacy rate is 77.70%. The figures do not complement the developmental aspect.

82% MATCHING BLOCK 103/319 W

Literacy constitutes just the beginning of education. For getting a job one needs education appropriate to it. The proportion ofthose who get secondary and highereducation is relatively small. Manyof course, never go to school. Even among those who join a school, the majority drop out. Of 100 children who enroll in class I, only 25

to 30

61% MATCHING BLOCK 104/319 W

reach class VIII. Higher education is limited to only a certain percentage of those in the relevant age group. A wider spread of education is, required to provide for social justice and also to help in social, economic, and political development. Having a more presentative bureaucracy is an aspect of development.

The

97% MATCHING BLOCK 105/319 W

spread of education can be improved by having more schools, reducing the cost of education, vocationalisingeducation,providing mid-day meals, books and uniforms to children of the poor, providing more teachers, improving the method of teaching, and so on. If those who get left out today also get educated, they can compete for the public bureaucracy. This will benefit the administration since the bureaucracy will be drawn from a larger pool, thus tapping the potential of more people; it will also make for a more representative bureaucracy.

The New Education Policy of 2020 can prove to be vital in this regard.
50

94% MATCHING BLOCK 106/319 W

In developing countries like India, the system of personnel administration also remainsunderdeveloped. The system of recruiting people for a service, instead of a job, is one aspect of such underdevelopment. This has three consequences: (i) lack of emphasis on specialisation, (ii) rank-in-man instead of rank-in-job, and (iii) recruitment from a limited section of society. Thus, when we recruit people for the IPS, the method of recruitment results in the selection of persons mainly from a small section of society. It is because the test is for abilities that mainly candidates from the upper middle class have developed. These abilities, however, may not be relevant for all the jobswhich IPS officers may have to perform. The result is that while we exclude candidates from classes other than the upper middle class, we still do not select those who are suited for the work which they have to do. Thus, at present, the athletic ability of candidates is not tested. While an advisor to the government on security might not need it, a district police officer might be in great need of it.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 107/319 W

Many boys from the poorer section might have it in greater measure than those from richer ones. Similarly, we might require other specialised qualifications appropriate for particular jobs. In this way, we would be able to recruit persons with specialised qualifications and abilities suited to particular jobs, and also with diverse social backgrounds. Hence

the

100% MATCHING BLOCK 108/319 W

introduction of position classification and recruitment for specialised jobs would lead to both, personnel who are better suited to their jobs and a more representative bureaucracy.

The Indian Constitution for instance has a provision to create more All India Services and Central Services.

98% MATCHING BLOCK 125/319 SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

In 1961, two new Central Class I Services constituted the Indian Economic Service for the economists and the Indian Statistical Service for the Statisticians. All these services aim to provide better status and pay, thus attracting the pool of candidates whom are well versed technically and skilled in this field. The creation of such new all India and central services can provide them necessary security and platform.

93% MATCHING BLOCK 109/319 W

At present recruitment to services like the IAS, IPS, IFS, and IA&AS (Indian Audit and Accounts Service) is made based on an objective type examination, which is followed by a written examination and lastly, there is an interview. It has been found that the examination and the interview, however, do not test all the abilities of a person. According to an expert,cramming also helps some people to succeed in a written examination.

88% MATCHING BLOCK 110/319 W

Cramming or studying intensively over a short period just before an examination does not prove to be sustainable for the candidates in the long run. Though, an objective type examination has recently been introduced to reduce the emphasis on crammingthere is still a need for further improvement.

81% MATCHING BLOCK 111/319 W

97% MATCHING BLOCK 112/319 W

The interview is called the personality test. However, no scientific personality tests, such as those used in the armed forces, are employed. By testing candidates more scientifically, we would not only be able to select persons more suited to their jobs, but we would also be able to spread our net wide. Various abilities may be said to be distributed widely over different sections of society. Hence if we test for various abilities, instead of mainly that essay writing, we would be able to get people who are more suited to their jobs from diverse social backgrounds. 2.7

CONCLUSION

91% MATCHING BLOCK 113/319 W

The higher bureaucracy in India is drawn mainly from the urban, salaried, or professional, middle class consisting of higher civil and military officers, lawyers, doctors, university teachers, and business executives. Most administrators have received education at exclusive schools, colleges, and universities. Three-fourths of them have lived in cities. About one- tenth of them belong to scheduled castes and about one-twentieth to scheduled tribes. Muslims and women are also under-represented. Such a narrow field of extraction of the 51 higher bureaucracy makes for differences in values. norms, beliefs, and orientations between the higher and lower bureaucracy and the people at large. The above factors result in a lack of communication,

the

92% MATCHING BLOCK 114/319 W

ineffectiveness of administration, and the perception of injustice. A more representative bureaucracy, selected by merit, can be achieved through

a

86% MATCHING BLOCK 115/319 W

greater spread of education, more emphasis on position classification and specialisation, and the adoption of more scientific methods ofrecruitment for testing various abilities and personality traits. 2.8

SUMMARY ? The social background of bureaucracy is an important aspect of the holistic understanding of bureaucracy. ? It has been found that it is mostly the people belonging to professional middle-class backgrounds that comprise the bureaucracy. ? The outcome of social background leads to uneven outcomes. ? Representative bureaucracy is the need of the hour. ? Various methods can be incorporated for making the bureaucracy more representative and inclusive. 2.9 KEYWORDS Cramming: Study intensively over a short period just before an examination

100% MATCHING BLOCK 116/319 W

Representative bureaucracy: A civil service representing proportionately every caste, class, and religious groupof the

94% MATCHING BLOCK 117/319 W

population. This type of bureaucracy is expected to be responsive and responsible to the people of the country.

Professional

68% MATCHING BLOCK 118/319 W

middle class: The group of persons engaged in professions such as those of civil and military officers, doctors, lawyers, business executives, etc.

Communication: Communication is simply the act of transferring information from one place, person, or group to another. Northcote Trevelyan Report of 1854: The report which was published in February 1854 recommended that entry to the Civil Service in Britain be solely on merit, to be enforced through the use of examinations Reverse Discrimination: A term for discrimination against members of a dominant or majority group, in favor of members of a minority or historically disadvantaged group. The New Education Policy of 2020: The new policy replaces the previous National Policy on Education, 1986. The policy aims to transform India's education system by 2030. 2.10 MODEL QUESTIONS 2.10.1 Long Answer Type 1) Give an account of the origin and historical evolution of bureaucracy. 2) Explain the social background of bureaucracy. 3) The bureaucracy in India is dominated by the professional middle class. Comment. 4) Suggest various ways through which bureaucracy can be representative and inclusive. 2.10.2 Short Answer Type 1) How does education influence the social background of bureaucracy? 2) What is the role of caste in the social background of bureaucracy?
52 3) Write a brief account of the background of the IAS. 4) What was the role of the Britishers in the origin and evolution of bureaucracy in India? 5) Mention two outcomes of the social background of bureaucracy 6) Mention two ways through which bureaucracy can be more representative. 2.11 REFERENCES Subramaniam,

100% MATCHING BLOCK 119/319 W

V. (1971). Social Background of India's Administrators.Publications Division. Government of India.

Jain, R,
B. (1987).

91% MATCHING BLOCK 120/319 W

The Role of Bureaucracy in Policy Development and Implementation in India. Southeast Asian Journal of Social Science, 15(2).

Chakrabarty, B.& Chand, P. (2012). Public Administration in a Globalizing World. Sage Publication. UNIT 3: ROLE OF BUREAUCRACY Structure 3.0 Learning Objectives 3.1 Introduction 3.2 Role of Bureaucracy in State 3.3 Public Policy 3.4 Role of Bureaucracy in Developing Societies 3.5 RedTapism 3.6 Maladies of Bureaucracy 3.7 Conclusion 3.8 Summary 3.9 Keywords 3.10 Model Questions 3.11 References 3.0
LEARNING OBJECTIVES
53 After studying the unit, you should be able to: ? Explain the role of bureaucracy ? Explain the role of bureaucracy in a developing society ? Meaning of Public Policy ? Bureaucracy's role in the formulation and implementation of public policy ? Concept of Red-Tapism ? Criticisms of bureaucracy 3.1 INTRODUCTION Bureaucracyplays an extremely important role in the day-to-day administration of the state.It has the responsibility to make sure that the administration is running perfectly without any disturbances. They make the administration run as per the rules and regulations that are implemented by the government. From policy formulation to policy implementation, bureaucracy plays an active role in the maintenance of law and order. The quality of the citizen's life depends on the attitude and performance of the bureaucracy. Moreover, in all walks of life of a person, bureaucracy plays a very significant role.

89% MATCHING BLOCK 121/319 W

The people in developing societies suffer from several problems, such as poverty, unemployment, bad health, illiteracy, corruption, and authoritarianism. The state is considered to be the main agency for dealing with these, or, in other words, for bringing about development. Hence the state has to shoulder more and more responsibility. Since the state functions through the government, and the government, in turn, depends to a large extent upon the bureaucracy, the bureaucracy's role also keeps expanding.

Likewise, there is a widely held belief thatin

97% MATCHING BLOCK 122/319 W

India the role of bureaucracy is not only dominant in the implementation of public policies but is also pervasive in respect of policy formulation.

92% MATCHING BLOCK 123/319 W

In the context of thegoals of a welfare state and development administration, bureaucracy has certainly emerged as one of the key elements in the politico-administrative process of India. We shall discuss the role of bureaucracy in the important socio-economic-political spheres of India with an emphasis on public policy, followed by several maladies of modern bureaucracy. 3.2 ROLE OF BUREAUCRACY IN

84% MATCHING BLOCK 124/319 W

STATE 3.2.1 Bureaucracy as Agents of Political Development The emotional bonds of nationalism are often weak in new nations. However, unless these bonds are strengthened, the nation is in danger of falling apart, as happened, for example, in Pakistan from which Bangladesh broke away. The state and its bureaucracy play an important part in strengthening these emotional bonds. Thus, national integration is sought to be promoted through education, radio and television programmes, development of native languages, publication of good quality literature in native languages, cultural and sports activities in which persons from all parts of the nation participate, and so on. These programhes are often conducted by members of the bureaucracy. In a country where the national bonds are weak, having a bureaucracy that is centrally recruited and whose members serve in different parts of the country, also helps to hold the nation together. Political development is also promoted by strengthening interest groups, such as labour unions. Legislation that

86% MATCHING BLOCK 126/319 W

sanctions and supports trade union activity thus helps to bring about political development. Insofar as the bureaucracy participates in the formulation and implementation of such legislation, it has a role in political development. Political parties also 54 constitute an important part of the political system. In some countries nowadays political parties are provided with election funds

by the state. This reduces the dependence of the parties on the rich, helps to curb competition, and promotes political development. Elections constitute an important part of the democratic political process. They must be conducted with honesty and impartiality; otherwise, the people will lose faith in the system and it is likely to collapse sooner or later. Insofar as the bureaucracy conducts elections honestly and efficiently, it helps to maintain and develop the political system; for, it is through elections that new parties and leaders come to power and implement programmes of social change desired by the people. 3.2.2

81% MATCHING BLOCK 127/319 W

Role of Bureaucracy in Economic Development In the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, it was believed that the state should restrictitself to thecountry's defense and the maintenance of law and order and that it should intervene in the economy as little as possible. This view changed, particularly after the Great Depression of the 1930s, in which millions of people became unemployed the world over. Nowadays, all governments are expected to regulate the economy to bring about an increase in production, a high level of employment,prices of commodities, and check over monopolies and unhealthy trade practices. The need for such regulation of the economy is all the more in developing countries like Indiadue to widespread poverty and unemployment on the one hand and the great power ofmonopolists on the other. The government regulates the economy through fiscal policies (by modulating taxes), and monetary policies (by modulating

the

89% MATCHING BLOCK 128/319 W

money supply). Planning, which means resource allocation through a centralised administrative process, is resorted to for achieving economic growth. The government develops means of transport and communication. It provides loans and raw materials to industrialists and fanners. All these governmental activities are performed by government departments, nationalised banks, and other public undertakings through their officials. Hence it is the bureaucracy that

94% MATCHING BLOCK 129/319 W

has a very important new role, namely that of functioning as the agent of economic development. More and more economists, statisticians, and trained managers are needed for the proper performance of this role. 3.2.3The Role of Bureaucracy in the Welfare State In recent times there has been a tendency for entrusting the state with more and more responsibility for social services, such as the provision of education, health care, employment, labour welfare, the welfare of the blind and other handicapped persons, and the welfare of widows and orphans. So much importance is attached to these new functions that the state has been renamed as the welfare state. The provision of such varied social services requires large numbers of different types of specialists, such as teachers, doctors, nurses, labour officers, and social workers. With their recruitment as members of the bureaucracy, the nature of the bureaucracy tends to change. This new role requires a new kind of bureaucracy.The bureaucracy, therefore, influences the welfare aspects as well. 3.2.4

80% MATCHING BLOCK 130/319 W

Collection of Taxes and Disbursement of Financial Benefits The bureaucracy plays a vitally important role in financial administration. They advise the political executive irrespectiveof all financial planning,taxstructure,tax administration, and the like. They collect taxes and settle disputes involving recovery of taxes. They play a vital role in preparing the budget and taxation proposals. They carry out the function of granting legally sanctioned financial benefits, tax reliefs, subsidies, and other concessions to the people. 55 3.2.5

the

98% MATCHING BLOCK 131/319 W

Role in Public Relations The era of the

93% MATCHING BLOCK 132/319 W

modern welfare state and democratic politics has made it essential for the government to keep close relations with the people of the state. The need for maintaining active and full public relations is a vital necessity for every state. Civil servants play an active role in this sphere.They are the main agents who establish direct contact with the people. They serve as a two-way link. On the one hand, they communicate all government decisions to the people, and on the other hand, they communicate to the government the needs, interests, and views of the people. Thus, Bureaucracy plays a vigorously active and highly important role in the working of the government. 1.2.6

90% MATCHING BLOCK 133/319 W

Record-Keeping The bureaucracy has the sole responsibility of keeping systematically all government records. They collect, classify and analyse all data

of

100% MATCHING BLOCK 134/319 W

all activities of the government. They collect and maintain vital socio-economic

100% MATCHING BLOCK 135/319 W

statistics which are used for the formulation of public policies and plans. 1.2.7

Bureaucracy as Agents of Social Change Nowadays, however, many

61% MATCHING BLOCK 136/319 W

such changes are sought to be brought about with the help oflaws. Thus, untouchability, bigamy, child marriage,and the dowry system have beendeclared illegal. As agents of change, the bureaucracy through their work brings awareness to society of the ill effects of social injustice. 3.3 PUBLIC POLICY Public policy is a frequently used term in our daily lives. Policy formulation is one of the essential functions of government. In the present setup, it is the responsibility of the government to take care of the people. A government is to perform numerous functions and a policy is before every action. In simple terms, a policy may be defined as a set of rules which can be utilised to achievecertain desired objectives. They are the means by which, the ends of a collective community are served. Without policies, government and administrationcannot function efficiently due to the lack of planning and reaching desired objectives. Some of the features of public policy include: a) Public Policies are purposive and goal-oriented actions or behaviour. b) It is a course of action or series of programmes adopted by the State to serve the interests and needs of the public and society at large. c) Public Policies are those actions that the government wanted to do rather than what they intend to do. d) They can be both positive in nature i.e.action taken by the govt. to solve a particular problem or can be negative in nature i.e. decision by the government to not take any action or to not do anything about the issue that came across. e) Public policies have a legal and authoritative base i.e. as David Easton said they are authoritative values allocated by the State. Meaning that it is legitimate and is followed by legal obligation and coercive power. 3.3.1 Public policy formulation 56 This is the stage in which the initial research takes place for identifying the problems and target groups which may requirea certain policy. Thus, a policy is formulated to solve the problems faced by a certain group within a community. The formation of the public policy has the following stages: a) Identification of public problems b) Putting public problems on the policy agenda c) Formulation of policy proposals/alternatives to deal with the problem d) Making final policy decision from the set of alternatives 3.3.2 Policy Implementation The implementation process involves the conscious conversion of policy plans into reality. In other words, this is the stage that translates the policy on paper into action and brings it to the actual beneficiaries of the policy. Policyimplementation reveals the strengths and weaknesses of the decision-making process. 3.3.4 Who implements policy? Public administration i.e.the bureaucracy (permanent executive) is the main organisation that implements the policy. Many other actors like the legislature, pressure groups,community organisations, and the judiciary help in the process. Policy implementation is a complex task and thus faces many hurdles due to: a) Lack of knowledge and adequate financial resources b) Absence of political support c) Lack of public involvement or cooperation d) Politicization of policies to favour stronger groups e) Centralization of power and hierarchical bureaucratic structure (red-tapism) 3.4 ROLE OF BUREAUCRACY IN DEVELOPING SOCIETIES It is imperative to understand the role of bureaucracy in a developing society. The civil service in a developing society like India plays a very important role. From providing all the necessary information to the political executives to carrying out the objectives of the state, the bureaucracy is the link that facilitates the smooth functioning of the administration. The role it plays in developing societies includes: 3.4.1 Policy Formulation Though it is widely considered that in a democratic government, politicians formulate policies and the executive executes them. However, the making and implementation of policies are so deeply interconnected that it is impossible to separate them.

82% MATCHING BLOCK 137/319 W

Formulation and determination of policy is the function of the political executive but the civil servants have also come to play an active role in it. They aid, advise supply information to the ministers in policy making. For instance, they act as channels of communication with the government. The bureaucracy is generally perceived to be the most important channel of communication between the rulers and the ruled. This is because of the non-existence or weakness of interest groups and political parties. Most of the working class remains unorganised.

76% MATCHING BLOCK 148/319 SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

79% MATCHING BLOCK 138/319 W

This communication between the government and the various sections of society takes place, to a large extent, through the bureaucracy. Thus, if the farmers in an area suffer from some problem, such as lack of water for irrigation, they generally approach officials like the Deputy Commissioner, who communicates the problem to a higher level of the administration: they may make proposals for irrigation facilities and add the required changes in the budget. In this way, communication through the bureaucracy may help in the formulation of policy proposals for 57 meeting the needs of the people.

93% MATCHING BLOCK 139/319 W

The bureaucracy remains an important

84% MATCHING BLOCK 140/319 W

mechanism for the conversion of demands into policies. In this way, bureaucracy plays a more important role in policy formulation in developing countries.

90% MATCHING BLOCK 141/319 W

Hence policy formulation, or giving the shape of laws and rules to policies, is largely done by bureaucracy. Though,

77% MATCHING BLOCK 142/319 W

laws and rules drafted by specialist members of the bureaucracy are later examined and modified by ministers and legislators. However, ministers and legislators often do not have an understanding of the intricacies of scientific and legal matters. Therefore, theyhave

85% MATCHING BLOCK 143/319 W

to depend to a large extent upon specialists in the bureaucracy. In this way, the bureaucracy comes to influence policy formulation.

Likewise, political executives, may not contain all the required manpower and information to formulate policies. They cannot also understand the tech complexities of policies and hence depend on the expert advice of professional civil servants. The political executives thus require the expertise of civil servants in developing societies. The bureaucracy has an important role in policy formulation also because of the technical knowledge possessed by it. 3.4.2

88% MATCHING BLOCK 144/319 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 145/319 W

Policy Implementation The main function of the bureaucracy is policy implementation, that is, giving effect to policies after they have been approved

by

92% MATCHING BLOCK 146/319 W

the executive and legislative branches of the government. This function also is performed under the overall control and supervision of politicians in the executive and legislative branches; however, members of the bureaucracy have to bear much of the responsibility for implementation. For implementation,

95% MATCHING BLOCK 147/319 W

a policy has to be broken up into projects, and each project into programmes. Thus, for implementing the policy of rural development, there are projects like that of Community development.

Implementation of the policies decided by the political executive is the fundamental function of the civil service.Tocarry out the objectives laid down in Directive Principles of State Policy in India (Part IV) the civil servants

91% MATCHING BLOCK 152/319 SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

execute laws and policies to attain the goals of the welfare state, that is, social equity, economic development, socio-political-economic justice, and so on. The implementation process also involves the execution of these policies. Execution means carrying a programme into effect. Thus, civil servants in various departments have to function in a coordinated manner for carrying out various programmes. To ensure such coordination and the execution of programmes within the given time frame, all officials are required to submit reports to their seniors about their achievements periodically.

87% MATCHING BLOCK 149/319 W

By

59% MATCHING BLOCK 150/319 W

examining the reports, officers at high levels can exercise control over the execution of programmes. Therefore, implementation followed by execution is mainly the responsibility of the bureaucracy. 3.4.3

Delegated Legislation Delegated legislation is also known as executive legislation or subordinate legislation. Delegated Legislation as a phenomenon has increased the role of civil servants. This is a quasi-legislative function performed by the civil service. Due to lack of time, pressure work, and increased complexities of legislation, the legislature makes laws in skeleton form (broad outline and delegates power to the executive to fill in the details. Thus, civil servants make the sub-laws, and rules regulations, but within the limits of the parent law enacted by the legislature. The practice of delegated legislation can be observed in most developing societies.
58 3.4.4 Administrative Adjudication This is a quasi-judicial function performed by the civil service. The civil servants settle disputes between the citizens and the state. For this purpose, the Administrative Tribunal with civil servants as judges is established.Some of the examples of such tribunals inIndia are Income Tax Appellate Tribunal, Industrial Tribunals, and Railway Rates Tribunals. These tribunals function outside the ordinary court system. They are maintained by the civil servants and they actively facilitate the judicial process in a developing society like India. In addition to the above, the civil service also performs the following functions. a) Administrative planning b) Administration of public enterprises c) Assisting the ministers in fulfilling their responsibilities towards the parliament and its committee d) Handling financial operations of the state. e) Reforming and improving administration through Organisation and Methods. f) Public Relations 3.5 RED TAPISM Red Tapism is the practice of requiring excessive paperwork and tedious procedures before social action can be considered or completed.It also refers to official rules and processes that seem unnecessary and delay results.It includes unnecessary paperwork, obtaining licenses, having multiple people orcommittees approve a decision, and various low-level rules that make conducting one's affairs slower, and more difficult. Red tape indeed negatively neglects citizen satisfaction. Citizens remain dissatisfied due to delayed government processing and the cost associated with it. Most of the time citizen's problems remain unresolved due to red tapism, leading to a sense of loss of trust in the government's process.Due to Red tapism, variable enforcement of contracts and delayed administration lead to delayed justice, especially for the poor. What is observed is that the burden of red taperequirements prevents many to enjoy their rights due to delayed governance and delayed distribution of welfare measures. For example, delayed wage payments under MGNREGA impact timely benefits to the poor. Likewise, it breeds corruption and lowers the growth of speedy and efficient transactions of a business in an organisation. According to the World Bank study, the higher the level of red-tapism, the higher the level of corruption is observed. 3.6 MALADIES OF BUREAUCRACY Bureaucracy has both negative and positive connotations. On the one hand, the practice of bureaucracy leads to efficiency while at the same time the role and power of bureaucracy have enormously increased in modern states which have a welfare orientation. It has come to play an important role in the legislative and judicial spheres, in addition to its traditional role in the administration. This increased role and concentration of powers in the hands of bureaucracy have been criticised by eminent critics. The critics argue that bureaucracy is an ailment of organisation. It gives rise to certain tendencies which may act as a hindrance in its very performance.Bureaucratisation

74% MATCHING BLOCK 151/319 W

results in an emphasis on routine and detail leading to redtape (delay) and giving rise to complaints of unresponsiveness of the bureaucracy to the people.

For example, hierarchy discourages initiatives and divides the organisation into layers, which not only leads to red-tapism but also inefficiency. It is often criticised as having a detrimental influence on the performance

59 and behaviour of civil servants. Arrogance, self-satisfaction, obsession with rules and routine, rigidity, indifference to democratic processes, and ignoring the human element in administrative behviour are other maladies. Other criticisms of bureaucracy are that it is unresponsive to popular demands and desires, undue formalism, self-aggrandisement,empire building, conservatism, etc. In 1955, Parkison propounded a law explaining the expansion of civil service. He viewed that bureaucracy is self-perpetuatingin the sense that the number of civil servants tends to increase day by day in number, irrespective of the workload. The reason for this phenomenon, according to Parkinson, is that the 'officials make work for each other". Thus, Bureaucracy has the tendency to multiply its work and creates new jobs for itself. However, as mentioned before, bureaucracy has a positive dimension. It has made public administration more efficient, specialized, rational, predictable, accountable, and impersonal. It is rightly said by Herbert Simon, the leading advocate of Decision-Making Theory that, "Bureaucracy is the price of parliamentary democracy". 3.7 CONCLUSION There is no denying that an effective, efficient, flexible, and responsive bureaucracy is a requisite to good governance. The competence of bureaucracy at all levels determines the performance and efficacy of an administrative system. They should be bold, honest, and assertive in the discharge of their responsibilities. They should not hesitate to give the right advice to the political authority no matter whether they accept it or not.As seen, the bureaucracy participates not only in policy formulation but also functions as a channel of communication and a repository of information as a group of specialists and as an impartial adviser. Likewise, what is needed against the backdrop of ailments of bureaucracy and public policy is an accurate diagnosis of the present situation and possible trends, a clear definition of the objectives of state policy, and a setof possible alternative courses of action, with an estimate of their costs and benefits.The bureaucracy should not only identify and anticipate present- day needs andfuture trends but it should also contribute to reshaping the environment. It must be stressed that effective long-termpolicy prescription and implementation require a constructive and cooperative effort on the part of the political and bureaucratic leadership to provide the necessaryinstitutional mechanism and personnel specialization within the folds of political parties and governmental organisations. Thus, we can conclude by saying that the role of the state and its bureaucracy in bringing about economic, social, and political development is therefore expanding and has become important. 3.8 SUMMARY ? Bureaucracy plays an extremely important role in the day-to-day administration of the state. ? The role of bureaucracy in the formulation and implementation of public policy is imperative. ? It is a driving force in developing countries. ? Red-Tapism is an important concept in understanding bureaucracy. ? There are several maladies of bureaucracy that needs to be checked.
60 3.9 MODEL QUESTIONS 3.9.1 Long Answer Type 1) Write is the role of Bureaucracy in a state. 2) Critically evaluatethe problems of bureaucratization and its maladies. 3) What role does Bureaucracy play in developing societies? 4) Explain the concept of Public Policy 3.9.2 Short Answer Type 1) What is the role of bureaucracy in a welfare state? 2) How is the bureauracy an agent of social change? 3) Briefly explain the role of bureaucracy in developing societies. 4) Briefly explain Parkinson's Law concerning its role in the bureaucracy. 5) What do you understand by Public Policy? 6) Explain the role of Red Tapism in bureaucracy. 3.10 KEYWORDS Maladies: Ailments Parkinson: C. Northcote Parkinson was a naval historian and author. He is most notable for formulating the famous Parkinson's Law Red Tape: official routine or procedure marked by excessive complexity which results in delay. Self-aggrandisement: Increasing one's power, rank, or wealth. 3.11 REFERENCES Chakrabarty, B., & Chand, P. (2012). Public Administration in a Globalizing World. Sage Publication.
Jain, R, B. (1987).

91% MATCHING BLOCK 153/319 W

The Role of Bureaucracy in Policy Development and Implementation in India. Southeast Asian Journal of Social Science, 15(2). 61

UNIT 4: NEUTRAL VS. COMMITTED BUREAUCRACY Structure 4.0 Learning Objectives 4.1 Introduction 4.2 Neutral Bureaucracy 4.3 Committed Bureaucracy 4.4Analysing Neutrality and Commitment 4.5 Neutrality and Civil Service in India 4.6 Anonytimy 4.7 Suggestions for a Neutral Bureaucracy 4.8
Conclusion 4.9 Summary 4.10 Keywords 4.11Model Questions 4.12 References 4.0
LEARNING OBJECTIVES After studying the unit, you should be able to: ? Explain the differences between neutral and committed bureaucracy. ? Merits and demerits ofneutral and committed Bureaucracy in India. ? Need for a neutral bureaucracy in India. 4.1 INTRODUCTION In recent times there have been debates about whether the bureaucracy is neutral or not. Neutrality and accountability go hand in hand, however, the involvement of bureaucracy in politics and its lack of anonymity has become a controversial issue in the context of public administration in particular andthe state in general. Ideological differences and conflicts of opinions areinevitable in an organistation. In this scenario, the bureaucrats are supposed to maintain their neutrality. However, there is an opposite view, as the top-level civil servants are disregarding their role as neutral facilitators of the machinery of administration. On the contrary, they are very "power hungry" and to satisfy their hunger and achieve selfish interests, they participate in politics. Neutrality and commitment can go together, and indeed reinforce each other if properly oriented, they can also become antithetical if not so oriented. Thus, if the bureaucrats become 62 committed to one political party, they cannot remain neutral. We shall examine the areas of conflict between the two and understand the aspects of neutrality and commitment. 4.2 NEUTRALBUREAUCRACY The state of not supporting or helping either side in a conflict, or disagreement, and maintaining impartiality is called neutrality. In the context of public administration, neutrality refers to political neutrality or non-partisanship. It indicates that you are not owned or linked with any one group, party, or cause.The significance of neutrality of the bureaucracy in the modem democratic state is of great significance. neutral bureaucracy comprises three important preconditions of cultural or class congruence between the ruling political group and the administrative elite, the absence of any fundamental disagreement over societal core values, and the presence of a shared belief system. The concept of neutrality has various implications such as public confidence in the non- political character of public service, the confidence of ministers belonging to any political party in the loyalty of the permanent subordinates, and high morale of public servants based on the confidence that promotion would be made not based on political considerations but merit.

64% MATCHING BLOCK 154/319 SA chapter-two.docx (D80924780)

100% MATCHING BLOCK 158/319 SA chapter-two.docx (D80924780)

Moreover, neutrality is a state of mind and there can be no effective law to ensure it.

The neutrality of bureaucracy is a characteristic feature of the Weberian ideal type. Neutrality impliesneutrality between classes, neutrality between cultural groups, and neutrality between political parties. 4.2.1 Neutrality between Classes As we know that society is made up of various classes such as landlords, capitalists, traders, farmers,and workers. The government is expected to take care of the interests of each one of them, and to allocate resources to them justly.

85% MATCHING BLOCK 155/319 W

In this regard,

75% MATCHING BLOCK 156/319 W

the bureaucracy is the government's main instrument and must be neutral between classes if justice is to be done and fair distribution of goods is to be ensured. Justice between classes is difficult to achieve because theinterests of the bureauracy often conflict. For instance, if a manufacturer pays higher wages to his workers, his profits get reduced to that extent. Similarly, if a landlord gives a higher share of the crop to his tenant farmers, he suffers a loss. It is precisely because of such conflict that neutrality between the classes is difficult to achieve. It is only if the government and the bureaucracy are seen to be neutral that the conflict can be kept within limits and peace maintained. If, however, a class has the feeling that injustice is being done to it, they may resort to violence. Thus, disputes between capitalists and workers result in tension or strikes, sometimes there is even violence and bloodshed. Hence the neutrality of the bureaucracy, which is the main instrument of the government, is essential for the maintenance of social order. If we take the example of India the conflict between classes is greater than in other developed nations. This is because there are greater disparities in developing countries. Thus while a few are very rich, millions continue to starve. What is more, those who are poor also lackeducation, social status, and political power. In other words. the poor often do not even know how to improve their condition, and even if they try, the richer and more powerful sections often thwart their efforts.

79% MATCHING BLOCK 157/319 W

This can have an adverse effect.

86% MATCHING BLOCK 159/319 W

The neutrality of the bureaucracy is important also because of its role in helping to bring about development. The government provides loans, subsidies, tax concessions, raw materials (such as steel and cement), and inputs (such as coal, electricity, fertiliser, and seeds) to industrialists and farmers. The classes of big industrialists and big farmers have a lot of political and economic power and, therefore, tend to monopolise these gains. However, development requires that small industries and small farms should also prosper since they are 63 large in number and so they make a

94% MATCHING BLOCK 160/319 W

substantial contribution to the national product. Justice also requires that they should not be ignored. Hence it is important that the bureaucracy, which distributes these facilities, carry out its functions impartially and justly. In other words, just support for small industrialists and farmers requires that the bureaucracy should not be influenced by the power of the big industrialists, big farmers, and landlords.

93% MATCHING BLOCK 161/319 W

88% MATCHING BLOCK 162/319 W

Another problem relates to the influence of interest groups. A department that serves a certain interest is, with time, likely to become identified with it. It has to come into close and continuous touch with persons having this interest, and it often has to function as the advocate of this interest. Thus, the department of agriculture has to serve farmers by providing various facilities and has to obtain funds for this purpose. In this process, the farmers' lobby and the department of agriculture are likely to become mutually supportive. If

the

72% MATCHING BLOCK 163/319 W

interests of farmers and industrialists clash, as they often do, the department of agriculture is likely to take the side of the farmers. Hence such specialised agencies are in danger of losing their neutrality.

79% MATCHING BLOCK 164/319 W

In developing countries like India, it tends to arise mainly concerning agencies dealing with powerful interests, like those of big' industrialists and big farmers. The solution to it lies in the development of organisationsforthe weaker sections of society. Efforts are now being made in India to help landless labour to organise itself. Similarly, if various interests organise themselves, and demand better political control over the bureaucracy, to ensure its responsibility and accountability, it is likely to remain moreneutral also. 4.2.2 Neutrality between Cultural Groups Our society consists of groups based on religion, caste, language, and region. While all these groups have many common interests, they also come into conflict to some extent. The Blacks have remained poor and exploited. In the USSR also there have been ethnic conflicts, for example between Armenians and Azeris.

Likewise, The Rohingya migrants are subject to harsh treatment by the authorities of Myanmar. The bureaucracy in this regard is required to hold the balance between the various groups. Hence it must be neutral between them. Since the conflict between cultural groups is generally greater in developing countries, the significance of the bureaucracy's neutrality is also greater in these countries. The way to the achievement of such neutrality, and also to the general reduction of conflict between cultural groups, lies through better education. If the attitudes of the people can be changed through education so that they come to regard themselves more as belonging to the Indian nation than to a particular group based upon religion, caste, language, or region, the conflict between groups can be reduced. Members of the higher bureaucracy are recruited mostly from among those who have received higher liberal education.

78% MATCHING BLOCK 165/319 W

As it is widely accepted that liberal education broadens the mental horizon, therefore the members of the higher bureaucracy should be among the most broad-minded people in the society, and hence neutral between cultural groups.

77% MATCHING BLOCK 166/319 W

The

79% MATCHING BLOCK 167/319 W

conscious effort at improving the quality of education can further help to modernise the attitudes of the bureaucracy leading to even greater neutrality. The conflict between cultural groups is often accentuated by socio-economic factors. It has been generally accepted that the

85% MATCHING BLOCK 168/319 W

Muslims in India have generally been poorer than Hindus. Most Sikhs in Punjab have a rural background, while most Hindus have an urban one. Members of the scheduled castes all over India are generally poorer and have a lower social status than others. Many of them are landless labourers. The conflict between cultural groups can be reduced by

94% MATCHING BLOCK 169/319 W

narrowing the disparities between them. One of the effects of such disparities is that a cultural group having a lower social and economic status has a lower representation in the bureaucracy also. Such a bureaucracy, with

a

86% MATCHING BLOCK 170/319 W

higher representation of certain groups than others, is often not perceived as being neutral. Hence the reduction of socio-economic disparities between cultural groups will not only reduce conflict between 64 them but also make for a more representative and neutral bureaucracy. Programmes aiming at poverty removal (such as the Integrated Rural Development Programme and MGNRGA), better health and education services, and loans to smallfarmers and industrialists, constitute part of the government's

92% MATCHING BLOCK 171/319 W

effort to reduce disparities. Further, if a cultural group suffers from poverty and exploitation and is unable to find adequate representation in the bureaucracy, special measures are taken to help it in getting such representation. Thus, some universities and state institutes run special courses for preparing those belonging to weaker sections for competitive examinations for entry into the bureaucracy. The Constitution of India to tackle this issue permits the

100% MATCHING BLOCK 172/319 W

reservation of posts in the bureaucracy for any backward class of citizens under Article 16(4). Under this provision,

Scheduled Caste reservation for civil service exam constitutes 15%, 7.5% for Scheduled Tribe, 27% for Other Backward Classes (OBC), 10% for Economically Weaker Sections (EWS), and 4% for Persons with Benchmark Disabilities.

88% MATCHING BLOCK 173/319 W

These measures are able to help in having a more representative and more neutral bureaucracy. 4.2.3 Neutrality between Political Parties Competition between political parties is an essential characteristic of a democracy. If there is only one party, the voter can hardly exercise higher choice. Democracy becomes meaningful only if the voter can choose between candidates of different parties. The exercise of choice by voters at general elections results in the formation of the government by one of the contending parties. Every party that fights an election puts forward its manifesto before the people. If it wins, it is rightly concludedthat the people have approved of its manifesto, indeed, it is said that the manifesto now becomes the mandate, or command, of the people to the new government. This mandate consists of policies that the people have approved. Fulfillment of the wishes of the people requires the implementation of these policies. The main instrument of the government for the implementation of its policies is the bureaucracy. Hence it is important that the bureaucracy should be neutral between parties and only

90% MATCHING BLOCK 174/319 W

such neutrality alone can ensure the fulfillment of the wishes of the people. While the neutrality of the bureaucracy is accepted as an ideal, many problems arise in practice and come in the way of the fulfillment of this ideal. One such problem has been the spoils system, in which the winning party appoints its followers or supporters to different positions in the bureaucracy. This phenomenon paves the way for patronage bureaucracy. Such a bureaucracy,natural and efficiency merit, andefficiency. Since a new government, formed by another party, throws out the supporters of the party earlier in power, the bureaucracy also tends to lack permanence, knowledge gained from experience in the service, and the motivation that the career system might have provided.

95% MATCHING BLOCK 175/319 W

Another problem that

91% MATCHING BLOCK 176/319 W

tends to interfere with the neutrality of the bureaucracy between political parties is the development of loyalty toward the politicians in power. Members of the bureaucracy who have been selected impartially by a Civil Service Commission, can later, in the course of their career, shed their neutrality and become aligned with the party, or the individuals, in power. 4.3

COMMITTED BUREAUCRACY Commitment means being dedicated to a particular cause or work. In a democratic set-up, it is the legislators that are elected by the citizens and they are responsible for making laws and policies; while bureaucrats are responsible for the implementation of the same laws and policies. The transformation of society is possible only when programs and schemes launched by the government are effectively and timely implemented at the local level. The term committed bureaucracy originated in the United States during the period of The Great Depression when the American president wanted to accelerate the pace of development 65 through bureaucracy and which he did by forcing the bureaucracy to implement the New Deal measures. AsMax Weber puts it, the main characteristics of a bureaucracy are hierarchy, division of labour, specialisation, rules, and impersonality. All these factors make for efficiency. At the same time, however, a bureaucracy suffers from alienation.

75% MATCHING BLOCK 177/319 W

Like, Karl Marx says that

100% MATCHING BLOCK 178/319 W

the members of bureaucracy suffer from loss of freedom, creativity, humanity, and morality.

84% MATCHING BLOCK 179/319 W

Other writers have also pointed out the disadvantages, or dysfunctions, of bureaucracy.Thus, bureaucratic control over officials requires that they should strictly follow rules. Hence the problem is how to maintain efficiency while reducing alienation or the dysfunctions of bureaucracy. The solution to this problem lies mainly in improving the commitment of its members. In other words, the bad effects of bureaucratic controls can to some extent be reduced if the employees are imbued with dedication. Dedication or commitment is required also because the employees have constantly to deal with complex problems, many of which are new.

Effective and timely implementation can be ensured by the committed bureaucrats only.

86% MATCHING BLOCK 180/319 W

Dedication or commitment is required also because the bureaucrats have constantly to deal with complex problems, many of which are new. It is a mistake to think that all bureaucratic activity is routine and monotonous. Developmental activity in particular requires forecasting, planning, risk bearing, breaking new ground, and experimentation. Hence, innovations have to be made all the time. The making of innovations, or creativity, requires emotional commitment.

It is due to these reasons that in recent years the term “committed bureaucracy” has received wide circulation and the top political executives (president, prime minister, etc.) of different countries are seriously thinking about employing bureaucracy for development and this could not be done if bureaucracy’s loyalty exists somewhere. The bureaucrats are found to be committed to values and objectives. They serve the people with commitment and adhere to their professions. 4.3.1

88% MATCHING BLOCK 181/319 W

Commitment to Values and Objectives Of our various commitments, the most important is the commitment to values. In the ethical sense, values are ends in themselves as they are sought for their own sake. The most important

100% MATCHING BLOCK 182/319 W

of our values are what are called human values, that

is

96% MATCHING BLOCK 183/319 W

those values that are sought in all places and times. Examples of human values are truth, compassion, honesty, and courage. While human values are universally sought, there are some values to which importance is attached in only some countries

whichwe call it

90% MATCHING BLOCK 184/319 W

national values. Important human and national values may be mentioned in a nation's Constitution also.

It is no surprise that the four cardinal values of Justice, Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity

96% MATCHING BLOCK 185/319 W

are mentioned in the preamble to India's Constitution. These may be called human values since in no age or place has their desirability been questioned. Then there are the values of nationalism, democracy, socialism, and secularism which may be called India's national or Constitutional values since they find explicit or implicit support in the Constitution. While it is expected that everyone everywhere will attach great importance to human values, citizens of India are, in addition, expected to seek to fulfill the national or Constitutional values. The bureaucracy is expected to attach even greater importance to both these sets of values than ordinary citizens. The bureaucracy acts on behalf of the state or government. If the state and government are to bring about reforms then the bureaucracy must show respect for human values. Again, since the constitution lays down the fundamental principles according to which the state is governed, the bureaucracy, as the agent of the state and the government, must accord the highest importance to all the values enshrined in the Constitution. 66 Apart from human and constitutional values, the bureaucracy must also be committed to national objectives. Some of these may be so important as to be mentioned in the Constitution, while others are stated in laws. Thus, Part IV of the Indian Constitution, entitled "Directive Principles of State Policy" mentions objectives such as securing just and humane conditions of work, securing a living wage, provision of free and compulsory education for all children, and the protection of Scheduled Castes and Tribes from social injustice and exploitation. However, the Constitution mentions only a few, paramount, objectives, most other national objectives are stated in laws. It is through the demands of interest groups

87% MATCHING BLOCK 186/319 W

that

100% MATCHING BLOCK 187/319 W

they are presented to the people for their approval through the manifestos of political parties at election time and they are adopted as national objectives after their inclusion in-laws.

Every act of the legislature contains such adeclaration of the objectivesand once they are enshrined in the Constitution, it becomes the duty of the bureaucracy to faithfully fulfill them by implementing the law. The commitment of the bureaucracy to the objectives stated in laws is thus essential for the performance of its duties. 4.3.2 Commitment to Service of the People The bureaucracy's important role in policy formulation and implementation gives it a lot of power, it participates in deciding who should get what, when, and how, and then goes ahead to enforce these decisions. In developing countries, particularly, the power of the bureaucracy is considerable since the other parts of the political system are weak. Hence while the civil servant is, ideally, expected to function as a "servant" of the people, in reality, he may turn out to be a master. In a developing country like India, this problem becomes worse due to

88% MATCHING BLOCK 188/319 W

the

92% MATCHING BLOCK 189/319 W

heritage of the colonial past, when the civil servant used to be the symbol and agent of the foreign power. After independence also, a cultural and social chasm continued to exist between the mostly non-literate and poor people and the higher bureaucrat who often dresses, speaks, and even thinks, like that a colonial master.

91% MATCHING BLOCK 190/319 W

In a democracy, however, the people are expected to exercise real power, and the bureaucracy is expected to remain under the control of the elected politicians, and serve the people. Hence the commitment to providing service to the people is essential for the proper performance of the bureaucracy's role. The bureaucracy's power, derived from its role in policy formulation and implementation, is used also for fulfilling its interests. In developing countries, the bureaucracy is very powerful, the result often is that the bureaucracy tends to fulfill its interest even at the cost of the interests of the people. Thus, the extra profit (benefits apart from salary) remains high in most public undertakings in India even if they lack effectiveness and run at a loss. High officials play an important

86% MATCHING BLOCK 191/319 W

role in the determination of their emoluments, and try to protect their interests by maintaining the emoluments at a high level. Service of the people requires that where there is a conflict between their interests and those of the people, they should give priority to the people's interests. 4.3.3 Commitment to Profession A profession is a vocation or calling, especially one that involves some branch of science or advanced learning. Nowadays Public Administration requires persons belonging to almost all the professions, such as doctors, engineers, lawyers, teachers, scientists, managers, and accountants. Obtaining professional qualifications requires long and arduous preparation on their part. They are considered to have specialised knowledge and excellence and hence have high prestige. Since their contribution to society comes from their specialised knowledge, it becomes their duty to keep abreast of the developments in their field of specialisation. They must also maintain the expected standard of performance. Thus, university teachers must continue

76% MATCHING BLOCK 192/319 W

to read the latest publications. These are the requirements of their commitment to teaching as a profession. Similarly, other professionals must also continually update their knowledge and skill and maintain the expected standard of performance through practice. 67 The duties associated with every profession required, not only knowledge and skill but also moral dedication. Hence

the

92% MATCHING BLOCK 193/319 W

commitment to a profession involves adherence to its ethics and etiquette. Thus, the ethics of the medical profession require that a doctor should attend to a patient even at the risk of infection to himself, its etiquette requires that he should not disclose information confided to him by his patients. Similarly, every profession has its ethics and etiquette.

Now, when a professional joins the bureaucracy, he or she must

73% MATCHING BLOCK 194/319 W

continue to remain committed to the ethics and the etiquette of the higher profession, in addition to a higher commitment to the objectives ofthe organisation.

69% MATCHING BLOCK 195/319 W

For example, if a specialist in clinical medicine becomes the director of a medical institute. He or she should not allow the new status to interfere with higher duty toward the patients. A higherposition may also provide him or

86% MATCHING BLOCK 196/319 W

her with opportunities for selfish gain at the cost of clients. Thus, a specialist in a medical institute may be pressurised for recommending some costly and inferior equipment for purchase. 4.4

ANALYSING

86% MATCHING BLOCK 197/319 W

NEUTRALITY AND COMMITMENT In recent years there has been a lot of discussion in India about the nature of neutrality and commitment, and particularly, whether the bureaucracy can have the two qualities at the same time. If commitment is taken to mean a commitment to a particular political party or its leaders, it becomes antithetical to neutrality. However, commitment to human and constitutional values and national objectives, to service of the people, and professional ethics and etiquette, are not antithetical to neutrality between classes, cultural groups, and political parties. Indeed, commitment and neutrality reinforce each other if they are of the right type. This commitment to the human value of compassion and the constitutional value of fraternity is likely to induce neutrality between classes and cultural groups respectively. Similarly, commitment to national objectives is likely to induce neutrality between political parties. Hence the effort should be to induce commitment and neutrality of the right kind. Inculcation of desirable attitudes in the bureaucracy requires attention to all aspects of personnel administration. At the time of recruitment and selection of candidates, it should be ensured that they have received the right kind of socialisation and education in the family and school. The competitive examination for selection can include tests of attitudes towards human and constitutional values and national objectives on the one hand, and towards classes, cultural groups and parties on the other. Such tests can indicate whether the candidate has properly benefited from

a

97% MATCHING BLOCK 198/319 W

liberal education and has a broad mental outlook, or has merely committed materials to memory for passing examinations. After entry, desired attitudes of neutrality and commitment can be inculcated in the members of the bureaucracy through training.Various incentives, such as desired posting, visits abroad, and quicker promotion, can be provided for motivating employees to develop the right attitudes. Finally, control

by

95% MATCHING BLOCK 199/319 W

the political executive and the legislature can ensure that they do not deviate from the norms. Institutions like the Public Service Commission, Courts, and Administrative Tribunals should ensure that the exercise of control by political authorities is done fairly and justly. Further, in a democracy, the people have the right and the duty to see that all institutions function properly. Special agencies and methods of recruitment can be used for important areas requiring a high degree of both neutrality and commitment. One such special agency already in use is the autonomous university. Higher education and research constitute an area in which commitment and neutrality are both of great importance. If commitment is not there,

the

96% MATCHING BLOCK 200/319 W

pursuit of knowledge lacks excellence; if neutrality is not there education becomes merely 68 indoctrination. The autonomous university aims at achieving both; it also retains the main advantage of bureaucratisation, namely efficiency, while avoiding the dysfunctions flowing from bureaucratisation due to its autonomy. Max Weber has noted that staff members of a university constitute a bureaucracy. The characteristics of hierarchy, division of labour, specialisation, rules, and impersonality are to be found in a university also, and hence it has the efficiency flowing from these factors. At the same time, its autonomy permits its staff members to remain committed as well as neutral, since the rules of conduct applicable to government servants do not apply to the employees of a university. 4.5

NEUTRALITY ANDCIVIL SERVICE IN INDIA The issue of neutrality is one of the important challenges faced by civil servants in India. The notion of neutrality implies the absence of any political activity or bias on the part of an individual civil servant in the performance of his duties. As mentioned earlier,

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 201/319	W

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 202/319	SA	chapter-two.docx (D80924780)

neutrality means acceptance of the discipline of working without reservation

the state of not supporting or helping either side in a conflict, or disagreement and maintaining impartiality. If any administrator shows an inclination towards a particular party or adherence to a particular ideology, he would experience difficulty in working when another party with a different ideology comes into office. Indian Civil Service is not neutral but deeply intertwined in politics. Several renowned civil servants such as John Mathai, C.D. Deshmukh, K. R. Narayanan, Krishna Kumar, Yashwant Sinha, M. G. K. Menon, Raja Ramana, Mani Shankar Iyer, T. N. Chaturvedi and Manmohan Singh, former Union Finance Minister and former Prime Minister of India, have joined different political parties. Indian Civil Service has been working with the politicians of the party in power at the Centre or at the State level.

66%	MATCHING BLOCK 203/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

Bureaucrats have projected and defended their group interests with the help of politicians by supplying secret files to them whenever necessary. Not only this, but they also get international posts after retirement. The desire to stick to rules is in the minds of Government servants. But it cannot override the considerations of promotion. During the seventies, the concept of 'neutrality' was replaced by 'committed civil service. Commitment to a new and economic order has to be consciously built and nurtured through the careers of civil Servants. Mrs. Indira Gandhi and hercabinet talked of committed bureaucracy and even to the duties and obligationsof the civil service or the judiciary not to the country but solely to the government of the day. Mrs. Gandhi said making committed civil service meant 'committed to several policies and a popularly elected government without being committed to the policies of the party in power. However, these views of Mrs. Gandhi were vehemently criticised by all shades of people and it was said that the civil servants should be committed to their duties and the society which they are supposed to serve. Social commitment rather than political commitment is imperative in modern times. Thus, it appears that the concept of 'neutrality' faces a hard knock in the conditions prevailing in a developing nation like India. But, for a parliamentary democracy political neutrality is indispensable. It is all the more necessary for India because ministerial changes are frequent in the Indian states; and after 1977, even at the Centre. In the absence of neutrality, the civil service will develop cleavages,factionalism and percolate the belief that some would be promoted and some others would be penalised due to their political bias. 4.6 ANONYMITY: The principles of neutrality and anonymity of civil servants go hand in hand. They are complementary to each other. The principle of neutrality of civil servants implies that they will be politically neutral, they will not be members of any political party nor will they 69 canvass for it at the time of the election, except for exercising their right to vote, and they will implement the policies of the party in power at a particular time as per rules and regulations in terms of the law enacted by the legislature in a non-partisan, impartial and unbiased manner. All policy decisions are taken by the political executive and the civil servants are obliged to execute them without any personal involvement. The principle of anonymity flows directly from the doctrine of ministerial responsibility, which is a feature of the parliamentary government as is prevalent in England and India. According to the concept of ministerial responsibility, a Minister-in-Charge of a department is responsible for the actsof commission and omission of the civil servants subordinate to him. A civil servant cannot be criticised on the floor of the house by name as he cannot be present in the house and address it to defend himself. It is, therefore, theresponsibility of the minister concerned to defend him in the Legislature as also before the general public. If the minister is unable to defend the civil servant, he may be obliged to resign. Therefore, Civil servants are to act accordingly to the policies of their ministers, impersonally and impartially. This impersonal exercise of power means that their names are not to be involved in any decision. They are to take decisions on a particular matter strictly according to the rules and regulations. 4.7 SUGGESTIONS FOR A NEUTRAL BUREAUCRACY The civil servants must observe neutrality in the implementation of policies and programmes of the party in power. They should not be biased but should be ready to cooperate if some new party comes in power. They should not identify themselves with the political programmes of a particular party. The bureaucracy has to protect the very state of which it is a part, from being disrupted or being undermined by the disquieting elements of civil society. Neutrality depicts that public officials are not slaves to either the politicians or any other authority other than the moral authority of the Constitution. It shows that the principle of neutrality implies a measure of independence both from the partisan interests of the government of the day and the exogenous agenda that prompts certain social groups to cow others down to humiliating vulnerability. Bureaucracy should be neutral in terms of ideology and politics. So that there will not be an affinity to a particular class or ideology. Most importantly, it also suggests that even in the post-retirement period, public officials could make significant interventions for more noble purposes underlying the good society even without joining a particular brand of formal politics that has scant regard for constitutional principles such as freedom from fear and human dignity. For a genuine public official, commitment to constitutional principles is not only a lifelong project but, more importantly, it can be carried out without any political or ideological mediation.

92% MATCHING BLOCK 204/319 W

Special agencies and methods of recruitment can be used for important areas requiring ahigh degree of both neutrality and commitment. One such special agency already in use is the autonomous university. Higher education and research constitute an area in which commitment and neutrality are both of great importance.

First, the bureaucracy has to protect the very state of which it is a part, from being disrupted or undermined by the disquieting elements of civil society. Second, the bureaucracy has to prevent the disruptive efforts of a society that is ridden with caste and patriarchal consciousness. Bureaucracy has to intervene in public life to see to it that society does not

70 degenerate into aggressive obscurantism. The formative conditions to perform these twin tasks involve public officials' moral capacity to resist anti-constitutional interests that the government of the day may try to push. Thus, the neutrality principle has a moral function to prevent public officials from becoming slaves to the government of the day. All these recommendations are relevant even today, and they should be followed properly. As the relationship between the political and the permanent executive has grown into complexity, it is, therefore, necessary that both the minister and the secretary should try to know and understand their respective heads and must not try to dominate each other. If some controversy arises, that should be solved through discussions, mutual trust, and confidence. In a democratic setup like in India for example, they should go hand in hand with the service of the country. They should work together while keeping in view their respective status and dignity. It is desired that they should be sincere, dedicated, and committed to their roles and should not evade responsibility. 4.8 CONCLUSION As we have mentioned before that neutrality and commitment can go together, and. They reinforce each other if properly oriented. An integration of neutrality and commitment of the bureaucracycan serve the purpose and achieve the goals of national integration and development of a nation-state. Undeniably, the commitment of bureaucracy to the national values of Justice, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity, and principles of nationalism, and democracy remainsunparalleled.It is important to check the maladies of bureaucracy to shred their allegiance of parochial political objectives. It may act as a hindrance in the process of development. Therefore, in order to consolidate and bridge the gap between the two aspects, one must examine the bureaucracy objectively. 4.9 SUMMARY ? In recent times, the debate between neutral and committed bureaucrats hasemerged at the forefront of public administration. ? Neutrality can be observed through various factors. ? Committed bureaucracy remains firm to certain values, objectives, and professions. ? The issue of neutrality is an important challenge faced by civil servants in a developing country like India. ? An integration of both neutrality and commitment is the need of the hour. ? A neutral bureaucracy is the desired objective in developing societies. 4.10KEYWORDS Spoils System:A system which originated in USA. It is also called patronage system and a practice in which the political party winning an election rewards its campaign workers and other active supporters by appointment to government posts and with other favours. The Great Depression: The Great Depression was a severe worldwide economic depression between 1929 and 1939 that began after a major fall in stock prices in the United States.

71 Directive Principles of State Policy: Guidelines or principles given to the institutes for governing India and are provided Part IV of the Constitution of India. Ethics:The study of what is right and wrong in human behaviour. 4.11 QUESTIONS 4.10.1 Long Answer Type 1. Analayse the debate between neural and committed bureaucracy. 2. What are the various dimensions of neutral bureaucracy? 3. How is committed bureaucracy ensured in an organistaion. Explain. 4. How can we ensure of neutrality of bureaucrats. Explain 4.10.2 Short Answer Type 1. What is the meaning of anonymity? 2. Write a brief note on the neutrality of civil servants in India. 3. What is the meaning of committed bureaucracy? 4. What is the meaning of neutrality? 5. What are the ill effects of committed bureaucracy? 6. How should the bureaucracy be neutral towards ideology and politics? 4.12REFERENCES Bhattacharya, M. (2008). New Horizons of Public Administration. Jawahar Publishers and Distributors. Singh, N., & Sachdeva, P. (1989). Public Administration in India: Theory and Practice. Sterling Publishers. Singh, R., Gour, M, K., (1978). Neutrality and Commitment: A Futile Debate. The Indian Journal of Political Science, 39. Arora, K, S. Political Policy and the future of Bureaucracy. Indian Journal of Public Administration, Vol. 18. UNIT: 5 TECHNOCRATS VS. BUREAUCRATS Structure 5.0 Learning Objectives 5.1 Introduction 5.2 Technocrat 5.3 Bureaucrat 5.4Controversy and Areas of Conflict 5.5 Suggestions and Remedies 5.6
Conclusion 5.7 Summary 5.8 Keywords

72 5.9 Model Questions 5.10 References 5.0
LEARNING OBJECTIVES After studying the unit, you should be able to: ? Explain the meaning of technocrats and bureaucrats ? Describe the controversy between the two. ? Importance of both technocrats and bureaucrats. ? Ways to overcome the conflict between the two. 5.1 INTRODUCTION The fight between technocracy and bureaucracy has been in existence ever since the inception of these terms. The Technocrats and Bureaucrats who are commonly characterised as 'Specialists' and 'Generalists' respectively are found in every administrative system but bureaucrats are at the 'top' and specialists or the technocrats are at the 'tap', and this causes jealousy in technocrats. The technocrat and bureaucrat controversy is one of the important problems of public administration. The problem has acquired new dimensions due to the vital role of ever-increasing importance being played by science and technology in all walks of life. In the forties or fifties, no one thought about the department of space or ocean development or atomic energy or communication technology, such as fax, the Internet, the computer revolution, etc. In this regard, our scientists and technologists have won laurels for the successfulconduct of nuclear tests at Pokhran on 11 and 13 May 1998. Likewise, their expertise and skills can be reflected in policy formulations as well. Therefore, the role of specialists or technocrats in administration has acquired immense significance. The problem of law and order has also acquired a new dimension due to the invention of several kinds of rifles, missiles, and chemical weapons. As a result,attempts have been made to define the roles of technocrats and bureaucrats in many countries.We shall propose to define both the terms and we would examine the arguments in favour of and against both. Lastly, we shall try to analyse the reasons for the conflict between the two. 5.2 TECHNOCRAT A technocrat is a scientist, engineer, or another expert who is one of a group of similar people who have political power as well as technical knowledge.A technocrat is also known as a 'Specialist'. He or She is generally a person who has special knowledge or skill in a specific field, for example. engineers, physicians, agriculturists, educationists, lawyers, etc.

92% MATCHING BLOCK 205/319 W

63% MATCHING BLOCK 206/319 SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

He can be easily distinguished based on his or her education and training. They generally perform a job in which their specialist knowledge is required However, an expert or specialist is a relative term depending upon the context.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 207/319 SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

For example, a general medical practitioner is an expert concerning the patient but in comparison to a surgeon, a dentist, or a gynecologist, he or she is only a generalist. The Administrative Reforms Commission (ARC) has called for such specialised services where officers have to specialise after joining the service. For example, the officers joining services like Income Tax, Audit and Accounts, Defence Accounts, etc. do not require any specialised degree at the time of entry. However, over some period in their services, they tend to specialise in their particular fields. The Civil Service Committee of Britain (1966-68), popularly known as the Fulton Committee used the term 'specialist' for those whose career provides opportunities for the exercise of their qualifications and specialist skills. This category includes engineers, draughtsmen, technicians, and so on. Some of these, such as doctors and engineers, have acquired

56% MATCHING BLOCK 208/319 SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

the
73 professionalism of specialists through recognised training outside their service. Others such as technicians

87% MATCHING BLOCK 209/319 SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

and draughtsmen may acquire and develop their skills after joining the service.

Since the technocrats are highly specialized in their field, they provide highly effective and pinpointed solutions to the problems faced in their field. Due to the immense amount of knowledge that they have amassed over the years, they have a different perspective on the problems of society.Examples of technocrats include Raghuram Rajan, who was the former Governor of The Reserve Bank of India, and E. Sreedharan, who is known as the Metro Man of India. 5.3 BUREAUCRAT A bureaucrat is an official in a government department, in particular one perceived as being concerned with procedural correctness at the expense of people's needs.A bureaucrat is a public servant who does not have a specialised background and is easily transferable to any department or branch of Government. He has also been defined as an administrator, who belongs to the managerial class and who is well versed with rules, regulations, and procedures of administration, and generally performsfunctions of Planning, Organising, Directing, Staffing, Cooperating, Reporting, and Staffing in the words of Gulick. A bureaucrat is also known as a 'Generalist'. Generalists are said to be jack of all trades and masters of none. The Fulton Committee (1966-68) used the term 'administrators' for those members of the administrative and executive classes who are now treated as, and regard themselves as, 'generalists'. The terms bureaucrats, civil servants, public servants, government servants, government servants, officials of government, officials, permanent executive, and non-political executive are used to describe all such persons who carry out the day-to-day administration of the state. The terms Bureaucrats and Civil Servants are popularly used as synonyms.

75%	MATCHING BLOCK 210/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 211/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

75%	MATCHING BLOCK 213/319	SA	Ahmed Raza PU (1).docx (D21953744)

They areIAS officers and IRS officers in the case of India. 5.4CONTROVERSY AND AREAS OF CONFLICT In a developing country like India, the bureaucrats have been given superior positions in the administration. The policy formulation and the 'consideration' levels in the Central, as well as State Secretariat, are occupied by the bureaucrats, while positions in the field are filled by the technocrats. To make the 'humiliation' still more apparent, the heads of executive agencies are appointed from amongst the technocrats. For example, in the states of India, the Directors of Higher Education, Directors of Health, and Directors of Agriculture are IAS civil servants. At the district level, there is a generalist who is a Collector/DC,

95%	MATCHING BLOCK 212/319	W

91%	MATCHING BLOCK 217/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

leading a team of technical district officers who are heads of technical departments. At the block level,

Block Development Officer (BDO) is the bureaucrat who leads a team of cooperative and veterinary services. The genesis of the 'generalist and specialist' and the 'bureaucrat and technocrat' controversy in India can largely be traced to the concept of 'nearness' or 'remoteness' from the area of top policy-making. It is more post-centered rather than person-oriented, and the tussle between the two is in reality for holding certain positions. The real debate should be around formulating a satisfactory and adequatestaffing policy or better still, evolving a progressive, constructive and objective-oriented,egalitarian personnel philosophy. 74

91% MATCHING BLOCK 214/319 W

A very important

83% MATCHING BLOCK 215/319 W

aspect of controversy relates to the privileged position enjoyed by the IndianAdministrative Service due to its

83% MATCHING BLOCK 216/319 W

high salary, better career prospects, and also its monopoly oftop administrative positions as posts of secretaries in the government departments; even the positionof heads of most executive departments are reserved for the bureaucrats.Career wise too, a member of the Indian Administrative Service after serving for about tenyears or so in a state administration, moves to the Central Secretariat and at times becomeseven the Secretary of a department or ministry. The technocrats feel that their position andstatus in the administrative hierarchy is not commensurate with the contribution they maketo the technological advancement of the country. They are being denied access to the policy-making powers is attributed to their being overshadowed by the bureaucrats. In this regard, the specialists or the technocrats demand parity with IAS generalists and the bureaucracy in general,

92% MATCHING BLOCK 218/319 W

in matters of pay scales and service conditions, and access to administrative positions at the Secretariat so that they can contribute to the policy formulation of the Government. They complain that during their school days bureaucratswere not brilliant students as compared to them but they enjoy more powers than technocrats due to their position at the Secretariat level. The problem is that the technocrats have to submit to the final decisions taken by the bureaucrats on issues that have an important bearing on their field of specialisation. This resulted in the conflict between the power of knowledge of experts and the power of the position of bureaucrats. Thus, the problem is more of power-sharingamong the administration

75% MATCHING BLOCK 219/319 W

The suitability of the bureaucratsfor all policy-making positions is questioned by technocratson the ground that the change in the functions of government in present times calls forcertain professionalism which is not possessed to such an extent by the generalists. Also, byreserving all senior managerial positions to the bureaucrats, especially to the IAS, the government is deprived of the expert advice and specialised knowledge of the specialists.However, it is generally argued by the bureaucrats that the field experience gained by them at the district and state levels in the initial years of their career helps them in the taskof decision-making. But thetechnocrats feel that this field experience is not sufficient todischarge themulti-varied tasks of the government which requires special or expertknowledge. And also, this sort of field experience is not just the prerogative of thegeneralists as it can be secured by the technocrats. For example, a doctor working in aPrimary Health Centre is exposed to all sorts of field problems as can be experienced by aDistrict Collector. This makes higher acquire certain administrative skills in addition tohigher technical competence. Another point of contention between the two comes from their beingorganised into separate hierarchies. This leads to situations where the expert advice renderedby the technocrats are submitted to thebureaucrats for higher approval. This is justified on theground that since technocrats tend to have a biased outlook tilted towards their specialty andsince policymaking needs to consider matters in totality, the bureaucrats are best suited to takethe final decision. This is due to technocrats being denied access to senior administrativepositions.

81% MATCHING BLOCK 220/319 W

The bureaucracy often moves from one department to the other and at times to a public enterprise or even a semi-government institution. But the mobility of the technocrats isrestricted in the sense that they are transferred or promoted in the same department. The technocrats view the frequent movement of the bureaucrats as a hindrance in the way 75 ofacquiring adequate and in-depth knowledge in any one aspect of the department's work.Thus, the technocrats feel that it may have a negative impact on proper policy making 5.4.1Arguments in favour of Technocrats The grievance of technocrats as mentioned before is the discrimination in pay and allowances as between the Indian Administrative Service (IAS) and their services and quick chances of promotion for the IAS.Therefore, now a new trend is emerging in the composition of higher civil services, that is, large numbers of professionals are now appearing for the civil services examinations. They are leaving medicine engineering and chartered accountancy positions to enter civil services. Technocrats complain that they are excluded from the top policy-making positions. Therefore, it would be pertinent to examine the arguments given in favour ofspecialists. Before independence, in colonial days the main functions of administration were maintenance of law and order,collection of taxes, and revenues. But now the tasks of administration have become very complex and cannot be properly performed by the bureaucrats alone. Therefore, technocrats should be given their due weightage in performing these jobs from the lowest to the highest levels.Technocrats feel that bureaucrats are not required to intervene between them and the Minister. They have better knowledge of their own field and can explain it better to the Minister. The bureaucrats do not understand the implications of the technical proposals and cause inordinate delays in the clearance of the project proposals submitted to them. The bureaucratshave to depend on the advice of the technocrats and in the absence of their expert advice/ knowledge are unable to take final decisions expeditiously. It is further cited that our Public Enterprises headed by bureaucrats have become the center of mismanagement and resulted in heavy financial losses. On the contrary, Dr. Homi Bhabha, who played a key role in India's Nuclear Program proved to be an administrator of great acumen. He built the Atomic Energy Commission, which isa very important organisation. In England, the Fulton Committee recommended a greater role for the technocrats in administration and observed that to meet the challenge of the scientific and technical developments, the specialists have to be given due place in the administration. The same arguments can be advanced in the case of technocrats in India. ARC recommended that the senior posts in functional areas should be held by thespecialists in those functional cadres. It further recommended that non-functional posts should be thrown open to all specialists and generalists. 5.4.1Arguments in favour of Bureaucrats Since it is the responsibility of the bureaucracy to carry out and implement the policies of thegovernment. Good policies and laws can serve their objectives only when these are efficiently implemented by civil servants.

90% MATCHING BLOCK 221/319 W

The bureaucrats play a superior role in the day-to- day administration of the state. In India, Macaulay Report on Indian Civil Service (1854) followed the British tradition of the superior position of a generalist administrator propounded by the Northcote-Trevelyn Report (1853). The philosophy of these reports is that a person with liberal education and varied multifunctional experience is much better than a

76 specialist who has deep knowledge of a very narrow field. Therefore, bureaucratsoccupied superior positions in the Indian administration The important argument in favour of generalist civil service is that it has established contact with people in the administration ranging from the top to the grassroots level. This is a peculiar system in which generalist administrative service is organised as an All-India Service based on the permanent cadres of the State Governments. Officers of this service serve at the district level and come in contact with people at the lowest level. They are later transferred to the various positions in the State up to Secretariat and get the experience of the working of the State governments. Some of these officers are deputed to the Government of India to senior positions. Such a tenuresystem was introduced by Lord Curzon in which these officers used to serve in the Government of India for a fixed tenure and used to back to the State of their cadre. These officers serving at senior levels in the Government of India have the advantage of vast experience of working in the State Secretariat and in the field. This connects the entire system of administration from top level to grass root level. The knowledge and vision provided by this kind of experience cannot be equaled by the limited technical experience of the specialist. The administration in India has been based on the principle of area administration. Thus, the village, the block, the tehsil, the district, and the division continue to remain the units around which the administration at that level revolves. Each area requires a generalist administrator or a bureaucrat to perform manage rial functions such as planning, directing, and coordinating. Such a role can be performed by an experienced administrator successfully.A generalist secretary is in a much better position to tender correct and proper advice to his ministry because he usually has complete understanding of the total effect of various factors on a particular policy decision. Bureaucrats charge technocrats of being parochial and narrow-minded. They say that technocrats are prone less. According to Paul Appleby, 'the price of specialisation of every kind to display bias and a restricted view of matters. A specialist is one who knows more and more of less and parochialism. A generalist possesses broad vision and outlook and high thinking while a specialist does not possess all these qualities. It has also been said that it is wrong to call these professionals in their own field. To advise the political executive in their policy formulation functions are specialised tasks in themselves. Those whoperform these tasks have to develop professional expertise to become successful. The bureaucrats can in that sense be called administrative professionals. In any decision-making process, technical inputs form only a small part. Other matters like financial, administrative, legal, and political issues are of equal importance. A bureaucrat with a broad background of working in various departments is better suited to perform these jobs. Experience shows that when a technocrat is required to do the job of a bureaucrat, they lose both ways. Neither do they remain specialists, nor do they prove to be good bureaucrats. 5.5SUGGESTIONS AND REMEDIES Public Administration in the modern day requires an integration of both the technocrats and the bureaucrats to gain maximum efficiency. In every country, a middle way should be worked out to utilise the services of both technocrats and bureaucrats for nationaldevelopment. The good and well-meaning administrators could not deny the importance of technical considerations and expert services. Likewise, no good specialist should assume that his administrative colleague is an important bigot. Where the attitude is one of mutualunderstanding, public service benefits greatly. The disputes and areas of controversy between the two can be located and dealt with. So, several steps have to be taken to solve the problem.
77 A new trend of appointing technocrats to administrative positions is taking place.

94% MATCHING BLOCK 222/319 W

Of late, certain measures have been taken in our country to induct technocrats into higher administrative positions at the Centre as well as in States.

For example, some time ago Education Secretary

94% MATCHING BLOCK 223/319 SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

in the Union Ministry of Education was an educationist by profession, and the Secretary to the Scientific Affairs Department in the same ministry was an eminent scientist.

In some ministries, expert advisors have been appointed to take advantage of their expertise.

83%	MATCHING BLOCK 224/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

Another method of giving a technocrat head of department ex-officio status of joint/additional/full Secretary to the Government has been followed. The Railway Board is a good example of such an arrangement. The members of the Board operate as heads of departments and are also ex-officio secretaries in the Railway Ministry. So is the case of the Department of Atomic Energy, where the specialist has reached the top instead of the bureaucrat. It is headed by nuclear scientists and so is the case with the Department of Science and Technology which has a scientist as a Secretary.

51%	MATCHING BLOCK 226/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 225/319	W

In the same way,

87%	MATCHING BLOCK 228/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

the Rajasthan Government has appointed the Chief Engineer (PWD & BR) and the Director of Industries and Supplies ex-officio Additional Secretaries to the Government.

A

59%	MATCHING BLOCK 227/319	W

way to tackle this problem is to experiment with an integrated hierarchy in place of present'separate' and 'parallel' hierarchies. In separate hierarchies, the policy is determined by thebureaucratsand the function of the technocrats is to execute it. Whereas in a parallel hierarchy,each class has its parallel sub-hierarchy, and work between the two is coordinated byfrequent liaison. The organisation of technocrats andin separate hierarchies, withthe policy and financial aspects of the work reserved exclusively for bureaucrats, has certaindisadvantages such as slowing down the process of decisionmaking and management, generating inefficiency, and preventing the specialists from exercising the full range of responsibilities normally associated with their professions.

The tenure system has been met with a decline over the years. As already discussed, the tenure system was introduced by the British. The system is now in no position to deliver the goods and has been weakened. It is felt that senior civil servants should remain permanently in the Central Secretariat in violation the of tenure system. In practice now very few officers of the rank of Joint Secretary go back to the States. The creation of the Central Secretariat Services has also weakened this system. Indian Constitution for instance has a provision to create more All India Services and Central Services.

98%	MATCHING BLOCK 233/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

In 1961, two new Central Class I Services constituted the Indian Economic Service for the economists and the Indian Statistical Service for the Statisticians. All these services aim to provide better status and pay to the technocrats. The creation of such new specialist- centric all India and central services can provide them necessary security and platform.

85% MATCHING BLOCK 229/319 W

The present need is for more purposive development of professionalism inadministration. The base of such professionalism is not necessarily provided by a single specialty but a variety of backgrounds and disciplines. For example, the administrators ofprice policy must know in sufficient depth and detail all the economic implications of thatparticular measure. Hence, it becomes essential for the government to organise at the top anexpert layer of personnel, who though initially coming from either the generalist orspecialist background, would need to be developed into a professionally competent group inorder not merely to effectively execute 78 programmes but also to aid and advise the toppolitical executives in matters of important policies. 5.6

CONCLUSION

82% MATCHING BLOCK 230/319 W

There is no denying the fact that in their functional situations both technocrats and bureaucrats have important contributions to make.

94% MATCHING BLOCK 231/319 W

The partnership responsibility of the two groups in facing the new challenges underconditions of quickening socio-economic change is a necessary ingredient of national goal fulfillment. The necessity for

the

83% MATCHING BLOCK 232/319 W

collaborative role of generalists and specialists is nowrecognised and accepted almost everywhere.

It is neither feasible nor desirable toreplace one category with the other. Indeed, it is not as though a revolution in public administration is going to occur if all the bureaucrats were to be replaced by technocrats. Similarly, the jobs of technocrats cannot also be taken over by bureaucrats, for example, the functions of theChief of Army Staff cannot be taken over by a Secretary to a Government department. Thus,while, co-existence among both categories

82% MATCHING BLOCK 234/319 W

84% MATCHING BLOCK 235/319 W

has to be accepted as afundamental fact of administrative life, the real issue is in what fashion or in what structureor role the relationship should exist. 5.7

SUMMARY ? The technocrat and bureaucrat controversy

100% MATCHING BLOCK 236/319 W

is one of the important problems of public administration. ? The dispute between the two ranges from high perks and facilities to the decision-making process ? The technocrats and bureaucrats are both equally important in their respective spheres ? Certain measures can be taken to solve the conflict between the technocrats and bureaucrats 5.8 KEYWORDS Specialist: A

65% MATCHING BLOCK 237/319 SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

Specialist is generally a person who has special knowledge or skill in a specific field, for example. engineers, physicians, agriculturists, educationists, lawyers, etc.

Generalist: A Generalist is an administrator,

69% MATCHING BLOCK 242/319 SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

who belongs to the managerial class is well versed with rules, regulations, and procedures of administration, and who performs the generalfunctions of an organistation. Parallel Hierarchy:In this type of work arrangement system a specialist, for example, a Director General will be working along with a generalist like Deputy Secretary. Fulton Committee:The Committee was appointed in the UK in 1966 to study the organisation, recruitment, management, and training arrangements for the civil service and to recommend. changes in the context of changed responsibilities of the civil services and the new educational system. Professionalism: Specialised competence or knowledge in a field. Administrative Reforms Commission:The Administrative Reforms Commission is the committee appointed by the Government of India for giving recommendations for reviewing the public administration system of India. The first ARC was established on 5 January 1966. 5.9MODEL QUESTIONS 5.9.1 Long Answer Type 1) Discuss the role of bureaucracy in administration.

79 2) Who are the technocrats? Comment on their role in the administration. 3) What are the suggestions and remedies to overcome the conflict between the technocratsand bureaucrats? 4)

95% MATCHING BLOCK 238/319 W

Discuss the reasons for the controversy between the generalists and specialists in administration 5.9.2Short Answer Type 1) Who are called the Specialists? 2) Who are called the Generalists? 3) Write two reasons why the bureaucrats are more important than the technocrats. 4) Write two reasons why the technocrats are more important than the bureaucrats. 5) Write two reasons for the conflict between the technocrats and bureaucrats 6) How does the Fulton Committee Report define The Specialists and TheGeneralists? 5.10REFERENCES Singh, N.& Sachdeva, P. (1989). Public Administration in India: Theory and Practice. Sterling Publishers. Avasthi & Maheshwari.(1987). Public Administration. Lakshmi Narain Aggarwal.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 239/319 W

Subramanian, Malathi. (1987). Management of Public Administration: Patterns in the Generalist Vs. Specialist). Deputy Publications. 80

Ouriginal by Turnitin

CC VI Block: III Problems of Development Unit – 1 Problems of Development in Developing Countries Structure 1.1 The concept of development 1.2 Who are the developing countries 1.3Developing Countries: Issues and Problems 1.4Conclusion 1.1 Introduction Development is a buzzword in contemporary social science as well as policy dialogues, both at domestic and international levels. This is because the growing international order since the end of Second World War. Before understanding the problems of developing countries, we need to have a concept of development. I would prefer the term "concept", because a fool-proof, all-encompassing and satisfactory definition of development is not possible. For several decades following the Second World War, development was broadly conceived as economic growth. Various scholarships have developed during that period, which emphasised on attaining certain level of economic growth and concomitant indicators. Two of them are particularly worthy to mention. The socialist or Marxist model has emphasised on 'dictatorship of the proletariat' – centralised economic planning, ruthless social and economic engineering under the command of one ruling party, where individual autonomy and voice was seriously circumscribed. The model of development followed by Chinese leadership is the most pertinent example. Among the influential ideas in the non-Marxist world was the "Modernization Theory" – it emphasised on the growth of middle class, "civic culture" which, after attaining a satisfactory level of economic

81 growth, would be allowed to practice democracy, quite akin to capitalist western democracies. This is known as the model of "political development"; however, this model soon came to be criticised for its ethno-centric bias – for uncritically accepting the west as a model, ignoring the socio-cultural situations and realities of the developing countries, many of whom were endowed with ancient civilisations. These types of theories virtually ended up supporting the utterly authoritarian regimes in many developing countries – flouting almost every norms of democracy (Törnquist, 1999). On the other hand, despite being at the contrasting end of ideological pole, the socialist regimes were also equally undemocratic, oppressive and had the same notorious history of human rights violations. Subsequently, the growth-only model was further questioned: growth for whom? Does everybody have access to the fruits of growth? Must growth occur at the expense of justice and human rights? Above all, if minerals are exploited ruthlessly, the earth is polluted without any limits, what are we leaving for our future generations? Development demanded answers to these questions. As a result, many new dimensions were added to development. For explaining the concept of "just development", Clark coined the acronym: DEPENDS approach. In essence, the DEPENDS approach stands for: Development of infrastructure; Economic growth; Poverty alleviation; Equity; Natural resource base protection; Democracy; and Social justice (Clark, 1991: 26-30). This is closely related to development ethics "that accepts human dignity as a priority" (Gasper and Truong 2005: 374). The 'right to development' offered a holistic vision: economic rights must be accompanied by civil, political, social and cultural rights – none of them must be sacrificed (Sengupta 2000). Amartya Sen introduced the idea of capability which would lead development towards freedom that would enable an individual to lead a life he or she "has reasons to value" (Sen 2000: 36-40). This has led to the growth of another sub-field of development studies: Human Development, which by including the issues mentioned above, does add normative substance to development on one hand; and have potentials to make development relevant to many people at the same time. We shall now examine the problems of developing countries in this context. India has followed the path of taking democracy and development together: at the time of independence, it

82 was dismissed by many, but subsequently the wisdom has dawned that democracy saved the country. Objectives This chapter intends to introduce us with one of the most fascinating issues with the contemporary times: development. After the end of the Second World War, particularly when decolonisation occurred in many countries of Asia, Africa and the Latin America, development became a much- discussed issue, both among the academics, practitioners and policy-makers. Various ways and means to understand development were explored. We hope that this chapter would enable us having a comprehensive understanding of development and its problems. Who are the developing countries? A number of countries are known as developing countries. After the Second World War, particularly since decolonisation, many countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America were freed from the colonial rule – at least in formal sense. Generally, they are known as developing countries. There are several ways to classify: during the Cold War, first world countries were known as the advanced industrial countries in the west – mainly Western Europe, North America alongside countries like Japan, Australia and New Zealand who, by and large adhered to capitalist mode of economy. Second World countries belonged to the socialist block led by the Soviet Union. The Third World included the majority of countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America that are marked by abject poverty, deprivation and overall poor quality of life and opportunities. Later on, OECD – the Organisation of Economic Cooperation and Development has classified between global North and South – countries on the south are known as developing countries. In recent times, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) has categorised four types of countries: those having "low human development", "medium human development", "high human development"; and "very high human development" – they are based on the overall quality of living standards (HDR Website 2010). In a

83 word, developing countries constitute a large number of countries in the three continents of Asia, Africa and Latin America. Developing Countries: Issues and Problems The major problems that can be found in developing countries can be grossly subsumed under three categories: influences of colonial history; challenges of economic development; and the pressure of popular aspirations. Influences of Colonial History Most of the developing countries have a long history of colonialism. Colonialism has certainly introduced these states to modernity, although these states have much older societies. Ancient civilisations have developed in the spaces currently known as the Indian subcontinent, China and the Arab world. In many cases, the nature of colonial rule has shaped their post-independence socio- economic and political destiny. The history often serves both as resources and constraints to these countries. In terms of resources, three particular aspects are worthy to mention: market, modern means of communication and education: through them, many old societies got introduced to new world order and their beneficial attributes through colonial rule. The hitherto old societies, often steeped into inertia and stagnation, which had resulted into limited social mobility, lack of education, ill-health, early morbidity, gender discrimination and consequent crippling of human existence. For example, in pre-British India, rural people did hardly venture out of their village in their lifetime, because they did not feel the necessity. Colonial rule had broken this state of inertia: it was essentially accompanied by capitalism which in turn, necessitated the continuous expansion of market. This development brought the secluded and insulated villages and distantly-located communities into the map of market economy. Such exposure has led to significant social and economic mobility. Traditional structures of hierarchy were seriously affected and many of them had

84 simply broken down. In India for example, caste has undergone significant changes through exposure to market forces. Many people from traditionally deprived castes had now started exploring opportunities in the new socio-economic order. In many of these countries, alongside the colonial business groups, indigenous capitalism has developed. The second beneficial consequence was introduction of the modern means of communication, which in turn, carried forward the process of modernity. The railway and road networks, post and telegraph have connected the vast stretches of territory together and galvanised them into one nation of other shared identities such as language or ethnicity. They subsequently, have provided the proverbial bedrock for anti-colonial nationalism. In addition, many of them used these means of communication to explore opportunities in other parts of the world: the migration of Indians (mainly from the oppressed lower castes) from the neighbourhood plantation colonies in Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) to faraway places of Africa, Canada and the Caribbean reflect this tendency. These have led to the cultural dynamism for both the settlers and the indigenous population: the settlers went to the new places with their own cultural attributes such as dress, food habits and festivals; they were again introduced to local life styles and culture. Cultural vitality is also an attribute of development because on one hand, it has the potential to integrate people having various types of beliefs and world-views and pursue common agenda. On the other hand, a broadened world-view is presented before the concerned people, which may unlock opportunities to explore better and diverse visions of life. The third benefit of colonial rule is the introduction of modern system of education; they were often accompanied by colonial languages where modernity was practiced. As a result, the indigenous population received exposure to modern literature, science and medicine – these have helped the future-day nationalist leaders to articulate their visions of an independent nation. It was further bolstered when many educated people from colonial countries received education in the world famous universities: their experiences both with own societies and the greater world have enabled them to contribute immensely to the public life of colonial countries. For example, Gandhi
85 and Nehru have worked and studied abroad: later on, they became the leading figures in India's struggle for independence Ambedkar received education in the United States: he has immensely worked towards the emancipation of the downtrodden in India and was among the key figures in the drafting of the Indian constitution. In addition to all of those factors mentioned above, modern systems of government were introduced in the colonial countries: modern bureaucracies, modern military and the overall administrative system in many areas, such as land revenue, education system, health system and in some cases, modern representative institutions were also the attributes of colonial rule. We however, should eschew glorifying the colonial rules. Above all, they were undemocratic and exploitative by nature. In fact, their ill-effects do far outweigh those perceived benefits. The advent of market forces also disrupted traditional social relations, economic arrangements and above all, knowledge systems. On social front, new means of mobility often resulted in mindless attacks on traditional values, under the colonial rule. A section of elites, having access to education and centres of power, distanced themselves from local population and were quite contemptuous of other fellow country-people. As a reaction, another class developed with rabid traditionalism, refusing to learn from the opportunities of modernity. The colonial administration also followed the "divide and rule" policy – to engage the native population into continuous infighting among themselves. These served the purposes of colonial rule – its longevity, but in the long run, have sown the seeds of perpetual distrust, disorder and conflict, which threaten development and world peace even today, in many areas of the world: South Asia; the Arab world; North and South Korea; and the most part of African continent. Much of the resources are spent on conflict and armaments. In pre-colonial India for example, land and forest was the community property: it did not have any individual ownership. Private ownership to land was introduced, which totally destabilised the existing patterns of livelihood. At the same time, the villagers' and local community's rights to forest for food and fuel wood was curtailed – they were open to large timber merchants – mostly Europeans, who again found the ready market in growing cities, modern transport industries and

86 export. The worst economic condition was the continuous bleeding of country's resources: with heavy tariff and taxation, indigenous industries were not allowed to grow and several impediments were propped up from time to time. For most of the time, traders from only the ruling country were allowed to do business in the respective colonial countries. As a result, free market capitalism did not grow in these colonies; and the socio-economic mobility unleashed by colonialism remained limited. After independence, these countries faced the syndrome of "late development" – characterised by huge pressure of poverty, low productivity, obsolete technology and consequent difficulties to compete in the global market. Many of them remained dependent on the advanced capitalist countries for their economic and security concerns. The traditional knowledge systems which have nourished the older civilisations of developing countries over many centuries were severely disrupted by colonial rule. Such knowledge- systems have grown up over many centuries, based on people's experiences and responses to various circumstances from time to time. Human experiences are the greatest reservoir of knowledge, yet under colonial rule, they were vilified and attacked. Many traditional handicrafts, agricultural practices, medical systems, education methods were simply lost on the onslaught of the homogenising nature of market capitalism. Under the current globalisation regime, there have been renewed appreciation on the value of traditional (or indigenous) knowledge – as reservoir of accumulated experiences, but that is also done with narrow profit maximising perspective: non- western societies of developing countries are now under high risk that their traditional knowledge- base may be pirated and pilfered. Overall, the history and legacy of colonialism has made a profound impact on the developing countries. Although they got introduced to global order and modernity through colonial contacts, they remain the marginal force in this order. Many of their problems – most notably, abject poverty are derived from the long history of colonial rule. Some countries where colonial rule was absent, such as Japan, have flourished on their own and are now among the leading industrial powers.

87 However, time cannot wait by blaming to fortunes and problems that have been inherited historically. At the time of independence, people of a country decide to accept responsibility for its destiny: social, economic, political and overall existential matters. That is the moment when citizenship is formed – this is the price for the long-cherished dream of independence. And it is also the point when democracy matters – people are no more subjects; they are citizens who bear equal worth in an independent socio-political community. Their voice, their preference, their ideas matter in the shaping of their socio-political community: for whose well-being they are responsible. With these normative dimensions, we shall now turn to the next section – challenges of economic development, with this historical context in mind.

Challenges of Economic Development The major problem before the developing world is to achieve rapid economic development, because these countries are afflicted by grinding poverty. Poverty has several manifestations: abject poverty of many people that threatens daily survival, such as lack of food, drinking water and fundamental healthcare. In most of the developing countries however, such abject poverty may not be visible, but many other serious impediments threaten social mobility. Also, this relative prosperity is not guaranteed. Two of the regions – Sub Saharan Africa and South Asia are the poorest regions in the world, where daily survival of many people are continuously under question. Many people in these countries, particularly children, survive on one meal a day and hunger is a stark reality in these countries. They are the regular mal-performers in global hunger index. This has a series of spillover effects: lack of mobility, underdeveloped physique and mental health – all these seriously affect the formation of human capital. As a result, the high density of population is a liability, not any asset for these countries. Poverty leads to weak performances in education, healthcare and also results in several policy failures. For example, population growth is a serious problem in these countries, resulting in severe pressure on already meagre resources and infrastructure; yet, it can only be

Ouriginal by Turnitin

88 arrested with reduced child mortality, better healthcare, job opportunities, spread of education and enhanced consciousness. This is the vicious cycle where all problems are multidimensional and causally related to one another, hence difficult to address methodically. Other parts of developing countries usually do not experience that level of poverty, but many impediments seriously circumscribe the overall human well-being. Much of the prosperity is related to their performances at global markets, particularly exports. When exports suffer, they face serious financial crises, such as Indonesia in 1997. Or recently, the drop of oil prices in global market has seriously affected the Venezuelan economy, where acute food crises lead to nearly ungovernable and anarchical situations. In addition, thanks to the history of various sorts of dictatorial and authoritarian regimes, democracy is weak in many of these countries; hence there are problems in eliciting accountability from the ruling elites, particularly in cases of rampant corruption leading to huge human distress. For example, the recent fire in Amazon forest areas in Brazil is often attributed to the government's intention to hand over forest resources to private corporate bodies, disregarding warnings that it will create severe environmental crises across the globe. In addition, many of these countries, particularly those in Africa and Latin America, such as Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Venezuela, Colombia, Zimbabwe and South Africa – usually have a very high level of violence in daily life. We however, must bear in mind that the other crises such as violence, lack of democracy and accountability; and their various ill-effects are visible in the developing countries in other regions as well. Towards a long-term strategy for development, it is now imperative to give democracy a respectful place. No wonder, the demand for democracy has become louder in developing countries, because people aspire to have better standards of life. The Pressure of Popular Aspirations The challenges to economic development are reinforced by ever-increasing popular aspirations. People in these countries have already been mobilised against the rulers – both colonial and
89 indigenous, with the promise for better standards of life. In addition, they are aware that such standard of life is possible. A section of population in almost every country is now exposed to the global scenario – through personal travel and visits; through access to media of various types; and access to Information and Communication Technology devices. This creates immense pressure on the governments of societies and polities of developing countries, to deliver concrete benefits. For example, the Arab Spring of 2011 was actually articulating the demands for both material betterment and human dignity. As we have seen in the earlier part of this chapter, soon after the Second World War, many newly-independent states have switched over to authoritarian regimes, on the expectations that governance activities will not be affected by the costs of inter-party struggles and electoral competitions. In other words, people had significant faith on their governments. In some places, such as the South-East Asian states, Chile in Latin America has enjoyed relatively high levels of growth and prosperity. India had adopted the path of democracy, but the level of development was far from satisfactory. In most cases however, much of the developing countries ended up with neither democracy, nor development. In many cases, they were supported by the United States. In the 1990s however, there was a fundamental shift. With the collapse of the Soviet Union, it became difficult for countries like the USA to support undemocratic, corrupt regimes across the world, because they faced hostile public opinion domestically. Governments in the developing countries too, were finding repression as increasingly difficult, in the face of popular demands, consciousness on human rights, environmental degradation – all these again added with the force of huge population. As a result, they found switching over to democratic governance as much better an option for survival. In order to formulate sound strategies for development, the already quite prevailing top- down, elite-driven approaches need to be complimented with bottom-up approaches – that will democratise the process of development. Democracy has the effect of establishing the relations of minimum trust. That trust is not about blind or unquestioned faith, rather an understanding on the

90 relations between rulers and the ruled. The latter are aware about the limitations of the former and the political leadership is not deified – hence not much expectations, except at the times of crisis. In addition, corruption survives in many democratic countries. Even in developed democracies, people do not have high expectations from their rulers. Almost everywhere, political leaders are treated with disdain. Yet, despite these, people have an understanding on the limitations of their politicians. When the rulers and leaders are repeatedly questioned, contested, criticised and mocked at, some sort of stability occurs to the political system. Much of the popular discontent melts down with expressions of grievances and discontent; particularly when government can be renewed or changed at every interval. In developing countries too, a functioning democracy can achieve that level of minimum trust – that will offer stability to the regime, necessary for pursuing the goals of development in the face of the volatile nature of ever-rising popular aspirations. Conclusion Development is a multi-dimensional concept, having social, economic, political and cultural implications. Although there are many interpretations to categorise developing countries, there seems to be an overall consensus that the vast numbers of countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America fall into the category of developing countries. This chapter sums up their common features to understand their problems. We follow the categorisation of various international organisations such as the United Nations, OECD to categorise certain countries as developing countries. Generally, a broad consensus merges: countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America, barring a few examples, generally belong to the developing world; in other words, they are known as developing countries. Many schools of thought have emerged after the Second World War to analyse the phenomenon and strategies of development accordingly. Marxist school of thought – the followers of socialist model have emphasised upon social ownership of the means of production. Modernization Theory on the other hand, advocated for strict disciplinary course to ensure the capitalist path of development. However,

91 both of these schools appeared counter-productive after some period of time, because people had neither any voice, nor were included in the scheme of development. At the same time, particularly in developing countries following the path of capitalism, the growth-only vision of development was both counter-productive and problematic, because issues of serious inequalities were neglected. The Indian experiences offered a different path from those models mentioned above, as development was sought to be achieved through the path of development. In the1990s, as the vision of development was broadened and issues like human development were set into agenda, democracy became indispensible for development. Developing countries face a host of problems on the way to achieve development. In most cases, they have to bear the burden of colonial legacy, inherited historically. Colonial rule certainly have introduced them to various attributes of modernity, particularly education and modern means of communication, but that often occurred at the high cost of economic exploitation, disruption of traditional culture, knowledge systems, life-styles and community life. Social divisions often became virtually irreconcilable, which even today leads to various conflicts that threaten the global peace at times. After independence, particularly at contemporary times, developing countries by and large, face the challenge of rapid economic development against many odds; yet home, the pressure from ever-rising aspirations by a huge population, who have experienced hardships for many generations, yet desperate to come out from such suffocating experiences and enjoy better quality of life. Summary ? Since the World War II, development has become an important issue both among the policy makers and academicians alike. ? Various schools have emerged, to formulate the sound strategies of development. ? The socialist regimes, following Marxist school pursued macro-level centralised planned economy, under the leadership of the party.

92 ? Many developing countries pursued capitalist mode of economy, influenced by the Modernization Theory. ? Both of them ignored democracy. ? Since the 1990s, democracy became an agenda for development. ? Human development is an issue in contemporary development – it expands the notion of development. ? The developing countries after decolonisation, faces challenges of historically inherited structural and cultural constraints ? They also face the challenge of rapid economic development. ? People's ever-rising aspirations for better quality of life pose further pressures. ? In the long run, for making development durable, it must go together with democracy. Glossary Arab Spring – an uprising had occurred against the local authorities in Tunisia against police high handedness. However, this incident soon snowballed into a major revolution in Tunisia, resulting into the ouster of its long-ruling dictator and establishment of democracy. The matter did not end there: anti-regime protests erupted in many countries in the Arab world, leading to the fall of dictatorships in Egypt and Libya; and massive restructuring of power relations in countries like Morocco and Jordan, ostensibly acceding to the demands for democracy. This is known as "Arab Spring" – a poetic term, a metaphor – to describe mellowed weather in the desert region. Cold War – the period of high voltage confrontation between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republic (USSR) or Soviet Union; there was no actual outbreak of face-to-face conflict, but intense fear from both the sides were present and it had serious and multi-faceted repercussions on the global society.
93 Decolonisation – after the end of the Second World War, many countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America became independent from colonial rules. In other words, it meant the formal end of colonial rule in these countries. In reality however, many of these countries remained tied up with the global economy, dominated by developed countries. Global Hunger Index (GHI) – " Hunger is usually understood to refer to the distress associated with a lack of sufficient calories...

100% MATCHING BLOCK 240/319 W

The Global Hunger Index (GHI) is a tool designed to comprehensively measure and track hunger at global, regional, and national levels...

calculated each year to assess progress and setbacks in combating hunger.

97% MATCHING BLOCK 241/319 W

The GHI is designed to raise awareness and understanding of the struggle against hunger, provide a way to compare levels of hunger between countries and regions, and call attention to those areas of the world where hunger levels are highest and where the need for additional efforts to eliminate hunger is greatest" (

GHI Website, 2019). Human development – the process of development which addresses fundamental human needs, such as health, education, livelihood issues, life expectancy and more – they all are the indicators of human development. Latin America – countries in central and South America, starting from Mexico in the North. Top-down Approach – where plans of and programmes for development are decided at higher levels, by the elites. People and staff at local level are supposed to obey the orders and implement decisions. This is suitable for large scale, macro-level planning. Bottom-up Approach is opposite to top-down approach. Experiences of people at the grassroots are taken into consideration while formulating development plan and programmes. References Clark, John Democratizing Development: The Role of Voluntary Organizations (London: Earthscan, 1991). Gasper, D. and Thanh-Dan Truong "Deepening Development Ethics: From Economism to Human Development to Human Security", European Journal of Development Research, 17.3 (2005): 372-384. GHI Website (2019) "Global Hunger Index", in: https://www.globalhungerindex.org/about.html (accessed 14 April 2020).

94 HDR Website (2010) http://hdr.undp.org/en/media/HDR_2010_EN_Table1_reprint.pdf (accessed 20 February 2011). Sen, Amartya. Development as Freedom (New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 2000). Sengupta, Arjun. "Realizing the Right to Development", Development and Change 31.3 (2000): 553- 578. Törnquist, Olle. Politics and Development: A Critical Introduction (New Delhi: Sage, 1999). Model Questions The following questions carry marks of Six (06) each: 1. Write brief note on decolonisation. 2. Who are the developing countries? 3. Explain the concept of Human Development. The following questions carry marks of Twelve (12) each: 1. How do the historical legacies of colonialism continue to have impact on developing countries at contemporary times? 2. Explain the major issues and problems of developing world. 3. Point out the relevance of democracy in development. The following questions carry marks of Eighteen (18) each: 1. Explain the evolution of developing world in contemporary global systems. 2. Explain: (a) the DEPENDS approach; (b) Global Hunger Index; and (c) the pressure of popular aspirations to development. 3. Make a critical appraisal of colonialism in developing world.
95 Unit – II Sustainable Development: Meaning Structure 2 Introduction 3 The scope and evolution of sustainable development 4 Conceptualising sustainable development 5 Conclusion Introduction In the previous chapter we have discussed the multidimensional and complex nature of development in academic sense. Among the issues that were discussed, environment has figured prominently. This has led to flourishing of another issue which periodically interrogates the process of development – sustainable development. Not only that, at present the threat to environment is felt every day, as climate change and global warming are the issues that readily comes to mind. The United Nations' World Commission on Environment and Development (WCED) has

100% MATCHING BLOCK 244/319 SA SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

defined "sustainable development" as "development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs" (

quoted in Shrivastava and Berger, 2010: 247). In other words, this approach views development as an all-inclusive project, across time and space; and encompasses the entire planet. On this basis, we shall now discuss the concept of sustainable development: its scope and the way it evolved into a full-fledged academic and policy issue. Sustainable Development: Challenges and Limitations ? Arms race did not end with the cold war. Substantial development resources are spent for armaments 96 ? Emerging power blocks ? In the long run, environment and social justice may not conflict, but in the short run, they may cross swords Sustainable development, we have seen has an all-encompassing nature: it includes almost everything and everybody; and present and future. Yet, Seghezzo (2009) finds the previous WCED definition of sustainable development having some limitations – eventually in the text of European Commission, it came to be articulated as 'people, planet and profit' (later, 'prosperity'). More specifically, the WCED definition as problematic because first, it is anthropocentric: it prioritises upon the satisfaction of human needs and dichotomy between society and environment. Yet, natural calamities like hurricanes, droughts, floods reflect that they cannot be separated. Secondly, emphasis on economic growth may prejudice long-term inter-generational justice, because economy essentially involves cost-benefit analysis which may be ultimately reduced to valuation and maximisation of profits. That would detriment the interests of the future generations. Thirdly, at the time of operations, more than time and space factors, the WCED definition defines 'sustainability indicators...only in economic, environmental, and social terms'; and finally, WCED definition overlooks the personal aspects under the carpet of overall 'human needs' (Seghezzo, 2009: 540- 547). Accordingly, he proposes an alternative conceptual framework: 'Place, Permanence and Persons' – it would allow discussing the issue of development in terms of sustainability. Place refers to physical, geographical and cultural space; permanence 'is not only mere maintenance of present conditions', but also 'changes and improvements'; and 'persons' indicate the individual existence of each human being, which includes his/her philosophical, psychological and religious side. The recognition of one's individual self may constrain the policy-making elites from achieving 'public' utilities at the expense of minorities and citizens (Seghezzo, 2009: 540-551). The concern for sustainable development was felt since the 1970s, when the actual needs and availability of natural resources came to contradict one another, in view of steady growth of

97 human population. Many scholarly works were published since this period and they made significant impact upon scholars, policy-makers and activists. The watershed was the publication of Brundtland Report in 1987, whereupon the WCED made the definition of sustainable development. Since the 1990s, there had been steady progress and sustainable development became an agenda both in academic and policy-making discourse (Shrivastava and Berger, 2010). The Earth Summit was held in 1992 in Rio De Janeiro, Brazil, also known as the Rio summit, which attracted global attention towards the cause of environment. Meanwhile, various researches pointed out the devastating effects on ecology by greenhouse gasses, particularly on climate change. The Stern Committee Report suggested 1-2% of the global production should be earmarked to counter the worst effects of climate change. Large corporations, who control the process of production and consumption, thus human impact on environment; they are the major contributors to global warming. These organisations were urged to change their vision and mission towards the cause of sustainability and environmental responsibility, particularly on the issues of energy usage and waste management (Shrivastava and Berger, 2010). At the same time, several industrial accidents have significantly adverse effects on human lives and overall biology: oil spills, air pollution, chemical accidents and above all, nuclear accidents. These led to the formulation of several principles, which see 'sustainability as a journey, not a destination', for shaping policies, guidelines and course of actions. Between the 1960s and 1980s, a catalogue of principles was formulated, encompassing issues such as biodiversity, human rights and security, poverty eradication, environmental protection, overpopulation, democratic process, awareness and like. In addition, certain industry-specific principles were also adopted. They were 'premised on the idea that each industry has operational practices, resource consumption, waste management, safety technologies, and environmental impact patterns that are common across firms in the industry', designed to 'to integrate technological, financial, environmental, and community elements in the context of industry realities.' Several issues such as water and wastewater management; waste management; energy conservation; forestry; fish, wildlife, vegetation, 98 wetlands; air and visual quality were made part of the sustainability principles (Shrivastava and Berger, 2010: 250-258). Sukhamoy Chakravarty welcomes the discussion on sustainable development for various reasons: first, it creates awareness on the necessity of preserving the environment. Secondly, many developing countries have tendencies to treat environment as a secondary issue, as they are too preoccupied with achieving rapid development and material prosperity. Yet, the justice aspect remains elusive because of the consumption-oriented nature of the contemporary development discourse would not be able to meet the necessities of all people. The fear that natural resources will exhaust are quite real. At the same time, it is not possible to ask every country cut down their growth output, because (Chakravarty, 1991). With this background, we shall proceed to the next section, for a thorough understanding of the concept of sustainable development. Sustainable Development: Concept The account in the previous section indicate the growth of sustainable development as an important issue in academic and policy-making circles, involving scholars, thinkers and practitioners from both natural and social sciences. Conclusion Some of the SDGs are about the rights of people; yet some also expect citizens to take responsibilities positively for realising the vision of SDGs.
99 Glossary Climate Change – refers to the situation where the course of climate becomes erratic and unpredictable across the globe, affecting both developed and developing countries alike. The spread of rapid industrialisation, urbanisation and extraction industries; fast depletion of forest cover; and increasing levels of pollution – particularly in developing countries is attributed to climate change. Global Warming – related to climate change, it is observed that the average temperature of the earth has been increasing steadily and gradually, leading to the melting of icebergs. Often, fear is expressed that this phenomenon may lead to the submergence of many coastal cities in the Asia- Pacific region. Greenhouse gases – '

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 243/319	W

Gases that trap heat in the atmosphere are called greenhouse gases', most notably Carbon Dioxide (CO 2), Methane (CH 4), Nitrous Oxide (N 2O) and Fluorinated gasses, that leads to depletion of ozone layers (EPA, 2019) and contribute to global warming. Air pollution occurs when the air is filled with aerosols and toxic gases. Direct and indirect taxation – direct taxation is the tax earned from income. Indirect taxation occurs from the proceeds on various sales and services, which people use for consumption. The volume certainly increases when people earn more money. Checks and balances – in-built institutional arrangements whereby one arm of the institution keeps eye on the other, so that none of them become too powerful and autocratic. For example, in parliamentary democracies, the legislature controls the executive; judiciary keeps eye both on the executive and legislature; again, the judicial officials are appointed by the legislature and executive. References 100 EPA (2019) https://www.epa.gov/ghgemissions/overview-greenhouse-gases (accessed 9 March 2020) Loubser, R. and C. Steenekamp (2017) 'Democracy, Well-Being, and Happiness: A 10-Nation Study', Journal of Public Affairs, DOI: 10.1002/pa.1646 SDGs Booklet (undated) https://www.undp.org/content/dam/undp/library/corporate/brochure /SDGs_Booklet_Web_En.pdf (accessed 6 March 2020) Seghezzo, Lucas (2009) 'The Five Dimensions of Sustainability', Environmental Politics, 18(4): 539-556 Shrivastava, Paul and Stephanie Berger (2010) 'Sustainability Principles: A Review and Directions', Organization Management Journal, 7(4): 246–261. World Poverty (2020) https://worldpoverty.io/map (accessed 9 March 2020) Sen, Amartya (1999) Inequality Reexamined (New Delhi: Oxford University Press). Sen, Amartya (2000) Development as Freedom (New Delhi: Oxford University Press). Joshi, Natasha (2020) "Why Indian children can't read", in: https://idronline.org/why-indian-children-cant- read/?utm_source=India+Development+Review&utm_ campaign=2f59c1a23e- EMAIL_CAMPAIGN_2019_10_01_10_28_COPY_01 &utm_medium=email& utm_term=0_2be9adb876- 2f59c1a23e-80731243 (accessed 14 March 2020) CDC Report (2016) "Global WASH Fast Facts", in: https://www.cdc.gov/healthywater/global/wash_statistic s.html (accessed 14 March 2020) Chakravarty, Sukhamoy (1991) "Sustainable Development", European Journal of Development Research, 3(1): 67-77.

101 Unit – III Sustainable Development: Features and Significance Structure: 6 Introduction 7 Objectives 8 Features and Significance: Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) 9 Conclusion Introduction In the previous chapter we have discussed a rather new issue that periodically interrogates the process of development – sustainable development. Not only that, at present the threat to environment is felt every day, such as the depletion of natural resources; massive pollution of air, water and soil; climate change and global warming, sustainable development is a timely and relevant issue. At present, the entire world is ravaged by a health crisis of unprecedented level, which once again questions the conventional notion and paradigms of development. The major risk factors on environment are: depletion of natural resources; heavy accumulation of toxic wastes – particularly those generated from chemical and nuclear plants; poisonous substances added to our food; and threat of climatic changes (Keane, 1994: 247-248). However, as we have seen in the last chapter, an "environment-only" understanding of sustainable development is clearly problematic and deficient, because it tends to neglect the related socio- economic and political issues. Yet, if those issues are neglected, sustainable development forever, would remain on paper – it will never come to fruition. The United Nations' World Commission on Environment and Development (WCED) has defined "sustainable development" as "development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs" ( quoted in Shrivastava and Berger, 2010: 247). In other words, this approach views

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 245/319	SA	SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

102 development as an all-inclusive project, across time and space; and encompasses the entire planet. On this basis, we shall now discuss the features and significance of sustainable development: it deepens our idea of development with a broad and inclusive approach. It is best articulated in the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) as identified by the United Nations (SDGs Booklet undated) – a catalogue of wide range of issues that intends to make development truly humane and sustainable. Objectives We already have noted the emergence of sustainable development as a core issue in global order, policy-making and development practices have brought environment as the subject of central importance. However, after initial discussions, it gradually an dawned upon everyone concerned, that as environment-only understanding of sustainable development is seriously incomplete, because environment cannot be detached from its socio-economic and cultural contexts. The United Nations has formulated a catalogue of priority issues which has to be attained by the year of 2030. They are known as "Sustainable Development Goals" (SDGs). That catalogue again, helps us understand the features and significance of sustainable development. This chapter is a small effort towards that end. Sustainable Development: Features and Significance The concern for sustainable development was felt since the 1970s, when the actual needs and availability of natural resources came to contradict one another, in view of steady growth of human population. Many scholarly works were published since this period and they made significant impact upon scholars, policy-makers and activists. The watershed was the publication of Brundtland Report in 1987, whereupon the WCED made the definition of sustainable development. Since the 1990s, there had been steady progress and sustainable development became an agenda both in academic and policy-making discourse (Shrivastava and Berger, 2010). The Earth Summit was held in 1992 in

103 Rio De Janeiro, Brazil, also known as the Rio summit, which attracted global attention towards the cause of environment. At the same time, several industrial accidents have significantly adverse effects on human lives and overall biology: oil spills, air pollution, chemical accidents and above all, nuclear accidents. These led to the formulation of several principles, which see 'sustainability as a journey, not a destination', for shaping policies, guidelines and course of actions. Between the 1960s and 1980s, a catalogue of principles was formulated, encompassing issues such as biodiversity, human rights and security, poverty eradication, environmental protection, overpopulation, democratic process, awareness and like. In addition, certain industry-specific principles were also adopted. They were 'premised on the idea that each industry has operational practices, resource consumption, waste management, safety technologies, and environmental impact patterns that are common across firms in the industry', designed to 'to integrate technological, financial, environmental, and community elements in the context of industry realities.' Several issues such as water and wastewater management; waste management; energy conservation; forestry; fish, wildlife, vegetation, wetlands; air and visual quality were made part of the sustainability principles (Shrivastava and Berger, 2010: 250-258). With this background, we shall proceed to the next section, where SDGs provide a useful benchmark for a thorough understanding of the issue of sustainable development. The features and significance of sustainable development should be understood in terms of those goals, because they cover a broad range of issues and priorities, which enlarge the meaning of sustainable development. From the catalogue below, we shall find that some of the SDGs are about the rights of people; yet some also expect citizens to take responsibilities positively for realising the vision of SDGs. Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) In the year of 2015, the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) were adopted by all members of the United Nations. SDGs are built upon the previous Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), adopted 104 in the year of 2000 by 189 world leaders. SDGs have adopted a 17-point agenda,

80%	MATCHING BLOCK 246/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

to be achieved by the year of 2030 (SDGs Booklet, undated): 1. No poverty 2. Zero hunger 3. Good health and well-being 4. Quality education 5. Gender equality 6. Clean water and sanitation 7. Affordable and clean energy 8. Decent work and economic growth 9. Industry, innovation and infrastructure 10. Reduced inequalities 11. Sustainable cities and communities 12. Responsible consumption and production 13. Climate action 14. Life below water 15. Life on land 16. Peace, justice and strong institutions 17. Partnership for the Goals

The goals stated above broadly summarise the visions and scope of sustainable development. At the same time, they also point the feature and significance of sustainable development. We shall now briefly discuss below of their implications, with a stock-taking – reference to their current state of affairs. No Poverty

105 Poverty is the major source of human misery. It seriously deprives human beings and communities of capability to lead the life in their own ways – the life they believe to be decent. In the year of 2019, around 25 percent of the global population suffer from poverty. At present, they are more than 602,880,000 in number and some of the people suffer from abject poverty, surviving on $ 1.90 a day (World Poverty, 2020). Zero Hunger Hunger is curse, hunger is dehumanisation. It is an indicator of abject poverty. Yet, for many people in the world, hunger is a reality. Many children go to bed on empty stomach. Hunger robs human beings of their fundamental capacities, simply because the body and mind cannot work without food. In the developing world, particularly two regions have sizeable number of people who suffer from extreme hunger. Hunger leads to malnutrition, which again is the cause for many physical and psychological deficiencies. Maternal malnutrition may cause life-long deficiencies for the child that occurred at the time of birth. In recent times, the rights-based approaches to development make it imperative upon the political community, particularly the state to eradicate poverty and hunger. There have been many strategies to combat hunger. In India, many states have started mid-day meal programmes, which despite limited reach and success; have salutary effects on reducing malnutrition and retaining the children at school. In the year of 2013, the Government of India passed the Right to Food Act, after serious reprimand from the Supreme Court of India. It is now integrated with the constitutional right to life. Good Health and Well-Being For having a productive, meaningful and self-sufficient life, good health – both physical and psychological, is necessary. Healthy and secure environment, such as access to safe water-resources and good quality of air, nutritious food, opportunities for games, sports, social relations and other recreation does immensely contribute towards good health. Simultaneously it is necessary that

106 citizens are made aware about various guidance on health issues both under normal and emergency circumstances: under the latter, it is necessary to provide instant health tips, such as during the COVID-19 epidemic, there had been constant propaganda to maintain social distance, cleanliness and personal hygiene; under normal circumstances, long-term planning needs to be evolved: for example, health education must be made compulsory at school levels, for creating a health- conscious population. At the same time, whereas we cannot ignore the broader social context, it is also true that the individual has great responsibility for maintaining a sound health for him or herself. In broader social sense, well-being is related to human being's happiness, optimism and overall satisfaction with life (Loubser and Steenekamp 2017: 2). Well-being however, is an overwhelmingly subjective concept, often related to individual preferences, experiences and temperaments, but good health is certainly a vital pathway to achieve well-being. Quality Education Throughout the developing world, the necessity of quality education is felt increasingly. Education has twosome beneficial effects: it equips an individual with technical and psychological skills necessary for life on one hand; and on the other, society gets a pool of educated workforce, which builds up its reserve of human resources. As Amartya Sen argues, China's phenomenal success in global economy over last four decades can be attributed to its excellent quality of school education (Sen, 2000). The absence of quality education in India is pointed out in a recent report, that says only 16% of Grade I children can read textbooks of their grade – written in their mother tongue – the language in which they speak and communicate. It happens due to poor quality of teaching in government schools and the lack of representation from the marginalised section in the educational decision-making process (Joshi, 2020). In fact, education without quality is virtually no education, because children virtually learn nothing at schools; and such education becomes a monotonous,

107 soul-tiring exercise and often creates an unhealthy distance between people who were successful in receiving education and those who have not. For children from poor socio-economic background, lack of quality education means sheer wastage of time, both for themselves and their family, which can rather be utilised for other 'productive' pursuits such as joining the labour market, often unskilled. Quality education, on the other hand, would help the objectives of education reach maximum number of people and lead to significant socio-economic development. Gender Equality Gender inequality is inbuilt into many societies, both in psychological and structural sense. Psychologically, cultural traditions, practices have taught many people that men and women are not equal in capabilities; that women are less capable and rational than men and thus, susceptible to the call of emotions. Their roles are limited in home making and various domestic chores. Structurally, rules, religious codes of conduct have earmarked a subordinate position for women in many societies over centuries. Most of these ideas have however, proven to be based on wrong and misguided premises. Gender equality is therefore an agenda for sustainable development, because of its inclusive and all-round nature. In addition, various development experiences have shown that a society develops when its female members experience greater independence, empowerment and opportunities for decision-making, because they undertake greater responsibilities for family, particularly the next and upcoming generation. For example, women's massive participation in Self Help Groups in many states of India has resulted into their empowerment, improvement in family status and overall reduction in poverty (Ghosh, 2016). Clean Water and Sanitation Health is the fundamental key to well-being, because a sick body struggling with illness and health deficiency leads to significant mental depression and loss of productive capacity. A report finds that globally, 780 million people do not have access to clean (or safe) water source; and 2.5 billion people

108 lack standard sanitation facilities (CDC Report, 2016). Much of health hazards occur due to lack of access to clean water and sanitation facilities. Many diseases are essentially water-borne; and unhealthy sanitation facilities like open defecation do not only spread diseases and create ugly sight, they are also humiliating, because ones fundamental privacy is violated. It follows that if water and sanitation facilities are improved, there would be much improvement in physical and mental health of people. At the same time, people also have responsibilities in keeping their surroundings clean. In most parts of the country, it is quite a common sight that wastes, particularly plastic wastes are littered all around; not only are they non-biodegradable, they also contribute to the chocking of drainage system and natural course of water bodies; and that way, it threatens the aquatic creatures. Affordable and Clean Energy Since beginning, energy is the motor of human civilisation. As human civilisation becomes increasingly complex, our dependence upon energy multiplies. However, the production of energy often involves substantial monetary and environmental costs. In monetary sense, many people still do not have access to electricity and cooking gas. Lack of access to electric power substantially impedes their mobility: much of their time and energy is wasted or lies unproductive. For example, without electricity, their night time works and leisure gets affected. When cooking gas is not available, people have to depend upon wood, charcoal and other inflammable objects, which expose them to significant domestic pollution and health risks. At the same time, fossil fuels such as coal and petroleum are counted as the most cheap and efficient sources of energy, yet they generate significant air pollution and contribute to global warming and quick exhaustion of natural resources. Decent Work and Economic Growth Every human being needs to earn money, both for physical survival and livelihood as well as the psychological needs such as honour, prestige, social recognition and other aspects of self-fulfilment.

109 Engagement with work enables one to earn money and productive use of time and energy; yet it is a fact that many people have to put up with dehumanised and humiliating work situations, such as insults, exploitation, harassments of various types and under-payment. Decent work implies absence of these incivilities and just, healthy working conditions where people will be motivated to participate in the productive system of the country or community. At the same time, people who are fortunate to have decent work, need to honour their social commitments that are associated with their roles at workplace. Economic growth is necessary for a country, because in addition of generating prosperity for the society, will increase job opportunities and accordingly, would strengthen the workers' position at workplace. Economic growth and decent works are complimentary for one another. Industry, Innovation and Infrastructure Jobs, livelihood and steady economic growth at modern times can be achieved with the growth of industry. Industries generate employment and primarily, they are responsible for producing goods for society, which contribute towards raising the overall standards of life. In addition, industries are big source of revenue for the government: through taxation, a huge amount of money is earned by the government, who again has another source of revenue from the earnings of the workers and employees of the industries – both through direct and indirect taxation. For survival, industries must invest on research and development. That would enable them upgrade their produce, launch new products, search new markets and various other activities for consumer satisfaction and maximising profits. In addition, as the labour and environmental protocols have become quite stringent; and customers much more aware, it is a challenge for industries to behave in socially and environmentally responsible manner, such as respecting flora and fauna; biodiversity; air and water quality; child and human rights; and many other principles of fair trade. In other words, for their survival and credibility, industries must invest on innovation, that comes from research and development.
110 Industries, research, development and innovation require the right infrastructure. The physical infrastructures include excellent communication facilities; availability of electricity and power; and sources of safe water. Social infrastructure includes various types of amenities, such as access to education and healthcare facilities; entertainment, recreation and socialisation facilities for people involved with industries. Reduced Inequalities Any 'normative theory of social arrangements' demands equality of something: primary goods, utility, rights, equal treatment – necessary to have a good society and good quality of life. Again, individual liabilities/wealth; natural and social environment; physical ability or disability leads to relative advantages or disadvantages and breeds inequalities, where nobody have any control (Sen, 1999: 12-20). Equality is the greatest impulse for democratic way of living. Equalities have legal, social, economic and political dimensions. Yet, for all practical reasons, we cannot have all equalities together. It is therefore necessary to achieve those equalities where human beings and society have some control. Modern democracies are therefore founded on the principle that in social, political and legal sense, all individuals should be held equal. In economic sense, equality of conditions cannot be guaranteed, but equality of opportunities must prevail. Sustainable Cities and Communities Urbanisation is inevitable with the development of human civilisation. Yet, cities must be inclusive: both rich and poor residents must have access to basic social amenities like clean environment; adequate housing and safe water; decent level of education, healthcare and communication; and above all, just treatment. All citizens must have minimal comfort zones: opportunities for community formation and participation, where they would be able to interact and communicate

111 with the like-minded people and share their joys, sorrows, plans and problems which would offer them the psychological space to overcome the stress that arises from modern living. Responsible Consumption and Production Capitalist system of economy, which prevails at present and no immediate possibilities of its discontinuance are visible. Capitalism is essentially based on production and consumption of goods – that keeps the market going. Yet, it is necessary to behave responsibly: both citizens and firms needs to ensure that the production and consumption process does not damage environment; violate workers' or children's rights; and they are based on the principles of equity and sustainability. Climate Action Erratic climatic conditions are reality of present day global order. Climates have become much more unpredictable at recent times. Added to this is global warming, which contributes to the melting of icebergs in the North Pole. If the current trend continues, scientists fear that many coastal cities on the Asia-Pacific area may be submerged by the rising sea levels. This requires adequate actions and measures to minimise the damage from climatic changes; achieve maximum certainty on climate issues. Such actions need to be undertaken both at global and local level. Life below Water For quite some time, we are conscious on air and water pollution, as well as biodiversity. However, we have now woken up to another environmental menace: pollution in river and sea beds, which significantly threaten aquatic creatures, many of whom are facing extinction. In addition of shipwreck, accidents such as oil leakage and spills; dumping of plastics on river and seas; and indiscriminate large-scale fishing does significantly threaten the life below water. Only recently we have started being sensitive about it, but the problem has become menacingly severe. Many aquatic

112 creatures consume those plastic and chemical wastes as food; and are also exposed to the other dangerous ill-effects of those wastes. Life on Land This issue is quite familiar to the sustainable development reader, because the discourse on sustainable development started with "life on land" – the way living beings are influenced by the environment that is visible: soil, water and air. With the growth of industrialisation, urbanisation, migration and indiscriminate disposal of toxic wastes, biodiversity is under severe threat as many plants, insects and animals face extinction. This may cause severe ecological imbalance. Peace, Justice and Strong Institutions Everlasting and durable peace can be achieved only by ensuring justice, where maximum possible reasonable claims will be accommodated: any deviation from this principle must be justified with reason. That will generate human confidence on society as a whole. Again, it is also necessary to establish strong institutions: social, political and economic. Institutions establish the proverbial "rules of the game" where everybody under equal circumstances would be subjected under same catalogue of rules and regulations. Accordingly, rational people would recast their behaviour in accordance with the established rules. Rules and justice are designed to manage the affairs of collectivity smoothly. It follows that for establishing justice convincingly, a sincere goodwill is necessary, but not enough: goodwill is very much dependent on human dispositions that vary from person to person. It would need strong institutions based on checks and balances, where everybody will be bound by conduct and rules, so that personal choices do not come in the way of proper administration of justice. Partnership for the Goals

113 All the efforts above are not individual-centric: it needs concerted efforts by governments, media, civil society, non-governmental organisations, business together to meet the challenges and realise the visions of SDGs – both locally and globally. As social beings, it is necessary to understand that everything valuable in life is not detached from its social context. True, individual rights, privacy and agency are important, but they too are respected and recognised because of their overall social acceptance and resonance. In other words, our sense of rights, privacy and agency are important because it gains social recognition. It follows that our existence is secure because of our partnership with the greater society and community. At the same time, societies also cannot afford to remain disconnected. Hence, various societies and states enter into different types of partnerships to realise the common goals of global peace and prosperity – broadly defined. Conclusion Sustainable development has arisen as a critique of conventional understanding of development; yet it also added new dimension to the issue of development, by placing it in the broader socio- economic and political context. Initially, the discourse of sustainable development focused on major environmental crises of industrial civilisation: depletion of natural resources; pollution of air, water and soil; and climate change. Subsequently, such an "environment-only" understanding appeared to be problematic; hence, attention was turned on broader socio-economic and political issues, to complete the agenda of sustainable development. The United Nations adopted "Sustainable Development Goals" (SDGs) in the year of 2015, to be attended by the year of 2030. SDGs, phrased in a very catchy terms, does aptly sum up the features and significance of sustainable development: "No poverty; Zero hunger; Good health and well-being; Quality education; Gender equality; Clean water and sanitation; Affordable and clean energy; Decent work and economic growth; Industry, innovation and infrastructure; Reduced inequalities; Sustainable cities and communities; Responsible consumption and production; Climate 114 action; Life below water; Life on land; Peace, justice and strong institutions; Partnership for the Goals".

90% MATCHING BLOCK 249/319 SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

The catalogue above aptly reflects the present meaning of sustainable development. Conclusion ? Sustainable development as a critique of the conventional notions of development ? Yet, it has enriched the understanding of development ? Sustainable development has initially focused on environmental degradation ? Yet, the environment-centric understanding of sustainable development is incomplete ? The "Sustainable Development Goals" (SDGs), as formulated by the United Nations, provides a useful benchmark to have a comprehensive understanding of sustainable development Glossary Agency – the capacity to define one's priorities and act upon it. Air pollution occurs when the air is filled with aerosols and toxic gases. Bio-degradable – living beings and materials which does decompose naturally; the static and non- living beings, such as plastic, do not decompose into nature – they remain a foreign element and unless used properly, become burdens on the environment. Checks and balances – in-built institutional arrangements whereby one arm of the institution keeps eye on the other, so that none of them become too powerful and autocratic. For example, in parliamentary democracies, the legislature controls the executive; judiciary keeps eye both on the executive and legislature; again, the judicial officials are appointed by the legislature and executive. Climate Change – refers to the situation where the course of climate becomes erratic and unpredictable across the globe, affecting both developed and developing countries alike. The spread of rapid industrialisation, urbanisation and extraction industries; fast depletion of forest cover; and increasing levels of pollution – particularly in developing countries is attributed to climate change. 115 Community – in original sense, community refers to close contact between people, arising from their living together and having face-to-face relations. In other words, the term community arises from communication. The definition/concept is now much enlarged, as the means of communication has enhanced significantly: human beings get connected in a number of ways: electronic media, social media and son on; and, on a number of issues: faith, religion, region, language, hobbies – the catalogue is endless. Direct and indirect taxation – direct taxation is the tax earned from income. Indirect taxation occurs from the proceeds on various sales and services, which people use for consumption. The volume certainly increases when people earn more money. Global Warming – related to climate change, it is observed that the average temperature of the earth has been increasing steadily and gradually, leading to the melting of icebergs. Often, fear is expressed that this phenomenon may lead to the submergence of many coastal cities in the Asia- Pacific region. Greenhouse gases – '

100% MATCHING BLOCK 247/319 W

Gases that trap heat in the atmosphere are called greenhouse gases', most notably Carbon Dioxide (CO 2), Methane (CH 4), Nitrous Oxide (N 2O) and Fluorinated gasses, that leads to depletion of ozone layers (EPA, 2019) and contribute to global warming. References Ghosh, Sujay. "Democracy and Human Development: Recent Legislation in India", Development Policy Review, 34.4 (2016): 539-561. Loubser, R. and C. Steenekamp. "Democracy, Well-Being, and Happiness: A 10-Nation Study", Journal of Public Affairs, (2017) DOI: 10.1002/pa.1646 SDGs Booklet (undated) https://www.undp.org/content/dam/undp/library/corporate/brochure /SDGs_Booklet_Web_En.pdf (accessed 6 March 2020)

Ouriginal by Turnitin

116 Shrivastava, Paul and Stephanie Berger. “Sustainability Principles: A Review and Directions”, Organization Management Journal, 7.4 (2010): 246–261. World Poverty (2020) https://worldpoverty.io/map (accessed 9 March 2020) Sen, Amartya. Inequality Reexamined (New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 1999). Sen, Amartya. Development as Freedom (New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 2000). Joshi, Natasha. (2020) “Why Indian children can't read”, in: https://idronline.org/why-indian-children- cant-read/?utm_source=India+Development+Review& utm_campaign=2f59c1a23e- EMAIL_CAMPAIGN_2019_10_01_10_28_COPY_01&utm_medium=email& utm_term=0_2be9adb 876-2f59c1a23e-80731243 (accessed 14 March 2020) CDC Report (2016) “Global WASH Fast Facts”, in: https://www.cdc.gov/healthywater/global/wash_statistics.html (accessed 14 March 2020) Keane, John (1994) “Democracy and the Media- Without Foundations”, in David Held (ed.) Prospects for Democracy: North, South, East, West (Cambridge: Polity), pp. 235-253 Model Questions The following questions carry marks of Six (06) each: 4. Initially, what were the major concerns of sustainable development? 5. What was the background for formulating the SDGs? 6. Explain the concept of Community. The following questions carry marks of Twelve (12) each: 4. How sustainable development offer critique to the conventional notions of development? 5. Explain how poverty and hunger are important issues in the discourse of sustainable development. 6. Point out the political dimensions in sustainable development. The following questions carry marks of Eighteen (18) each: 4. Explain how do the SDGs articulate the features and significance of sustainable development? 5. Explain the necessities of: (a) strong institutions; (b) checks and balances; and (c) the partnerships in achieving sustainable development.

117 6. Evaluate the complete catalogue of SDGs. Unit – IV Sustainable Development: Select Case Studies Structure: 10 Introduction 11 Cases of global dimension 12 Cases of local significance 13 Conclusion Introduction In the previous chapters we have first discussed the multidimensional and complex nature of development in academic sense. Then we have also discussed the concept and features of sustainable development in detail. In this section, we shall discuss how sustainable development is relevant to society – particularly for those majority of people who are not regularly in touch with the academic world of studies and research, but who from their lived experiences, from their reflection on life, livelihood and survival issues, have significantly enriched the concept of sustainable development. I shall mention here five cases – all from various parts of India. The first three have global implications – they have been discussed in various international forums over many years, both in academic and policy making circles. The next two have taken place in various places of West Bengal. All these issues will reflect another point: it is true that they have started being articulated from the 1970s, but they have heavily drawn resources from local history, geography, culture and accumulated experiences, than the theories of sustainable development. It follows that even before

118 the issue of sustainable development was articulated and framed at policy-making and academic circles, the spirit of sustainability was ingrained among people. In these cases, we will find that they are very much related with the daily survival and well-being of the local community, who have undertaken pains to protect their life, livelihood and environment. Objectives In the previous two chapters, we have studied various theoretical dimensions of sustainable development. However, so far we have not emphasised that sustainable development is an issue that touches the life of ordinary people, it is part of their existence. In this chapter, we shall present five case studies: three at national level with clear global dimensions; and two at state level. There we shall find that people’s creative engagement with nature and livelihood has extended the meaning of sustainable development comprehensively. Cases of Global Dimensions In this section, we shall discuss three movements in various parts of India that have captured global attention and added various meanings to the concept of sustainable development. As much as possible, we shall follow the pattern developed by a lead scholar who has documented the particular cases, for having the maximum information and a ground-level understanding of the cases – that will be our text-level reading. This however, does not prevent us to draw reference from other works. Narmada Bachao Andolan Narmada Bachao Andolan (NBA) is an environmental movement that soon acquired global significance. The movement has been succinctly documented by Smita Narula (2008). The river of Narmada traverses through three states: Gujarat, Madhya Pradesh and Maharshtra. In the year of 1978, the Indian Government started working towards “Narmada Valley Development Project” – an

119 ambitious programme to build 30 large, 135 medium and 3,000 small dams, with promises to generate hydroelectric power over the entire region; irrigate over six million hectares of land; and providing potable water to around 40 million of people. However, such appeal for a "common good" also had severe costs on human ecology and civilisation. The project was sanctioned by the Narmada Water Disputes Tribunal that was set up in 1969: interestingly, no social or environmental scientist was part of that tribunal. In Gujarat, it is known as "Sardar Sarovar Project" (SSP), whereby several people, mainly from the tribal community who have lived in the area for centuries, faced the spectre of being displaced. SSP's plan to erect a 455-feet high water reservoir threatened a massive ecological damage: about 37,000 villages feared submergence in three states, which included the entire biodiversity in the area. The In Gujarat, a "land for land" deal was proposed, but it worked to the advantage of people having land titles: thus recognised as "legal landowners"; many poor households and tribal communities, on the other hand did not have land ownership records. In addition, not adequate land was available for resettlement; there were also difficulties in getting psychologically adjusted with local communities in new areas; and amenities were substandard. Many people eventually returned to their original homes; and found some of them in submerged condition. In 1985, the World Bank agreed to finance the project; and stepped in as soon s the Tribunal approved the project; without any consultation with the affected communities. This added an international dimension to the issue, because many foreign actors got involved; the resistance attracted attention from the international community. The World Bank was expected to formulate policies in approving loans that must include ensuring the continuation of prevailing standard of living for displaced people; and also take into account the ecological costs. In practice, that did not happen. In protest, local opponents, people from academic, scientific and cultural worlds as well as the activists from various civil society organisations (CSOs) formed a joint forum: the Narmada
120 Bachao Andolan (NBA) – set up in 8 March 1988: the International Women's Day. Protest groups in all three states had drawn the support of people hailing from a variety of backgrounds, who were affected by the Project: students, youth groups, social activists, Indian NGOs, international NGOs and transnational networks. Prominent social activists like Medha Patkar took lead in organising the protests. The dam was completely opposed in Maharashtra and Madhya Pradesh as well. In Gujarat, NBA contested government's claims of providing water to drought-prone, arid Kutch and Saurashtra region: instead, the political and economic elites of central Gujarat were likely to be the major beneficiary. NBA adopted a two-prong strategy for its struggle: nationally, it opposed big dams and proposed alternatives like decentralised "water harvesting" (Narula, 2008: 352). When the project had finally started, it "operated simultaneously at the grassroots, national and international levels" (Narula, 2008: 359). They started with Gandhian methods: peaceful marches and protests; refusing paying taxes; denying entry of government officials except teachers and doctors; knowledge gathering; contesting governmental claims (such as, instead of 7,000 families as claimed by the government on SSP, 100,000 families risked displacement); "jal samarpan" (in English, "surrender to water") – refusing to move away when rising rivers have started inundating. In retaliation, the government unleashed severe brutality and police violence. The slogan that was raised during this period – "Vikas chahiye, vinash nehin" (Narula, 2008: 363), sums up the spirit of sustainable development: we want development, not destruction. At global level, social activist Medha Patkar, leading the movement visited the World Bank officials in Washington in 1989 and raised questions on the Bank's accountability on getting involved in a project of such scale that entails severe human costs. A Japanese NGO – Friends of the Earth conducted a field visit in the area and raised the issue in a Symposium in Tokyo, which attracted global attention. Within a few days, Japan's Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund had withdrawn from the Project; and the Japanese Parliament pressurised upon the World Bank to withdraw. The World Bank was on the horns of dilemma: on one hand, it has committed a huge investment; on the

121 other hand, the human and ecological costs were too obvious to ignore. Subsequently, an independent Commission was set up, which recommended the World Bank's withdrawal; as a result, the World Bank had withdrawn in 1993. The movement activists consider this as a "milestone" (Narula, 2008: 353), but that also ended the government of India's accountability to the global community. The movement gradually lost its international appeal. After a series of judicial battles, the Supreme Court asked the government to settle the matter. NBA thus clearly extends the case for sustainability: people from both the poor and middle- class background have participated in a bog way. In addition, the involvement of socially-sensitive intellectuals has taken the issue to a global level. It is true that the World Bank's withdrawal had legally exonerated the Government of India from any accountability at international level, but the World Bank's engagement with such a thorny issue have made them aware of global public opinion on environment and livelihood issues; and thus prepared them towards a new regime of accountability. As a result, it is mandatory for every industrial project – globally or nationally, to have social and environmental clearance. Chipko Andolan Alongside the NBA, Chipko Andolan is one of the greatest environmental movements in India, with massive participation by women, on the issues of environmental protection, livelihood and culture. It started in the hill regions of Uttar Pradesh, now carved out as a separate state – Uttarakhand. Though it was part of the undivided Uttar Pradesh, for the sake of our discussion, we shall describe the place as Uttarakhand. Nested on the lap of the Himalayas, It has three regions: Tehri, Pauri and Kumayun. Prominent social scientist Ramachandra Guha has recorded the Chipco movement in detail. Various local circumstances having serious socio-economic and environmental implications can be found in the growth of Chipco movement. There was a devastating flood in the area in 1970, which subsequently provided as the empirical foundation for the movement. In the Alakananda valley,

122 that flood wreaked havoc: land, paddy fields, bridges, roads and tourist buses – all were destroyed in huge quantity. Later, people in the affected areas, particularly the villagers understood that massive erosion of forest cover had led to the damage, because the open space provided easy expanse for the river. Organisations like Dashauli Gram Swarajya Sangh (DGSS), formed in the mid-1960s for generating employment to local youths, stepped in to generate awareness among local population. DGSS was engaged in producing resin, turpentine, agricultural implements and selling medicinal herbs in meagre ways. In 1973, they requested the forest department "for an allotment of ash trees" to produce "agricultural implements"; the forest department did not honour the request; instead allotted the trees to a large company. This has resulted in the organising of local youth, who, under the leadership of DGSS held "several meetings in Mandal and Gopeshwar to discuss possible action" (Guha, 2002: 427). They thought about direct action methods like burning resin and timber depots; or, blocking the movement of trucks. At this point, a village headman, Alam Singh Bist proposed about embracing the trees – this act led to coining the word "Chipco" (to hug or embrace). The forest authorities and the company tried to negotiate, offered some compromise, but the movement continued. In Reni forest near Joshimath, Pauri Garhwal, about 2000 trees were earmarked for felling, scheduled towards the end of March 1974. GSS workers contacted the village authorities – the village pramukh Govind Singh Rawat, from the Communist Party of India; meetings remembered the devastation of the 1970 flood. Village women adopted the Chipco technique and college students in Gopeshwar threatened to join them. The forest officials, instead of any honest discussion, were misleading the villagers and making way for the companies to surreptitiously fell the trees. Women in Reni village came forward, stopped the contractors; the latter abused and threatened them, but they refused to leave. "When the women refused to budge, the men were eventually forced to retire" (Guha, 2002: 429). These events had also shaken the central government: instead of taking it as a tussle between villagers and contractors, it was seen in the perspective of peasant movements, where

123 people were protecting their sources of livelihood from state's encroachment. Also, the government started reviewing its policies to grant permissions to large paper mills whose raw materials were sourced from forests. At the same time, Chipco movement started spreading in The Kumayun region which witnessed massive landslide in 1977 in Tawagat – "a village situated close to the India-Nepal Border" (Guha, 2002: 432). The movement here was led by Uttarakhand Sangharsh Vahini (USV). The government unleashed massive police repression as well as anti-social elements to quell the movement; on the other hand, 5,000 and 6,000 chir trees in two were earmarked for felling. USV demanded a complete ban on the export of raw materials from the area. Once again, the Chipco method was adopted. Their sustained pressure finally led to the cancellation of these programmes. The Tehri region also witnessed devastating flood in 1978; and where 2500 trees were earmarked for felling. Activists bandaged the wounded/cut areas of the trees. In a word, the entire Uttarakhand region was then engulfed by Chipco movements. Finally, there were two "moral contents" of Chipco movement: one, the labourers who came to cut the trees, but abandoned by their contractors, were fed and taken care by the local population. They were sent back to their homes in the neighbouring Himachal Pradesh after the labour commissioner arrived. Secondly, the movement did not even allow processing the timber that was cut before the movement started. It was allowed only after the authorities recognised their demands that local population must have the timber rights first. In terms of global reach, Chipco movement was not as large in scale as the NBA, but the issues it raised are equally powerful. The movement has shown how ecological and geo-climatic issues are related to local well-being and livelihood. In the history of environment movements, both in India and the world in general, Chipco movement occupies a space, with the message that there is no conflict between environment and human beings, unless greed takes the place of need. Self Employed Women's Association (SEWA) SEWA is a movement of a different type, comprised by women. It started as a labour union in 1972, initially based in Ahmedabad. It was comprised of women: "vegetable vendors, bidi (small Indian 124 cigarette) rollers, head-loaders and paper trash collectors – people who work for meagre wages, are highly vulnerable to labour market fluctuations and are the poorest of the poor" (Sommer, 2001: 56). In India, 92 percent of employment occurs in the informal sector, but they contribute to around 63 percent of gross domestic product. In the early 1980s, street vendors in Ahmedabad faced rampant evictions and extortion, both by police and municipal authorities. SEWA organised them; and in the methods of cooperative activities, led a judicial battle. Finally, it was successful in securing vendors' rights. SEWA's founder – Ela Bhatt became a recognised international figure; as she attended several international conferences and conventions to champion the cause of street vendors. Later on, in 1996, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) "voted for a worldwide convention to accord them full rights as workers" (Sommer, 2001: 66). Many countries emulated the SEWA model subsequently. Later on, SEWA expanded its activities to rural areas; it took a two-prong strategy for empowering women: in addition of protecting labour union rights, the other area where SEWA worked was income-generation. Later on, the government of Gujarat invited SEWA for service delivery activities. For example, a foreign-aided pipeline project failed to deliver water to affected people. SEWA stepped in, involved local women to change the situation – the water supply had improved thenceforth. It particularly emphasised on "nutrition, literacy and control of assets" (Sommer, 2001: 58). Among the income-generating activities, women were trained on embroidery, crafts and artwork that had ready markets, both at home and abroad. Moreover, their concerted efforts contributed in raising wages, both for agricultural and non-agricultural works; generating awareness on the cleanliness of areas, particularly slums, for preventing disease and illness. Finally, SEWA also created a bank, to address women's issues such as housing and family with financial support (Sommer, 2001). SEWA thus presents another type of sustainability efforts, where people's livelihood is secured. At the same time, it leads consciousness to other dimensions such as public health, hygiene

125 and clean environment. This movement has also been globally acclaimed, for its successful advocacy and organisation of people from marginalised section. In this section, we find that despite thematic variations, people used non-confrontational means to claim their rights and reclaim their place in the society. This also adds another dimension to sustainability: confrontation means the defeat, a sense of loss; whereas advocacy, peaceful protests keeps the window of cooperation and conversation open. Cases of Local Significance In this section, we shall discuss one movement and a voluntary, civil society effort – both in West Bengal: they also have enriched the concept of sustainable development substantially. Saraswati Nadi Bachao Andolan Saraswati Narmada Bachao Andolan (SNBA) is a movement that had taken place in Howrah and Hooghly districts of West Bengal which reflect local people's understanding that environmental protection do not quarrel with livelihood issues. The impact of this environmental movement is localised, probably not very successful, but that does not diminish its stature – it is built upon concerted community efforts, reflecting local people's urge for the upkeep and betterment of their community. This author has undertaken the study that is based on the time when the movement was on progress – SNBA in fact presents a model of sustainable development because it aims to protect natural resource base, by reviving a near-extinct river. Saraswati River has been mentioned in early Bengali literature texts, such as Mangal Kavya: some parts of the river were navigable even till the 1960s – people used it for bathing purposes as well. In the May Day of 1998, the Saraswati Narmada Bachao Committee (SNBC) was formed to carry forward the movement. It adopted several strategies: mobilising people, with sharing ideas, information and reference to cultural symbols; fighting judicial battles. Throughout, they used advocacy as a method for negotiation; they also have

126 tried to forge alliance with like-minded organisations, such as Maurigram Paribesh Suraksha Samiti (Maurigram Environmental Protection Council) – this organisation has successfully stopped a polluting meat-processing unit in Maurigram. People were mobilised through massive propaganda, leaflets and several public meetings. The activists referred to the history of the river – that once upon a time it was one of the greatest rivers in south Bengal and was in a healthy shape till the 1990s. At the same time, they pointed out severe pollution that posed a health hazard: "Almost every type of waste – hyacinth, wastages from religious places, animal corpses, human excreta, medical wastes from adjoining nursing homes (private hospitals), and plastic products – are indiscriminately thrown into the river. The river is also used for washing cattle and innumerable service latrines exist along its banks" (Ghosh, 2011: 548). In a word, the river was definitely on the way to death; hence SNBC raised alarms. They particularly pointed out two immediate actions: (i) freeing the river banks from encroachment – it was 77 kilometres long; hence many private properties have developed by encroaching on the river space; (ii) de-siltation of river bed, because that primarily contributed towards clogging the course and movement of river. Culture was also used to provide symbols for mobilisation: with reference to ancient past, people were reminded on its heritage. Religious symbols, particularly Hindu traditions were also invoked: the river had place in Hindu mythology. One way of mobilisation was blowing the conch shells together on particularly mornings, for generating awareness. Several local literary works, though in small scale, have blossomed. History was invoked to remind people that the River was used for transportation, cultivation, fishing and several other economic activities. SNBA promised of bringing them back once again. The total vision, thus promised of reviving a sustainable economy. At the same time, SNBC activists had painstakingly collected facts from archival resources and various government departments. Their point was to prove the existence of the river. When their appeal to appropriate government departments failed to gain any substantial progress, they initiated a judicial battle. Some lawyers were associated with SNBC – they did not accept any fee,

127 rather offered their services at free of cost. In 2006, the Calcutta High Court ordered the district administration to take immediate steps, such as de-silting the river and free the river bank from all illegal encroachment. At this point of time, SNBA also engaged in intense advocacy with people explaining importance of the issue. However, though the movement continues in a small scale even today, its success is limited. If present situation is any indication, there is not much possibility for progress, though dredging for de-siltation had occurred in some places; and in very few places, encroachments were removed. Even during the most optimistic days, its appeal was limited mainly in three blocks: Sankrail and Domjur in Howrah; and to an extent, Singur Block in Hooghly. There too, it did not take shape of a "mass movement" – it was mainly limited among few activists and the educated section of people. However, that does not belittle the vision and initiatives of people who started the movement; and we may note that there are very few examples in human civilisation where people struggled to revive a lost river. Sustainable Education: A Voluntary Effort At present, a visible section of people, particularly those belonging to historically deprived socio- economic background, are quite conscious about quality education for their children, particularly the education that will equip their children to come to terms with this extremely competitive, opportunity-scarce world. Education will enable their children to take advantage of scanty opportunities; enhance social prestige; may take their families out of poverty – in a word, contribute to overall socio-economic mobility. In this background, following a study (Ghosh, 2015), we shall discuss an endeavour taken in the remote part of North 24 Paraganas district, where children from extremely poor background benefit from quality education. An NGO, Development Research Communication and Services Centre (DRCSC), based in Kolkata operate in many parts of West Bengal through a network of CBOs. One such CBO is Swanirvar, which works in Adharmanik village and adjacent areas in the north 24

128 Paraganas district. Most of the people were from overwhelmingly poor socio-economic background; from Scheduled Caste or Muslim communities: agricultural workers, marginal farmers, scrap collectors and other types of people lying at the bottle of socio-economic pyramid. Swanirvar offered free coaching to these children, on the condition that they will devote certain hours of time every week for Swanirvar activities – they involved "learning-by-doing" type activities; mainly game-type brain teasers. With these children, Swanirvar started an innovative programme: 'Ecology and Natural Resource Education' (ENRE). Accordingly, children were asked to tell the names of the birds – as many as they could. They were asked to compile the list by asking names from their family members, particularly the elderly. Some of them were found to be imaginary, but interestingly, some names were found out which existed a few years back. This motivated the children to ask questions: what happened to them? The process of acquiring knowledge starts from asking questions and then, follow-up for answers. Accordingly, some other issues came up: many birds are on the way to extinction. Hence, concerted efforts were necessary to find out the reasons and arrest the process. The major reasons were identified: rampant use of fertilisers and other insect-repelling chemicals; the changed housing patterns; and poaching birds. As a follow-up action, a group of volunteers were formed from these children, who had undertaken a number of activities to reclaim the ecological assets of the community. They created "nests" with discarded packing box, stuffed straw and hung them into various points of the tree, so that birds could lay eggs there. Generally, Swanirvar specialises with using the waste-materials for various goods: such as hyacinth waste is mixed with rejected paper, so that it became a packaging material. Or, rejected coconut-oil cans are made toys for children. At the same time, Swanirvar volunteers confronted many social evils like poaching birds, open defecation and like. Through their constant advocacy – engaging into discussions, persuasion and arguments, they have been able to stop those practices in the area. On the other hand, they also have added value to the community by creating maps of village resources, such as sources of water, fodder and other utilities known as 'Village Miocroplanning Report'; creating school libraries – both

129 by collecting books and tracking the defaulters; and organising various community programmes. When girl students, mostly from Muslim communities, participated in cultural programmes like puppet shows, there had been strong opposition from local religious leaders; but they continued – in the long run, it generated much confidence among the children. Swanirvar also came to the help of local schools – when they were devising environment-teaching curriculum, Swanirvar offered the helping hand, both with subject matter and methodologies for their implementation. Both SNBA and Swanirvar represent micro-level cases, where impacts are largely limited in a small local horizon: it certainly did not go to the national level, not even the state level; in fact, it is doubtful whether many in the respective districts are aware about them. Still, they represent the impulse of sustainability, of protecting the nature and community. It is not necessary that any such endeavour must attain global dimensions; rather this indicates that innumerable such efforts in various parts of the country are undertaken by local people with the motivation to make our earth a better place to live. Conclusion In the previous chapters, we have discussed various theoretical and normative dimensions of sustainable development. However, even before the issue of sustainable development became fashionable at academic and policy-making circles, people have understood its values for long, from their lived experiences – as these are the issues related to their livelihood, survival and overall well- being. We have discussed five cases above: the first three were the large-scale community efforts, where people got into act for sustainability. NBA reflects the critique of conventional, top-down notions of development patterns and thinking – the material and human costs it involved, soon attracted global attention. The involvement of internationally connected social scientists had helped NBA to attain a global dimension quickly. The Chipco movement also offered a critique of profit-

130 centric philosophy of modern development; and SEWA presented a model of sustainable livelihood both at rural and urban settings. They too had gained global acclamation. By contrast, the SNBA and Swanirvar were much lesser known endeavours: but they also have done the precious things: far away from urban metropolitan centres, they have generated awareness and active participation of local communities, in some cases, extremely poor people, on the necessities of sustainable development. Summary ? This chapter records common people's association with sustainability. ? NBA is a long-drawn people's struggle against the proposal of a large dam, which would destroy livelihood bases, civilisation of many marginalised people for ever. ? Chipco movement is another long-drawn struggle that had successfully thwarted the indiscriminate felling of trees, which threatened to destroy the local eco-system and livelihood-base for ever. ? SEWA is an example of marginalised people joining together for security on livelihood. It gradually extended to other spheres strengthening the cause for women's empowerment. ? SNBA was a movement aimed to reclaim a river that was virtually lost. ? Swanirvar presents a lively case of sustainable education among extremely poor and marginalised people living in remote villages. Glossary Civil Society Organisations (CSOs) – refers to those organisations who work in the civil society, separate from the state and government agencies. Generally, Non Governmental Organisations (NGOs) and their several varieties, such as the Grassroots Organisations (GROs), Community based organisations (CBOs) are the CSOs.

131 Advocacy – the process of engaging into continuous dialogue with opponents for achieving common good through negotiation and mutual accommodation. Learning-by-doing is a concept in the philosophy of education which requires students to learn the subject matter by practically experiencing its application-part. References Ghosh, Sujay (2011) "Protecting Natural Resources: Course of a River Movement", Community Development Journal, 46 (4): 542-557. Ghosh, Sujay (2015) "Learning from Community: Agenda for Citizenship Education", Education, Citizenship and Social Justice, 10 (1): 25-36. Guha, Ramachandra (2002) "Chipko: Social History of an 'Environmental' Movement", in: Gahnshyam Shah (ed.) Social Movements and the State (New Delhi: Sage), pp. 423-454. Narula, Smita (2008) "The Story of Narmada Bachao Andolan: Human Rights in the Global Economy and the Struggle Against the World Bank", in: https://pdfs.semanticscholar.org/450b/ce4bb337d4aae63f30333bb9c2a1f7f7b79b.pdf?_ga=2.1287246 20.1449245655.1585050772-545904184.1585050772 (accessed 24 March 2020). Sommer, John G. (2001) Empowering the Oppressed: Grassroots Advocacy Movements in India (New Delhi: Sage). Model Questions The following questions carry marks of Six (06) each: 7. How livelihood is important in sustainable development? 8. Discuss the role of World Bank in NBA? 9. What was the background for Chipco movement?

132 The following questions carry marks of Twelve (12) each: 7. What were the core issues of NBA? 8. What were the core issues of Chipco? 9. What were the core issues of SEWA? The following questions carry marks of Eighteen (18) each: 7. Mention the major efforts for sustainable development in India. 8. Evaluate the implications of NBA, Chipco and SEWA movements towards sustainability. 9. Evaluate the implications of SNBA and Swanirvar towards sustainability. Unit – V Limitations of Sustainable Development Structure: 14 Introduction 15 Critique of Sustainable Development 16 Challenges to Sustainable Development 17 Conclusion Introduction In the previous chapters we first have started discussions on the concept of development; in the subsequent chapters, we also have discussed the various dimensions of sustainable development in detail. In this chapter, we shall attempt a critique of sustainable development. Critique, as we know, is not intended to discredit an idea; nor is it any attempt to repudiate the concept or ideal. Rather, it is an attempt to find out the prevailing limitations and explore how the concept may be achieved in more realistic and substantial terms.
133 This is two-part effort: first, to we need to find out the limitations of sustainable development; second, identifying the challenges that sustainable development must overcome. On that basis, we may think about improvisation, as sustainable development continues to be one of the most discussed issues in contemporary world; the recent outbreak of COVID-19, popularly known as Corona epidemic has brought the entire world into a virtual standstill for months. It also provokes us to reflect upon the question of development, where sustainability in the long run, which already has a strong moral foundation, is likely to acquire acceptance as a practicable policy. For example, a Bengali newspaper has made a photographic reporting, showing significant improvement in the air quality of many cities in India, during the lockdown period, when the entire country was virtually shut down, traffic was stopped and common people went out of home for essential needs only (Anandabazar Patrika, 2020). Hence, it is quite pertinent to have a stock-taking, to identify its' weak areas and attempt to address them. Critique of Sustainable Development We shall now examine the issues against sustainable development. We shall follow the five-point list prepared and presented by Hopper: (a) conceptual ambiguities; (b) growth centric; (c) North-South differences; (d) legitimacy issues; and (e) inadequacy (Hopper, 2012: 221-224). The list gives us a useful guidance on the issue. Conceptual Ambiguities There are significant differences on the meaning and scope of sustainable development. Till now, as many as "seventy-two definitions of sustainable development have been identified" – each offering their own perspectives "with varying degrees of rigour" which in the long run, may render the term meaningless (Hopper, 2012: 221-224). Each country has their own interpretation of sustainable development, often loaded with heavy normative dimensions. In democratic consciousness, pluralism is certainly a valued concept: it applies to international society as well; but at the same 134 time, any programme that depends upon collective endeavour must have certain points of agreement. Similarly, a plural understanding of sustainable development is necessary, but at the same time, it requires that differing opinions and perspectives would evolve some universally acceptable standards for being workable. A fluid conceptualisation of such an important does not augur well – in fact, it is dangerous in the sense that if the concept of sustainable development is lightened, its appeal would certainly be driven to backseat by vested interests that profit from the violation of environmental and other ethical norms of economic activities. It is necessary to bear in mind that sustainable development also involves varying degree of sacrifice. People, who benefit from the existing order more, are likely to lose more under a vibrant regime of sustainable development. Hence, conceptual clarity, clarity in aims and objectives, as well as clearly defined objectives and their realistic application – all are of utmost necessity. Growth Centric Concept The concept of sustainable development is also criticised for its too much preoccupation with the question of growth. It puts too much emphasis on issues like Gross National Product (GNP) – as a result, the idea of sustainability runs the risk of being diluted. We may note that the initial impulse for sustainable development came from the devastating effects of the growth-only model of development. As a result, the concept of "green GNP" is being mooted, whereby issues like environmental decline, resource pollution would be counted while measuring the GNP. This way, the idea of sustainable development extends the concept of 'growth with justice' – the concern which begins with the question: "what are we leaving for our next generation"? Among the resources available on earth, environment is certainly the most precious one. Hence, for its success, sustainable development must not allow itself to fall in the trap of growth-only model of development.

135 North-South differences There are significant disagreements in the perspectives of the global north and the global south on sustainable development. Citizens in the global north enjoy higher standards of life; and those countries have already developed themselves. May countries in the global south find the terms and conditions of sustainable development as threat to their autonomy to pursue development – they find it unfair that the onus of global well-being is turned into them rather unilaterally. They have to deal with poverty of many people where survival is also at stake. Again, it is the global north which damages the "global commons" to the maximum – the climate. The global north in turn insists that sustainable development is meant for common good whereby the global south will also stand to benefit. When differences reach at the level of normative concerns, it is very difficult to reconcile. This is a serious challenge before sustainable development. Legitimacy Issues The discussion above thus brings out the issue of legitimacy, as Hopper (2012: 222) asks: "Who decides?" the global north or global south? National governments or international organisations? At the same time, question arises on the conflict between the mandates of sustainable development and the attainment of decent standard of material life in many countries. In addition, there have also been allegations that many companies violating the principles, despite rhetoric of sustainable development. Once again, problems of normative dimensions come to the fore – hence they look irreconcilable. Inadequacy Finally, it is said that the idea of sustainable development is not enough: it does not address the question of environment adequately. Economic development would certainly lead to resource depletion and pollution. Hopper quotes Lovelock who suggests a retreat from the current development process, such as stopping the use of fossil fuel; and switch over to nuclear energy
136 which may emit less carbon. However, Lovelock is criticised for having ignored the question of nuclear waste (Hopper, 2012). In sum, it appears that sustainability may at best, slower down the process of resource depletion, but cannot stop it ultimately. In recent times, there had been discussions on green technology, but not much headway has been achieved. Sustainable Development: Limitations and Challenges Ahead In the last section, we have pointed out the critique of sustainable development. Following the same trend, in this section, we shall further identify the limitations and pervasive challenges to sustainable development. They are mostly found in the developing countries, but the developed countries – broadly known as the global north, are not totally immune from these. At times, the problems are so pressing and grinding for many people in the world, that sustainable development often appears like a distant luxury – its vision and ideals seems to be at conflict with their everyday realities. A survey on the concept of sustainable development must have informed us that this dichotomy is false, but unless the ground realities are met, it would be difficult to convince. The issues are quite familiar, but we must acknowledge Fernando (2003) for stitching them together. No Alternative to Capitalism The greatest threat to sustainable development, as we have seen from our discussion so far, is the rampant corporate greed – the mad rush for maximisation of profit drives many captains of global industrial and financial powerhouse to ruthlessly exploit natural resources and pollute the environment. In developing world, it happens in much more rampant and brazen manners, where environmental laws and protocols are observed more in breach than in practice. The same Multinational Corporations (MNCs) which are quite law-abiding and environmentally responsible in their home countries find no constraint to violate them in developing countries with impunity. In that pursuit, they often work in collusion with power elites – politicians, leaders and bureaucrats in various developing countries.

137 Question arises: why does it happen? Why people from the third world or global south must bear the brunt of corporate greed? These questions are ideologically sound, but reality has a different story. First, in these countries, not only global corporations, but indigenous companies and capitalists also pursue the same path. Other centres of power in society, such as the politicians, bureaucracy are also entangled in this system. Media and Civil Society Organisations (CSOs) play ambivalent roles: some of them oppose the system, yet some others support them. As a result, concerted protests against such practices are not that strong. Secondly and more importantly, when and where poverty and hunger is endemic; and immediate survival is at stake, people tend to ignore environmental concerns for apparently pressing benefits like food and other basic human necessities which can be bought with cash. As a result, the appeal of environmental concerns or other aspects of sustainable development becomes weak. It is rendered further weaker by groups who benefit from such a perverse system: people speaking about environmental concerns or sustainable development are branded as elitists having no idea about life of common people; or, having vested interests on stopping the process of development. We need to view this entire picture in a larger perspective. In fact, despite many vices that are associated with capitalism, we have no better alternative that can generate prosperity at shortest hour. Here the argument goes that if prosperity is generated, it will trickle down and more people will have opportunities to participate in market operations to improve their material conditions. The alternatives to capitalism have failed miserably: welfare states have returned to market operations; communist countries like China in practice, pursue the path of capitalism – the difference is that it does not allow democracy; and China is also one of the major contributor to global pollution. The erstwhile socialist countries who have proclaimed social ownership of the means of production, like the Soviet Union, has even worse record towards sustainable development and ecological responsibility. For example, the nuclear accident in Chernobyl was attempted to be hushed up.

138 Urbanisation, Migration and Related Problems As the human civilisation advances, there is a steady progress towards urbanisation: it starts with commercial activities; then spreads into many other human amenities, such as habitat, religious needs and pilgrimage, education, entertainment and various other opportunities for socio-economic mobility. Since time immemorial, many people, who were bold and ambitious enough had moved to cities in search of better lives and opportunities. The entire process received tremendous momentum with the arrival of industrial civilisation, as the range and scope of human activities multiplied manifold. New cities have developed; and agriculture became secondary in many countries. Yet, the landmass remained the same. Cities developed at the expense of villages and forests. At the same time, migration to cities had enhanced manifold, because people wanted to have better qualities of life and also break away from the oppressive structures of rural society. That however, did not necessarily mean much improvement in the quality of life for all: infrastructure in cities were under tremendous pressure – as result, basic amenities like housing, water, healthcare, education were inadequate; and above all, the poor remained mired into poverty almost perpetually. The differences in wealth and income were present in rural life too, but the mobility generated by urban life, accompanied by the display of prosperity in few pockets stands in sharp contrast before the huge pool of toiling masses: they could experience and feel the disparities. This in turn, created serious social tensions and fissures. Added to this are another host of complications, such as ill-health, crime, violence and often, abject deprivation and absence of adequate opportunities. The deprived section of people had to put up with poor quality of healthcare, education, transport facilities and other amenities that improve the overall quality of life. Under these circumstances, to many people struggling hard for daily survival, the appeal and visions of sustainable development appear to be a distant luxury. Dwindling Social Security 139 Obviously, the factors above lead to increased tensions in daily life and weakened social security for majority of the people. In a broad sense, social security implies people having access to basic minimum that enables them a life of dignity. However, we have seen that much of the world population is still quite poor. On the other hand, with the dominance of neoliberal economy, the income gap between the rich and poor has increased significantly. At the same time, many people's life chances are dependent on the movement of capital dictated by trends of international trade. If they are favourable, their income will be assured; otherwise it is perennially vulnerable. Finally, many countries with poor econmoy spend excessively on warfare and armaments – thus a significant part of national resources incur undesirable expenditure at the expense of sustainable human development, encompassing health, education, mobility, socio-economic security and clean environment. With such a climate of all-pervasive insecurity, the cause for sustainable development is significantly weakened. In other words, the factors above drive home the point that sustainable development does not come to terms with the realities of the poor and deprived people, particularly in developing countries. In sum thus, limitations to sustainable development have multidimensional issues and directions. Whereas we do not have any viable alternative to the capitalist system of economy and production, the complications and pressure of modern life has immense effects on people and surroundings. For both livelihood and geographical reasons, the rural space is shrinking and people migrate to urban areas in search of better opportunities and quality of life. Yet in most cases, they do not result into much positive outcome. This also pose challenges before the ideal of sustainable development: we have no options to go back to the idyllic life of ore-industrial period; rather, sustainable development must adjust to the needs of contemporary times and many people, particularly those lying at the bottom of the social pyramid.

140 Conclusion In the previous chapters, we have seen the vision and promises of sustainable development and the way it has become a major pillar in the discourse of development. Yet, we must bear in mind that sustainable development is not a smooth road ahead and its present shortcomings undoubtedly invite criticisms. The concept has to face significant challenges towards its realisation. However, these challenges are also pointers towards its more realistic applications. At present, the idea of sustainable development suffers from few shortcomings: the concept is not well-defined, rather various definitions tend to blur the concept. It has not yet been able to come out of the shadow of growth-only understanding of development. At times, the idea suffers from serious normative legitimacy, which is further compounded by the division of North-South interpretations of sustainable development. The practical application of the idea of sustainable development is bootstrapped by the fact that despite capitalism contributes to major damage to environment and sustainability in a variety of ways, no viable alternative to capitalism is present. At the same time, migration, urbanisation, shrinkage of villages, growth of cities, dwindling social security – the major attributes to industrial civilisation and modernity put serious strains on the life of many people around the world. As a result, sustainable development appears to be at conflict with the survival of many people; hence wrongly misconceived as being elitist and detached from the lives of majority of the population. Herein is the challenge: sustainable development must break this false dichotomy to send the message that it is neither elitist, nor any distant luxury for most of the people, rather very much linked with their survival and well-being. Summary ? The idea of sustainable development has many criticisms ? It has multiple normatively-loaded interpretations. ? In addition, follows the growth-only idea of development

141 ? Serious North-South disagreements, with high normative overtones ? Capitalism harms, but no viable alternative ? Challenges of migration, urbanisation and complexities of modern life ? Need to overcome the idea that sustainable development is a distant luxury ? People must be convinced that sustainable development is related to their life and livelihood Glossary Green technology – using sustainable production process, both in terms of process, technology and raw materials. Pluralism – a respected term in political philosophy, which means accommodating diverse views and lifestyles in social narratives as well policy-making. The Global North – refers to those countries that belong to the Northern hemisphere of the globe: countries in Western Europe and Northern America. In those countries, there had been early industrialisation and spread of modernity, such as modern capitalist enterprises; modern systems of knowledge – these factors have helped the global north to establish both material and cultural domination over the entire world. The Global South – the countries in the Southern Hemisphere of the globe, spread across the continents of Asia, Africa, Central and South America – also known as Latin America. Some countries in these regions, such as Japan, Australia, New Zealand and virtual city states like Singapore are the exceptions. It is true that some oil rich countries in Middle East and North Africa have higher levels of income, but that prosperity does not accrue from high levels of industrialisation or vibrant human capital. References

Ouriginal by Turnitin

142 Anandabazar Patrika (2020) “Coronar Aage O Pore Ekhon, Eki Jaigar Dui Biporit Chhobi Hotobak Kore Debe” (in Bengali), in: https://www.anandabazar.com/photogallery/national/

100% MATCHING BLOCK 248/319 W

coronavirus-lockdown- effect-in-india-polution-free-sites-of-indian-cities-are-mesmerizing-dgtl-1.1140455?

ref=home-pq- stry-small-image- 5&slide=1& fbclid=IwAR3SrSpHg8e1yy7zyCsDcyHmN1VbhIfk161NY04dwvp8j8uDy81ikjOJgdM (accessed 7 May 2020). Fernando, Jude L. “The Power of Unsustainable Development: What is to be Done?” The ANNALS of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 590.6 (2003): 6-34. Hopper, Paul. Understanding Development (Cambridge: Polity Press, 2012).

143 BLOCK IV PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT MACHINERY IN INDIA UNIT 1 PLANNING COMMISSION: ORGANIZATION, FUNCTION AND ROLE

STRUCTURE 1.1. Learning Objectives 1.2.Introduction 1.3.Organisation 1.4.Functions 1.5.Role 1.6.Conclusion 1.7. Summary 1.8.Key words 1.9.Model questions 1.10. References 1.1. LEARNING OBJECTIVES After studying this Unit, one must be able to- ? Understand the background on which the Planning Commission was constituted. ? Discuss the underpinnings that went behind the formulation of the Commission. ? Explain the structure and role of the Planning Commission. ? Discuss the various functions of the Planning Commission. ? Review the role the Planning Commission played in policy formulation. 1.2. INTRODUCTION India awoke to a new life as an independent nation on 15 th August 1947. Nehru’s tryst with destiny speech was a clarion call for the entire nation to rise up to the challenge of surviving without any foreign hand that had been dreamed for long. The world was just out of the 2 nd World War, the arms race among the USA and USSR was about to start with the coming of the nuclear age. Decolonisation in South America, Africa and Asia was giving birth new countries on the world map. These were

144 challenging times for the world as a whole. But as in South Asia more than any other part of the world the challenges were grave. India inherited many problems with its independence. a. India was coming out as a divided nation globally with Pakistan being chiselled out. b. Massive communal riots in 1947 were putting huge question marks on stability, control and rule of law in the newly freed nation. c. The economy was in dire straits as years of exploitation had rendered the country economically fragile. d. Linguistic, caste based, religious, geographical and cultural divisions were too strong an emotion amongst the people that were to become major hindrances for development. e. The illiteracy amongst the people was too much to support any rational process of government with objective validity. f. The vast expanse of land required to be consolidated as the Indian union was a tenuous process. With all such problems looming large over the interim leadership of the country, the crucial question to was the root of all the afore mentioned problems i.e., how to plan the future of India? To answer the problem a resolution was passed as early as 1946, (this was actually before the transfer of power of 1947). Though the plans for a planning Commission were on much before independence, the credit of its emergence is not to be given to any single individual. Politically the idea was introduced by Jawaharlal Nehru and Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose who were influenced by the state-controlled planning existing in the Soviet Union that had yielded great dividends to Stalinist Russia during the 2 nd World war days as it transformed from an agrarian economy to a military industrial superpower. From the professional class famous physicist Dr, Meghnad Saha,FASc and the first Indian civil engineer M. Visvesvaraya and other experts supported the concept of a centralised planning Commission to steer the country forward. The British administration was already preparing to leave India, and in order to aide the process of transition formally passed a resolution and established the Advisory Planning Board under K. C. Neogy that functioned from 1944 to 1946. According to this resolution a Planning Advisory Board was to be appointed, which then recommended the appointment

145 of a Planning Commission whose specified goal was to create the trajectory of planned development in India post-independence. As planned in 1946, the Planning Commission was constituted in March, 1950 by a resolution of the new Government of India to create the basis for future development of India. The focus as decided by coordination was on the state which was supposed play an important role in bringing socio-economic transformation by strict control over the planning process of the nation. This was also incorporated within the Directive Principles of State Policy.

78% MATCHING BLOCK 258/319 SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

The Planning Commission consulted the Union ministries and the state governments while formulating five-year plans, and annual plans, and oversaw their implementation.

For 64 years the Planning Commission was the institution that determined the course of Indian developmental programme. Planning both centralised as well as state based were formulated in accordance with the policies drafted and implemented by the Planning Commission of India. 5-year plans as well as annual plans were formulated under the Planning Commission's guidance. The Commission not only decided upon funding, coordination, implementation and grievance redressal for policies but also decide on the narrative of development that the country would take in its journey towards socio-economic development of the populace as a whole. Though it has been replaced by the NITI Aayog in 2014 by the Narendra Modi led NDA 2 government, the Planning Commission remains a poignant chapter in the history of India economy as well as society. For years it determined the course of action for Indian society as well as economy and thus created the base on which the present stands upon. 1.3. ORGANIZATION The Planning Commission of India being a very important institution in itself was interestingly not authorised under the constitution of India.

50% MATCHING BLOCK 250/319 W

The Commission was set up by a Resolution of the Government of India, and thus is not rendered the position of a statutory body. Though the plans formulated by the Planning Commission were of major importance in planning policies for the country, the plans have had no legal statuses. The Planning Commission appears as an advisory body, in practice, which in that capacity wielded considerable authority. The following are the prime constituents of the Planning Commission-146 1) Chairman – Prime Minister; presided over the meetings of the Commission 2) Deputy Chairman – de facto executive head (full-time functional head); a) Was responsible for the formulation and submission of the draft Five-Year Plan to the Central cabinet. b) Was appointed by the Central cabinet for a fixed tenure and enjoyed the rank of a cabinet minister. c) Could attend cabinet meetings without the right to vote. 3) Part-time members – Some central ministers 4) Ex-officio members – Finance Minister and Planning Minister The role and functions of the members are explained below- A. Chairman- The Prime Minister of India has been its ex officio chairman of the Commission since its very inception. The Commission though works under the overall guidance of the National Development Council, it is the Chairman who steers the Commission forward and gives direction to the Commission regarding all major policy issues.

87% MATCHING BLOCK 251/319 W

The Prime Minister attends only the most important meetings of the Commission and isn't a regular for all meetings convened. His presence is only there as he being the member of the union legislature ensures that the Commission's proposals coming up before the Cabinet are viewed objectively. B. The Deputy Chairman- The position of the Deputy Chairman is a full-time job for the position holder unlike that of the Prime minister. The deputy Chairman looks after the day-to- day workings of the Planning Commission. Though the position is rendered to both politicians as well as professionals the deputy Chairman has been usually a politician of standing belonging to the ruling party at the Centre.

53% MATCHING BLOCK 252/319 W

82% MATCHING BLOCK 253/319 W

Though this narrative has been invalidated at times, by the appointment of an expert in economic development being appointed as Deputy Chairman. Prof. D.R. Gadgil and Dr.Montek Singh Ahluwalia are such 147 examples of experts who have worked in the position as non-political entities. The Deputy Chairman's position can be equated with the rank of a cabinet minister in the government (although he may not necessarily be a member of the Council of Ministers). Generally, the appointment of a Minister of State to the portfolio of planning is done in order to facilitate accountability to the Parliament. C. Members- All full-time Members of the Commission are equated at the rank of Union Minister of State of the government. Broadly speaking,

71% MATCHING BLOCK 254/319 W

there are two types of members, in addition to the Minister of State for Planning who is also an ex-officio member of the Planning Commission. There are certain full-time members. This list includes eminent public persons, administrators, economists and technical experts to provide advice and assistance on issue specific problems and coordinate various facilities and departments together. In addition, the Planning Commission has a few important Cabinet Ministers who are given the position of members. These are the people who attend the more important meetings of the Commission as they are in touch with the legislative process of the parliament as well as the executive. The meetings that cover only the most important decisions are to attended by all members, full-time and minister-members. These meetings are called the meetings of the full Commission and of utmost importance in policy formulation. Apart from that, the Planning Commission with full-time members meets frequently to discuss and decide upon important policy decisions. The Deputy Chairman along with the full-time members of the Commission function as a composite body, especially in matters of policy formulation an enactment of which the process of detailed planning formulation is an important part. Consequentially it means that the Deputy Chairman and the full-time members are the ones who look after the day-to-day work functioning of the Commission. The Prime Minister is the appointing authority of all these members. These appointments are done only after consulting the Deputy Chairman, who again can be a politician or from among prominent public persons and experts. The Planning Commission members aren't full-time members, effectively meaning that they are not given a fixed tenure. In actuality the position is held for a certain term which may continue till there is a change in the 148 government in which case the new government can bring in members of its own accord. (a break in tradition happened in 1990 when the full-time members were changed thrice in a single year). Each member of the Commission looks after a specific set of subjects or areas of concern/ department. The Members' role is to direct, guide and advise various Subject Divisions of the Planning Commission. The process in reality is the exercise of preparing approach papers which are formulated as policy documents for five-year plans and annual plans. The members are also expected to provide guidance to the Subject Divisions for monitoring and evaluating the plans, programmes, projects, and schemes devised under their departments. The Commission act as a body, but as in any form of bureaucratic authority, facilitation of the working is done by implementing a clear demarcation of work. Each full-time member is given specific subjects to be dealt with. For the assistance of the members of the Commission help in provided in the form of programme advisers and many other senior officers. Then there is secretariat of the Commission, which is headed by a secretary which coordinates various departments under the members. The entire demarcation can be seen to divided into several, divisions, some of these include the following- Agriculture and Rural Development; Economic, Education, Finance Resources; Employment and man-power; Housing, Urban Development and Water Supply and Irrigation; Health and Family Welfare; Industry and Mineral; Land Reforms; Transport and Communication; Statistics and Surveys; Power and Energy; Monitoring and Information; Perspective Planning; Social Welfare; Plan Information and Public Cooperation; Programme Administration and Command Area Development. Including the afore mentioned divisions there are also several technical divisions. Various Divisions of the Commission also look after follow up of plan projects, for which several committees have been set up. Research Programmes Committee, Committee on Irrigation and Power Projects and Coordination Committee are some such committees. In addition, as there is also a feedback system for the planning Commission, there exists an autonomous body working under the guidance of Planning Commission known as Programme Evaluation Organisation. The members of the Commission are expected to work on the principle of joint and collective responsibility and discharge their functions on the basis of collective wisdom.

149 Though there is division of labour in the functioning of the Commission, it also has collective responsibility for all decisions, as its members work as a collective body. Each member deals individually with the technical and other aspects of his/her allotted subjects.

71% MATCHING BLOCK 255/319 W

However, it is to prerogative of the Planning Commission to consider all those cases that require policy decisions and settle disputes amongst members if and where there is difference of opinion existing between its members. 1.4. FUNCTIONS The 1950 resolution setting up the Planning Commission outlined its functions as the following: ? The Commission has the responsibility to undertake an evaluation of the cumulative capital, material and the human resources of the nation. This may also includethe technical personnel recruited by the government and employed in workforce. The Commission in turn may study the possibilities of enhancing these resources for building up the nation in a holistically coordinated manner. ? The Commission is responsible for drafting a Plan for the most balanced and effective usage of the country's resources which includes material as well as capital as resources. This plan for a number of years followed the USSR model of 5 year-based planning. ? It is the sole prerogative of the Planning Commission to define the stages in which the Plan should be implemented and put forward the allocation of resources for the completion of every stage.

61% MATCHING BLOCK 256/319 W

Any plan to be effective must be dissected in various stages to increase its efficiency amongst the phases it is being implemented. ? The Commission has the responsibility to specify the factors that hamper economic development. This in a way is a grievance redressal mechanism which helps the Commission to ascertain the conditions which may help in rectifying the faults as per coordination of various divisions. Thus, to solve the problems in view of the prevailing social and political situation, becomes an important facet for the triumphant implementation of the Plan 150 ? Determining the kind of infrastructure that is required for not only execution of tasks but also

43% MATCHING BLOCK 257/319 W

88% MATCHING BLOCK 260/319 SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

the successful execution of each stage of the Plan in all its aspects is the function of the Planning Commission. ? The Planning Commission does a regular appraisal of the progress achieved in the process for implementation of all stages of the plan. This in turn would help the Commission to propose the rectifications or recommendations of policy and measures that such appraisal may deem necessary. ? At certain points of plan implementation various interim or ancillary recommendations are put forward. These are either for enabling the discharge of the duties assigned to a division or on a consideration of the existing economic conditions, current policies, measures and development programme or on a study of such specific problems which the Central or State Governments can refer to it. 1.5. ROLE The understand

70% MATCHING BLOCK 262/319 SA 05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)

52% MATCHING BLOCK 259/319 W

the role of the Planning Commissionone has look at the tasks assigned to the government bythe Indian Constitution in its Directive Principles. Within the features of strengthening, securing and supporting socio economic development of the nation and its people we find what is expected of the government in aiding the process.Enshrined in the Directive Principles of State Policy, there is the duty of the state to secure citizens' rightto adequate means of livelihood and control the inequalities in the ownership of wealth and meansof production. To achieve the same the state is required to ensure growth in production, and its equitabledistribution among the various sections of society. In this context, the Planning Commission’s role as a planning authority comes forward. Through extensive planning the Commission formulates plans for the whole country and also functions as an advisory planning body at the apexlevel.

77% MATCHING BLOCK 261/319 W

58% MATCHING BLOCK 263/319 W

In addition to the above-mentioned functions, the Planning Commission has been entrusted withresponsibility in the following matters.

a) Public Cooperation in National Development; b) Specific programmes for area

Ouriginal by Turnitin

91% MATCHING BLOCK 265/319 SA Dissertation WFN.docx (D164020968)

development like Hill Area Development Programme; c) Perspective Planning; 151 d) Institute of Applied Manpower Research; and e)

Overall Coordination of the Pradhan Mantri Gramodaya Yojana (PMGY) 1.6. CONCLUSION Till 2014 when the Planning Commission was disbanded and NITI Aayog replaced it, the planning Commission was the chief planning authority for the country. Over the years the 5-year plan model implemented by the planning Commission was the bedrock of Indian planned economy. First such plan covered the period of 1951-56. The aim of the 1 st 5-year plan was centred around the public sector and the targets specifically were to increase production of food and raw materials. The infrastructural aims includedthe aim to develop irrigation and power projects. Additional targets were centred around enlarging the scope of employment for the populace and consolidating progress in the field of social services. The aspirations were laid out to herald rapid increase in the rate of development in less developed states. Priority was given to key industries that were the backbone of productive forces like iron and steel and manufacture of electrical equipments. The Second Five-Year Plan (1956-61), reinstated the faith that public sector would be the driving force for the economy at least for another 5 years.The added target was on increasing employment initiatives for the people. The conventionalobjective this time was to increase national income and to take India on the path of industrialisation, which was to be achieved by focussing the national resources on development of basic and heavy industries. This plan took India forward to enhance the scope of distribution of economic power. Third Five-Year Plan (1961-66)increased the total budget of the nation and continued reaffirming the faith on public sector driven economy. this was to be supported by employment generated by the government and infrastructure supported by the public sector. The stated main objectives laid out by the Commissionwere to secure above 5% p.a. rise in national income. This income would help sustain growth rate in subsequent plans. The additional objective was to tackle the problem of food deficiency, which can only be overcome by creating self-sufficiency in food grains.Another objective was to expand basic industries, to meet requirements of further industrialisation.

152 The 4 th 5-year plan was delayed due to various reasons such as drought, devaluation of currency, rise in prices and the Indo-Pak conflict. Therefore, in between 1966 and 1969, there were three annual plans. Each plan provided a situational response to the problems of the time. The official 4 th 5-year plan was centred around 1969-74 with renewal of the same 5% increase and focus on infrastructural and industrial development. The Fifth Five-Year Plan (1974-1979)focussed on agrarian reforms and increasing rural income. The focus now became more coordinated to bring both the industries and agriculture at par by increasing inputs that would also yield higher outputs but the plan was not completed as the Indira Gandhi led government fell in 1977 post emergency and the new Janata government reconstituted the Commission. The new Commissionagreed that the aim of the Five-Year Plan should be to very substantially reduce unemployment, disparities in income and that adequate provision be made for meeting public needs. For the coming decades there were many breaks to the 5-year plans, some plans were transformed to annual plans, some were changed as the desired goals were unattainable. The 90s coalition era was especially tumultuous as various governments came to power but no govt except the Narasimha Rao led minority government could complete its term. Coincidentally this was the government that began the process of liberalisation of the economy and state control reduction. The 2 terms of Manmohan Singh saw the period of most balanced planning in decades as public investment increased in social welfare schemes which was supported at the same time by higher returns and increased impetus on the private sector. It was only in 2014 that the planning Commission was abandoned as being unresponsive to the claims of modern globalised world where centralised planning wasn't helping as the system was going to become more decentralised and deregulated, thus the 5-year plans were discontinued and the think tank of NITI Aayog came into being. Nonetheless, the Planning Commission was an institution that drove Indian development story for years and created what Indian economy is today. 1.7. SUMMARY

153 ? India post-independence was in the need for a well laid out blueprint to usher the country into running and functioning properly after years of subservience under the British rule. The newly decolonised nation faced a lot of problems since its birth ? Under the leadership of political as well as professional experts the National planning Commission was brought forward as a body that would determine the course of Indian economy for years to come. ? The planning Commission primarily prepared 5-year plans which dictated the coordinated focus of the government into various sectors of the economy. ? The planning Commission comprised of the Chairman, the Vice Chairman and members comprising of political functionaries, government officials and professional sectoral experts. ? Through various 5-year plans the country developed as inputs by the government increased on public sector for the first few decades, then there was a shift towards agriculture, cottage industries. In the 1990s the focus shifted to private service sector as liberalisation brough in anew age for the India economy. ? The planning Commission was replaced by NITI Aayog in 2014 to pave way for decentralised, deregulated economy. 1.8. KEY WORDS ? Planning- Planning is about what steps you need to take to reach the goal, what changes and hurdles to anticipate, and how to utilise human resources and opportunities to reach the expected outcome. ? Policy- Policy is a law, regulation, procedure, administrative action, incentive, or voluntary practice of governments and other institutions. ? Autonomous- Anything as an institution or a region having the right or power of self- government, rule or decision making can be termed as an autonomous entity. 154 ? Statutory body- A statutory body or statutory authority is a body set up by law that is authorised to implement certain legislation on behalf of the relevant country or state, sometimes by being empowered or delegated to set rules in their field ? Grievance redressal- While the term “Grievance Redressal” primarily covers the receipt and processing of complaints from citizens and consumers, a wider definition includes actions taken on any issue raised by them to avail services more effectively. 1.9. MODEL QUESTIONS Short questions ? Who is the chairman of the Planning Commission and what is their role? ? Which institution replaced the Planning Commission and in which year? ? What are the events of global importance that took place during Indian independence? Medium questions ? Write the various functionaries of the Planning Commission? ? What are some of the additional functions of the Planning Commission? ? Explain the role played by the 5-year plans in Indian development Long questions ? Discuss the historical background of the Planning Commission of India? ? Discuss in details the functions of the Planning Commission? ? Explain the organizational structure of the Planning Commission? 1.10.

45% MATCHING BLOCK 264/319 W

REFERENCES Agrawal, A N (1995). Indian Economy: Problems of development and planning. WishwaPrakashan, Pune. 155 Dayal, Ishwar, "Organization for policy Formulation", Kuldeep Mathur, (Ed.) 1996, Development Policy and Administration, Sage Publications, New Delhi. Government of India, Cabinet Secretariat (Department of Cabinet Affairs), (1967) Resolution (National Development Council), New Delhi. Government of India, Ministry of Finance, Economic Division, (2007) Economic Survey 2005-2006. New Delhi. Paranjape, H.K., (1964), The Planning Commission: A Descriptive Account, Indian Institute of Public Administration, New Delhi. Kabra, Karnal Nayan, (1997), Development Planning in India, Exploring an Alternative Approach, Sage Publications, New Delhi. Partha Chatterjee, (2001) "Development planning and the Indian state" in State and Politics in India (ed. Partha Chatterjee) New Delhi: Oxford University Press Website: http://www.planningCommission.nic. CC VI DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION BLOCK 6 PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT MACHINERY IN INDIA UNIT 2 NDC- FUNCTIONS AND ROLE STRUCTURE 2.1. Learning Objectives 2.2.Introduction 2.3.Structure of NDC 2.4.Function of NDC 2.5.Role of NDC 2.6. Conclusion 2.7.Summary 2.8.Key words 2.9.Model questions 2.10. References 2.1. LEARNING OBJECTIVES After studying this unit, one would be able to-156 ? Understand

what is the background of the national development council. ? Discuss what are the functions of the NDC. ? Learn what is the connection between the planning process in India and the NDC. ? Explain the role of the NDC in taking the country forward. 2.2. INTRODUCTION The National Development Council is one of the key organizations of the planning system in India. It is institution that has held high the ideal of federal planning in India by bringing in the concerns of the states as well as the union to provide a holistic national approach where the states and the union have an equal say on the perspective of development. The NDC has experienced numerous problems in its journey as a body aimed to bring various points of view to determine which course of action to take for national development. The NDC has always been under constant pressure due to the politics prevalent in India, as competitive political outfits try to exert more pressure to get closer to power. The same has happened to the NDC as the influence by the government in power at the centre and the effectiveness of the pressures exerted by state governments determined its functioning. In 1946, during the twilight of British empire in India the Planning Advisory Board under the chairmanship of KC Neogi, had recommended the setting up of an advisory organization that would include representatives of the provinces, princely states and other interests as at that time the federative units existed in the form of princely states and provinces instead of democratic autonomous units. The advisory organisation didn't materialise pre independence, the idea lingered on for its objective rationality. In 1950 as Indian independence was slowly taking a qualitative shape, then Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru initiated the formation of the Planning Commission of the Government of India. At this point the idea of the advisory council floated again and thus in the initial days of the inception of the Planning Commission, such a coordinating body was established called the National development council. Its creation was based on the recognition for the potential utility for a body that was able to coordinate the different aspirations of the nation.
157 Within the ambit of the Draft First Five-Year Plan, the Planning Commission was of the opinion that considering the geographical vastness of the country, the cultural diversity prevalent, the heterogenous nature of socio-political-economical aspirations of the states as autonomous entities require to be looked into with care. Therefore, the need for an entity of coordination was of paramount need. The need was answered by the National Development Council. The expectations were that the NDC may facilitate the periodical evaluation of planning and its various facets. The coordination which was sits prime goal was to be between the two power centres of the states and the centre. Thus, the responsibility fell on the shoulders of the Prime Minister and the state Chief Ministers. Accordingly,

84%	MATCHING BLOCK 269/319	SA	Swayam Prabha- History-State and the Political ... (D141677590)

the National Development Council was set up by a proposal of the Cabinet Secretariat of the Government of India in August 1952.The Council in its bare minimum is composed of the Prime Minister as the central authority representing the Union of India, the Chief Ministers of States as authorities that have been rendered the power to govern the federal units/

69%	MATCHING BLOCK 266/319	W

states and the members of the Planning Commission. However, there have been instances when other central ministers who are not members of the Planning Commission have attended the Council's meetings.

In other instances, to bring in professional expertise

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 267/319	W

outside experts have also been invited to the Council's meetings whenever situation arose to deal with specific topics. 2.3. STRUCTURE OF THE NDC The structure of the national development council has been made in such a manner that it reflects the holistic viewpoint of the national aspirations. The balance is primarily to be drawn between the states and the union government. The National Development Council comprises the following members – ? The Indian Prime Minister. ? All the Union Cabinet Ministers. ? Chief Ministers of all States or their substitutes on account of the absence of chief ministers. ? Representatives of the union territories. ? The members of the NITI Aayog (erstwhile planning commission).

158 ?

100% MATCHING BLOCK 268/319 W

The secretary of the Planning Commission is also the secretary of the NDC.

Any and every form of administrative assistance is also provided by the Planning Commission. There have been occasions when other experts have been invited to address the meetings. These included eminent economist, policy makers, think tank analysts, department specific professionals and the governors of the Reserve Bank of India as well. The large membership of the Council, which increased in number over the years made it untenable for the council to function in a cohesive and timely manner. To solve this problem of excess in November 1954 a Standing Committee was established with only nine Chief Ministers and a few union ministers as members. In addition, the Council has been appointing committees from time to time for decentralization of department specific problems which require specific redressal. The Prime Minister as the Chairman of the Council and the Secretary to the Commission as its Secretary and the Commission cooperatively furnishes the Council with administrative and other assistance. The Council ordinarily meets twice annually. The Council though as a planning authority ordinarily passes no resolution formally. The active functioning is restricted to having a complete record of discussion and gather out of it general trends pinpointing particular conclusions. Decisions are usually unanimous. The NDC concerns itself with any and every issue that is directly or indirectly related to facets of national development. It does extensive deliberations and takes decisions on a range issues. The issues concerning the NDC are multifaceted in nature and can be part of any list be it Union, state or concurrent. Issues can be also be inter-regional in nature such as – disparities of resources, Panchayati raj, prohibition, agrarian cooperation and even irrigation levies. One of the major drawbacks of the NDC has been its quantitatively large size and the nature of positions that the office holders have as chief ministers and union ministers. The inability to meet frequently and go into great details on specific matters has made the NDC a rather slow institution. Despite such a drawback the NDC which is required to meet at least twice a year, has sometimes met more often to address issues of immediate importance. The central function of the NDC is to coordinate the matters between the state and the centre on issues of planning. Therefore, the central 159 agenda of the NDC meetings generally include

92% MATCHING BLOCK 270/319 W

100% MATCHING BLOCK 271/319 W

the approach paper to the Five-Year Plan, the draft Five Year Plan and the final Five-Year Plan.

The state governments and the central government may times bring additional agendas on the table that may require all the functionaries to deliberate upon the issues raised.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 272/319 W

The Secretary of the Planning Commission is also the Secretary of the NDC takes decision on which agendas to take up for the meeting. The decisions of the NDC adhere generally to the ambit of policy formulation rather than implementation. As it comprises of the top functionaries of both the state and central governments, it can be labelled as the highest policy making body on developmental measures in the country. Though the NDC is a non-statutory advisory body which makes recommendations to the Central and State governments, the very stature of the Council has ensured that these 'recommendations' have the prestige of directives which are usually followed and obeyed.

96% MATCHING BLOCK 273/319 W

Though its position has been lessened under the present government, for years the NDC has helped the nation determine the course of action required to bring the country together to face the issues of yesterday, today as well as tomorrow. 2.4. FUNCTIONS OF NDC The functions of the NDC were defined when constituted in 1950. With time there arose the need to define and limit the functions in a manner that it doesn't become a super cabinet in action. In response the Government of India which had accepted the recommendations of the First Administrative Reforms Committee in a slightly modified form made some minor changes to the NDC. It was decided that the NDC, headed by the PM, should comprise all Union cabinet ministers, Chief Ministers of states, Chief Ministers/Chief executives of the union territories and members of the Planning Commission. According the ARC recommendations and the changes introduced by the government, the NDC was reconstituted in October 1967, on these lines. On the recommendations of the Administrative Reforms Commission, the Council was reconstituted and its functions were redefined to include the following- a. Prescription of guidelines for the formulation of National Plan, including the assessment of resources for the Plan. 160 b. Although the NDC is technically a consultative organisation, in practise it approves the five-year plans and provides recommendations for their creation c. Consideration of National Plan as formulated by the National Development Council. d. Considering important questions of social and economic policy affecting national development. e. The review of the working of the Plan from time to time and recommend such measures as are necessary for achieving the aims and targets

55% MATCHING BLOCK 276/319 SA 05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)

86% MATCHING BLOCK 274/319 W

to secure the active participation and cooperation of the people, improving the efficiency of the administrative services, ensuring the fullest development of the less advanced regions and sections of the community and, through sacrifice, borne equally, by all citizens, build up resources for national development.

f. It was envisaged that the National Development Council would advise and make its recommendations to the Central and State Governments. In actual functioning the National Development Council has been functioning as a high-power consultative body for the holistic solution of the country's problems. It acted as an institution where the framing of the Five-Year Plans was done in consultation, discussions done on the important problems facing the Indian economy, and formulation of policies that have to be adopted for tiding over the urgent problems have been discussed extensively. Thus, the role of the NDC has not been limited to the area of planning as it has answered to the problems arising at particular situations which required attention. As per the discussion above it can be understood that the NDC is a bridging institution as well as a formulation institution. Though its prime function lies in coordination and planning related policy formulation, through that same function it has been able to coordinate the actions of various state governments, the central government and the planning commission in solving problems related to the prosperity of the country. It has provided help to the union government to understand and coordinate its forces in a better manner to solve the issues of various departments, it has helped the state government to bring up their grievances to the platform where they can be discussed in unison and helped the planning commission understand the gaps, bridge the same gaps and provide alternatives to 161 planning issues that plagued the commission at certain points of time. It helps in the coordination not only of policies and programmes of plans but also other matters of national importance. It provides a good forum for discussion and full and free exchange of views. There is no other cooperative forum as adept as the NDC where cooperative federalism is seen at its best. The NDC provides a forum where matters of national importance aren't only discussed but there is an active mechanism of sharing of responsibility between States and the Union Government. 2.5. ROLE OF NDC India is a federal democracy, that means the centre as well as the states are equal actors in proper functioning of the system. There can be no one way on the road taken towards development and only through deliberative discussion and coordination can there be a national consensus.NDC as an authoritative body that brings the federative forces at a single place becomes a body of paramount importance in planning process for the country. It is the top body for deliberating and making decisions regardingdevelopment-related issues. The institution is also very important as it highlights the democratic ethos of the country as a whole because thePrime Minister, the national leader of the country serves as its chair and all of the State's Chief Ministers who have the mandate of their state's population of devise policies also attend itssessions. The States here thus have the opportunity to present their points of view in relation to policies as devised by the centre, forward policies that have been successful in their states, provide analyses of success of such policies and also suggest redressal mechanism for later formulation as well. Additionally, this guarantees the federal autonomy allocated to the states. This empowers the states to put forward their issues and decide whether they will approve the suggested strategy following thorough deliberations. NDC stands for the constitutional viability of our nation's stability based on the federal system of planning. It serves as a tool for ensuring that a national viewpoint is adopted by the planning system. It is only with the agreement of the stategovernments that's a cohesive and dynamic policy formulation is successfully implemented. This as a result ensures an efficient execution of programmes undertaken both at the central and state level. The achievement of the goals of theCentral and State Governments is ensured in a manner that is reflective of the aspirations of the national population which has rendered the governments the trusteeship to not only rule but initiate development.

162 NDC acts as an advisory body to the Planning Commission regarding the planning process. The major objectives of NDC linked with the Planning Commission and the National planare listed below: ? To strengthen and mobilize the effort and resources of the nation in support of the Plan. ? To promote common economic policies in all vital spheres to create coherence among the economic goals shared by the centre and the state. ? To ensure the balanced and rapid development of all parts of the country irrespective of political pressure and target holistic development In addition to this, NDC provides a platform for all the states to discuss their problems and issues related to development. Thus, cooperation, coordination, active functioning, policy formulation for national development becomes crucial roles that the NDC plays. 2.6 CONCLUSION The National Development Council for years have provided a platform to the national leadership both at the top and at the states to come to a common ground regarding decentralised planning as well as centralised planning. The reforms suggested by the ARC as well as the changes brought in by the government to make it more feasible in solving matters of national importance over the years have only enhanced the functioning of the council. Various state' chief ministers have praised the NDC for coordinating the efforts of the country as a whole to set up a path towards future development of the nation and sustaining the gains made in the last decades. Though in 2014 with the formation of the NITI Aayog the NDC has been functionally rendered irrelevant, with the proposition to abolish it soon, the NDC as a mechanism to quell the problems of such a large county as India with it varied interests and demands can be considered a success, especially due to the role it brought in bringing the planning mechanism to the federal units and creating holistic roadmap for development of all. 2.7. SUMMARY ? The National Development Council was formulated as an advisory body to the National Planning Commission in order to better coordinate the functions of the commission and bring in perspectives on the process of planning.

163 ? The NDC included the top functionaries of the union government and the state government in the form of the Prime minister, union cabinet ministers and the state chief ministers. ? The NDC for long has been serving as a forum to coordinate the efforts of the state and union governments for national development plans. ? The Administrative Reforms Committee of 1967 had made changes to the NDC in order to make it more competent and responsive to the changing times. ? As an institution ushering the balanced ideal of federal democracy the NDC has been successful in providing solutions to the needs of the states and bring the union government closer to the demands of the federative units. 2.8. KEY WORDS 1) Consensus-Consensus decision making is a creative and dynamic way of reaching agreement between all members of a group. 2) Holistic- totality or wholly to be considered, impacting a set of whole units. 3) Trusteeship- The supervisory control by one or more countries over a trust territory. 4) Coordination-the organization of the different elements of a complex body or activity so as to enable them to work together effectively. 5) Coherence-systematic or logical connection or consistency. 6) Deliberation- long and careful consideration or discussion. 7) Autonomy- the right or condition of self-government. 2.9. MODEL QUESTIONS Short questions ? Who are the members of the National Development council? ? What was the focus area in the first five-year plan? ? Why has there been plans to abolish the NDC? Medium questions

164 ? What role does the NDC play support the ideal of federalism in India? ? What changes have been brought in to the NDC with the NDA 2 government? ? Establish the relationship of the Planning commission with the NDC? Long questions ? Explain the role of the NDC in development of India economy? ? Explain in detail the functions of the NDC? ? How has planning process changes in India with change of times. Explain in reference to the NDC? 2.10 REFERENCES

Dayal, Ishwar, "Organization for policy Formulation", Kuldeep Mathur, (Ed.) 1996, Development Policy and Administration, Sage Publications, New Delhi. Government of India, Cabinet Secretariat (Department of Cabinet Affairs), (1967) Resolution (National Development Council), New Delhi. Planning Commission. (1975). The Planning Process; Government of India, Delhi. Partha Chatterjee, 2001 "Development planning and the Indian state" in State and Politics in India (ed. Partha Chatterjee) New Delhi: Oxford University Press Prasad, Kamta (Edited). (1984). Planning and Its Implementation, Indian Institute of Public Administration: New Delhi. Website: http://www.planningCommission.nic. CC

VI DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION BLOCK 6 PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT MACHINERY IN INDIA UNIT 3 STATE PLANNING BOARD STRUCTURE 3.1. Learning Objectives 3.2.Introduction

165 3.3. Functions of State planning board 3.4.Composition of State planning board 3.5. Structure and composition of State planning board 3.6.Kerala State planning board 3.6.1. Assessment 3.6.2 Economic Review 3.6.3 Formulation of Plan 3.7.

Conclusion 3.8.

Summary 3.9.Key words 3.10. Model questions 3.11. References 3.1.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES After studying this unit, one should be able to: ? Understand the significance of

State Planning Board in matters of state development. ? Discuss the organisation and units of State Planning Board. ? Explain what functions of State Planning Board performs. ? Evaluate the performance of State Planning Board in various States. 3.2. INTRODUCTION Indian politics have evolved a long way since 1947. Beginning the journey with mere 8 states, the country now has 28 states and 8 union territories. Many states have been created out of big states like Uttarakhand, certain states were created to meet the demands of regional tendencies Telangana, some were incorporated such as Sikkim and certain states were converted to union territories like Jammu and Kashmir for easing the process of functioning. The journey hasn't been easy to say the least of it. There have been problems in Indian federal politics since the birth of the nation. Various demands have plagued the union government to accord more powers to the states and at times create new ones. In such a situation planning for national development becomes a question of not only grave importance but also of contentious nature. The National Planning Commission was created to answer to the call of planned development for the country. To assist the commission and bridging the gap between centre's role and the state's the National Development Council was formed with the chief ministers of the states and their representatives who had the opportunity to share the platform with the 166 Prime minister and other ministers to discuss the matters related to development planning on a holistic level. A more decentralised version of the same was planned to be implemented in the states called the State Planning Board or State Planning Council. At the State level, the SPB/SPC have contributed greatly to the efficient implementation of government planning and policies to aid the people in securing better resources as well as opportunities. Todiscuss in brief the major functions of the State Planning Board can be summed up into 5 major parts- a. Preparation of policies b. Planning regarding policies c. Arrange/allocate resources for the said policies d. Implement the policies e. Creation of a feedback loop All the above processes in detail can be explained as the responsibility to monitor situation in the state and prepare plans according to those situations. In matters of long- term perspective plans in the state; the board has the duty to activate the financial resources so that proper allocation of resources can be done for the implementation of the plans. At the same time the priority remains to adopt different mechanisms for development. The need to determine plan priorities of the state within the framework of the priorities of the national plan is also of utmost importance as with only a coordinated plan at the centre and the state can development policies be implemented properly and their benefits reaped. The council/board would assist the district authorities in formulating their development plans as well enhancing the role of decentralised units in contributing for the development of the lower levels, within the spheres in which such planning is considered to be useful and feasible. The SPB/SDB also functions as the authority that has the power to formulate a plan for the most effective and balanced utilisation of the state's resources by determining the areas according to planned priorities. They define the stages in which the plan should be carried out, and propose the allocation of resources for due completion of each stage; indicate the factors, which tend to retard economic development, and determine the conditions, which in view of the current social and political situation should be created 167 for successful execution of the plan; determine the nature of the machinery, which will be necessary for securing the successful implementation of each stage of the plan in all its aspects;

100% MATCHING BLOCK 275/319 W

74% MATCHING BLOCK 277/319 SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

and

93% MATCHING BLOCK 281/319 SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

to appraise, from time to time, the progress achieved in the execution of each stage of the plan, and recommend the adjustments of policy and measures that may be necessary 3.3

FUNCTIONS OF STATE PLANNING BOARD Though planning has been an area of central government in India, the states in their way have contributed a lot with their own State Planning Boards/Councils. In a true federal fashion, the state planning boards have decentralized the process of planning in the states and taking the initiative to allocate resources and initiating planned development for the lower levels in the states as well such as the district, gram, suba, tehsil etc. The functions as well as organization of state planning are very different in different states. To avoid confusion and overlapping the planning process at the state level can be generalised in the following ways as before the creation of NITI Aayog (1) The states usually initiate advance action on plan formulation. This takes place before the recommendations of the Planning Commission comes in as different state governments are elected at different time and coalescing of all states with the Planning Commission is close to impossible. Different departments of the state governments that are involved in formulating broad parameters of the state plans coordinate and adjust with the Planning Commission so that state plans don't waver off the national goals. (2) The States, in response to call from the Planning Commission, send their suggestions regarding their states and seek to formulate state specific plans. These plans which form the base of the approach paper for the national plan are then implemented after discussion and deliberation between the constitutive units to be accepted for national development. (3) After the approach paper, prepared by the planning commission, is approved by the NDC, it forms the basis on which states plans. In turn, the states then are required to formulate their draft five-year plans in accordance with the objectives and strategies through the State Planning Board. The state board in its authority holds continuous discussions with other state departments and district and regional planning agencies for decentralised allocation of 168 resources for development planning. The state boards also work in coordination

90%	MATCHING BLOCK 278/319	W

with the central working groups, the Planning Commission and the central ministries on the other hand who create the broader guidelines for the implementation of plans. (4) The state draft plan is then discussed at the level of the central working groups and the Planning Commission. Upon discussion all such proposals are either approved or modified by the Planning Commission, keeping in view of the national and the state priorities and resources. (5) The Planning Commission prepares the draft national plan and it is discussed in the NDC. In hindsight it can be assessed that the SPB in its bid to unravel decentralised development a concentrated effort is required between the state and the central governments. The State Planning Board thus makes assessment of

90%	MATCHING BLOCK 279/319	W

the state resources and formulate plans for the most effective and balanced utilization of these resources for holistic development of the state. By determining

81%	MATCHING BLOCK 280/319	W

plan priorities of the state within the framework of the priorities of the National Plan assistance is provided to district authorities in formulating their development plans within the sphere in which such planning is considered to be useful and feasible and to coordinate the central plans with the state plans. The board at the same time tries to identify the factors which tend to retard the economic and social development of the state and determine the set of conditions for successful execution of the plan. In such a manner a review of the progress of implementation of the plan programmes is done as a feedback loop to create an accountable system, in accordance to thatthe boards recommend such adjustments in policies and measures as the review may indicate.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 282/319 W

State planning thus is done in a manner where people's aspirations are treated to get both the central and state planning mechanisms function properly. 3.4 COMPOSITION OF STATE PLANNING BOARD The discussion of state planning boards in India is too extensive to be put to one unit. In order to aid in better comprehension, the example of the state of Kerala has been taken. Thus, the organisation of Kerala State Planning Board has been explained in detail in this unit to explain the peculiarities of state planning. Kerala politically has been a state of exception in India. It was the first state to be ruled 169 by a non-Congress government, alternative governments have been formed in the state for a major part of Indian political history at least since late 2020s, the planning in Kerala has led to major land reforms, socio economic changes which have stood out amongst Indian states. The Kerala State Planning Board's mandated target was to formulate development plans based on a scientific assessment of the available resources, and the growth priorities for the state of Kerala. The Board was also entrusted with the task of bringing out a comprehensive economic review report of the state every year. The Board was constituted in September 1967 with the Chief Minister as Chairman and an unofficial part-time Vice-Chairman. Besides the finance minister and the Chief Secretary, there were three whole-time members. The first member secretary was the director of the Bureau of Economics and Statistics. The board was constituted

71% MATCHING BLOCK 283/319 W

51% MATCHING BLOCK 284/319 W

to enable the state government to formulate development plans based on scientific assessment of the state's resources and growth priorities. The board was also entrusted with the task of releasing a comprehensive financial review of the state every year. The Board has been reconstituted 15 times since 1967. The term of the KSPB is five years. It is worth mentioning that since 1967 the KSPB has been reconstituted fifteen times. Thus, the Planning Board through its expertise facilitates effectiveplanning and better implementation of development schemesprojects. 3.5 STRUCTURE AND COMPOSITION OF STATE PLANNING BOARD The Chief Minister of state is the Chairman and a non-official is part time Vice- Chairmanof the SPB. The structure and composition of the KSPB, which was reconstituted in2016, is as follows: i) Chairman- Chief Minister ii) Vice Chairman iii) Members ? Minister for Revenue & Housing ? Minister for Water Resources ? Minister for Transport ? Minister for Ports, Museum, Archaeology & Archives ? Minister for Finance 170 Non- Ministerial Members (seven experts) iv) Member Secretary v) Permanent Invitees ? Chief Secretary, Government of Kerala. ? Additional Chief Secretary, Finance Department, Government of Kerala. Members The Board members are nominated by the Government. The facilitation provided by these members include inputs regarding plan formulation, implementation, and otherpolicy matters as required by the state government. Member Secretary The Member Secretary, who is head of the institution, also acts as official Member ofthe KSPB. The member secretary is responsible for the convening of Board meetings regarding various issues of the state. This in a way acts as an instrument of carrying out theimplementation of the Board decisions, through the concerned departments andagencies. The Chiefs of the Technical Divisions provide aid the board in matters of technical specificity. Besides, Administrative Officer assists in matters of administrative issues dealing with the bureaucratic hassles required to be solved for proper implementation and execution of policies. Chief Economic Adviser In the era after liberalisation the post of Chief Economic Advisor has become very important in Indian democracy. It has not only become a permanent feature of state governments but also of the Union government. In the state of Kerala, the Chief Economic Advisor has been appointed by the Kerala Government to advice the state board on policymatters and other subjects. These in turn are taken up by the planning commission for consideration. Director, Project Financing Cell A Project Financing Cell is a comparatively new cell in the state planning board whose requirement was called upon to coordinate financial resources outside the purview of the state in a judicious manner to help the state board. This cell has been constituted in the Planning Board in 2012 to 171 examinethe feasibility of outside funding. In simpler terms the cell enhances the financing for developmental purposes with the help of PPP model. The primary way in thisbeing Public - Private Participation for all projectsof the Kerala State. The KSPB comprises of the following institutions/divisions- i) Technical Divisions. ii) Administrative Wing. iii) District Planning Offices. iv) Library. As mentioned earlier the Project Financing Cell is also part of the administrative structure of thePlanning Board. The functions of the SPB are carried out through its Technical Divisions.The Chief of Division is an expert on developmental issues. In each Division, JointDirectors, Deputy Directors, Assistant Directors, Research Officers and ResearchAssistants assist the Chief. However, in administrative matters, an Administrative Officer assists the Member Secretary. 3.6 KERALA STATE PLANNING BOARD: MAJOR FUNCTIONS 3.6.1 ASSESSMENT The KSPB has for years been indulging itself in the process of continued assessment of policies proposed, implemented and executed to understand the impact of the same on the developmental narrative of the state and get a better view about the needs of the state. In accordance to such reviews it may suggest necessary reforms and changes in the policies, priorities and programmes, which include: 1. Formulation, monitoring and evaluation of plans. 2. Suggest necessary measures for improving performance of public enterprises with State Planning Board. 3. focus on augmenting quality of service to citizens, productivity and generation of surplus for development. 4. Effective decentralised planning and development, and enhancing local peoples' participation in the projects.

172 5. Undertaking studies, surveys and researches that are necessary for proper discharge of functions through task forces, expert committees and working groups. 3.6.2 ECONOMIC REVIEW No policy is full proof and thus is susceptible to review and change. This not only happens to due to the passage of time but as situations change so does the aspirations of people and their demands and ideas regarding development itself. A state's policy must remain dynamic in nature to aid this process. Review thus becomes an important part of the KSPB functioning. The KSPB was assigned the task of preparing Annual Economic Review, which is being prepared and published by the Board since its inception, the task has become even more extensive post 1990s. The KSPB to further the cause of redressal as well as accountability released 50 earlier issues of the Economic Review (1959 to 2009) which have since been digitised and published in 2010 for providing a wholesome view of the economic trajectory of planning in the state. As it provides an overall view of the state economy, macro-economic performance, development initiatives taken by various departments during that particular year, progress in the plan implementation etc., therefore it is considered as a valuable reference text. 3..6.3FORMULATION OF THE PLAN The Board is responsible for the formulation of the plans. In this regard, available resources are assessed to fix the size of the plan. The KSPB issues circular/ instructions to all the Secretaries and Heads of Departments for submission of plan proposals to the Board. The Administrative Departments in the Secretariat is given the responsibility tosecure the approval for plans regarding specific departments from the ministers heading the departments. The schematic proposals are appraised in the KSPB and tentative selection priorities are allowed on the basis of detailed discussion on the proposal of each department. The preparation of the draft plan proposals is done that are placed before the Board/ Cabinet for approval. Any form of planned purpose-based endeavour requires effective planning to achieve the desired goals, to achieve the said goals an efficient mechanism is required. The KSPB answers the need for the monitoring mechanism to achieve the aforementioned goals. This creates a system of

Ouriginal by Turnitin

173 accountability-based development that has been established from the State to District level. Thus, it is evident from the above discussion that the KSPB has contributed in a great manner to aid the development trajectory of the state of Kerala. The Planning Board has assisted the Kerala government in designing the development plans on the basis of scientific assessment of the available resources in the state. In addition, the Board members and staff prepared a comprehensive Annual Economic Review Report, which proved necessary base for future planning and development of Kerala. 3.7 CONCLUSION The State Planning Boards in India have been mainly concerned with broad economic policies, perspective planning, plan formulation, and plan evaluation in states for providing resources for the districts and other lower units within the states. The functions and organisation of SPB differ from State to State. The State Planning Board can only function properly with the backing of the State government, for an effective contributionto the process of drawing up perspective plans in various sectors for the state; and design priority patterns for a holistic development of the state. An effective monitoring and evaluation process through a State Planning Board can help in resource mobilisation and effective resource utilisation. The need of the hour is to give genuine accountability and status to the State Planning Boards. The specialisation and proficiency that they can bring to their roles can help the state governments to increase rationality in their developmental process and strengthen their capacity to bargain for additional resources. It may be further found that the real purpose for which they were created has not been achieved in some states. In this regard, study has explored and highlighted successful examples also, which will pave the way for other states to strengthen the State Planning Board in their states. In this Unit, we have focused on the significance, composition, functions and process of State Planning Board at the state level in view of the current perspectives of the states. In India planning has always been a central aspect for developmental policy formulation. In a third world country such as India where the population is of huge character, the disparity among the various existing classes, the differentiation between the resources held by various states and the aspirations of the people are of diverse nature and bringing them together for a co-jointed effort is thus a matter of serious concern.

174 The joint efforts of political leaders, administrators and citizens can facilitate to match the desired goals through effective planning and efficient role of the State Planning Board. 3.8 SUMMARY ? Planning in India has been a concentrated effort of the Union government and the state government. The National Planning Commission and the National Development Council at the centre looks after this planning process and the responsibility of the same is provided to the State Planning Board at the states. ? State Planning Board works independently of the National Planning Commission recommendations though in close coordination with the commission's recommendations to formulate policies for planning at state and district level. ? Generally, the organisation of the state planning board comprises of the chief minister as the chairperson, minister of cabinet rank as vice chairperson which in most cases is allotted to minister of finance, industry, commerce, revenue etc. The lower ranks are provided to secretaries of the state secretariat as advisors and with rare occasions to outside experts. ? Developmental process in Indian states isn't coordinated between the states but more so between the states and the central agencies. Politicians, bureaucrats, civilian authorities altogether create the system of official as well unofficial ways to initiate a system of planning that answers to the call of development in third world. 3.9 KEY WORDS 1. Approach Paper- Approach paper refers to the paper of a document, which will reflect the prime objectives and goals for the forthcoming plans. 2. Plan- It is a document showing detailed scheme, programme and strategy, which is worked out in advance for fulfilling an objective. 3. Decentralization – the process to give more powers to lower units and distribute responsibilities in a manner where there is no concentration of power.

175 4. Third world- all countries that achieved independence post the 2nd World War are called third world countries. These countries generally are developing economically, culturally diverse, politically vibrant. 3.10 MODEL QUESTIONS Short questions ? What is meant by decentralization of the planning process? ? Why has the position of Chief Economic advisor become so important in state planning? ? Who are the members of the KSPB? Medium questions ? Discuss the similarities between the National Planning Commission and State Planning board? ? What is meant by the process of review and what are its advantages? ? What is financial autonomy is the source of all autonomy- explain? Long questions ? Discuss the relationship between central planning and state planning in India? ? Explain the various functions of the Kerala state planning board? ? Discuss the planning system at State level in India? REFERENCES Arora, R. K. & Goyal, R. (2013). Indian Administration: Institutions and Issues. New Delhi: New Age International Publishers. Chakravarty, S. (1987). Development Planning: The Indian Experience. New Delhi: Oxford University Press. Padhi, A.P. (1988). State Administration in India. New Delhi: Uppal Publishing House. Khera, S.S. (1963). District Administration in India. New Delhi: Sage.

176 Sinha, A. (1993). State Level Planning System: Need for a Change. Rawat Publication. Website- Kerala State Planning Board- https://spb.kerala.gov.in/ml/about_kspb CC VI DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION BLOCK 6 PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT MACHINERY IN INDIA UNIT 4 NITI AAYOG: ROLES AND FUNCTIONS STRUCTURE 4.1.Learning Objectives 4.2.Introduction 4.3.Organisation of NITI aayog 4.4.Functions of NITI aayog 4.5.Role of NITI aayog 4.6.
Conclusion 4.7.
Summary 4.8.Key words 4.9.Model questions 4.10. References 4.1. LEARNING OBJECTIVES After studying this unit, one would be able to- ? Understand how the change in governance needed change in institutions in India. ? Explain the reasons behind the scrapping of the Planning Commission. ? Learn about the formation of NITI Aayog and its composition. ? Understand the functions of the NITI Aayog in changing planning perspective in India. ? Learn about the various ways in which Indian administration in responding to the changing times and conditions and accommodating itself. 4.2. INTRODUCTION 177 Modern liberal economies have slowly shifted to from permanent public institutions to advance the cause of the state to think tanks. These are policy formulating institutions far less cumbersome than government functionaries and flexible in operations regarding policy implementation. If western countries are taken as example where there is an ample growth of think tanks because they are perceived as harbingers of change that accelerates the state machinery and helps address peoples' concern in a far more effective manner. In India, where it's a predominantly new phenomenon think tanks are often viewed with apprehension as bidders for an elite class, be it intellectual, bureaucratic, or simply intellectual. But supporters of the trend hold aloft the idea that these think tanks are acting as a critical link between elaboration of policies and their implementation, because think tanks represent a vital component of successes of policies directed towards harmonization of existing practices of planning and coordination with contemporary paradigms of good governance and economic management. Since 1950, the target of the elected central government of India has been to usher a development narrative unprecedented in South Asia. The idea was to bring about rapid social and economic growth to harness the potential of the people and end disparities existing in the entire country through planned effort. The prime institution that was tasked with this job was the Planning Commission, which was launched in 1950 and was functioning till the end of 2014. Thereafter, on January 1, 2015, the Planning Commission got replaced by the National Institute for Transforming India, known as, NITI Aayog. Over last 70 years India has changed extensively be it in areas of demography where we have increased the area with inclusion of newer territories, developing others while keeping certain areas the same; economic condition where we started as a lower income country in early 1950s to a global powerhouse in the 21 st century; or in trajectories of growth and development, open and competitive markets. Keeping all these points in mind there was also a demand to bring in a new life to the system of policy formulation. As the technological innovations rise and there is an easy flow of information the need to change in policy framework as per present situation seemed imminent. From 1950 to 2014 it was the Planning Commission of India which supervised the area of planning process in India with the help of state planning boards, the National Development Council, and other 178 functionaries. The prime instrument initiated under

79%	MATCHING BLOCK 286/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

the Planning Commission was the five-year plan for the economic development of the country. The 5-year plans have ushered the country in a developmental phase which is unprecedented amongst the democracies of South Asia. Consecutive governments till 2014 have taken the state centred planning forward and even in times of crises annual plans by the Planning Commission have helped the nation stay afloat.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 285/319	W

However, in 2014, the 65-year-old Planning Commission was dissolved and a think tank – NITI Aayog (National Institution for Transforming India) took its place. The NITI Aayog (National Institution for Transforming India), is a think tank of the Government of India established on 1 January 2015 as a Commission to give suggestions to the Governments at the central and state levels.

The suggestions were to be formulated to enhance national coordination to provide relevant strategic, directional, and technical advice to the governments as well as other governmental institutions

91%	MATCHING BLOCK 287/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

across the spectrum of key departments of policy/development process. The Prime Minister of India heads the Aayog as the Ex-officio Chairperson. Currently Suman Bery is the vice chairperson of the NITI. Further, it has some full-time as well as part-time members along with four Union Ministers serving as ex-officio members about which we will learn in the organisation of the NITI Aayog. The governing council which forms the larger extended circle of the Aayog has in it

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 288/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

all State Chief Ministers and Lt. Governors of the Union Territories who in their absence are presented by relevant subordinates which are usually the Finance ministers of the respective states. The council as an institution upholds the ideal of cooperative federalism in India. The demands of the states as a cumulative demand are the real reflection of the demands of the nation. In a country like India with its various differentiations, bringing the states together to create a coordinated plan is a huge task. It the governing council that provides a base for such a national agenda to the Centre and the individual States.

87%	MATCHING BLOCK 289/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

This initiative helps to focus upon where a cooperative plan which can be undertaken by mutual understanding based on deliberative discussion between the various stakeholders.

76%	MATCHING BLOCK 290/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

Additionally, there exists specific regional councils, and the Prime Minister can invite special invitees who are experts and specialists regarding specific areas to provide professional help to the council.

179 Since the NITI Aayog serves as a think tank of the government, its function is more directional in nature. The functioning of the NITI Aayog can be equated to a policy dynamo, providing advice on strategic policy matters to the governments at the Centre and the States. Further, it includes handling of economic issues of both domestic and international importance which become part of the core of financial administration in India. In addition to policy formulation, planning, strategic empowerment, the NITI

90%	MATCHING BLOCK 291/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 292/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

Aayog provides direction to the monitoring and evaluation (M & E) activities in India, which creates the feedback loop in the system of planning. Monitoring of implementation and evaluation of the policies post execution are important in creating plans for the future and take cognizance of various aspects of planning of earlier policies. The NITI Aayog also does the much important job of assuring the mechanisms required to assert quality standards, ethical procedures and provides appropriate institutional mechanisms for redressal as well. Thus, the NITI Aayog in effects is a body that reflects the following specific functionaries- • It acts as a group of people that the Government has entrusted the responsibility for formulating and regulating policies of socio-economic importance. The policies are of serious importance as post the Planning Commission the NITI Aayog has taken up the duties concerning the transformation of India. • as a replacement for the Planning Commission and the NDC, the

62%	MATCHING BLOCK 293/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

90%	MATCHING BLOCK 294/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

NITI Aayog assists the Government in both social and economic issues concerning the country. Here no differentiation is made between the states and the union as the issues of the country as national in nature. • as an institution that with the help of professional department specific experts provide a great deal of insight to the government from the private sphere bringing in a dynamic approach to governmental work. • as a body that actively monitors and evaluates the implementation of the Government's programs and initiative. This helps to uphold the principle of both accountability and flexibility in dealing with matters of national importance which are considered underperforming features in traditional bureaucracy. 4.3. ORGANIZATION OF NITI AAYOG

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 295/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

180 When the NITI Aayog replaced the Planning Commission the government institution was replaced by the think tank, there was a change in goals and objectives of the think tank. The government in its role as a facilitator for change in creating modern responses to the demands of time gave much leeway in its active responsibilities, the structure though was merely brought down for better coordination between the responsible authorities. The structure of the NITI Aayog is as follows- ? Chairperson: Prime Minister who was the chairperson of the Planning Commission was appointed with the same position in the NITI Aayog. ? Vice-Chairperson: To be appointed by Prime-Minister and enjoys the position of a cabinet minister. This is usually given to a professional expert associated with the areas of economy, finance, banking etc. ?

92%	MATCHING BLOCK 298/319	SA	Swayam Prabha- History-State and the Political ... (D141677590)

Governing Council: Chief Ministers of all states and Lt. Governors of Union Territories are members of the governing council, but as most chief ministers are busy with the day-to-day functioning in the states, the representatives appointed by the CMs attend the governing council meeting. The representatives are usually Finance ministers of respective states. ? Regional Council: To address specific regional issues, a regional council comprising the Chief Ministers and Lt. Governors Chaired by Prime Minister or his nominee was also instituted. ? Ad hoc Membership: 2 members in ex-officio capacity from leading Research institutions on rotational basis to provide insight on planning process outside government mechanism. ?

62%	MATCHING BLOCK 296/319	W

Ex-Officio membership: Maximum four from Union council of ministers to be nominated by Prime minister to bring in the perspective from the legislative corners. ?

92%	MATCHING BLOCK 297/319	W

Chief Executive Officer: Appointed by Prime minister for a fixed tenure, in rank of Secretary to Government of India is appointed from the bureaucratic order itself. ? Special Invitees: Experts, Specialists with domain knowledge are also nominated by Prime minister to bring in various perspectives to the process of planning as a whole. 4.4. FUNCTIONS OF NITI AAYOG 181 The government while formulating the structure of the NITI Aayog tried to bring in a more concentrated effort to the process of national planning. To narrow down the targets its was proposed that broadly the NITI Aayog would focus its functioning upon 7 core issues. These were inspired by the Panchsheel policy of Indian foreign relations. The seven pillars based on which the NITI Aayog works are: 1. Pro-People: The core idea was to fulfil the aspiration of the society at large as well as individuals. 2. Pro-Active: In anticipation of being responsive to the needs of the people of the nation, the NITI Aayog is to adopt proactive role. 3. Participation: Unity in diversity being the crux of Indian state, the aim was to bring all functionaries together for a unified attempt for development. 4. Empowering: Empowerment of women have been the concern of people in governance for a long time. Women thus were to be focussed more in all aspects of planning. 5. Equity: Providing an opportunity for the youth to find newer avenues for employment (both generation and fulfilment). 6. Transparency: The task was making government more visible and responsive to the needs of the people 7. Inclusion of All: The aim was not only to bridge class barriers but bring in changes for the society's most deprived section which were along caste lines, religious lines, demographic lines. Examples may include SCs, STs, OBCs, Minorities, Garib (poor), Gaon (villages) and Kisan (farmers). In the official sense of the term functions, various functionaries of the NITI Aayog play different functions within the think tank's ambit. As it is not a statutory body the performance of the institution is to be validated more in qualitative terms but to make the study of the institution easier functions have been based more or less on the above-mentioned pillar. Accordingly, NITI performs the following functions: 1) Evolving a shared vision for the development of the nation. The states and the union government as expected to take the cause of national development forward with high performance priorities and coordinated strategies.

182 2)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 299/319	SA	05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)

Through structured support initiatives and mechanisms with the States on a continuous basis

the ideal of cooperative federalism is held aloft. This is in a way starts a process of recognizing that strong States make a strong nation if there is a shared intent and mutual effort towards development planning. 3) Developing efficient mechanisms to formulate plans to provide newer means of village level development. The goal can be fulfilled with aggregation of such plans at progressively at higher levels of government. 4) The economic strategy and policy of the nation is to be coordinated within the ambit of larger national security as financial security becomes the backbone of country and requires constant improvement and protection. 5) More attention is to be paid to empower the sections of the society that haven't been benefitted by the progress of the country or haven't reaped the benefits of economic development such as backward castes, women, tribals, socially ostracised and exploited sections. 6) Not only designing long term policies and programmes but also monitor their progress and efficacy in delivering the requisite goals. Through feedback mechanism necessary mid-course corrections can be implemented and the process for incorporating improvements within the plan may be introduced to rectify problems. 7) The NITI Aayog aims to bridge the gap between government policy and policy research. It encourages partnerships between educational and policy research institutions with the government so that policy formulation as a process gets a holistic perspective. 8) Creation of a support system that provides system to create a knowledge bank for instilling the spirit of innovation, and entrepreneurial excellence through a collaborative community. This community is to be comprised of national and international experts, practitioners, and other partners sharing the same goals. 9) Offers a platform for resolution of various problems that plague the nation based on various factors. These problems can be of inter sectoral nature as well as inter departmental issues. There is always a need to solve such cross-sectional zones in order to accelerate the implementation of development agenda. 183 10) Maintaining a state-of-the-art Resource Centre. Such a resource centre can be a repository on good governance initiatives and best practices implemented as well as executed that serve the purpose for sustainable and an equitable development and, enables its dissemination and accessibility to stakeholders. 11) Identification of the needed resources is a core area that needs to be strengthened as resources determine the extent of policy implementation. The scope of delivery and probability of success of programmes in a great way are dependent on these resources. The Aayog also does monitoring and evaluating purposes too so that the resource utilisation is maximum. 12) To keep Indian system up to date with the modern state of the art infrastructure, continuous upgradation of technologies is a must. Therefore, modern strategy implementation requires modernising infrastructure which the NITI Aayog is responsible for. 13) Capacity building is an important function of the Aayog as public policy isn't only for the present but also for the future as well. The need is for effective implementation of programmes and initiatives that makes capacity building not only feasible for present problems but foresees future problems and prepares effectively for it as well. Through the aforementioned functions of the NITI Aayog, a list of common features regarding the functioning of the Aayog can be ascertained. These are- 1. Cooperative and Competitive Federalism • The Aayog acts a primary platform for operationalizing Cooperative Federalism in India. This is done by enabling States to have active participation in the formulation of national policy.

78%	MATCHING BLOCK 300/319	SA	05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 301/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

To make the formulation and execution of such policies a success flexible deadlines are provided. With proper implementation this enhances efficacy

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 302/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

as well as achieving time-bound implementation of quantitative and qualitative targets. 2. Shared National Agenda •

The Aayog ushers a shared vision of national development based on specific priorities and strategies. This is achieved with the active involvement of States by providing a framework for the development of the nation with cooperation from the federal units. 3.

80%	MATCHING BLOCK 303/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

State's Best Friend at the Centre 184 • Supporting the States in addressing their own challenges.

The Aayog aims not only to help the states but aid them as well by helping them realise their own potentials by building on strengths and comparative advantages. This is achieved through the coordination between the Ministries both at the centre and the state. This process exalts their ideas at the centre, which helps the states by providing consultancy support. 4. Decentralized Planning • Restructure the planning process into a bottom-up model.

89%	MATCHING BLOCK 304/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

This has been a major goal of the NITI Aayog to break the centralised top to bottom level of planning and rather create system that takes the initiative from the bottom and the top only aides and supports the proposed initiatives. 5.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 305/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

Vision & Scenario Planning • Design medium and long-term strategic frameworks across all sectors.

Strategic planning requires solutions to existing problems as well as provide nuanced ideas for future problems that may crop up with time such as war, disease, bad weather conditions, natural calamities etc. 6. Network of Expertise • Initiate streamlining of external ideas and expertise into government policies and programmes through a collaboration between the national and international experts in various fields sharing the common national agenda.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 306/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 308/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

This would entail being Government's link to the outside world. 7. Knowledge and Innovation hub •

The aim of the Aayog is also to act as not only an accumulator but as a disseminator of research related to policy formulation and execution. This enhances the probability to choose and initiate the best practices on good governance, through a Resource Centre which identifies, analyses, shares and facilitates replication of the same. 8. Harmonization • Facilitate harmonization of actions across different layers of government through communication, coordination, collaboration, and convergence amongst all stakeholders. The emphasis will be on bringing all together on an integrated and holistic approach to development. 10.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 307/319	W

92%	MATCHING BLOCK 310/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

Coordinating interface with the World 185 • Being the nodal point for strategically harnessing global expertise and resources from multilateral platforms, nations etc makes the Aayog a centre of linking global practices with national aspirations which is coordinated by the governments. 11.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 311/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

Internal Consultancy • Offer an internal consultancy function to central and state governments on policy and program design, specialised skills such as structuring and executing Public Private Partnerships. 12. Capacity building •

Infrastructure creation and upgradation of technologies across government functionaries is an important feature. This aids the attempt of the government in benchmarking with latest global trends and providing managerial and technical knowhow. 13. Monitoring and Evaluation

90%	MATCHING BLOCK 309/319	W

Policy initiation, formulation, implementation, and execution are important aspects but what makes the process holistic and the institution capable is the feedback mechanism created to rectify, re- engage, reformulate policies according to requisite changes. The Aayog acts as a monitoring authority as well to keep mismanagement at bay. 4.5. ROLE OF NITI AAYOG The NITI Aayog as a think tank has a very well-defined role in the planning process of the nation. Its mainly coordination, implementation, capacity creation, monitoring to be very precise among the various stakeholders aimed to prepare plans and strategies targeting a national agenda. The role of the NITI Aayog can be brought down to the following points- ?
To foster cooperative federalism through structured support initiatives and mechanisms with the States on a continuous basis, recognizing that strong States make a strong nation. ? To develop mechanisms to formulate credible plans at the village level and aggregate these progressively at higher levels of government. ? To ensure, on areas that are specifically referred to it, that the interests of national security are incorporated in economic strategy and policy.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 312/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

186 ?

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 313/319	SA	HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative ... (D158855566)

To pay special attention to the sections of our society that may be at risk of not benefitting adequately from economic progress. ?

Ouriginal by Turnitin

96% MATCHING BLOCK 314/319 SA 05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)

To provide advice and encourage partnerships between key stakeholders and national and international like-minded Think Tanks, as well as educational and policy research institutions. ? To create a knowledge, innovation, and entrepreneurial support system through a collaborative community of national and international experts, practitioners and other partners. ? To offer a platform for resolution of inter-sectoral and inter-departmental issues to accelerate the implementation of the development agenda. ? To maintain a state-of-the-art Resource Centre, be a repository of research on good governance and best practices in sustainable and equitable development as well as help their dissemination to stakeholders. 4.6. CONCLUSION The NITI Aayog is an institution that meets the requirement of a modern India, development in a modern democracy which is a part of global economic environment cannot be sluggish in its process. The need to fasten the pace of policy implementation in India is also of political importance, as a diverse country as India requires a concentrated effort between the state governments and the central government to bring together a holistic effort towards national development. The usefulness of the Aayog is many but there has been criticism as well to the functioning of the think tank. The scenario of Indian private sector hasn't changed as expected. As the NITI Aayog has no role in influencing private or public investment, the impact it has in bringing in FDI has been very limited. The Indian society has remained more or less unequal in its nature and the concerted goals of reducing the same has been very limited. Inequality has continued to grow in the Indian society and the effect of NITI AYOG in combating this has been very limited. The desired goals of reducing impoverishment have been very limited in that sense, the most serious concern has been the politicization of the organization in recent times which has seen many state governments complaining about the approach the NITI Aayog takes in answering to the cause of the states with non-centre based 187 parties. There haven't been new arrays to solve structural issues in the country are still not visible. Caste disparities exist, geographical inadequacies haven't been sorted as fast as expected, infrastructural development hasn't been boosted at the speed it was expected to. Many complain about the fact that the NITI AYOG has been transformed into a glorified recommendatory body which lacks the requisite power to bring positive change in the government's actions and implementational problems has plagued the institution. The efficiency of the Aayog cannot be judged so easily as there has been only a few years of its existence and every institution requires time to prove its commitment o desired goals. As a think tank it's a visionary step to bring policy processing in India at a global level and the goals ascribed can only be reached after all efforts have been put together for a considerable time towards a national goal, only then the true judgement on NITI Aayog be passed. 4.7. SUMMARY ? The Planning Commission got replaced by the National Institute for Transforming India, known as, NITI Aayog in 2014 to bring in a modern perspective to policy formulation India. ? The primary goal has been to rejuvenate the process of planning in India and transform it from top-bottom to bottom-top approach of bringing in development. ? The state and the union government are supposed to act in a coordinated manner to address the issues of the nation as a whole. The initiatives include capacity building measures, upgradation of technologies and resource coordination based on monitoring. ? The role of the NITI Aayog as a comparatively new institution has become a more streamlined version of the Planning Commission with less government interference and more public private participation. ? Though there have been criticisms regarding the NITI Aayog, the judgement about its efficiency can only be passed after a certain amount of time when its policies have been implemented and evaluated. 4.8. KEY WORDS

188 1. Think tank- a research institute or organization employed to solve complex problems or predict or plan future developments, as in military, political, or social areas. 2. Entrepreneurial- Being entrepreneurial can mean knowing your industry inside out, and being able to exploit that knowledge to create new opportunities. Being entrepreneurial can mean sharing ideas freely and celebrating so-called failures as learning and growing experiences. 3. Innovation- Innovation is the spark of insight that leads a scientist or inventor to investigate an issue or phenomenon. That insight is usually shaped by an observation of what appears to be true or the creative jolt of a new idea. Innovation is driven by a commitment to excellence and continuous improvement. 4. Accumulator- a person or thing that collects /accumulates something. 5. Disseminator- someone or something that spreads or gives out something, especially news, information, or ideas, to a lot of people. 6. Ad-hoc- Ad hoc literally means "for this" in Latin, and in English this almost always means "for this specific purpose." Issues that come up in the course of a project often require immediate, ad hoc solutions. 7. Ex-Officio- The term “ex-officio” is a common Latin phrase which when literally translated means “from the office.” It should not be used to describe a type of membership in an organization but rather an obligation or privilege a person has, by virtue of their position, to serve on a board or committee 4.9. MODEL QUESTIONS Short questions ? Which institution was replaced by the NITI Aayog and why? ? What is a think tank? ? What are the 7 pillars of the NITI Aayog? Medium questions ? Write any 2 criticisms of the NITI Aayog? ? What is PPP model in governance? ? Describe the organization of the NITI Aayog?

189 Long questions ? Explain the new role the NITI Aayog is expected to perform in planning process of India? ? NITI Aayog encourages cooperative federalism between the centre and the state. Explain? ? Discuss in detail the transformation of Indian planning structure from planning commission to NITI Aayog and reasons for the same? 4.10. REFERENCES Rao. M.G. (2015) “Role and functions of the NITI AAYOG” Economic and Political Weekly L No. 4(4) Website - https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/NITI_Aayog Website - http://niti.gov.in/content/niti-policy-briefs Website - https://old.amu.ac.in/emp/studym/100015563.pdf CC VI DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION BLOCK 6 PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT MACHINERY IN INDIA UNIT 5 NEW ACTORS OF DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION: NGOs AND SELF-HELP GROUPS STRUCTURE 5.1.Learning Objectives 5.2.Introduction 5.3.NGO’s in India 5.4.Role of NGO’s 5.5.Role of self help groups 5.6.

Conclusion 5.7.Summary 5.8.Key words 5.9.Model questions 5.10. References 5.1. LEARNING OBJECTIVES After studying the unit, one should be able to:

190 • Describe the role of NGOs in aiding the development process in the country. • Discuss the functioning of NGOs in India. • Explain the relationship between the Government and NGOs and self-help groups. • Analyse the strengths and weaknesses of self-help groups in creating developmental structures. 5.2. INTRODUCTION Development administration has gone beyond the limits of governmentality in the 21 st century. Today development isn’t a phenomenon restricted to the halls of the bureaucratic order or the parliament, it has not only gone beyond these but has been ever expansive. New actors have taken part in planning, policy, and administration. Private entities such as think tanks, research forums and others are taking an active part in the development of a country. The times of centralised development mechanism are a thing of the past, modern governments have decentralised and de-regularised development administration to bring in various players into the process to make it more holistic and coordinated. In this new environment, non-governmental organisations, self-help groups and other functionaries are taking an active part in contributing to the development narrative of the country. The modern notion of the role of NGOs is in advancing the cause of national agenda by coordinating closely with the government hand in hand. The entire narrative of development planning today is one of active people’s participation with the governmental authorities. This is primarily achieved through joint ventures, participation and cooperation between the public actors and the organised non-governmental organisations (NGOs) and self-help groups. The above-mentioned coordinated impetus is achieved by various interfaces of the developmental decision-making process such as planning, implementation of the plan, monitoring and evaluation of plans and policies. Any chance of success, efficiency, effectiveness, economy and legitimacy of the government is possible only via this cooperative venture. This unit will highlight the role in development planning by non-governmental organisations, self-help groups and other units. These organisations render speedy and less costly implementation of development policies by providing useful information to administration in programme planning, implementation and evaluation. To further the cause of national development the relationship between NGOs and government is of utmost importance. These relationships can vary in dimensions and 191 authority butregarding the process of planning and implementation of development programmes, they become sincere agents of transformation and progression.Despite their obvious advantages though, there are many constraints which affect the relationship due to the nature of such organisations and groups and to what extent their help is expected to yield results. An attempt has been made to analyse the strengths and weaknesses of all such organisations that take part in development administration in the country and with the help of certain examples the goal is to suggest useful methods to improve their functioning as well as the relationship between the government and these organisations. 5.3. NGOs IN INDIA To limit the vastness of the topic the unit is going to focus on the existence and functioning of NGOS in India specifically. To set the record straight, NGOs aren't a new phenomenon in India. They have been present before the country achieved its independence in various forms.During the second half of the 19th century, when the phenomenon of nationalist consciousness spreading all around the country as the need for structural change gained momentum. There was a demand for changing the narrative of society from exploitation and submissiveness to need for care and need for support. During this time numerous organizations were established including the Friend-in-Need Society (1858), Prathana Samaj (1864), Satya Shodhan Samaj (1873), Arya Samaj (1875), the National Council for Women in India (1875), and the Indian National Conference (1887). These were the seeds of present-day NGOs in the country and tried to help people within the framework of colonial domination. The Societies Registration Act (SRA) was approved in 1860. This act strengthened the ability of NGOs to function and provided legitimacy to the growing body of nongovernment organizations (NGOs). The same SRA continues to be the bedrock law for NGOs in India, although most state governments and the central government as well has brought in amendments to make the act more feasible and suitable to the requirements of the present times. One of the most pertinent examples of this form of legitimacy would be the example of Christian missionaries who have been active in India for a long time even before the advent of the colonial powers. They in turn performed the role of NGOs without getting the name for it. The action of the missionaries was based and directed into efforts toward reducing poverty and constructing hospitals, schools, roads, and other infrastructure. These were the earliest evidence for NGO work in India.

192 Modern day NGOs focus their efforts on education, health, relief, and social welfare during times of crises as well as normalcy. Post 1947 the Government of India decided to centralise the process for taking the developmental planning to itself and created various institutions for it. Thus, the realm of social welfare and development was taken under the wing of the government. This limited the scope and performance of the NGOs but recognized their potential for civil society to supplement and complement governmental efforts. Within the first Five-Year Plan it was explicitly stated that, - "

100% MATCHING BLOCK 319/319 SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

Any plan for social and economic regeneration should take into account the services rendered by these agencies and the state should give them maximum cooperation in strengthening their efforts." The mention of "these" indicated the participation of organisations that weren't part of the government but making contributions on grounds of development planning and other welfare areas. Keeping the idea of state centric planning for development based on NGO centred assistance, the Central Social Welfare Board was established in 1953. The sanctioned targets were to promote social welfare activities and support people's participation programs through NGOs. This was the step that enhanced the role and expanse of NGOs in India. The required impetus for additional funding and recognition led to a growing body of professional NGOs in the country. Due to certain budgetary constraints the Government of India decentralized a section of development activities throughout the 1950s and encouraged funding from all sources to contribute in nation building and national integration. The establishment of the National Community Development Program and the National Extension Service were early steps in this direction. With further decentralization to aid rural development there was the introduction of the three-tier Panchayati Raj system in 1958to bring in development measures to the lowest sectors of the country. With this there was a great increase in the number of farmers unions and agricultural cooperatives around this time. The core of this initiative was networking, which became more commonplace in civil society. In 1958, the Association for Voluntary Agencies for Rural Development (AVARD) was founded as a consortium of major voluntary agencies. The influx of International NGOs came to India during major crises years. It was to provide drought relief during two consecutive agricultural seasons, 1965–1966 and 1966–1967. After their intervention many NGOs set up permanent offices in the country to deal with any repeat of such events and help aid and strengthen the process of bringing relief and welfare to the common

193 man. Moreover, foreign funds began flowing to domestic NGOs in India, changing the character of non-governmental participation in the country. Today, about 1.5 million NGOs work in India (i.e., non-profit, voluntary citizens' groups organized on a local, national, or international level). This includes temples, churches, mosques, gurudwaras and organisations run by them such as community kitchens, libraries, think tanks. These also include certain sports associations, hospitals, educational institutions etc. Most NGOs are functioning with the help of private donors and the ground work is centred around volunteers rather than employees. 5.4. ROLE OF NGOs The role NGOs play is crucial to the development at not only at a macro level but also micro level as well. The expansive nature of NGOs is to be taken into consideration while looking at various functions they play in the society. NGOs are expected to play an important role in development planning process at an executionary and supportive stages. Various aspects of development are looked into under this role. This includes the role of planner and implementer of development programmes at the localised level. Here planners, mediators and other staff working under the NGOs bring together their forces and resources to initiate planning. Then there is the role of mobiliser of local resources and initiatives such as fund raisers, campaigners working within the NGOs. Then there is the section of catalysts, enablers and innovators in the form of groups of researchers, think tanks specialists and experts. They also act as builders of self-reliant sustainable society where public policy formulation can yield development initiatives for the people and at the same time play the role of mediator of people and government. All in all, NGOs have been performing the roles of facilitators, supporters and partners of government programmes; agents of infrastructural upgradation and disseminators of information. The most important area of this has been the education sector where various NGOs have put their best foot forward as facilitator of development education, training and technical assistance. Their contribution has been a major factor of transformation, conscientisation and improvement of the developmental administration in India from the perspective of collective responsibility. To sum up the role of NGOs the following major roles can be pointed out-
194 ? Supporting Government plans/projects NGOs help in selecting the most suitable place for innovative projects and specify the weaknesses and strengths. ? Suggest the ways to overcome the shortcomings that government may face at the time of implementation as NGOs act more quickly on ground than the bureaucracy especially in the domain of planning and implementation of government programmes. ? They support and demonstrate the pilot projects very effectively and facilitate clear communication between citizens and the government. The effectiveness of NGOs is always more because of the geographical expanse of the nation and its socio-economic diversity that makes government machinery to reach every nook and corner difficult. Thus, NGOs have the first hand feel of the community response to the existing programmes and basic needs of the people as their force is more grounded and diversified.One of the major advantages of having NGOs function is their feedback mechanism which is very fast as their personnel are more coordinated and flexible in functioning. In a way they provide much needed feedback for modifying or changing the existing programmes and formulating new policies and programmes, as per the needs of local people upon various mechanism put to check the reach and efficacy of programmes. However, communication downward reflects informing people (local) about the government plans, functions and resources which creates a mechanism of holistic functioning between the NGOs and the government along with the people. 5.5. ROLE OF SELF-HELP GROUPS Self-Help Groups have become a decisive unit in the developmental programmes of government and NGOs. Planning based on government institutions required certain ground level organisations to create a real impact in large and diverse country as India. Considering the early challenges faced by the nation, the dearth of public institutions to reach the lower ranks was of high priority for the government to solve. At the same time to aid the people in these areas, extensive government machinery needed to be put into effect which was unavailable. To solve this self- help groups were strengthened and given powers to bring people in associated institutions such as cooperative banks,

195 stores, seed banks, cooperative societies, consumer stores, agricultural markets, traders association, handicraft associations, medical service providers and others. A number of strategies were put in place to aid the functioning of these self-help groups especially in rural areas to bring welfare to those who aren't at the core of developmentalist purview of the government. All the mechanisms put to use to alleviate the problem of poverty by both governmental and non-governmental organizations were implemented on ground in the best manner possible by judicious functioning these groups. Though, not all is problem free in the area of self-help groups. Some of them were partially successful and others were failures. Rural communities were riddled with certain problems that hindered the democratic ideal of functioning. Rampant paternalist tendencies of lower governmental organisations with local strongmen, discrimination in appointment, disparity in providing relief in times of distress, patriarchal hindrances to women empowerment and economic mismanagement have had adverse effects on the success the SHGs. To solve such problems not only decentralisation of functioning was done but of strategies as well- Community based approaches, family-based approaches and individual based approaches were used to solve the aforementioned problems. The existence of sound community networks in villages has been the result of self-help groups created under the aegis of the government.It is increasingly being recognised as one of the most important elements of financial stabilization in the rural areas

83% MATCHING BLOCK 315/319 W

ensuring empowerment and participation in the development agenda. The help in accessing credit to the poor and thus, play a critical role in poverty alleviation process in the rural areas of the country has been a major achievement of the SHGs.

78% MATCHING BLOCK 316/319 W

87% MATCHING BLOCK 317/319 W

They also help to build social capital among the poor, especially women. This has empowered women and given them greater voice in the society.Financial independence through self-employment has many externalities such as improved literacy levels, better health care and even better family planning. Functions of SHGs ?

99% MATCHING BLOCK 318/319 W

It looks to build the functional capacity of the poor and the marginalized in the field of employment and income generating activities. ? It resolves conflicts through collective leadership and mutual discussion. ? It provides collateral free loan with terms decided by the group at the market driven rates. 196 ? Such groups work as a collective guarantee system for members who propose to borrow from organised sources. The poor collect their savings and save it in banks. In return they receive easy access to loans with a small rate of interest to start their micro unit enterprise. ? Self-Help Groups have emerged as the most effective mechanism for delivery of microfinance services to the poor. 5.6.

CONCLUSION In India NGOs have been performing the role of government programme and policy facilitators for long. NGOs have aided the government's socioeconomic development agenda for nation building and development. The field of development administration hasn't been bereft of this phenomenon. Various NGOs such as Child Rights and you (CRY), Smile India foundation, Goonj Foundation, HelpAge India and others have contributed extensively to the cause of vulnerable, deprived sections. The welfarism done on behalf of these NGOs contribute heavily towards the development of both social as well as economic development of the society. As years passed the development narrative of the country shifted many times, sometimes due to external crises and sometimes due to internal need for changes. The road for NGOs has been tougher than self-help groups as the latter has been supported extensively by the government as their alignment with community centric development coalesced with the government. The NGOs have had a mixed relationship with the government. Their importance changed when the government changed their approach towards policy formulation and execution. When the emphasis shifted from capital- oriented growth to anti-poverty programs as per government, the NGOs made a distinct shift from welfare and service delivery interventions to a direct attack on poverty and instituted various programmed for the same. Subsequently, in the 1990s, when the state moved on to macroeconomic and structural reforms, NGOs began to focus on scaling up their activities. This led to their working with the state to develop innovative methods and ensure commensurate changes in policy. They also stepped-up advocacy and lobbying, increased networking, expanded their range of operations, and targeted marginalized groups. At times various NGOs were cornered by the government for their alleged role in money laundering, corruption induced methods, lobbying for policy change as well as kickbacks in the form of money or 197 other benefits. Hawala transactions have been a major concern for the government where NGOs have surfaced as institutions for defrauding public money. NGOs have had a love hate relationship with the government but their role in aiding the development narrative of the country cannot be dismissed or taken lightly. Self help groups have had a lasting relationship as well as impact on the marginalised sections of the India society due to their more decentralised nature of functioning and outreach. Development administration in India has been a holistic attempt to take the cause of Indian development forward. The socio economic as well as cultural upliftment has been a joint ventured achievement of governmental organisations, private organisations, NGOs, self-help groups and individuals in their private capacity. The prime need of the hour is that NGOs need to release their fears of government hounding and suspicion. The fallacies of thought of being susceptible to bureaucratic control, of being greedy for achievement and indulging in corruption must be relinquished. Their confidence in the government, cooperation and joint efforts with personnel will only strengthen the unity, territorial integrity and sovereignty of the nation and promote socio-economic development. 5.7. SUMMARY ? Non-governmental organisations have been present in India pre-1947. Their role has shifted from providing aid to various other roles which are mostly in aiding the initiatives of the government related to developmental programmes and policies. ? NGOs have contributed to various domains of welfare in the country in arenas of education, child rights, medical aid, disaster aid etc. Economic developmentalism has been a core feature of NGO functioning in India. ? Self-help groups on the other hand have had a direct effect in decentralised planning procedures of the government related to welfarism in rural areas and marginalised communities. ? Various criticisms remain of NGOs in India mainly on grounds of money mismanagement, laundering, lobbying, corruption etc. High bureaucratic red tape-ism has been the problematic area brought up by NGOs against government intervention.

198 5.8. KEYWORDS 1) NGO- Non-governmental organizations, or NGOs, were first called such in Article 71 in the Charter of the newly formed United Nations in 1945. While NGOs have no fixed or formal definition, they are generally defined as non-profit entities independent of governmental influence (although they may receive government funding). 2) Self-help group- These are informal groups of people who come together to address their common problems. While self-help might imply a focus on the individual, one important characteristic of self-help groups is the idea of mutual support – people helping each other. 3) Cooperative society- A cooperative society is often a voluntary association of individuals who come together with the intention to work together and to promote their economic interests. These societies work on the principle of self-help as well as mutual help. The primary goal is to provide support to the members. 4) Paternalist- It is the interference of a state or an individual with another person, against their will, and defended or motivated by a claim that the person interfered with will be better off or protected from harm. 5) National integration- It is the awareness of a common identity amongst the citizens of a country. It means that though the individuals belong to different communities, castes, religions, cultures and regions and speak different languages, all of them recognize the fact that they are one. 6) Hawala- It can be defined as a money transfer method, which takes place outside the traditional banking system and requires a minimum of two Hawala dealers (or hawaladars) that take care of the "transaction". In India, illegal money laundering is often referred as hawala transaction. 5.9. MODEL QUESTIONS Short questions ? What is an NGO? ? What is a self-help group?
199 ? Name 5 Indian NGOs and their areas of work? Medium questions ? Discuss in short how SHGs have helped Indian villages? ? Which crisis brought and influx of international NGOs to India? ? Write about the common criticisms associated with NGOs in India? Long questions ? Discuss in detail the role of NGOs? ? Write a short note on any one of the NGOs working in India? ? Explain in detail why Self-help groups have been more successful in Indian developmental narrative based on their functions? 5.10. REFERENCES Bava, Noorjahan (1997)" Non-Governmental Organisation in Development Theory and Practice", Kanishka Publishers, New Delhi. Chandra, Snehlata (2001) "Non-Governmental Organisations-Structure, Relevance and Functions", Kanishka Publishers, New Delhi. Lyal S. Sunga. (2005) "NGO Involvement in International Human Rights Laws and NGOs". Cambridge: UN Press. Narayan, D., Chambers, R., Meera, S., and Petesch, P. (2000) "Voices for Poor. Crying out for Change". Oxford University Press. Sarin, Ritu (1995), 'The Big Business of NGOs', The Pioneer Website- https://ngofeed.com/top-ngos-in-india/ Website- https://www.drishtiias.com /to-the-points/Paper2/self-help-groups-shgs

Hit and source - focused comparison, Side by Side

Submitted text As student entered the text in the submitted document.

Matching text As the text appears in the source.

1/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	24 WORDS	59%	MATCHING TEXT	24 WORDS

Unit-I Meaning and Scope STRUCTURE 1.1.Learning Objectives 1.2.Introduction 1.3.Understanding the Meaning of Development Administration 1.4. Scope of Development Administration 1.5. Conclusion 1.6.Summing Up 1.7.

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

2/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 50% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

is a by-product of comparative study of Public Administration in the Third World which are making efforts to attain self-generated economic growth. The

SA SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

3/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 100 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 100 WORDS

The essence of development administration is to bring about change through integrated, organised and properly directed governmental action. 2 In the recent past, the governments in most developing nations have shifted their focus on development by means of planned change and people's participation. With this shift of administrative concern towards developmental objectives the researchers and practitioners of Public Administration have been forced to conceptualise the developmental condition and bridge the gaps in the administrative theory. The growing welfare functions of the government have brought into the limelight the limitations of the traditional theory of administration. The

The essence of development administration is to bring about change through integrated, organised and properly directed governmental action. In the recent past the governments in most of the developing nations have shifted their focus on development by means of planned change and people's participation. With this shift of administrative concern towards developmental objectives the researchers and practitioners of Public Administration have been forced to conceptualise the developmental situation and to bridge the gaps in administrative theory. The growing welfare functions of the government have brought into limelight the limitations of the traditional theory of administration. The essence of administration in the essence of administration in the present conditions lies in its capacity to bring about change in the structure and behaviour of different administrative institutions, to develop an acceptance

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

4/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

essence of administration in the present conditions lies in its capacity to bring about change in the structure and behaviour of different administrative institutions, to develop an acceptance

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

5/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 65 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 65 WORDS

the change, and to create a system that can sustain change and improve the capacity of institutions to change. All these calls for renewed efforts on the part of institutions engaged in the tasks of development. Thus development administration as an area of study and as means to realise developmental goals assumes importance. This unit will highlight the meaning andscope of development administration. 1.2.	the change and to create a system which can sustain change and improve the capacity of institutions to change. All this calls for renewed efforts on the part of institutions engaged in the tasks of development. Thus development administration as an area of study and as means to realise developmental goals assumes importance. This unit will highlight the meaning, features and genesis of development administration. 1.2

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

6/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 42 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 42 WORDS

widely participatory process of directed social change in a society, intended to bring about both social and material advancement including greater equality, freedom and other valued qualities for the majority of people through their acquisition of greater control over their environment.	widely participatory process of directed social change in a society intended to bring about both social and material advancement including greater equality, freedom and other valued qualities for the majority of the through their gaining greater control over their environment. 2

W http://www.mim.ac.mw/books/P.B.%20Rathod%20Elements%20of%20Development%20Administration.pdf

7/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

Nigro, "administration is the organization and use of men and materials o accomplish a purpose".	Nigro says 'Administration is the organization and use of men and materials to accomplish a purpose'. •

W https://ddceutkal.ac.in/Syllabus/MA_PUB_ADD/Development_Administration.pdf

8/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 48 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 48 WORDS

Development Administration' is coined by U. L. Goswami in 1955. However, the formal recognition to it was given when the Comparative Administration Group of the American Society for Public Administration and Committee on Comparative Politics of Social Sciences Research Council of the USA laid its intellectual foundations.	development administration? It was first coined by U.L. Goswami in 1955, but the formal recognition to it was given when the Comparative Administration Group of the American Society for Public Administration the Committee on Comparative Politics of the Social Sciences Research Council of the U.S.A. laid its intellectual foundations.

W https://www.compuhoy.com/what-is-the-importance-of-development-administration/

Ouriginal by Turnitin

9/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	57 WORDS	97%	MATCHING TEXT	57 WORDS

Scope of Development Administration: With the de-emphasis on the dichotomy between development administration and non- development administration, the scope of development administration as a discipline as well as a profession has increased enormously in recent years. Firstly, the discipline or the study of development administration has focused on the progressive goals of administrative systems and thus

SCOPE OF DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION With the de-emphasis on the dichotomy between development administration and non-development administration, the scope of development administration as a discipline as well as a profession has increased enormously in recent years. The discipline or the study of development administration has focused on the progressive goals of administrative systems and thus

W https://www.ebookbou.edu.bd/Books/Text/SOB/CEMBA-CEMPA/scom_4613/Unit-01.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

10/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 245 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 245 WORDS

values have taken a central place in the analysis of development administration. Second, these progressive goals are being studied in a very wide context involving political, economic, social, cultural and technological systems. Thus, the students of development administration are examining the variegated dimensions of political, economic, social, cultural and technological development in an objective manner. Thirdly, Development Administration analysis is not confined to national boundaries, it transcends them and has rightly become cross-national and cross-cultural in its approach and orientation. Fourthly, its expanding intellectual network has enveloped a number of branches of public administration that have their origin in a variety of functional administrative areas. For instance, areas such as industrial administration, agricultural administration, educational administration, health administration, and the continually growing intellectual network of development administration would encompass irrigation administration and social welfare administration. Thus, development administration, going beyond the issues of large-scale transformation in developing countries, helps in strengthening the empirical base of public administration as a 4 discipline and thus makes it more 'rigorous'. Its ideas and lessons can be fruitfully utilised for facilitating the process of all-round development. Little wonder, development administration, during the past four decades, has influenced the whole notion of governance at the national as well as the international levels. In South Asia, as in other regions of Asia, Africa and Latin America, the concerns of holistic transformation of societies have penetrated into the philosophy and practices of governance. The interdependence

Values have taken a central place in the analysis of development administration. Second, these progressive goals are being studied in a very wide context involving political, economic, social, cultural and technological systems. Thus, the students of development administration are examining the variegated dimensions of political, economic, social, cultural and technological development in an objective manner. Third, development administration analysis is not confined to national boundaries and it transcends them and has rightly become cross-national and cross-cultural in its approach and orientation. Fourth, its expanding intellectual network has enveloped a number of branches of public administration that have their origin in a variety of functional administrative areas. For instance, areas such as industrial administration, agricultural administration, educational administration, health administration, and the continually growing intellectual network of development administration would encompass irrigation administration and social welfare administration. Thus, development administration, going beyond the issues of large-scale transformation in developing countries, helps in strengthening the empirical base of public administration as a discipline and thus makes it more 'rigorous'. Its ideas and lessons can be fruitfully utilised for facilitating the process of all round development. Little wonder, development administration, during the past four decades, has influenced the whole notion of governance at the national as well as the international levels. In South Asia, as in other regions of the Asia, Africa and Latin America, the concerns of holistic transformation of societies have penetrated into the philosophy and practices of governance. The interdependence 19

W https://www.ebookbou.edu.bd/Books/Text/SOB/CEMBA-CEMPA/scom_4613/Unit-01.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

11/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 186 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 186 WORDS

meaning, Nature, Scope and Significance of political, economic, social, cultural and technological development has become a widely accepted truth. This has made the strategies of national transformation increasingly multi-faceted and ecological in orientation. Second, the administrative system being the crux of the governance system has become an integral component of any process of change. It is impossible to conceive of 'development' in any realm without first examining the requisite role of the administrative system. What lends sustainability to the process of development is a sound administrative system that provides vitality and viability to the change process. Third, the process of nation-building has become closely intertwined with the process of institution-building as a result of the thrust of development administration. Whether it is urbanisation, rural transformation, educational development, health improvement, women's welfare, childcare or technological growth, no organised development is possible without systematic planning, programming, coordinating, human resource management and administration of non-human resources. Thus, the dimension of effectiveness in the process of governance has taken a crucial place. Undoubtedly, this is the clear impact of the sprawling scope of development administration. Fourth,

Meaning, Nature, Scope and Significance of political, economic, social, cultural and technological development has become a widely accepted truth. This has made the strategies of national transformation increasingly multi-faceted and ecological in orientation. Second, the administrative system being the crux of the governance system has become an integral component of any process of change. It is impossible to conceive of 'development' in any realm without first examining the requisite role of the administrative system. What lends sustainability to the process of development is a sound administrative system that provides vitality and viability to the change process. Third, the process of nation building has become closely interwined with the process of institution building as a result of the thrust of development administration. Whether it is urbanisation, rural transformation, educational development, health improvement, women welfare, childcare or technological growth, no organised development is possible without systematic planning, programming, coordinating, human resource management and administration of non-human resources. Thus, the dimension of effectiveness in the process of governance has taken a crucial place. Undoubtedly, this is the clear impact of the sprawling scope of development administration. Fourth,

W https://www.ebookbou.edu.bd/Books/Text/SOB/CEMBA-CEMPA/scom_4613/Unit-01.pdf

12/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 138 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 138 WORDS

development administration has paved the way for a new 'humane' administration. It has propelled the promotion of enterprising and inspiring leadership that generates a motivational climate and induces the best among the personnel forming the network of development organisations. This has led to the expansion of the scope of development administration. And lastly, with the emergence of strong faith in the philosophy of liberalisation, globalisation, privatisation, and public-private partnership, the scope of development administration is transcending the public (government) systems and is influencing the functioning of even the emergent modified private sector that is learning the strategies of co-existing and co-functioning with the public system without in any way imbibing the dysfunctionalities of bureaucracies. In times to come, the scope of development administration is bound to further expand vertically as well as horizontally. 5 1.4.

development administration has paved the way for a new 'humane' administration. It has propelled the promotion of enterprising and inspiring leadership that generates a motivational climate and induces the best among the personnel forming the network of development organisations. This has led to the expansion in the scope of development administration. And lastly, with the emergence of strong faith in the philosophy of liberalisation, globalisation, privatisation, and public-private partnership, the scope of development administration is transcending the public (government) systems and is influencing the functioning of even the emergent modified private sector that is learning the strategies of co-existing and co-functioning with the public system without in any way imbibing the dysfunctionalities of bureaucracies. In times to come, the scope of development administration is bound to further expand vertically as well as horizontally. 1.6

W https://www.ebookbou.edu.bd/Books/Text/SOB/CEMBA-CEMPA/scom_4613/Unit-01.pdf

13/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

the practice of development administration? 3. What is the scope of development administration, the nature of development administration. 3. What is the scope of development administration

W https://www.ebookbou.edu.bd/Books/Text/SOB/CEMBA-CEMPA/scom_4613/Unit-01.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

14/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 258 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 258 WORDS

of Development Administration: There are certain distinct features of development administration. We would now discuss them briefly: 1. Change Orientation: The first and foremost element of development administration is its change orientation. Change forms part of philosophic values of development administration. Development administration involves itself in establishing a new social order in which growth and distributive justice coexist. For PaiPanandikar the central theme of development administration is socioeconomic and political change. Development administration cannot be status-quo oriented. No development can take place unless and until it introduces certain positive changes in a system. Changes such as structural reorganisation of administration, innovative programme to increase production, remove unemployment, poverty etc., new schemes to improve employer-employee relations must form a part, of development administration. 2. Goal Orientation: Developing countries are facing the problems of poverty, squalor, injustice, unequal distribution of wealth, lopsided agricultural growth, underdeveloped technology etc. These colossal issues need to be tackled systematically by fixation of priorities and goals. Development administration is the means through which the goals of development viz., social justice, modernisation, industrialisation and economic growth can be achieved. 3. Innovative Administration: Development administration focuses on replacing/ improving the existing governing structures and norms with the ones that suit the changing political and social environment. In other words, development administration is one that is dynamic and progressive in thought and action. It is interested in identifying and applying new structures, methods, procedures, 10 techniques, policies, planning projects and programmes so that the objectives and goals of development are achieved with of Development Administration There are certain separate characteristics of development administration. We would now discuss them briefly: Change Orientation The first and foremost element of development administration is its change orientation. Change shapes part of philosophic values of development administration. Development administration involves itself in establishing a new social order in which growth and distributive justice co-exist. For Pai Panandikar the central theme of development administration is socio- economic and political change. Development administration cannot be status- quo oriented. No development can take place unless and until it introduces certain positive changes in a system. Changes such as structural reorganization of administration, innovative programme to augment production, remove unemployment, poverty etc., and new schemes to improve employer-employee relations necessity form a part, of development administration. Goal Orientation Developing countries are facing the troubles of poverty, squalor, injustice, unequal sharing of wealth, lopsided agricultural growth, underdeveloped technology etc. These colossal issues need to be tackled systematically through fixation of priorities and goals. Development administration is the means through which the goals of development viz., social justice, modernization, industrialization and economic growth can be achieved. Innovative Administration Development administration focuses on replacing/ improving the existing governing structures and norms with the ones that suit the changing political and social environment. In other words development administration is one that is dynamic and progressive in thought and action. It is interested in identifying and applying new structures, methods, procedures, techniques, policies, planning projects and programmes so that the objectives and goals of development are achieved with minimum possible resources and time. India, for example, has experimented with many new institutions and procedures which can be termed as the hallmarks of development administration. We have introduced various development programmes like IRDP (Integrated Rural Development Programme), TRYSEM (Training Rural Youth for Self-Employment), NREP (National Rural Employment Programme), DWACRA (Development of Women and Children in Rural Areas), Tribal Development Programmes etc. These programmes broadly aim at minimum possible resources and time. India, for example, has experimented with many new institutions and procedures which can be termed as the hallmarks of development administration. We have introduced various development programmes like IRDP (Integrated Rural Development Programme), TRYSEM (Training Rural Youth for Self Employment), NREP (National Rural Employment Programme), DWACRA (Development of Women and Children in Rural Areas), Tribal Development Programmes etc. These pragrammes broadly aim at

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

15/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 68 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 68 WORDS

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

16/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 126 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 126 WORDS

creation of job opportunities and the reduction of poverty. We have also established some development agencies like the District Rural Development Agency, District Planning Cells, State Planning Boards, Co-operatives etc. Thus development administration has to be innovative enough in order to realise the pre-determined objectives of development. In fact, innovative and creative administration leads to speedy realisation of goals. Client-Oriented Administration: Development administration is positively oriented towards meeting the needs of the specific target groups, like small and marginal farmers of landless agricultural labourers and rural artisans in India. The sociocultural and politico-economic progress of these sections forms the essential basis of performance appraisal of development administrators. Many target group-centred or beneficiary-group-oriented organisations have to be created so as to provide these underprivileged sections creation of job opportunities and reduction of poverty. We have also established some development agencies like the District Rural Development Agency, District Planning Cells, State Planning Boards, Co-operatives etc. Thus development administration has to be innovative enough in order to realise the pre-determined objectives of development. In fact, innovative and creative administration leads to speedy realisation of goals. • Client-Oriented Administration: Development administration is positively oriented towards meeting the needs of the specific target groups, like small and marginal farmers of landless agricultural labourers and rural artisans in India. The socio-cultural and politico-economic progress of these sections forms the essential basis of performance appraisal of development administrators. Many target groups centered or beneficiary-group oriented organisations have to be created so as to provide these under-privileged sections

W https://www.sharmaacademy.com/mppsc-notes/mppsc-notes-paper-II-administration-and-management.php

17/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 138 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 138 WORDS

the requisite goods and services. It has been suggested that development administration is a 'people-oriented' administration which gives priority to the needs of its beneficiaries by preparing, reviewing and, if necessary, changing the programmes, policies and activities aimed at the satisfaction of the needs of people in question. The administration is involved in the betterment of a lot of the deprived and the weak. Their upliftment becomes a part of the whole administrative ethos. The welfare of the weaker sections is a part of the administrative value. This feature points 'out the Development Administration: Concept and Meaning Concepts and Approaches are highly motivated and committed to a progressive philosophy aiming at cutting the roots of vested interests in society. 'This is possible if the people of initiative, extra dedication and perseverance are inducted into the development	the requisite goods and services. It has been suggested that development administration is ' people-oriented' administration which gives priority to the needs of its beneficiaries by preparing, reviewing and, if necessary, changing the programmes, policies and activities aimed at the satisfaction of the needs of people in question. The administration is involved in the betterment of the lot of the deprived and the weak. Their upliftment becomes a part of the whole administrative ethos. The welfare of the weaker sections is a part of the administrative value. This feature points 'out the 'L 3 -L ---- 6-- ..C -A-:-:-&--*:-- T L - ---%.~h-i -C ..... A-..-I-----+.-----:--+:-- Development AdnhhistfPtion : Concept and Meaning are highly motivatdd and committed to a progressive philosophy aiming at cutting the roots of vested interests in the This is possible if the people of initiative, extra-dedication and perseverance are inducted into the development

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

18/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	401 WORDS	93%	MATCHING TEXT	401 WORDS

administrative structures. Training of personnel can be one effective method of creating such a team. Development administrators should not just formulate plans for the people but even monitor them in such a way that the beneficiaries are actually benefited. 11 Participation-Oriented Administration: Development administration accepts for its purposes the principle of the associative and participative system of administration. Here, people are not treated as mere passive recipients of benefits of goods and services. They are taken as active participants in the formulation and execution of development plans, policies and programmes. It is recognised that centralised administration will not only be unable to take cognisance of local problems in a realistic frame but it would also be deprived of the use of local initiatives, energies and resources. Hence, effective formulation of programmes and their implementation with the help and association of the local people is now a well-recognised principle of administration. It involves giving people an increasing share in the government's governance and management of developmental affairs. That is why the involvement of Panchayati Raj institutions in planning and administration has found renewed support in India’s development strategy. Effective Co-ordination Since development implies increasing specialisation and professionalization, the number of agencies and organisations involved in development tasks has considerably gone up. In order to have the maximum benefit of this emergent administrative system, co-ordination between various administrative units and activities is essential. To achieve maximum results, wastage of resources, time and cost has to be avoided. Development Administration has to co-ordinate the activities of development agencies and organisations to integrate their efforts and energies for the realisation of development goals. This would even save the administration from the problems of duplication of functions, neglect of important functions and unnecessary focus on irrelevant or marginally relevant activities. It would thus minimise administrative lag. Ecological Perspective Development administration shapes the environment-political, social and economic and also gets affected by it in turn. It is not a closed system. It receives feedback from the social system and responds to the demands put on it by the system. In a way, development administration is related to the environment and involves close interaction between the administration and the environment. The environment sets forth the operative parameters of development

administrative structures. Training of personnel can be one effective method of creating such a team. Development administrators should not just formulate plans for the people but even monitor them in such a way that the beneficiaries are actually benefited. Participation-Oriented Administration Development administration accepts for its purposes the principle of associative and participative system of administration. Here, people are not treated as mere passive recipierits of benefits or goods and services. They are taken as active participants in the formulation and execution of development plans, policies and programmes. It is recognised that centralised administration will not only be unable to take cognisance of local problems in a realistic frame, but it would also be deprived of the use of local initiatives, energies and resources. Hence, effective formulation of programmes and their implementation with the help and association of the local people is now a well recognised principle of administration. It involves giving people an increasing share in the governance and management of developmental affairs of the government. That is why the involvement of Panchayati Raj institutions in planning and administration has found renewed support in the development strategy of India. Effective Co-ordination Since development implies increasing specialisation and professionalisation, the number of agencies and organisations involved in development tasks has considerably gone up. In order to have the maximum benefit of this emergent administrative system, co-ordination between various administrative units and activities is essential. To achieve maximum results, wastage of resources, time and cost has to be avoided. Development .administration has to co-ordinate the activities of development agencies and organisations to integrate their efforts and energies for the realisation of development goals. This would even save the administration from the problems of duplication of functions, neglect of important functions and unnecessary focus on irrelevant or marginally relevant activities. It would thus minimise administrative lag. Ecological Perspective Development administration shapes the environment-political, social and economic and also gets affected by it in turn. It is not a closed system. It receives a feedback from the social system and responds to the demands put on it by the system. In a way, development administration is related to the environment and involves close interaction between the administration and environment. The environment sets forth the operative parameters of development administration. It requires the qualities of flexibility and responsiveness in administrative actions and methods. The changes in administration affect its environment and changes in administration. It requires the qualities of flexibility and responsiveness in administrative actions and methods. The changes in * administration affect its environment and changes in

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

19/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

as “the organization and direction of human and material resources to achieve desired ends”.

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

20/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 28 WORDS 65% MATCHING TEXT 28 WORDS

development and development administration. 4.2. Introduction: Development Administration and Administrative Development are interrelated concepts. Both are dependent on each other. Administration of development is as important as development and development of administration are interrelated concepts. Both are dependent on each other. Administration of development is as important as

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

21/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

development of administration. To achieve development goals it is essential that there is development of adniinistration. To achieve development goals it is essential that there is

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

22/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 58 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 58 WORDS

proper assessment of resources, proper plan formulation, evaluation and. implementation, adequate involvement of people, emphasis on technological change and self-reliance. At the same time, we also need developed bureaucracy, integrity in administration, initiative, innovativeness, a delegation of powers, decentralised decision-making etc. Administrative development cannot take place without administrative change and reform. Both concepts support each other and proper assessment of resources, proper plan formulation, evaluation and. implementation, adequate involvement of people, emphasis on technological change and self-reliance. At the same time we also need developed bureaucracy, integrity in administration, initiative, innovativeness, delegation of powers, decentralised decision-making etc. Administrative development cannot take place without administrative change and reform. Both the concepts support each other and development of administration is needed for the administration of development. As per F. Riggs 'development administration and 'administrative development' have a chicken-and-egg kind of relationship. The superiority of one concept over the other cannot be established. 4.3.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

23/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 38 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 38 WORDS

development of administration is needed for administration of development. As per F. Riggs 'development administration' and 'administrative development' have a chicken and egg kind of relationship. Superiority of one concept over the other cannot be established. 1.3

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

24/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 124 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 124 WORDS

Development Administration: 22 There is no uniform definition of development administration which is agreeable to all. But we can at least arrive at certain basic features and characteristics in order to understand the concept of development administration, we should try to understand the meaning of the concept viz., administration of development and development of administration. Administration of Development: Development is integral to the aims and activities of the government, especially in developing countries. Because of the paucity of resources, humans and materials in their counties, the need for making optimum utilisation of available means and augmenting new means assumes a great importanc. Development administration thus becomes a means through which the government brings quantitative and qualitative changes in an economy.

DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION There is no uniform definition of development administration which is agreeable to all. But we can atleast arrive at certain basic features and characteristics of order to understand the concept of development administration, we should try to understand the meaning of the concept viz., administration of development and development of administration. i) Administration of Development Development is integral to the aims and activities of the government especially in the developing countries. Because of paucity of resources, human and material in their counties, the need for making optimum utilisation of available means and augmenting new means assumes a great importance. Development administration thus becomes a means through which the governmen€ brings quantitative and qualitative changes in an economy.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

25/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 79 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 79 WORDS

government is not only fixing priorities but also making efforts to realise them. Though Weidner is said to be the - first to conceptually explain the definition of development administration, many other scholars, like Riggs, Ferrel Heady, Montgomary, Gant, PaiPanandikar have attempted to define the term in their own ways. However, before we analyse the different definitions and meanings of the term, it should be mentioned that all of them agree that development administration is an effort towards

Government is engaged in not only fixing priorities but also making efforts to realise them. Though Weidner is said to be the - first to conceptually explain the definition of development administration, many other scholars, like Riggs, Ferrel Heady, Montgomary, Gant, Pai Panandikar have attempted to define the term in their own ways. However, before we analyse the different definitions and meanings of the term, it should be mentioned that all of them agree that development administration is an effort towards

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

26/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 255 WORDS 81% MATCHING TEXT 255 WORDS

planned transformation of the economy involving not only the sphere of administration but also formulation of policies and indeed the society as a whole. It is an effort at the synchronisation of changes in all spheres of development- economic, political, social and cultural. Thus development is not only viewed in terms of growth process, but it includes a process of social change. The State plays a leading role in bringing about development through its administrative system. In order to discharge this role it requires a distinct type of support by administration which involves, as has been observed by Swerdlow, special understanding of problems in the developing countries. These must be perceptible at different operative levels i.e., officials must make enough different decisions, adopt enough different policies and engage in enough different activities to warrant the different designations of development administration. Thus development administration is simply termed as an action or functioning part of the government administration. It is action- oriented and places the administration at the centre in order to facilitate the attainment of development objectives. For Harry J. Friedman development administration is the implementation of programmes designed to bring about socioeconomic progress and nation- building, and the changes within the administrative system which increase its capacity to implement the programmes. According to Hahn Beenlee, development administration is involved in managing a government or an agency so that it acquires an increasing capability to adapt to and act upon new and continuing social changes with a view to achieve sustained 23 growth. Thus development administration

planned transformation of the economy involving not only the sphere of administration but also formulation of policies and indeed the society as a whole. It is an effort at the synchronization of changes in all spheres of development—economic, political, social and cultural. Therefore development is not only viewed in conditions of growth process, but it comprises a process of social change. The State plays a leading role in bringing in relation to the development through its administrative system. In order to discharge this role it requires a separate type of support through administration which involves, as has been observed through Swerdlow, special understanding of troubles in the developing countries. These necessity be perceptible at dissimilar operative stages i.e., officials necessity create enough dissimilar decisions, adopt enough dissimilar policies and engage in enough dissimilar activities to warrant the dissimilar designations of development administration. Therefore development administration is simply termed as an action or functioning part of the government administration. It is action-oriented and places the administration at the centre in order to facilitate the attainment of development objectives. For Harry J. Friedman development administration The implementation of programmes intended to bring in relation to the modernity (i.e. socio-economic progress and nation-building), and The changes within the administrative system which augment its capability to implement the programmes. According to Hahn Been lee, development administration is involved in managing a government or an agency so that it acquires an rising capability to adapt to and act upon new and continuing social changes with a view to achieve sustained growth. Gant that development administration

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

27/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

the ability of future generations to meet their own needs.
13 5.

SA SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

28/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 190 WORDS 81% MATCHING TEXT 190 WORDS

involves two elements: one, the bureaucratic process that initiates and facilitates socio-economic progress by making the optimum use of talents and expertise available; and two, mobilisation of administrative skills so as to speed up the development process. Development administration concentrates on the needs and desires of the people. It is concerned with formulation of plans, programmes, policies and projects and their implementation. It plays a central role in carrying out planned change i.e. it is concerned with planning, co-ordination, control, monitoring and evaluation of plans and programmes. It is not only concerned with the application of policies as determined by the political representatives in existing situation but also with introducing efforts to modify existing situations so as to serve the cause of the masses. Therefore, administration of development implies: one, the execution of programmes designed to bring about progressive improvement; two, the changes within an administrative system which increases its capacity to implement such programmes. In a nutshell, administration of development involves the following objectives: a) Application of innovative strategies for development: This emphasises on development at the grassroots level; b) Development as a need-oriented and self-reliant process:

involves two elements: o The bureaucratic process that initiates and facilitates socio- economic progress through creation the optimum use of talents and expertise accessible; and Mobilization of administrative skills so as to speed up the development process. Development administration concentrates on the needs and desires of the people, it is concerned with formulation of plans, programmes, policies and projects and their implementation. It plays a central role in carrying out planned change i.e. it is concerned with planning, co-ordination, control, monitoring and evaluation of plans and programmes. It is not only concerned with the application of policies as determined through the political representatives in existing situation but also with introducing efforts to modify existing situations so as to serve the cause of the masses. The administration of development implies: The execution of programmes intended to bring in relation to the progressive improvement The changes within an administrative system which increases its capability to implement such programmes. In administration of development involves the following objectives: Application of innovative strategies for development o on development at the grassroots stage. Development has be a need-oriented and self-reliant process

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

29/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 63 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 63 WORDS

on social development and human capital as a major resource development has to be viewed not merely as a technological problem but also as an ideological norm; c) Profound and rapid change: This inclines to establish a distinct and just social order recognising and highlighting the unity rather than dichotomy between politics and administration; d) Effective and efficient use of scarce resources:

on social development and human capital as a major resource development has to be viewed not merely as a technological problem but also as an ideological norm profound and rapid change in order to establish a distinct and just social order recognising and highlighting the unity, rather than dichotomy between politics and administration effective and efficient use of scarce resources

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

30/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	142 WORDS	88%	MATCHING TEXT	142 WORDS

effective and efficient administration; e) Creation of a politics-administrative environment: This is oriented towards securing basic needs of the population; d) Freedom of administrative machinery: It is to express its values and beliefs without fear or favour on programmes and projects. Development of Administration or Administrative Development: Development Administration has to be efficient and effective. For that purpose it has to aim at enlargement of administrative capabilities and structural and behavioural change. It is this aspect of administration that is called administrative development or development of administration. In simple terms it means development of administrative health by introducing administrative rationalisation and institution building. The purpose implicit in this concept is not merely 24 changing the administrative procedures and channels but also bringing out fundamental change in administration that leads to political development, economic growth, and social change.

Effective and efficient use of scarce possessions o Creation of a politics-administrative environment is oriented towards securing basic needs of the population o Freedom of administrative machinery to express its values and beliefs without fear or favour on programmes and projects. Development of Administration or Administrative Development Development Administration has to be efficient and effective. For that purpose it has to aim at enlargement of administrative capabilities and structural and behavioral change. It is this aspect of administration that is called administrative development or development of administration. In simple conditions it means development of administrative system, of administrative health through introducing administrative rationalization and institution building. The purpose implicit in this concept is not merely changing the administrative procedures and channels but also bringing out fundamental change in administration that leads to: Political development, Economic growth, and Social change.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

31/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 215 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 215 WORDS

Development of administration further means cultural change in administration. The colonial administrative culture is unsuitable to the changed socio-political ethos of the developing world. Our British legacy has adversely affected the administration. The obsolete Acts e.g. Police Act, 1861,'cannot take us towards the path of change. Development of administration should refer to the creation of ability to adjust to new stimuli or changes. The development of administration aims at qualitative and quantitative transformations in administration with an eye on the performance of management of affairs. The term also implies technological changes in administration so as to enable it to adopt new modes or techniques of administration. Thus administrative development focuses on adaptability, autonomy and coherence in administration. In short, administrative development is concerned with: a) The capacity of an administrative system to take decisions in order to meet the ever increasing demands coming from the environment and with the objective of achieving larger political and socioeconomic goals. b) Increase in size, in specialisation and division of tasks and in the professionalization of its personnel. c) A pattern of increasing effectiveness in the optimum utilisation of available means and further augmentation of the means, if necessary. d) Increase in administrative capability and capacity. e) Transformation of existing administrative mechanism into

Development of administration further means cultural change in administration. The colonial administrative culture is unsuitable to the changed socio-political ethos of the developing world. Our British legacy has adversely affected the administration. The obsolete Acts e.g. Police Act, 1861, cannot take us towards the path of change. Development of administration should refer to the creation of skill to adjust to new stimuli or changes. The development of administration aims at qualitative and quantitative transformations in administration with an eye on the performance of management of affairs. The term also implies technological changes in administration so as to enable it to adopt new manners or techniques of administration. Therefore administrative development focuses on adaptability, autonomy and coherence in administration. In short, administrative development is concerned with: The capability of an administrative system to take decisions in order to meet the ever rising demands coming from the environment and with the objective of achieving larger political and socio-economic goals. Augment in size, in specialization and division of tasks and in the professionalization of its personnel. A pattern of rising effectiveness in the optimum utilization of accessible means and further augmentation of the means, if necessary. Augment in administrative capability and Transformation of existing administrative mechanism into

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

Ouriginal by Turnitin

32/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 282 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 282 WORDS

machinery through modernising the bureaucracy by external inducement, transfer of technology and training. f) Replacement bf initiative, practices etc. with those based on realistic needs. g) Reducing the dependence on foreign experts by producing adequate trained manpower. h) Promotion of development initiative. i) Administrative reorganisation and rationalisation. j) Making modernisation culturally related. k) Removing or reducing bureaucratic immobility and widespread corruption. l) Reorientation of established agencies, and the delegation of administrative powers to them. m) Creation of administrators who can provide leadership in stimulating and supporting programmes of social and economic improvement. The meaning and importance of administrative development as an ingredient of development administration has been well summed up by Caiden in the following words, 25 “Administrative reform is an essential ingredient of development in any country, irrespective of the speed and direction of change. Administrative capacity becomes increasingly important in the implementation of new policies, plans and ideas. The improvements in administrative capacity may involve the removal of environmental obstacles, structural alternatives in traditional and innovatory institutions bureaucratically organised or otherwise. This would also necessitate changing individual and group attitudes and performance.” The behavioural pattern of bureaucrats is as crucial to development administration as the institutions and structures. The purpose of development of administration is to remove the administrative lag which seriously handicaps governments in planning and executing co- ordinated programmes of economic and social reforms. The predominant concern of development administration is to design and administer such development programmes which meet the developmental objectives. It is the administration geared to the task of achieving certain clear cut and specified objectives and goals expressed in operational terms. Thus machinery through modernising the bureaucracy by external inducement, transfer of technology and training. . -- 6) Replacement bf initiative, practices etc. with those bas@ on ~eakstic-negd?,-._- cwccped Reducing the dependence on foreign experts by producing adequate trained manpower. 8) Promotion of development initiative. 9) Administrative reorganisation and rationalisation. 10) Making modernisation culturally related. 11) Removing or reducing bureaucratic immobility and widespread corruption. 12) Reorientation of established agencies, and the delegation of administrative powers to them. 13) Creation of administrators who can provide leadership in stimulating and supporting programmes of social and economic improvement. The meaning and importance of administrative development as an ingredient of development administration has been well summed up by Caiden in the following words, "Administrative reform is an essential ing;edient of development in any country, irrespective of the speed and direction of change. Administrative capacity becomes increasingly important in the implementation of new policies, plans and ideas. The improvements in administrative capacity may involve the removal of environmental obstacles, structural alternatives in traditional and innovatory institutions bureaucratically organised or otherwise. This would also necessitate changing individual and group attitudes and performance." The behaviour pattern of bureaucrats is as crucial to development administration as the institutions and structures. The purpose of development of administration is to remove the administrative lag which seriously handicaps governments in planning and executing co-ordinated programmes of economic and social reforms. The predominant concern of development administration is to design and administer such development programmes which meet the developmental objectives. It is the administration geared to the task of achieving certain clearcut and sp-ecified objectives and goals expressed in operational terms. Thus administration is defined as a process of action motivated by and oriented to the achievement of certain predetermined goals. 4.4.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

33/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

administration is defined as a process of action motivated by and oriented to the achievement of certain predetermined goals.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19222/1/Unit-1.pdf

34/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

bureaucracies are large multi-layered organizations performing a large variety of complex, multi-faceted tasks.

Bureaucracies are large multi-layered organizations performing a large variety of complex, multi-faceted tasks.

W https://cepr.org/voxeu/columns/bureaucracy-and-development

35/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 42 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 42 WORDS

Historical accounts and empirical evidence support the claim that bureaucratic effectiveness and economic development are strongly correlated. Narrative evidence by historians and political scientists fuels the idea that establishing an effective bureaucracy has been vital to the development of modern nation-states.

Historical accounts and empirical evidence support the claim that bureaucratic effectiveness and economic development are strongly correlated. And narrative evidence by historians and political scientists fuels the idea that establishing an effective bureaucracy has been vital to the development of modern nation states,

W https://cepr.org/voxeu/columns/bureaucracy-and-development

36/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

fair play havoc with us; this illness is called Bureaumania." He fair to play havoc with us; this illness is called bureaumania." He

W https://ddceutkal.ac.in/Syllabus/MA_PUB_ADD/Development_Administration.pdf

37/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

existed in China before 960 A.D. and in Prussia between 640-1740 A.D.

SA SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

38/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	17 WORDS	91%	MATCHING TEXT	17 WORDS

Development is the process of acquiring a sustained growth of a system's capability to cope with

Development is process of acquiring a sustained growth of a system's capability to cope with

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

39/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	13 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	13 WORDS

continuous change toward the achievement of progressive political, economic and social changes.

continuous change toward the achievement of progressive political,economic and social changes.

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

40/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	12 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	12 WORDS

growth in the direction of modernity or nation-building and socio-economic progress

SA SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

41/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	24 WORDS	82%	MATCHING TEXT	24 WORDS

Development Administration is a carrier of new functions assumed by 39 developing countries embarking on the path of modernisation and industrialisation.

Development administration is a carrier of values. It embraces the array of functions assumed developing countries embarking on the path of modernization and industrialization.

W https://ddceutkal.ac.in/Syllabus/MA_PUB_ADD/Development_Administration.pdf

42/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	14 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	14 WORDS

planned or intended change in the direction of modernity or nation-building and socio-economic change.

planned or intended change in the direction of modernity or nation building and socio-economic change'

W https://ddceutkal.ac.in/Syllabus/MA_PUB_ADD/Development_Administration.pdf

43/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	24 WORDS	68%	MATCHING TEXT	24 WORDS

of development administration. Swerdlow says, "Development administration is that part of administration which is concerned with the development of country's economy and society."

SA SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

44/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

and objectives.The essence of Development Administration is to bring about change through integrated, organised, and properly directed governmental action. 1.5

AND FEATURES The essence of development administration is to bring about change through integrated, organised and properly directed governmental action.

W https://www.sharmaacademy.com/mppsc-notes/mppsc-notes-paper-II-administration-and-management.php

45/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 31 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 31 WORDS

a government's efforts to carry out programmes designed to reshape its physical, human and cultural environment but also to the struggle to enlarge a government's capacity to engage in such a government’s efforts to carry out pro- grams designed to reshape its physical, human, and cultural environment, but also to struggleto enlarge a government’s capacity to engage in such

W https://www.researchgate.net/publication/343685117_Colonial_Legacy_in_Development_Administration

46/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 68% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

BUREAUCRACY AND DEVELOPMENT Bureaucracy and development are two components that can be seen from an overview.

BUREAUCRACY AND DEVELOPMENT: Bureaucracy and development are two components of development philosophy if seen from an overview

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

47/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

ideas as ‘Bureaucracy’ represents static or orthodox and rigid values while ‘Development’ advocates dynamicor moving

ideas) as Bureaucracy represents static or orthodox and rigid values while Development advocates dynamic(moving)

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

48/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

values. Bureaucracy viewed by the Weberian model and other theorists pertains to values. Bureaucracy viewed by the Weberian model and other theorists pertains to

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

49/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	80 WORDS	87%	MATCHING TEXT	80 WORDS

same routine,unchanged and repeated procedures that enable it to continue,achieve its pre- established goals and handle its problems like a system without being influenced by external factors. Development as a concept on the other hand is seen as a phenomenon influenced by the concept of change and something which quickly adapts and adjusts to changes coming in through both external as well as internal factors on the way to development. It is the administrative process that evolved for developing countries.

same routine,unchanged and repeated procedures that enable it to continue,achieve its pre-estabilished goals and handle its problems like a system without being influenced by external factors. Development as a concept on the other hand is seen as a phenomenon influenced by the concept of change and is quick to adapt and adjust to changes coming in through both external as well as internal factors on the way to development. It is the administrative process evolved for developing countries.

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

50/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	19 WORDS	91%	MATCHING TEXT	19 WORDS

biggest existing entity and stable machinery that can achieve and lead the way towards the process of development

biggest existing and stable machinery that can achieve and lead the way towards the process of development

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

51/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	29 WORDS	82%	MATCHING TEXT	29 WORDS

Therefore, in the context of developing countries, bureaucracy and development are complementary and interdependent instead of being hostile 40 to one another when the development administration

Therefore in the context of developing countries Bureaucracy and development are complementary and inter dependant instead of being hostile to one another for the purpose of Development Administration.

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

52/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	17 WORDS	93%	MATCHING TEXT	17 WORDS

Today, development administration is concerned with the formulation and implementation of plans, policies, programmes, and projects.

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

53/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 30 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 30 WORDS

to provide training in attitudinal changes and incorporate dynamic and social values in themto know the required preparation of strategy and implementation of programmes in the present ecological setting.	to provide them training in attitudinal changes and incorporate dynamic and social values in them to know the requirement,preparation of strategy and implementation of programmes in the present ecological setting

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

54/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

to uplift the socio- cultural and economic status of the country.	to uplift the socio-cultural and economic status of the country.

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

55/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

bureaucracy apart from its duties like development policy formulation and implementation as well as	Bureaucracy,apart from its own duties like development policy formulation and implementation as well as

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

56/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 43 WORDS 80% MATCHING TEXT 43 WORDS

educating people about the policies is required to utilise their specialist knowledge to play the role of a friend,facilitator,coordinator,guardian, philosopher, and guide to the factors like market and civil societies as well as other instruments of development administration andin the process of development.	educating people about the policies has been suggested to utilise their specialist knowledge in order to play the role of a friend,facilitator,coordinator,guardian,philosopher and guide to the factors like market and civil societies as well as other instruments of development administration(as listed above under the same heading) in the process of development

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

57/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

Therefore,one can understand howthe overall evaluation and implementation of Development Administration programmes are carried out by the Bureaucracy playing the leading role in developing nations.	Therefore,as one can understand now that overall evaluation and implementation of Development Administration programmes are carried out by the Bureaucracy playing the leading role in developing nations.

W https://publicadministrationtheone.blogspot.com/2012/08/development-dynamics-concept-of.html

58/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

in India the role of bureaucracy is not only dominant in the implementation of public policies but is also pervasive in respect of policy formulation. Since

In India the role of the bureaucracy is not only dominant in the implementation of public policies, but is also pervasive in respect of policy formulation. Since

W https://ir.nbu.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/1286/6/05_chapter_02.pdf

59/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

British times, bureaucracy has no doubt played a very decisive and important role in the administrative system

British times, bureaucracy has no doubt played a very decisive and important role in the administrative system

W https://ir.nbu.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/1286/6/05_chapter_02.pdf

60/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 42 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 42 WORDS

but after independence, the role expectations and actual performances of the Indian bureaucracy have changed considerably. In the context of thegoals of a welfare state and development administration, bureaucracy has certainlyemerged as one of the key elements in the politico-administrative process but after independence the role expectations and actual performance of the Indian bureaucracy changed considerably. In the context of the goals of a welfare state and development administration, bureaucracy has certainly emerged as one of the key elements in the politico-administrative process.

W https://ir.nbu.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/1286/6/05_chapter_02.pdf

61/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

jumping out of the current values and being imbued with the cherished ideals and the goals set by the professed policies of the government.

SA chptr 1.doc (D17023044)

62/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

of its operations, the bureaucracy performs what is known as

SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

63/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 31 WORDS 60% MATCHING TEXT 31 WORDS

At certain stages, it performs the function of keeping a track ofwhat is required by the government at particular times. Lastly, at other times, it may perform the function of the executive and legislative branches of the government. Though this function also is performed under the overall control and supervision of politicians in the executive and legislative branches, howevermembers of the bureaucracy have to bear much of the responsibility for implementation.

SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

64/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 42 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 42 WORDS

the executive and legislative branches of the government. This function also is performed under the overall control and supervision of politicians in the executive and legislative branches; though, members of the bureaucracy have to bear much of the responsibility for implementation.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

65/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

such as poverty,unemployment, bad health, illiteracy, corruption, and authoritarianism. The

such as poverty, unemployment, bad health, illiteracy, corruption and authoritarianism. The

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

66/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 70% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

Administration 3. What is the contribution of bureaucracy to the various aspects of development? 4. Evaluate the administration? What is the contribution of bureaucracy to the several characteristics of development? Discuss the

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

67/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

the notion of public interest are to be protected by administrators as a kind of trust for

SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

68/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	43 WORDS	30%	MATCHING TEXT	43 WORDS

OBJECTIVES After studying the unit, you should be able to: ? Explain the origin and background of bureaucracy. ? Explain the origin and background of bureaucracy in India. ? Social Background of bureaucracy 2.1 INTRODUCTION The social background of

OBJECTIVES After reading this unit you should be able to: a the various aspects of the social background of bureaucracy; a discuss the influence of the social background of

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

69/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	14 WORDS	96%	MATCHING TEXT	14 WORDS

to find out which social economic group the senior civil servants come from.

to find out which social economic group do the senior civil servants come from."

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

70/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	143 WORDS	79%	MATCHING TEXT	143 WORDS

about the section of the society and from which most civil servants of a certain category are drawn, their education, whether they lived in villages or cities, their caste, their religion, and the extent to which women can get in to the services and so on. We can relate the social background to attitudes, or in other words study the influence of social class, education, and such other factors on the nature of bureaucracy, and hence the administration. Finally, we can examine how far the bureaucracy may be said to be representative of the society in general, that is to analyse whether it is drawn from all sections or whether members of a certain class predominate. Representativeness is often considered to be related to responsiveness and it may not be fully responsive to the other classes in society. 2.2

about the section of the society from which most civil servants of a certain category are drawn, their education, whether they lived in villages or cities, their caste, their religion, the extent to which women are able to get in to the services and so on. A second objective may be to relate the social background to attitudes, or in other words to study the influence of social class, education and such other factors on the nature of bureaucracy, and hence the administration. A third objective may be to study how far the bureaucracy may be said to be representative of the society in general, that is to examine whether it is drawn from all sections or whether members of a certain class predominate. Representativeness is often considered to be related to responsiveness: it may not be fully responsive to the other classes in the society.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

71/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	22 WORDS	75%	MATCHING TEXT	22 WORDS

Bhattacharya, M. (2008). New Horizons of Public Administration.Jawahar Publishers and Distributors. Laxmikanth, M. (2011). Public Administration. McGraw Hill Education.

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

72/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

The main finding of research studies is that most members of the higher bureaucracy have been drawn from the professional middle class of India, consisting of

The main finding of research studies is that most members of the higher bureaucracy have been drawn from the professional middle class of India, consisting of

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

73/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 35 WORDS 60% MATCHING TEXT 35 WORDS

of higher civil and military officers, lawyers, doctors, university teachers, and business executives. The father or the guardian of the majority of candidates who were direct recruits to the IAS belonged to this class.

of higher civil and military officers, lawyers, doctors, university teachers and business executives. Therefore the or guardian of in relation to the94 per cent of direct recruits to the IAS up to 1956 belonged to this class.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

74/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 162 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 162 WORDS

of the total recruitments. The situation concerning other higher services was similar, but the difference 47 between the numbers of those drawn from the professional middle class and landowning families was less. Thus, of the recruits to the Indian Police Service, the majority of candidates came from the professional middle class,and few candidates came from the landowning class. Of the recruits to the Indian Foreign Service, the majority came from the professional middle class and fewcame from the landowning class. In short, in the first decade after independence, most of the entrants to the higher bureaucracy belonged to the English educated, salaried or professional, upper middle class; there were very few entrants from other sections of the society. Recruitment to the higher bureaucracy was highly biased in favour of the professional middle class as it constituted less than 10 percent of the population but more than 80 percent of the recruits were drawn from it. During the

of the total. The situation with regard to other higher services was basically similar, but the difference between the numbers of those drawn from the professional middle class and from landowning families was less. Thus, of the recruits to the Indian Police Service, about 81 per cent came from the professional middle class and about 16 per cent from the landowning class. Of the recruits to the Indian Foreign Service, 82 per cent came from the professional middle class and 12 per cent from the landowning class. In short, in the first decade after independence, most of the entrants to the higher bureaucracy belonged to the English educated, salaried or profegsional, upper middle class; there were very few entrants from other sections of the society. Recruitment to the higher bureaucracy was highly biased in favour of the professional. middle class, since it constituted less than 10 per'cent of the population but more than 80 per cent of the recruits were drawn from it. During the period, the proportion of recruits from landowning families improved somewhat, although it remained low.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

75/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

period 1957-63, the proportion of recruits from landowning families improved somewhat, although it remained low.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

76/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 58 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 58 WORDS

In the case of the IPS also the direction of change was the same, the percentages of recruitment from the two classes were uneven. Likewise, in the case of certain other Central Services also the proportion of recruits from landowning families improved a little, although it went down in respect of the Indian Foreign Service.	In the case of the IPS also the direction of change was the same, the percentages of recruitment from the two classes being 77 and 19 respectively. In the case of certain other Central Services also the proportion of recruits from landowning families improved a little, although it went down in respect of the Indian Foreign Service.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

77/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 72% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

proportion of persons from farming familieshas been increasing gradually, however, the vast majority of those joining thehigher bureaucracy still come from the professional middle class.	proportion of persons from farming families has been increasing gradually, the vast majority (about 70 per cent) of those joining the higher bureaucracy still come from the professional middle class.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

78/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 97 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 97 WORDS

education, research studies show that most of the entrants into the higher bureaucracy are drawn from among those educated at exclusive schools and colleges. The phrase "exclusive schools and colleges" refers to educational institutions which charge high fees and hence are generally joined only by children from the upper and richer sections of society. The medium of instruction in these institutions isusually English only. What is even more interesting, there has been an increasing role of education at exclusive schools for entry into the higher echelons of the civil service. Of those recruited to the IAS,	Education I I Research studies shew that most of the entrants into the higher bureaucracy are drawn I from among those educated at exclusive schools and colleges. The phrase "exclusive i schodls and colleges" refers to educational institutions which charge high fees and hence are generally joined only by children from the upper and richer sections of the society. The medium of instruction in these institutions is usually English only. What is even more interesting, there has been an increasing role of education at exclusive schools for entry into the higher echelons of the civil service. Of those recruited to the IAS

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

79/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 42 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 42 WORDS

had been educated in such schools. Thus, since independence, the proportion of recruits educated at exclusive schools had gone up by four times. The significance of education in exclusive colleges has also been unmistakable. More than half of the IAS recruits	had been educated in such schools. Thus since Independence, the proportion of recruits educated at exclusive schools had gone up by four times. The significance of education in exclusive colleges has also been unmisiakable. More than half of the IAS recruits, 56

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

80/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

all the other colleges put together which had contributed less than half. A similar picture emerges when we consider the role of education at the better-known universities.

all the other colleges put together had contributed less than half. A similar picture emerges when we consider the role of education at the better known universities.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

81/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

been educated at the six universities of Madras, Bombay. Calcutta, Delhi, Punjab, and Allahabad. These six universities also contributed been educated at the six universities of Madras, Bombay. Calcutta, Delhi, Punjab and Allahabad. These six universities also contributed 79

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

82/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 106 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 106 WORDS

caste factor, the higher bureaucracy is recruited predominantly from the so- called higher castes. People of low caste are also generally poor and cannot afford higher education for their children. To compensate for the age-old discrimination against those having a low social status, the Constitution of India provided for "reverse discrimination" in the shape of reservation of jobs for scheduled castes in Public Administration. Fora long, however, these quotas were not filled, since candidates of scheduled castes and tribes could often not get qualifying marks in the competitive examination. Government coachincenterses 48 were therefore started to help such candidates in preparing for the examination.

Caste The higher bureaucracy is recruited predominantly from the so called higher castes. People of low caste are also usually poor and cannot afford higher education for their children. To compensate for the age old discrimination against those having a low social status, the Constitution of India provided for "reverse discrimination" in the form of reservation of jobs for scheduled castes and tribes in Public Administration. For long, though, these quotas were not filled, since candidates of scheduled castes and tribes could often not get qualifying marks in the competitive examination. Government coaching were so started to help such candidates in preparing for the examination.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

83/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

the population. In other words, persons of low social status were still under-represented in the higher bureaucracy.

the population. In other words, persons of low social status were still under-represented in the higher bureaucracy.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

84/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	28 WORDS	87%	MATCHING TEXT	28 WORDS

In the sphere of religion, while all the important religions of India are represented in the higher bureaucracy, some of them have fewer members than their proportion in the higher bureaucracy. Religion While all the important religions of India are represented in the higher bureaucracy, some of them have fewer members than their proportion than their proportion in the population. The representation of women in the higher bureaucracy has increased consistently.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

85/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	19 WORDS	97%	MATCHING TEXT	19 WORDS

than their proportion in the population. vi) Gender' The representation of women in the higher bureaucracy has increased consistently.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

86/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	38 WORDS	68%	MATCHING TEXT	38 WORDS

While there hasbeen an increase in the number of women getting into the IAS, they constituted a less number during the early years. Since women constitute about half of the population, they may be said to be

While there has been an increase in the number of women getting into the IAS, they constituted only 7 per cent of the IAS officers Since women constitute about half of the population, they may be said to be

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

87/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	22 WORDS	85%	MATCHING TEXT	22 WORDS

we have studied the social background of the higher bureaucracy in India based on research studies made from time to time, we have studied the social background of the higher bureaucracy in India on the basis of research studies made from time to time.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

88/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	47 WORDS	93%	MATCHING TEXT	47 WORDS

studies for the lower bureaucracy have not been made, presumably because it is not considered to play as important a role in the political system. However, some comparison of the social background of the two sections of the bureaucracy can be attempted based on available data.

studies for the lower bureaucracy have not been made, presumably because it is not considered to play as important a role in the political system. However, some comparison of the social background of the two sections of the bureaucracy can be attempted on the basis available data.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

89/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	21 WORDS	70%	MATCHING TEXT	21 WORDS

while the study suffered from certain limitations, it does still provide some data for purposes of comparison. 2.5

While the study suffered from certain , Social Background of Indian limitations. it does prcvide some data for purposes of comparison,

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

90/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	26 WORDS	76%	MATCHING TEXT	26 WORDS

great difference between the values, norms, practices, beliefs, and information of the higher bureaucracy, the lower bureaucracy, and the people. This creates a lack of great differences between the values, norms, feelings, beliefs and information of the higher bureaucracy, the lower bureaucracy and the people. This makes for lack of ----..- :-...:--

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

91/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	35 WORDS	91%	MATCHING TEXT	35 WORDS

due to lack of communication with the people, and their lack of cooperation, administrators are unable to assess the success of programmes, and the problems in the way of their fulfillment properly. One of

Due to lack of communication with the people, and their lack of cooperation, administrators are unable to assess the success of programmes, and the problems in the way of their fulfilment properly. Lack of

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

92/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	71%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

of Bureaucracy and its organistion. His thought has influenced generations of scholars on bureaucracy and formal

SA PSC_1046.pdf (D164969508)

93/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	91%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

the important functions of the bureaucracy in developing countries is to deal with poverty, its causes, and the significant functions of the bureaucracy in developing countries is to deal with poverty, its causes and

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

94/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 36 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 36 WORDS

consequences. If the upper section of the bureaucracy, which plays an important role in policy formulation as well as implementation, has little understanding of the nature of poverty in the country, ineffectiveness is bound to consequences. If the upper section of the bureaucracy, which plays an important role in policy formulation as well as implementation, has little understanding of the nature of poverty in the country, ineffectiveness is bound to

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

95/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 48 WORDS 80% MATCHING TEXT 48 WORDS

If the common people are afraid of administrators and can hardly speak a language understood by them, administrators' understanding of people's problems remains wanting, and hence policies for 49 dealing with these remain unsatisfactory.Thus, alack of communication leads to a lack of effectiveness. Lack of

If the common people are afraid of administrators and can hardly speak a language understood by them, administrators understanding of people's problems remai'ns wanting, and hence policies for dealing with these remain unsatisfactory. Thus lack of comrllunication leads to lack of effectiveness. Lack of effectiveness also results from lack of

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

96/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

effectiveness also results from a lack of participation by the people. Due to social distance between the administrators and the people, and differences in their values and beliefs, effectiveness also results from lack of participation by the people. Due to social distance between the administrators and the people, and differences in their values and beliefs,

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

97/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

administrators are unable to enthuse the people and seek their cooperation and participation. Ineffectiveness also results from administrators are unable to enthuse the people and seek their cooperation and participation. Ineffectiveness also results from

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

98/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

of effectiveness results from a lack of adjustment between members of the higher and lower bureaucracy.

of effectiveness also results from lack of adjustment between members of the higher and lower bureaucracy.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

99/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 192 WORDS 81% MATCHING TEXT 192 WORDS

found that subordinate officials suffered from feelings of insecurity, hostility, and isolation. They felt that they had no influence, they had to only obey instructions, and stick to rules. Thus, differences in the status and culture of the higher and lower bureaucracy made for frustration, hostility, and lack of initiative on the part of the large, lower, section of the bureaucracy whose function was to give effect to policies. Equality of opportunity is a very important principle of democracy. It implies that everyone should have the same opportunity to achieve desired goals, in keeping with his abilities and effort. Since high-level administrative positions in our society have high prestige, large numbers of youth wish to obtain them. However, because of their socio-economic background, a large number cannot avail of this opportunity. The vast majority of our people live in villages where they have little opportunity to pursue the kind of education which would make for success in competitive examinations. Many of those who live in cities also cannot afford good quality higher education. Hence the poor, and thoseliving in villages, have the feeling that they are unjustly being denied entry into found that the subordinate officials suffered from feelings of insecurity, hostility and isolation. They felt that they had no power, had to only obey instructions, and stick to rules. Therefore differences in the status and culture of the higher and lower bureaucracy made for frustration, hostility and lack of initiative on the part of the large, lower, section of the bureaucracy whose function was to provide effect to policies. Perception of Injustice One of the principles of democracy is excellence opportunity. It implies that everyone should have the same opportunity to achieve desired goals, in keeping with his abilities and effort. Since high stage administrative positions in our society have a high prestige, large numbers of youth wish to obtain them. Though because of their socio-economic background, a large number cannot avail of this opportunity. The vast majority of our people live in villages where they have little opportunity to pursue the type of education which would create for success at competitive examination. Several in the middle those who live in cities also cannot afford good excellence higher education. Hence the poor, and those living in villages, have the feeling that they are unjustly being denied entry into

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

100/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

bureaucracy cannot at present be said to berepresentative of society as a whole. This results in bureaucracy cannot at present be said to be representative of the society as a whole. This results in

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

101/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

ineffectiveness of administration and a feeling of injustice among those who are left out. Hence, we have to ineffectiveness of administration and a feeling of injustice among those who are left out. Hence we have to

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

102/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	19 WORDS	78%	MATCHING TEXT	19 WORDS

representative bureaucracy without compromising the principle of selection based on merit. We shall consider these below.

representative bureaucracy without compromising with the principle of selection on the basis of merit. We shall consider these below.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

103/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	56 WORDS	82%	MATCHING TEXT	56 WORDS

Literacy constitutes just the beginning of education. For getting a job one needs education appropriate to it. The proportion ofthose who get secondary and highereducation is relatively small. Manyof course, never go to school. Even among those who join a school, the majority drop out. Of 100 children who enroll in class I, only 25

literacy constitutes just the beginning of education. For getting a job one needs education appropriate to it. The proportion of those who get secondary and higher education is small. Many. of course, never go to school. Even among those who join a school, the majority drop out. Of 100 children who enrol in class I, only 23

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

104/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	53 WORDS	61%	MATCHING TEXT	53 WORDS

reach class VIII. Higher education is limited to only a certain percentage of those in the relevant age group. A wider spread of education is, required to provide for social justice and also to help in social, economic, and political development. Having a more presentative bureaucracy is an aspect of development.

reach class VIII. Higher education is limited to only 4.8 per cent of those in the relevant age group. Wider spread of education is, required to give for social justice and also to help in social, economic and political development. Having a more representative bureaucracy is an aspect of development.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

105/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	86 WORDS	97%	MATCHING TEXT	86 WORDS

spread of education can be improved by having more schools, reducing the cost of education, vocationalisingeducation,providing mid-day meals, books and uniforms to children of the poor, providing more teachers, improving the method of teaching, and so on. If those who get left out today also get educated, they can compete for the public bureaucracy. This will benefit the administration since the bureaucracy will be drawn from a larger pool, thus tapping the potential of more people; it will also make for a more representative bureaucracy.

Spread of education can be improved by having more schools, reducing the cost of education, vocationalising education, providing mid-day meals, books and uniforms to children of the poor, providing for more teachers, improving the method of teaching, and so on. If those who get left out today also get educated, they can compete for the public bureaucracy. This will benefit the administration since the bureaucracy will be drawn from a larger pool, thus tapping the potential of more people; it will also make for a more representative bureaucracy.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

106/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 182 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 182 WORDS

In developing countries like India, the system of personnel administration also remainsunderdeveloped. The system of recruiting people for a service, instead of a job, is one aspect of such underdevelopment. This has three consequences: (i) lack of emphasis on specialisation, (ii) rank-in-man instead of rank-in-job, and (iii) recruitment from a limited section of society. Thus, when we recruit people for the IPS, the method of recruitment results in the selection of persons mainly from a small section of society. It is because the test is for abilities that mainly candidates from the upper middle class have developed. These abilities, however, may not be relevant for all the jobswhich IPS officers may have to perform. The result is that while we exclude candidates from classes other than the upper middle class, we still do not select those who are suited for the work which they have to do. Thus, at present, the athletic ability of candidates is not tested. While an advisor to the government on security might not need it, a district police officer might be in great need of it.

In developing countries like India the system of personnel administration also remains underdeveloped. The system of recruiting people for a service, instead of a job, is one aspect of such underdevelopment. This has three consequences: (i) lack of emphasis on specialisation, (ii) rank-in-man instead of rank-in-job, and (iii) recruitment from a limited section of the society. Thus when we recruit people for the IPS, the method of recruitment results in the selection of persons mainly from a small section of the society:This is because the test is for abilities which mainly candidates from the upper middle class have developed. These abilities, however, may not be relevant for all the jobs which IPS officers may have to perform. The result is that while we exclude candidates from classes other than the upper middle class, we still do not select those who are really suited for the work which they have to do. Thus at present, the athletic ability of candidates is not tested. While an advisor to the government on security might not need it, a dismct police officer might be in great need of it.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

107/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 55 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 55 WORDS

Many boys from the poorer section might have it in greater measure than those from richer ones. Similarly, we might require other specialised qualifications appropriate for particular jobs. In this way, we would be able to recruit persons with specialised qualifications and abilities suited to particular jobs, and also with diverse social backgrounds. Hence

Many boys from the poorer section might have it in greater measure than those from richer ones. Similarly, we might require other specialised qualifications appropriate for particular jobs. In this way we would be able to recruit persons with specialised qualifications and abilities suited to particular jobs, and also with diverse social backgrounds. Hence

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

108/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

introduction of position classification and recruitment for specialised jobs would lead to both, personnel who are better suited to their jobs and a more representative bureaucracy.

introduction of position classification and recruitment for specialised jobs would lead to both, personnel who are better suited to their jobs and a more representative bureaucracy.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

109/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	22 WORDS	93%	MATCHING TEXT	22 WORDS

At present recruitment to services like the IAS, IPS, IFS, and IA&AS (Indian Audit and Accounts Service) is made based on

At present recruitment to services like the IAS, IPS, IFS and IA&AS (Indian Audit and Accounts Service) is made on

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

110/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	30 WORDS	88%	MATCHING TEXT	30 WORDS

the examination and the interview, however, do not test all the abilities of a person. According to an expert,cramming also helps some people to succeed in a written examination.

The examination and the interview, however, do not test all the abilities of a person. According to David C. Potter, cramming also helps some people to succeed in a written examination.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

111/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	22 WORDS	81%	MATCHING TEXT	22 WORDS

an objective type examination has recently been introduced to reduce the emphasis on crammingthere is still a need for further improvement.

An objective type examination has recently been introduced to reduce the emphasis on cramming. there is a need for further improvement.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

112/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	100 WORDS	97%	MATCHING TEXT	100 WORDS

The interview is called the personality test. However, no scientific personality tests, such as those used in the armed forces, are employed. By testing candidates more scientifically, we would not only be able to select persons more suited to their jobs, but we would also be able to spread our net wide. Various abilities may be said to be distributed widely over different sections of society. Hence if we test for various abilities, instead of mainly that essay writing, we would be able to get people who are more suited to their jobs from diverse social backgrounds. 2.7

The interview is called the personality test. However, no scientific personality tests, such as those used in the armed forces, are employed. By testing candidates more scientifically, we would not only be able to select persons more suited to their jobs, we would also be able to spread our net wide. Various abilities may be said to be distributed widely over different sections of the society. Hence if we test for various abilities, instead of mainly that of essay writing, we would be able to get people who are more suited to their jobs from diverse social backgrounds.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

113/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 112 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 112 WORDS

The higher bureaucracy in India is drawn mainly from the urban, salaried, or professional, middle class consisting of higher civil and military officers, lawyers, doctors, university teachers, and business executives. Most administrators have received education at exclusive schools, colleges, and universities. Three-fourths of them have lived in cities. About one- tenth of them belong to scheduled castes and about one-twentieth to scheduled tribes. Muslims and women are also under-represented. Such a narrow field of extraction of the 51 higher bureaucracy makes for differences in values. norms, beliefs, and orientations between the higher and lower bureaucracy and the people at large. The above factors result in a lack of communication,

The higher bureaucracy in India is drawn mainly from the urban, salaried or professional, middle class consisting of higher civil and military officer\, lawyers, doctors, university teachers and business executives. Most administrators have received education at exclusive schools, colleges and universities. Three-fourths of them have lived in cities. About one-tenth of them belong to scheduled castes and about one- twentieth to scheduled tribes. Muslims and women are also under-represented. Such a . narrow field of extraction of the higher bureaucracy makes for differences in values. norms, beliefs and orientations between the higher and lower bureaucracy and the people at large. This results in lack of communication,

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

114/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

ineffectiveness of administration, and the perception of injustice. A more representative bureaucracy, selected by merit, can be achieved through ineffectiveness of administration and the perception of injustice. A more representative bureaucracy, selected by merit, can be had through

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

115/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 28 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 28 WORDS

greater spread of education, more emphasis on position classification and specialisation, and the adoption of more scientific methods ofrecruitment for testing various abilities and personality traits. 2.8

greater spread of education, more emphasis on position classification and specialisation, and the adoptioi~ of more scientific methods of recruitment for testing various abilities and personality traits.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

116/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

Representative bureaucracy: A civil service representing proportionately every caste, class, and religious

Representative bureaucracy: A civil service representlnp proportionately every I caste, class and religious

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

117/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

population. This type of bureaucracy is expected to be responsive and responsible to the people of the country.	population. This type of bureaucracy is expected to be responsive and responsible in relation to the people of the country. 15.7

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

118/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 68% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

middle class: The group of persons engaged in professions such as those of civil and military officers, doctors, lawyers, business executives, etc.	middle class: The group of persons engaged irr profession such as lhose of civil and military officers, doctors, lawyers and busine5s executives etc.

W https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/19239/1/Unit-15.pdf

119/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

V. (1971). Social Background of India's Administrators.Publications Division. Government of India.	V. 197 1. Social Background of India's Administrators, Publication Division, Government of India:

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

120/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

The Role of Bureaucracy in Policy Development and Implementation in India. Southeast Asian Journal of Social Science, 15(2).	The Role of Bureaucracy in Policy Development and Implementation in India R.B. Southeast Asian Journal of Social Science

W https://www.jstor.org/stable/24491120

121/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 78 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 78 WORDS

The people in developing societies suffer from several problems, such as poverty, unemployment, bad health, illiteracy, corruption, and authoritarianism. The state is considered to be the main agency for dealing with these, or, in other words, for bringing about development. Hence the state has to shoulder more and more responsibility. Since the state functions through the government, and the government, in turn, depends to a large extent upon the bureaucracy, the bureaucracy's role also keeps expanding.	The people in developing societies suffer from a number of troubles, such as poverty, unemployment, bad health, illiteracy, corruption and authoritarianism. The state is measured to be the main agency for dealing with these, or, in other words, for bringing in relation to the development. Hence the state has to shoulder more and more responsibility. Since the state functions through the government, and the government, in turn depends to a large extent upon the bureaucracy, the bureaucracy's role also keeps expanding.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

122/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

India the role of bureaucracy is not only dominant in the implementation of public policies but is also pervasive in respect of policy formulation.

India the role of the bureaucracy is not only dominant in the implementation of public policies, but is also pervasive in respect of policy formulation.

W https://ir.nbu.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/1286/6/05_chapter_02.pdf

123/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

In the context of thegoals of a welfare state and development administration, bureaucracy has certainly emerged as one of the key elements in the politico-administrative process

In the context of the goals of a welfare state and development administration, bureaucracy has certainly emerged as one of the key elements in the politico-administrative process.

W https://ir.nbu.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/1286/6/05_chapter_02.pdf

124/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 163 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 163 WORDS

STATE 3.2.1 Bureaucracy as Agents of Political Development The emotional bonds of nationalism are often weak in new nations. However, unless these bonds are strengthened, the nation is in danger of falling apart, as happened, for example, in Pakistan from which Bangladesh broke away. The state and its bureaucracy play an important part in strengthening these emotional bonds. Thus, national integration is sought to be promoted through education, radio and television programmes, development of native languages, publication of good quality literature in native languages, cultural and sports activities in which persons from all parts of the nation participate, and so on. These programhes are often conducted by members of the bureaucracy. In a country where the national bonds are weak, having a bureaucracy that is centrally recruited and whose members serve in different parts of the country, also helps to hold the nation together. Political development is also promoted by strengthening interest groups, such as labour unions. Legislation

State and Bureaucracy as Mediators of Political Development The emotional bonds of nationalism are often weak in new nations. Though, unless these bonds are strengthened, the nation is in danger of falling separately, as happened, for instance, in Pakistan from which Bangladesh broke absent. The state and its bureaucracy play a significant part in strengthening these emotional bonds. Therefore national integration is sought through education, radio and television programmes, development of native languages, publication of good excellence literature in native languages, cultural and sports activities in which persons from all parts of the nation participate, and so on. These programmes are often mannered through members of the bureaucracy. In a country where the national bonds are weak, having a bureaucracy which is centrally recruited and whose members serve in dissimilar parts of the country, also helps to hold the nation jointly. Political development is also promoted through strengthening interest groups, such as labor unions. Legislation

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

125/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

In 1961, two new Central Class I Services constituted the Indian Economic Service for the economists and the Indian Statistical Service for the Statisticians. All these services aim

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

126/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 59 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 59 WORDS

sanctions and supports trade union activity thus helps to bring about political development. Insofar as the bureaucracy participates in the formulation and implementation of such legislation, it has a role in political development. Political parties also 54 constitute an important part of the political system. In some countries nowadays political parties are provided with election funds sanctions and supports trade union activity therefore helps to bring in relation to the political development. Insofar as the bureaucracy participates in the formulation and implementation of such legislation, it has a role in political development. Political parties also constitute a significant part of the political system. In some countries nowadays political parties are provided with election funds

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

127/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 145 WORDS 81% MATCHING TEXT 145 WORDS

Role of Bureaucracy in Economic Development In the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, it was believed that the state should restrictitself to thecountry's defense and the maintenance of law and order and that it should intervene in the economy as little as possible. This view changed, particularly after the Great Depression of the 1930s, in which millions of people became unemployed the world over. Nowadays, all governments are expected to regulate the economy to bring about an increase in production, a high level of employment,prices of commodities, and check over monopolies and unhealthy trade practices. The need for such regulation of the economy is all the more in developing countries like Indiadue to widespread poverty and unemployment on the one hand and the great power ofmonopolists on the other. The government regulates the economy through fiscal policies (by modulating taxes), and monetary policies (by modulating

Role of Bureaucracy in Economic Development In the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries it was whispered that the state should restrict itself to the country's defense and the maintenance of law and order, and that it should intervene in the economy as little as possible. This view changed, particularly after the Great Depression of the 1930s, in which millions of people became unemployed the world in excess of. all governments are expected to regulate the economy so as to bring in relation to the augment in production, a high stage of employment, prices of commodities, and check in excess of monopolies and unhealthy trade practices. The need for such regulation of the economy is all the more great in developing countries like India due to widespread poverty and unemployment on the one hand, and the great power of monopolists on the other. The government regulates the economy through fiscal policies (through modulating taxes), and monetary policies (through modulating

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

128/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 57 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 57 WORDS

money supply). Planning, which means resource allocation through a centralised administrative process, is resorted to for achieving economic growth. The government develops means of transport and communication. It provides loans and raw materials to industrialists and fanners. All these governmental activities are performed by government departments, nationalised banks, and other public undertakings through their officials. Hence money supply). Planning, which means resource allocation through a centralized administrative process, is resorted to for achieving economic growth. The government develops means of transport and communication. It gives loans and raw materials to industrialists and farmers. All these governmental activities are performed through government departments, nationalized banks and other public undertakings through their officials. Hence

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

129/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 161 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 161 WORDS

has a very important new role, namely that of functioning as the agent of economic development. More and more economists, statisticians, and trained managers are needed for the proper performance of this role. 3.2.3The Role of Bureaucracy in the Welfare State In recent times there has been a tendency for entrusting the state with more and more responsibility for social services, such as the provision of education, health care, employment, labour welfare, the welfare of the blind and other handicapped persons, and the welfare of widows and orphans. So much importance is attached to these new functions that the state has been renamed as the welfare state. The provision of such varied social services requires large numbers of different types of specialists, such as teachers, doctors, nurses, labour officers, and social workers. With their recruitment as members of the bureaucracy, the nature of the bureaucracy tends to change. This new role requires a new kind of bureaucracy.The

has a very significant new role, namely that of functioning as the agent of economic development. More and more economists, statisticians and trained managers are needed for the proper performance of this role. The Role of Bureaucracy in the Welfare State In recent times there has been a tendency for entrusting the state with more and more responsibility for social services, such as the provision of education, health care, employment, labor welfare, the welfare of the blind and other handicapped persons, and the welfare of widows and orphans. So much importance is attached to these new functions that the state has been renamed as the welfare state. The provision of such varied social services requires large numbers of dissimilar types of specialists, such as teachers, doctors, nurses, labor officers and social workers. With their recruitment as members of the bureaucracy, the nature of the bureaucracy tends to change: the new role requires a new type of bureaucracy. The

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

130/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 39 WORDS 80% MATCHING TEXT 39 WORDS

Collection of Taxes and Disbursement of Financial Benefits The bureaucracy plays a vitally important role in financial administration. They advise the political executive irrespectiveof all financial planning,taxstructure,tax administration, and the like. They collect taxes and settle disputes involving

Collection of Taxes and Disbursement of Financial Benefits The civil servants play a vitally important role in financial administration. They advise the political executive in respect of all financial planning, tax-structure, tax-administration and the like. They collect taxes and settle disputes involving

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

131/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 41 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 41 WORDS

recovery of taxes. They play a vital role in preparing the budget and taxation proposals. They carry out the function of granting legally sanctioned financial benefits, tax reliefs, subsidies, and other concessions to the people. 55 3.2.5

recovery of taxes. They play a vital role in preparing the budget and taxation proposals. They carry out the function of granting of legally sanctioned financial benefits, tax reliefs, subsidies and other concessions to the people. 2.1.2.8.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

132/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 114 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 114 WORDS

modern welfare state and democratic politics has made it essential for the government to keep close relations with the people of the state. The need for maintaining active and full public relations is a vital necessity for every state. Civil servants play an active role in this sphere.They are the main agents who establish direct contact with the people. They serve as a two-way link. On the one hand, they communicate all government decisions to the people, and on the other hand, they communicate to the government the needs, interests, and views of the people. Thus, Bureaucracy plays a vigorously active and highly important role in the working of the government. 1.2.6

modern welfare state and democratic politics has made it essential for the government to keep close relations with the people of the state. The need for maintaining active and full public relations is a vital necessity of every state. The civil servants play an active role in this sphere. They are the main agents who establish direct contacts with the people. They serve as a two way link. On the one hand, they communicate all government decisions to the people, and on the other hand, they communicate to the government the needs, interests and views of the people. Thus, Bureaucracy plays a vigorously active and highly important role in the working of the government. 2.1.3.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

133/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

Record-Keeping The bureaucracy has the sole responsibility of keeping systematically all government records. They collect, classify and analyse all data

Record-Keeping The Civil Service has the sole responsibility of keeping systematically all government records. They collect, classify and analyse all data

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

134/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

all activities of the government. They collect and maintain vital

all activities of the government. They collect and maintain vital

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

135/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	16 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	16 WORDS

statistics which are used for the formulation of public policies and plans. 1.2.7

statistics which are used for the formulation of Public policies and plans. 2.1.2.9.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

136/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	61%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

such changes are sought to be brought about with the help oflaws. Thus, untouchability, bigamy, child marriage,and such changes are sought to be brought in relation to the help of laws. Therefore, untouchability, bigamy, child marriage and

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

137/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	18 WORDS	82%	MATCHING TEXT	18 WORDS

the making and implementation of policies are so deeply interconnected that it is impossible to separate them.

The creation and implementation of policy are so deeply interconnected that it is impossible to separate them.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

138/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	65 WORDS	79%	MATCHING TEXT	65 WORDS

This communication between the government and the various sections of society takes place, to a large extent, through the bureaucracy. Thus, if the farmers in an area suffer from some problem, such as lack of water for irrigation, they generally approach officials like the Deputy Commissioner, who communicates the problem to a higher level of the administration: they may make proposals for irrigation facilities

This communication flanked by the government and the several sections of the society takes place, to a large extent, through the bureaucracy. Therefore, if the fanners in an area suffer from some problem, such as lack of water for irrigation, they usually approach officials like the Deputy Commissioner, who communicates the problem to higher stage of the administration: they may create proposals for irrigation facilities

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

139/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	27 WORDS	93%	MATCHING TEXT	27 WORDS

the budget. In this way, communication through the bureaucracy may help in the formulation of policy proposals for 57 meeting the needs of the people.

the budget. In this method communication through the bureaucracy may help in the formulation of policy proposals for meeting the needs of the people.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

140/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

mechanism for the conversion of demands into policies. In this way, bureaucracy plays a more important role in policy formulation in developing countries.

mechanism for the conversion of demands into policies. In this method, the bureaucracy plays a more significant role in policy formulation in developing countries

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

141/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

Hence policy formulation, or giving the shape of laws and rules to policies, is largely done

Hence policy formulation, or giving the form of laws and rules to policies, is largely done

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

142/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 28 WORDS 77% MATCHING TEXT 28 WORDS

laws and rules drafted by specialist members of the bureaucracy are later examined and modified by ministers and legislators. However, ministers and legislators often do not have laws and rules drafted through specialist members of the bureaucracy are later examined and customized through ministers and legislators. Though, ministers and legislators often do not have to depend to a large extent upon specialists in the bureaucracy. In this way, the bureaucracy comes to influence policy formulation.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

143/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

to depend to a large extent upon specialists in the bureaucracy. In this method the bureaucracy comes to power policy formulation.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

144/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

role in policy formulation also because of the technical knowledge possessed by it. 3.4.2

role in policy formulation also because of the technical knowledge possessed through it.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

145/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

Policy Implementation The main function of the bureaucracy is policy implementation, that is, giving effect to policies after they have been approved

Policy Implementation The main function of the bureaucracy is policy implementation that is, giving effect to policies after they have been approved

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

146/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 44 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 44 WORDS

the executive and legislative branches of the government. This function also is performed under the overall control and supervision of politicians in the executive and legislative branches; however, members of the bureaucracy have to bear much of the responsibility for implementation. For implementation, the executive and legislative branches of the government. This function also is performed under the overall control and supervision of politicians in the executive and legislative branches; though, members of the bureaucracy have to bear much of the responsibility for implementation. Policy implementation

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

147/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 31 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 31 WORDS

a policy has to be broken up into projects, and each project into programmes. Thus, for implementing the policy of rural development, there are projects like that of Community development.

a policy has to be broken up into projects, and each project into programmes. Therefore, for implementing the policy of rural development, there are projects like that of Community Development.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

148/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 76% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

civil servants have also come to play an active role in it.
They aid, advise

SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

149/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 46 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 46 WORDS

civil servants in various departments have to function in a coordinated manner for carrying out various programmes. To ensure such coordination and the execution of programmes within the given time frame, all officials are required to submit reports to their seniors about their achievements periodically.

civil servants in several departments have to function in a coordinated manner for carrying out several programmes. To ensure such coordination and the execution of programmes within the given time frame, all officials are required to submit reports to their seniors in relation to their achievements periodically.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

150/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 30 WORDS 59% MATCHING TEXT 30 WORDS

examining the reports, officers at high levels can exercise control over the execution of programmes. Therefore, implementation followed by execution is mainly the responsibility of the bureaucracy. 3.4.3

examining the reports, officers at high stages are able to exercise control in excess of the execution of programmes. Therefore execution is mainly the responsibility of the bureaucracy.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

151/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 74% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

results in an emphasis on routine and detail leading to redtape (delay) and giving rise to complaints of unresponsiveness of the bureaucracy to the people.

results in ah emphasis on routine and detail, leads to red tape (delay), and provides rise to complaints of unresponsiveness of the bureaucracy to the people.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

152/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

execute laws and policies to attain the goals of the welfare state, that is, social equity, economic development,

SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

153/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 49 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 49 WORDS

The Role of Bureaucracy in Policy Development and Implementation in India. Southeast Asian Journal of Social Science, 15(2). 61

The Role of Bureaucracy in Policy Development and Implementation in India R.B. Southeast Asian Journal of Social Science

W https://www.jstor.org/stable/24491120

154/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 38 WORDS 64% MATCHING TEXT 38 WORDS

confidence of ministers belonging to any political party in the loyalty of the permanent subordinates, and high morale of public servants based on the confidence that promotion would be made not based on political considerations but merit.

SA chapter-two.docx (D80924780)

155/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 37 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 37 WORDS

society is made up of various classes such as landlords, capitalists, traders, farmers,and workers. The government is expected to take care of the interests of each one of them, and to allocate resources to them justly.	society is made up of several classes such as those of landlords, capitalists, traders and workers. The government is expected to take care of the interests of each one of them, and to allocate possessions to them justly.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

156/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

the bureaucracy is the government's main instrument and must be neutral between classes if justice is to be done	The bureaucracy is the government"s main instrument and necessity is neutral flanked by classes if justice is to be done.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

157/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 220 WORDS 79% MATCHING TEXT 220 WORDS

if a manufacturer pays higher wages to his workers, his profits get reduced to that extent. Similarly, if a landlord gives a higher share of the crop to his tenant farmers, he suffers a loss. It is precisely because of such conflict that neutrality between the classes is difficult to achieve. It is only if the government and the bureaucracy are seen to be neutral that the conflict can be kept within limits and peace maintained. If, however, a class has the feeling that injustice is being done to it, they may resort to violence. Thus, disputes between capitalists and workers result in tension or strikes, sometimes there is even violence and bloodshed. Hence the neutrality of the bureaucracy, which is the main instrument of the government, is essential for the maintenance of social order. If we take the example of India the conflict between classes is greater than in other developed nations. This is because there are greater disparities in developing countries. Thus while a few are very rich, millions continue to starve. What is more, those who are poor also lackeducation, social status, and political power. In other words. the poor often do not even know how to improve their condition, and even if they try, the richer and more powerful sections often thwart their efforts.	if a manufacturer pays higher wages to his workers, his profits get reduced to that extent. Likewise, if a landlord provides a higher share of the crop to his tenant farmers, he suffers a loss. It is precisely because of such disagreement that neutrality flanked by the classes is hard to achieve. It is only if the government and the bureaucracy are seen to be neutral that the disagreement can be kept within limits and peace maintained. If, though, a class has the feeling that injustice is being done to it, it may take to the war path. Therefore disputes flanked by capitalists and workers result in lockouts or strikes, sometimes there is even violence and bloodshed. Hence the neutrality of the bureaucracy, which is the main instrument of the government, is essential for the maintenance of social order. The disagreement flanked by classes is greater in developing countries like India, than in developed ones. This is because there are greater disparities in developing countries. Therefore while a few are very rich, millions continue to starve. What is more, those who are poor also lack of education, social status and political power. In other words, the poor often do not even know how to improve their condition, and even if they try, the richer and more powerful sections often thwart their efforts,

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

158/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

Moreover, neutrality is a state of mind and there can be no effective law to ensure it.

SA chapter-two.docx (D80924780)

159/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 91 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 91 WORDS

The neutrality of the bureaucracy is important also because of its role in helping to bring about development. The government provides loans, subsidies, tax concessions, raw materials (such as steel and cement), and inputs (such as coal, electricity, fertiliser, and seeds) to industrialists and farmers. The classes of big industrialists and big farmers have a lot of political and economic power and, therefore, tend to monopolise these gains. However, development requires that small industries and small farms should also prosper since they are 63 large in number and

The neutrality of the bureaucracy is significant also because of its role in helping to bring in relation to the development. The government gives loans, subsidies, tax concessions, raw materials (such as steel and cement), and inputs (such as coal, electricity, fertilizer and seeds) to industrialists and farmers. The classes of big industrialists and big farmers have a lot of political and economic power and, so, tend to monopolies these gains. Though, development requires that small industries and small farms should also prosper: they are large in number and substantial contribution to the national product. Justice also requires that they should not be ignored. Hence it is important that the bureaucracy, which distributes these facilities, substantial contribution to the national product. Justice also requires that they should not be ignored. Hence it is significant that the bureaucracy, which distributes these facilities,

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

160/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

161/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

small industrialists and farmers requires that the bureaucracy should not be influenced by the power of the big industrialists, big farmers, and landlords.

small industrialists and farmers requires that the bureaucracy should not be influenced through the power of the big industrialists, big farmers and landlords.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

162/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 91 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 91 WORDS

Another problem relates to the influence of interest groups. A department that serves a certain interest is, with time, likely to become identified with it. It has to come into close and continuous touch with persons having this interest, and it often has to function as the advocate of this interest. Thus, the department of agriculture has to serve farmers by providing various facilities and has to obtain funds for this purpose. In this process, the farmers' lobby and the department of agriculture are likely to become mutually supportive. If Another problem relates to the power of interest groups. A department that serves a certain interest is, in the course of time, likely to become recognized with it. It has to come into close and continuous touch with persons having this interest, and it often has to function as the advocate of this interest. Therefore the department of agriculture has to serve farmers through providing several facilities, and has to obtain funds for this purpose. In this process, the farmers" lobby and the department of agriculture are likely to become mutually supportive. If * interests of farmers and industrialists clash, as they often do, the department of agriculture is likely to take the side of the farmers. Hence such specialised agencies are in danger of losing their neutrality.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

163/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 34 WORDS 72% MATCHING TEXT 34 WORDS

interests of fanners and industrialists clash, as they often do, the department of agriculture is likely to take the side of farmers. Hence such specialized agencies are in danger of losing their neutrality.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

164/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 136 WORDS 79% MATCHING TEXT 136 WORDS

In developing countries like India, it tends to arise mainly concerning agencies dealing with powerful interests, like those of big' industrialists and big farmers. The solution to it lies in the development of organisationsforthe weaker sections of society. Efforts are now being made in India to help landless labour to organise itself. Similarly, if various interests organise themselves, and demand better political control over the bureaucracy, to ensure its responsibility and accountability, it is likely to remain moreneutral also. 4.2.2 Neutrality between Cultural Groups Our society consists of groups based on religion, caste, language, and region. While all these groups have many common interests, they also come into conflict to some extent. The Blacks have remained poor and exploited. In the USSR also there have been ethnic conflicts, for example between Armenians and Azeris.

In developing countries like India, it tends to arise mainly in regard to agencies dealing with powerful interests, like those of big industrialists and big farmers. The solution to it lies in the development of organizations of hitherto weaker sections of the society. Efforts are now being made in India to help landless labor to organize itself. Likewise, if several interests organize themselves, and demand better political control in excess of the bureaucracy, so as to ensure its responsibility and accountability, it is likely to remain more neutral also. Neutrality flanked by Cultural Groups Our society consists of groups based on religion, caste, language and region. While all these groups have several common interests, they also come into disagreement to some extent the blacks have remained poor and exploited. In the USSR also there have been ethnic conflicts, for instance flanked by Armenians and Azeris.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

165/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 127 WORDS 78% MATCHING TEXT 127 WORDS

is required to hold the balance between the various groups. Hence it must be neutral between them. Since the conflict between cultural groups is generally greater in developing countries, the significance of the bureaucracy's neutrality is also greater in these countries. The way to the achievement of such neutrality, and also to the general reduction of conflict between cultural groups, lies through better education. If the attitudes of the people can be changed through education so that they come to regard themselves more as belonging to the Indian nation than to a particular group based upon religion, caste, language, or region, the conflict between groups can be reduced. Members of the higher bureaucracy are recruited mostly from among those who have received higher liberal education.

is required to hold the balance flanked by the several groups. Hence it is significant that it should be neutral flanked by them. Since the disagreement flanked by cultural groups is usually greater in developing countries, the significance of the bureaucracy"s neutrality is also greater in these countries. The method to the achievement of such neutrality, and also to the general reduction of disagreement flanked by cultural groups, lies through better education. If the attitudes of the people can be changed through education, so that they come to regard themselves more as belonging to the Indian nation than to a scrupulous group based upon religion, caste, language or region, the disagreement flanked by groups can be reduced. Members of the higher bureaucracy are recruited mostly from in the middle of those who have received higher liberal education.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

166/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 77% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

members of the higher bureaucracy should be among the most broad-minded people in the society, and hence neutral between cultural groups.

members of the higher bureaucracy should be in the middle of the most broad-minded people in the society, and hence neutral flanked by cultural groups.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

167/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 33 WORDS 79% MATCHING TEXT 33 WORDS

conscious effort at improving the quality of education can further help to modernise the attitudes of the bureaucracy leading to even greater neutrality. The conflict between cultural groups is often accentuated

Conscious effort at improving the excellence of education can further help to modernize the attitudes of the bureaucracy leading to even greater neutrality. The disagreement flanked by cultural groups is often accentuated

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

168/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 49 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 49 WORDS

Muslims in India have generally been poorer than Hindus. Most Sikhs in Punjab have a rural background, while most Hindus have an urban one. Members of the scheduled castes all over India are generally poorer and have a lower social status than others. Many of them are landless

Muslims in India have usually been poorer than Hindus. Most Sikhs in Punjab have a rural background, while most Hindus have an urban one. Members of the scheduled castes all in excess of India are usually poorer and have a lower social status than others. Several of them are landless

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

169/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 37 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 37 WORDS

narrowing the disparities between them. One of the effects of such disparities is that a cultural group having a lower social and economic status has a lower representation in the bureaucracy also. Such a bureaucracy, with narrowing the disparities flanked by them. One of the effects of such disparities is that a cultural group having a lower social and economic status has a lower representation in the bureaucracy also. Such a bureaucracy, with higher representation of certain groups than others, is often not perceived as being neutral. Hence the reduction of socio-economic disparities between cultural groups will not only reduce conflict between 64 them but also make for a more representative and neutral bureaucracy. Programmes aiming at poverty removal (such as the Integrated Rural Development Programme higher representation of certain groups than others, is often not perceived as being neutral. Hence the reduction of socio-economic disparities flanked by cultural groups will not only reduce disagreement flanked them, but also create for a more representative and neutral bureaucracy. Programmes aiming at poverty removal (such as the Integrated Rural Development Programme),

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

170/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 56 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 56 WORDS

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

171/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 65 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 65 WORDS

effort to reduce disparities. Further, if a cultural group suffers from poverty and exploitation and is unable to find adequate representation in the bureaucracy, special measures are taken to help it in getting such representation. Thus, some universities and state institutes run special courses for preparing those belonging to weaker sections for competitive examinations for entry into the bureaucracy. The Constitution of India

effort to reduce disparities. Further, if a cultural group suffers from poverty and exploitation and is unable to discover adequate representation in the bureaucracy, special events are taken to help it in getting such representation. Therefore, some universities and state institutes run special courses for preparing those belonging to weaker sections for competitive examinations for entry into the bureaucracy. The Constitution of India

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

172/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

reservation of posts in the bureaucracy for any backward class of citizens under Article 16(4). Under this provision, reservation of posts in the bureaucracy for any backward class of citizens under Article 16(4). Under this provision, 15

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

173/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 177 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 177 WORDS

These measures are able to help in having a more representative and more neutral bureaucracy. 4.2.3 Neutrality between Political Parties Competition between political parties is an essential characteristic of a democracy. If there is only one party, the voter can hardly exercise higher choice. Democracy becomes meaningful only if the voter can choose between candidates of different parties. The exercise of choice by voters at general elections results in the formation of the government by one of the contending parties. Every party that fights an election puts forward its manifesto before the people. If it wins, it is rightly concludedthat the people have approved of its manifesto, indeed, it is said that the manifesto now becomes the mandate, or command, of the people to the new government. This mandate consists of policies that the people have approved. Fulfillment of the wishes of the people requires the implementation of these policies. The main instrument of the government for the implementation of its policies is the bureaucracy. Hence it is important that the bureaucracy should be neutral these events are able to help in having a more representative and more neutral bureaucracy. Neutrality flanked by Political Parties Competition flanked by political parties is an essential feature of a democracy. If there is only one party, the voter can hardly exercise his/her choice. Democracy becomes meaningful only if the voter can choose flanked by candidates of dissimilar parties. The exercise of choice through voters at general elections results in the formation of the government through one of the contending parties. Every party that fights an election puts forward its manifesto before the people. If it wins, it is rightly inferred that the people have approved of its manifesto, indeed, it is said that the manifesto now becomes the mandate, or command, of the people to the new government. This mandate consists of policies which the people have approved. Fulfillment of the wishes of the people requires the implementation of these policies. The main instrument of the government for the implementation of its policies is the bureaucracy. Hence it is significant that the bureaucracy should be neutral

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

174/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 50 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 50 WORDS

such neutrality alone can ensure the fulfillment of the wishes of the people. While the neutrality of the bureaucracy is accepted as an ideal, many problems arise in practice and come in the way of the fulfillment of this ideal. One such problem has been the spoils system, such neutrality alone can ensure the fulfillment of the wishes of the people. While the neutrality of the bureaucracy is accepted as an ideal, several troubles arise in practice and come in the method of the fulfillment of this ideal. One such problem has been the spoils system,

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

175/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 38 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 38 WORDS

another party, throws out the supporters of the party earlier in power, the bureaucracy also tends to lack permanence, knowledge gained from experience in the service, and the motivation that the career system might have provided.	another party, throws out the supporters of the party earlier in power, the bureaucracy also tends to lack permanence, knowledge gained from experience in the service and the motivation which the career system might have provided.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

176/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 61 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 61 WORDS

tends to interfere with the neutrality of the bureaucracy between political parties is the development of loyalty toward the politicians in power. Members of the bureaucracy who have been selected impartially by a Civil Service Commission, can later, in the course of their career, shed their neutrality and become aligned with the party, or the individuals, in power. 4.3	tends to interfere with the neutrality of the bureaucracy flanked by political parties is the development of loyalty towards the politicians in power. Members of the bureaucracy, who have been selected impartially through a Civil Service Commission, can later, in the course of their career, shed their neutrality and become aligned with the party, or the individuals, in power.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

177/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 32 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 32 WORDS

the main characteristics of a bureaucracy are hierarchy, division of labour, specialisation, rules, and impersonality. All these factors make for efficiency. At the same time, however, a bureaucracy suffers from alienation.	the main features of a bureaucracy are hierarchy, division of labor, specialization, rules and impersonality. All these factors create for efficiency. At the same time, though, a bureaucracy suffers from alienation.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

178/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

the members of bureaucracy suffer from loss of freedom, creativity, humanity, and morality.	the members of bureaucracy suffer from loss of freedom, creativity, humanity, and morality.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

179/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 98 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 98 WORDS

Other writers have also pointed out the disadvantages, or dysfunctions, of bureaucracy.Thus, bureaucratic control over officials requires that they should strictly follow rules. Hence the problem is how to maintain efficiency while reducing alienation or the dysfunctions of bureaucracy. The solution to this problem lies mainly in improving the commitment of its members. In other words, the bad effects of bureaucratic controls can to some extent be reduced if the employees are imbued with dedication. Dedication or commitment is required also because the employees have constantly to deal with complex problems, many of which are new.

Other writers have also pointed out the disadvantages, or dysfunctions, of bureaucracy. Therefore Merton says that bureaucratic control in excess of officials, requiring that they should strictly follow rules, induces in them "timidity, conservatism and techniques". Hence the problem is how to maintain efficiency while reducing alienation or the dysfunctions of bureaucracy. The solution to this problem lies mainly in improving the commitment of its members. In other words, the bad effects of bureaucratic controls can to some extent be reduced if the employees are imbued with dedication. Dedication or commitment is required also because the employees have constantly to deal with intricate troubles, several of which are new.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

180/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 68 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 68 WORDS

Dedication or commitment is required also because the bureaucrats have constantly to deal with complex problems, many of which are new. It is a mistake to think that all bureaucratic activity is routine and monotonous. Developmental activity in particular requires forecasting, planning, risk bearing, breaking new ground, and experimentation. Hence, innovations have to be made all the time. The making of innovations, or creativity, requires emotional commitment.

Dedication or commitment is required also because the employees have constantly to deal with intricate troubles, several of which are new. It is a mistake to think that all bureaucratic activity is routine and monotonous. Developmental activity in scrupulous requires forecasting, planning, risk bearing, breaking new ground and experimentation. Hence, innovations have to be made all the time. The creation of innovations, or creativity, requires emotional commitment.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

181/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

Commitment to Values and Objectives Of our various commitments, the most important is the commitment to values. In the ethical sense, values are ends in themselves

Commitment to Values and Objectives Of our several commitments, the most significant is the commitment to values. In the ethical sense, values are ends in themselves:

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

182/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

of our values are what are called human values, that

of our values are what are called human values that

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

183/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	40 WORDS	96%	MATCHING TEXT	40 WORDS

those values that are sought in all places and times. Examples of human values are truth, compassion, honesty, and courage. While human values are universally sought, there are some values to which importance is attached in only some countries those values which are sought in all places and times. Examples of human values are truth, compassion, honesty and courage. While human values are universally sought, there are some values to which importance is attached in only some countries.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

184/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	16 WORDS	90%	MATCHING TEXT	16 WORDS

national values. Important human and national values may be mentioned in a nation's Constitution also.

national values. Significant human and national values may be mentioned in a nation"s Constitution also.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

185/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	122 WORDS	96%	MATCHING TEXT	122 WORDS

are mentioned in the preamble to India's Constitution. These may be called human values since in no age or place has their desirability been questioned. Then there are the values of nationalism, democracy, socialism, and secularism which may be called India's national or Constitutional values since they find explicit or implicit support in the Constitution. While it is expected that everyone everywhere will attach great importance to human values, citizens of India are, in addition, expected to seek to fulfill the national or Constitutional values. The bureaucracy is expected to attach even greater importance to both these sets of values than ordinary citizens. The bureaucracy acts on behalf of the state or government. If the state and government are to are mentioned in the preamble to India"s Constitution: justice, liberty, excellence and fraternity. These may be called human values since in no age or place has their desirability been questioned. Then there are the values of nationalism, democracy, socialism and secularism which may be called India"s national or Constitutional values, since they discover explicit or implicit support in the Constitution. While it is expected that everyone everywhere will attach great importance to human values, citizens of India are, in addition, expected to seek to fulfill the national or Constitutional values. The bureaucracy is expected to attach even greater importance to both these sets of values than ordinary citizens. The bureaucracy acts on behalf of the state or government. If the state and government are to human values. Again, since the constitution lays down the fundamental principles according to which the state is governed, the bureaucracy, as the agent of the state and the government, must accord the highest importance to all the values enshrined in the Constitution. 66 Apart from human and constitutional values, the bureaucracy must also be committed to national objectives. Some of these may be so important as to be mentioned in the Constitution, while others are stated in laws. Thus, Part IV of the Indian Constitution, entitled "Directive Principles of State Policy" mentions objectives such as securing just and humane conditions of work, securing a living wage, provision of free and compulsory education for all children, and the protection of Scheduled Castes and Tribes from social injustice and exploitation. However, the Constitution mentions only a few, paramount, objectives, most other national objectives are stated in laws. It is through the demands of interest groups human values. Again, since the constitution lays down the fundamental principles according to which the state is governed, the bureaucracy, as the agent of the state and the government, necessity accord the highest importance to all the values enshrined in the Constitution. Separately from human and constitutional values, the bureaucracy necessity also is committed to national objectives. Some of these may be so significant as to be mentioned in the Constitution, while others are stated in laws. Therefore Part IV of the Indian Constitution entitled “Directive Principles of State Policy” mentions objectives such as the following: securing just and humane circumstances of work, securing a living wage, provision of free and compulsory education for all children, and the protection of Scheduled Castes and Tribes from social injustice and exploitation. Though, the Constitution mentions only a few, paramount, objectives, most other national objectives are stated in laws. Their seed may be found in the demands of interest groups,

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

186/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 156 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 156 WORDS

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

187/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 30 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 30 WORDS

they are presented to the people for their approval through the manifestos of political parties at election time and they are adopted as national objectives after their inclusion in-laws.

they are presented to the people for their approval through the manifestos of political parties at election time, and they are adopted as national objectives after their inclusion in laws.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

188/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 107 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 107 WORDS

the performance of its duties. 4.3.2 Commitment to Service of the People The bureaucracy's important role in policy formulation and implementation gives it a lot of power, it participates in deciding who should get what, when, and how, and then goes ahead to enforce these decisions. In developing countries, particularly, the power of the bureaucracy is considerable since the other parts of the political system are weak. Hence while the civil servant is, ideally, expected to function as a "servant" of the people, in reality, he may turn out to be a master. In a developing country like India, this problem becomes worse due to the time of election. Commitment to Service of the People The bureaucracy"s significant role in policy formulation and implementation provides it a lot of power; it participates in deciding who should get what, when and how, and then goes ahead to enforce these decisions. In developing countries, particularly, the power of the bureaucracy is considerable since the other parts of the political system are weak. Hence while the civil servant is, ideally, expected to function as a "servant" of the people, in reality he may turn out to be a master. In countries like India, this problem becomes worse due to

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

189/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 51 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 51 WORDS

heritage of the colonial past, when the civil servant used to be the symbol and agent of the foreign power. After independence also, a cultural and social chasm continued to exist between the mostly non-literate and poor people and the higher bureaucrat who often dresses, speaks, and even thinks, like heritage of the colonial past, when the civil servant used to be the symbol and agent of the foreign power. After independence also, a cultural and social chasm has sustained to exist flanked by the mostly non-literate and poor people and the higher bureaucrat who often dresses, speaks, and even thinks, like

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

190/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 129 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 129 WORDS

In a democracy, however, the people are expected to exercise real power, and the bureaucracy is expected to remain under the control of the elected politicians, and serve the people. Hence the commitment to providing service to the people is essential for the proper performance of the bureaucracy's role. The bureaucracy's power, derived from its role in policy formulation and implementation, is used also for fulfilling its interests. In developing countries, the bureaucracy is very powerful, the result often is that the bureaucracy tends to fulfill its interest even at the cost of the interests of the people. Thus, the extra profit (benefits apart from salary) remains high in most public undertakings in India even if they lack effectiveness and run at a loss. High officials play

In a democracy, though, the people are expected to exercise real power, and the bureaucracy is expected to remain under the control of the elected politicians, and serve the people. Hence commitment for providing service to the people is essential for the proper performance of the bureaucracy"s role. The bureaucracy"s power, derived from its role in policy formulation and implementation, is used also for fulfilling its own interests. In developing countries, the bureaucracy is very powerful; the result often is that the bureaucracy tends to fulfill its own interest even at the cost of the interests of the people. Therefore the extra profit (benefits separately from salary) remnants high in most public undertakings in India even if they lack effectiveness and run at a loss. High officials play

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

191/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 154 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 154 WORDS

role in the determination of their emoluments, and try to protect their interests by maintaining the emoluments at a high level. Service of the people requires that where there is a conflict between their interests and those of the people, they should give priority to the people's interests. 4.3.3 Commitment to Profession A profession is a vocation or calling, especially one that involves some branch of science or advanced learning. Nowadays Public Administration requires persons belonging to almost all the professions, such as doctors, engineers, lawyers, teachers, scientists, managers, and accountants. Obtaining professional qualifications requires long and arduous preparation on their part. They are considered to have specialised knowledge and excellence and hence have high prestige. Since their contribution to society comes from their specialised knowledge, it becomes their duty to keep abreast of the developments in their field of specialisation. They must also maintain the expected standard of performance. Thus, university role in the determination of their own emoluments, and try to protect their interests through maintaining the emoluments at a high stage. Service of the people requires that where there is a disagreement flanked by their own interests and those of the people, they should provide priority to the people"s interests. Commitment to Profession A profession is a vocation or calling, especially one that involves some branch of science or advanced learning. Nowadays Public Administration requires persons belonging to approximately all the professions, such as doctors, engineers, lawyers, teachers, scientists, managers and accountants. Obtaining professional qualifications requires long and arduous preparation on their part. They are measured to have specialized knowledge and excellence and hence have high prestige. Since their contribution to the society comes from their specialized knowledge, it becomes their duty to keep abreast of the developments in their field of specialization. They necessity also maintain the expected standard of performance. Therefore university

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

192/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 58 WORDS 76% MATCHING TEXT 58 WORDS

to read the latest publications. These are the requirements of their commitment to teaching as a profession. Similarly, other professionals must also continually update their knowledge and skill and maintain the expected standard of performance through practice. 67 The duties associated with every profession required, not only knowledge and skill but also moral dedication. Hence to read the latest publications. These are the necessities of their commitment to teaching as a profession. Likewise, other professional"s necessity also continually updates their knowledge and ability, and maintains the expected standard of performance through practice. The duties associated with every profession required, not only knowledge and ability, but also moral dedication. Hence

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

193/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	60 WORDS	92%	MATCHING TEXT	60 WORDS

commitment to a profession involves adherence to its ethics and etiquette. Thus, the ethics of the medical profession require that a doctor should attend to a patient even at the risk of infection to himself, its etiquette requires that he should not disclose information confided to him by his patients. Similarly, every profession has its ethics and etiquette.

commitment to a profession involves adherence to its ethics and etiquette. Therefore the ethics of the medical profession require that a doctor should attend to a patient even at the risk of infection to himself; its etiquette requires that he should not disclose information confided to him through his patients. Likewise, every profession has its ethics and etiquette.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

194/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	24 WORDS	73%	MATCHING TEXT	24 WORDS

continue to remain committed to the ethics and the etiquette of the higher profession, in addition to a higher commitment to the objectives

continue to remain committed to the ethics and the etiquette of his/her profession, in addition to his/her commitment to the objectives

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

195/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	39 WORDS	69%	MATCHING TEXT	39 WORDS

For example, if a specialist in clinical medicine becomes the director of a medical institute. He or she should not allow the new status to interfere with higher duty toward the patients. A higherposition may also provide him

For instance, if a specialist in clinical medicine becomes the director of a medical institute, he/ she should not allow the new status to interfere with his/her duty towards the patients. His/her position may also give him/

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

196/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	34 WORDS	86%	MATCHING TEXT	34 WORDS

her with opportunities for selfish gain at the cost of clients. Thus, a specialist in a medical institute may be pressurised for recommending some costly and inferior equipment for purchase. 4.4

her with opportunities for selfish gain at the cost of his/her clients. Therefore, a specialist in a medical institute may be pressurized for recommending some costly and inferior equipment for purchase.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

197/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 245 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 245 WORDS

NEUTRALITY AND COMMITMENT In recent years there has been a lot of discussion in India about the nature of neutrality and commitment, and particularly, whether the bureaucracy can have the two qualities at the same time. If commitment is taken to mean a commitment to a particular political party or its leaders, it becomes antithetical to neutrality. However, commitment to human and constitutional values and national objectives, to service of the people, and professional ethics and etiquette, are not antithetical to neutrality between classes, cultural groups, and political parties. Indeed, commitment and neutrality reinforce each other if they are of the right type. This commitment to the human value of compassion and the constitutional value of fraternity is likely to induce neutrality between classes and cultural groups respectively. Similarly, commitment to national objectives is likely to induce neutrality between political parties. Hence the effort should be to induce commitment and neutrality of the right kind. Inculcation of desirable attitudes in the bureaucracy requires attention to all aspects of personnel administration. At the time of recruitment and selection of candidates, it should be ensured that they have received the right kind of socialisation and education in the family and school. The competitive examination for selection can include tests of attitudes towards human and constitutional values and national objectives on the one hand, and towards classes, cultural groups and parties on the other. Such tests can indicate whether the candidate has properly benefited from

Neutrality and Commitment In recent years there has been a lot of discussion in India in relation to the nature of neutrality and commitment, and particularly, whether the bureaucracy can have the two qualities at the same time. Obviously, if commitment is taken to mean commitment to a scrupulous political party or to its leaders, it becomes antithetical to neutrality. Though, commitment to human and constitutional values and national objectives, to service of the people, and to professional ethics and etiquette, is not antithetical to neutrality flanked by classes, cultural groups and political parties. Indeed, commitment and neutrality reinforce each other if they are of the right type. Therefore commitment to the human value of compassion and to the constitutional value of fraternity is likely to induce neutrality flanked by classes and cultural groups respectively. Likewise, commitment to national objectives is likely to induce neutrality flanked by political parties. Hence the effort should be to induce commitment and neutrality of the right type. Inculcation of Neutrality and Commitment Inculcation of desirable attitudes in the bureaucracy requires attention to all characteristics of personnel administration. At the time of recruitment and selection of candidates it should be ensured that they have received the right type of socialization and education in the family and school. The competitive examination for selection can contain tests of attitudes towards human and constitutional values and national objectives on the one hand, and towards classes, cultural groups and parties on the other. Such tests can indicate whether the candidate has properly benefited from liberal education and has a broad mental outlook, or has merely committed materials to memory for passing examinations. After entry, desired attitudes of neutrality and commitment can be inculcated in the members of the bureaucracy through training.Various incentives, such as desired posting, visits abroad, and quicker promotion, can be provided for motivating employees to develop the right attitudes. Finally, control

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

198/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 61 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 61 WORDS

liberal education and has a broad mental outlook, or has merely committed materials to memory for passing examinations. After entry, desired attitudes of neutrality and commitment can be inculcated in the members of the bureaucracy through training. Several incentives, such as desired posting, visits abroad and quicker promotion, can be provided for motivating employees to develop the right attitudes. Finally, control

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

199/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 116 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 116 WORDS

the political executive and the legislature can ensure that they do not deviate from the norms. Institutions like the Public Service Commission, Courts, and Administrative Tribunals should ensure that the exercise of control by political authorities is done fairly and justly. Further, in a democracy, the people have the right and the duty to see that all institutions function properly. Special agencies and methods of recruitment can be used for important areas requiring a high degree of both neutrality and commitment. One such special agency already in use is the autonomous university. Higher education and research constitute an area in which commitment and neutrality are both of great importance. If commitment is not there,	the political executive and the legislature can ensure that they do not deviate from the norms. Institutions like the Public Service Commission, Courts and Administrative Tribunals should ensure that the exercise of control through political authorities is done fairly and justly. Further, in a democracy, the people have the right and the duty to see that all institutions function properly. Special Agencies and Recruitment Methods Special agencies and methods of recruitment can be used for significant areas requiring a high degree of both neutrality and commitment. One such special agency already in use is the autonomous university. Higher education and research constitute an area in which commitment and neutrality are both of great importance. If commitment is not there,

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

200/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 126 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 126 WORDS

pursuit of knowledge lacks excellence; if neutrality is not there education becomes merely 68 indoctrination. The autonomous university aims at achieving both; it also retains the main advantage of bureaucratisation, namely efficiency, while avoiding the dysfunctions flowing from bureaucratisation due to its autonomy. Max Weber has noted that staff members of a university constitute a bureaucracy. The characteristics of hierarchy, division of labour, specialisation, rules, and impersonality are to be found in a university also, and hence it has the efficiency flowing from these factors. At the same time, its autonomy permits its staff members to remain committed as well as neutral, since the rules of conduct applicable to government servants do not apply to the employees of a university. 4.5	pursuit of knowledge lacks excellence; if neutrality is not there education becomes merely indoctrination. The autonomous university aims at achieving both; it also retains the main advantage of bureaucratization, namely efficiency, while avoiding the dysfunctions flowing from bureaucratization due to its autonomy. Max Weber has noted that staff members of a university constitute a bureaucracy. The features of hierarchy, division of labor, specialization, rules and impersonality are to be found in a university also, and hence it has the efficiency flowing from these factors. At the same time, its autonomy permits its staff members to remain committed as well as neutral, since the rules of conduct applicable to government servants do not apply to the employees of a university.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

201/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

absence of any political activity or bias on the part of	absence of any political activity or bias on the part of

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

202/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

neutrality means acceptance of the discipline of working without reservation

SA chapter-two.docx (D80924780)

203/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 66% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

the politicians of the party in power at the Centre or at the State level.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

204/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 50 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 50 WORDS

Special agencies and methods of recruitment can be used for important areas requiring ahigh degree of both neutrality and commitment. One such special agency already in use is the autonomous university. Higher education and research constitute an area in which commitment and neutrality are both of great importance.

Special agencies and methods of recruitment can be used for significant areas requiring a high degree of both neutrality and commitment. One such special agency already in use is the autonomous university. Higher education and research constitute an area in which commitment and neutrality are both of great importance.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

205/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

is one of the important problems of public administration. The problem has acquired new dimensions due to the vital role of

is one of the important problems of Public Administration. The problem has acquired new dimensions due to the increasing role of

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

206/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 63% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

is generally a person who has special knowledge or skill in a specific field, for example. engineers, physicians, agriculturists, educationists, lawyers, etc.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

207/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

expert or specialist is a relative term depending upon the context.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

208/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 30 WORDS 56% MATCHING TEXT 30 WORDS

opportunities for the exercise of their qualifications and specialist skills. This category includes engineers, draughtsmen, technicians, and so on. Some of these, such as doctors and engineers, have acquired

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

209/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

and draughtsmen may acquire and develop their skills after joining the service.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

210/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 50 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 50 WORDS

a public servant who does not have a specialised background and is easily transferable to any department or branch of Government. He has also been defined as an administrator, who belongs to the managerial class and who is well versed with rules, regulations, and procedures of administration, and generally

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

211/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

those members of the administrative and executive classes who are now treated

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

212/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 31 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 31 WORDS

administration. The policy formulation and the 'consideration' levels in the Central, as well as State Secretariat, are occupied by the bureaucrats, while positions in the field are filled by the administration. The 'Policy Formulation' and the 'consideration' levels in the Central as well as State Secretariats are occupied by the Generalists while, positions in the field are filled by the government, officials, permanent executive, and non-political executive are used to describe all such persons who carry out the day-to-day administration of the state. The terms Bureaucrats and Civil Servants are popularly used as synonyms.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

213/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 35 WORDS 75% MATCHING TEXT 35 WORDS

SA Ahmed Raza PU (1).docx (D21953744)

214/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 72 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 72 WORDS

the 'bureaucrat and technocrat' controversy in India can largely be traced to the concept of 'nearness' or 'remoteness' from the area of top policy-making. It is more post-centered rather than person-oriented, and the tussle between the two is in reality for holding certain positions. The real debate should be around formulating a satisfactory and adequatestaffing policy or better still, evolving a progressive, constructive and objective-oriented,egalitarian personnel philosophy. 74

the 'generalist and specialist' controversy in India can largely be traced to the concept of 'nearness' or 'remoteness' from the area of top policy making. It is more post centred rather than person-oriented, and the tussle between the two is in reality for holding certain positions. The real debate should be around formulating a satisfactory and adequate staffing policy or better still, evolving a progressive, constructive and objective-oriented, egalitarian personnel philosophy.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

215/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

aspect of controversy relates to the privileged position enjoyed by the IndianAdministrative Service due to aspect of the controversy relates to the privileged position enjoyed by the Indian Administrative Service due to

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

216/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 112 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 112 WORDS

high salary, better career prospects, and also its monopoly oftop administrative positions as posts of secretaries in the government departments; even the positionof heads of most executive departments are reserved for the bureaucrats.Career wise too, a member of the Indian Administrative Service after serving for about tenyears or so in a state administration, moves to the Central Secretariat and at times becomeseven the Secretary of a department or ministry. The technocrats feel that their position andstatus in the administrative hierarchy is not commensurate with the contribution they maketo the technological advancement of the country. They are being denied access to the policy-making powers is attributed to their being overshadowed by the high salary, better career prospects and also its monopoly of top administrative positions as posts of secretaries in the government departments; in fact even the positions of heads of most executive departments are reserved for the generalists. Career wise too, a member of the Indian Administrative Service after serving for about ten years or so in a state administration, moves to the Central Secretariat and at times becomes even the Secretary of a department or ministry. The specialists feel that their position and status in the administrative hierarchy is not commensurate with the contribution they make to the technological advancement of the country. Their being denied access to the policy making powers is attributed to their being overshadowed by the leading a team of technical district officers who are heads of technical departments. At the block level,

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

217/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

218/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

in matters of pay scales and service conditions, and access to administrative positions at the Secretariat so that they can contribute

In matter, of pay scales and service conditions, and access to administrative positions at the Secretariat so that they can contribute

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

Ouriginal by Turnitin

219/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	258 WORDS	75%	MATCHING TEXT	258 WORDS

The suitability of the bureaucratsfor all policy-making positions is questioned by technocratson the ground that the change in the functions of government in present times calls forcertain professionalism which is not possessed to such an extent by the generalists. Also, byreserving all senior managerial positions to the bureaucrats, especially to the IAS, the government is deprived of the expert advice and specialised knowledge of the specialists.However, it is generally argued by the bureaucrats that the field experience gained by them at the district and state levels in the initial years of their career helps them in the taskof decision-making. But thetechnocrats feel that this field experience is not sufficient todischarge themulti-varied tasks of the government which requires special or expertknowledge. And also, this sort of field experience is not just the prerogative of thegeneralists as it can be secured by the technocrats. For example, a doctor working in aPrimary Health Centre is exposed to all sorts of field problems as can be experienced by aDistrict Collector. This makes higher acquire certain administrative skills in addition tohigher technical competence. Another point of contention between the two comes from their beingorganised into separate hierarchies. This leads to situations where the expert advice renderedby the technocrats are submitted to thebureaucrats for higher approval. This is justified on theground that since technocrats tend to have a biased outlook tilted towards their specialty andsince policymaking needs to consider matters in totality, the bureaucrats are best suited to takethe final decision. This is due to technocrats being denied access to senior

The suitability of the generalist for all policy making positions is questioned by specialists on the ground that the change in the functions of government in present times calls for certain professionalism which is not possessed to such an extent by the generalists. Also by reserving all senior managerial positions to the generalists especially to the IAS, the; government is deprived of the expert advice and specialized knowledge of the specialists. However it is generally argued by the pro-generalists that the field experience gained by them at the district and state levels in the initial years of their career helps them in the task of decision making. But the specialists feel that this field experience is not sufficient to discharge the multi- varied tasks of the government which requires special or expert knowledge. And also, this sort of field experience is not just the prerogative of the generalists as it can be secured by the specialists. For example, a doctor working in a Primary Health Center is exposed to all sorts of field problems as can be experienced by a District Collector. This makes him/her acquire certain administrative skills in addition to his/her technical competence. Another point of contention between the generalists and specialists comes from their being organised into separate hierarchies. This leads to situations where the expert advice rendered by the specialist is submitted to the generalist for his/her approval. This is justified on the ground that since specialists tend to have a biased outlook tilted towards their specialty and since policy making needs to consider matters in totality, the generalist is best suited to take the final decision. This is due to specialists being denied access to senior

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

220/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 77 WORDS 81% MATCHING TEXT 77 WORDS

The bureaucracy often moves from one department to the other and at times to a public enterprise or even a semi-government institution. But the mobility of the technocrats isrestricted in the sense that they are transferred or promoted in the same department. The technocrats view the frequent movement of the bureaucrats as a hindrance in the way 75 ofacquiring adequate and in-depth knowledge in any one aspect of the department's work.Thus, the technocrats feel

The generalists often move from one department to the other and at times to a public enterprise or even a semi-government institution. But the mobility of the specialists is restricted in the sense that they are transferred or promoted in the same department. The specialists view the frequent movement of the generalists as a hindrance in the way acquiring adequate and in-depth knowledge in any one aspect of the department's work. This, the specialists feel

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

221/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 34 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 34 WORDS

it is the responsibility of the bureaucracy to carry out and implement the policies of thegovernment. Good policies and laws can serve their objectives only when these are efficiently implemented by civil servants.

It is the responsibility of the bureaucracy to carry out and implement the policies of the government. Good policies and laws can really serve their objectives only when these are efficiently implemented by the civil servants. 2.1.2.2.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

222/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

Of late, certain measures have been taken in our country to induct technocrats into higher administrative positions at the Centre as well as in States.

Of late, certain measures have been taken in our country to induct specialists into higher administrative positions at the Centre as well as in States.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

223/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 28 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 28 WORDS

in the Union Ministry of Education was an educationist by profession, and the Secretary to the Scientific Affairs Department in the same ministry was an eminent scientist.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

224/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

Another method of giving a technocrat head of department ex-officio status of joint/additional/full Secretary to

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

225/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

and so is the case with the Department of Science and Technology which has a scientist as a Secretary.

and so is the case with the Department of Science and Technology which has a scientist as a Secretary.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

226/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 28 WORDS 51% MATCHING TEXT 28 WORDS

of the Board operate as heads of departments and are also ex-officio secretaries in the Railway Ministry. So is the case of the Department of Atomic Energy,

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

227/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 107 WORDS 59% MATCHING TEXT 107 WORDS

way to tackle this problem is to experiment with an integrated hierarchy in place of present'separate' and 'parallel' hierarchies. In separate hierarchies, the policy is determined by thebureaucratsand the function of the technocrats is to execute it. Whereas in a parallel hierarchy,each class has its parallel sub-hierarchy, and work between the two is coordinated byfrequent liaison. The organisation of technocrats andin separate hierarchies, withthe policy and financial aspects of the work reserved exclusively for bureaucrats, has certaindisadvantages such as slowing down the process of decisionmaking and management, generating inefficiency, and preventing the specialists from exercising the full range of responsibilities normally associated with their professions.

way to tackle this problem is to experiment with integrated hierarchy in place of present 'separate' and 'parallel' hierarchies. In separate hierarchies, policy is determined by the generalists and the function of the specialists is to execute it. Whereas in parallel hierarchy, each class has its own parallel sub- hierarchy and work between the two is coordinated by frequent liaison. The organisation of generalists and specialists in separate hierarchies, with the policy and financial aspects of the work reserved exclusively for generalist administrators, has certain disadvantages such as slowinn down the process of decision making and management, generating inefficiency and preventing the specialists from exercising the full range of responsibilities normally associated with their professions.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

228/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 27 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 27 WORDS

the Rajasthan Government has appointed the Chief Engineer (PWD & BR) and the Director of Industries and Supplies ex-officio Additional Secretaries to the Government.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

229/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 113 WORDS 85% MATCHING TEXT 113 WORDS

The present need is for more purposive development of professionalism inadministration. The base of such professionalism is not necessarily provided by a single specialty but a variety of backgrounds and disciplines. For example, the administrators ofprice policy must know in sufficient depth and detail all the economic implications of thatparticular measure. Hence, it becomes essential for the government to organise at the top anexpert layer of personnel, who though initially coming from either the generalist orspecialist background, would need to be developed into a professionally competent group inorder not merely to effectively execute 78 programmes but also to aid and advise the toppolitical executives in matters of important policies. 5.6

The present need obviously is for more purposive development of professionalism in administration. The base of such professionalism is not necessarily provided by a single speciality but a variety of backgrounds and disciplines. For example, the administrators of price-policy must know in sufficient depth and detail all the economic implications of that particular measure. Hence it becomes essential for the government to organise at the top an expert layer of personnel, who though initially coming from either the generalist or specialist background, would need to be developed into a professionally competent group in order not merely to effectively execute programmes but also to aid and advise the top political executives in matters of important policies.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

230/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 82% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

There is no denying the fact that in their functional situations both technocrats and bureaucrats have important contributions to make.

There is no denying the fact that in their own functional situations both generalists and specialists have important contributions to make.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

231/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 94% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

The partnership responsibility of the two groups in facing the new challenges underconditions of quickening socio-economic change is a necessary ingredient of national goal fulfillment. The necessity for

The partnership responsibility of the two groups in facing the new challenges under conditions of quickening socio-economic change is a necessary ingredient of national goal fulfillment. The necessity for

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

232/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

collaborative role of generalists and specialists is nowrecognised and accepted almost everywhere.

collaborative role of generalists and specialists is now recognised and accepted almost everywhere.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

233/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 98% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

In 1961, two new Central Class I Services constituted the Indian Economic Service for the economists and the Indian Statistical Service for the Statisticians. All these services aim

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

234/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 34 WORDS 82% MATCHING TEXT 34 WORDS

jobs of technocrats cannot also be taken over by bureaucrats, for example, the functions of theChief of Army Staff cannot be taken over by a Secretary to a Government department. Thus,while, co-existence among jobs of pure specialists cannot also be taken over by generalists, as for example, the functions of the Chief of Army Staff cannot be taken over by a Secretary to a Government department. Thus, while, co-existence among

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

235/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

has to be accepted as afundamental fact of administrative life, the real issue is in what fashion or in what structureor role the relationship should exist. 5.7

has to be accepted as a fundamental fact of administrative life, the real issue is in what fashion or in what structure or role the relationship should exist. 6.8.5.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

236/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

is one of the important problems of public administration. ? The

is one of the important problems of Public Administration. The

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

237/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 65% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

Specialist is generally a person who has special knowledge or skill in a specific field, for example. engineers, physicians, agriculturists, educationists, lawyers, etc.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

238/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 95% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

Discuss the reasons for the controversy between the generalists and specialists discuss the reasons responsible for the controversy between the generalists and specialists.

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

239/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 43 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 43 WORDS

Subramanian, Malathi. (1987). Management of Public Administration: Patterns in the Generalist Vs. Specialist). Deputy Publications. 80

Subramanian, Malathi, 1987, Management of Public Administration (Patterns in the Generalist Vs. Specialist), Deputy Publications :

W https://www.bdu.ac.in/cde/SLM/M.A.%20Public%20Administration/I%20Year/Paper%20-%205%20%20Public%2 ...

240/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

The Global Hunger Index (GHI) is a tool designed to comprehensively measure and track hunger at global, regional, and national levels...

The Global Hunger Index (GHI) is a tool designed to comprehensively measure and track hunger at global, regional, and national levels,

W https://www.globalhungerindex.org/about.html

241/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 53 WORDS 97% MATCHING TEXT 53 WORDS

The GHI is designed to raise awareness and understanding of the struggle against hunger, provide a way to compare levels of hunger between countries and regions, and call attention to those areas of the world where hunger levels are highest and where the need for additional efforts to eliminate hunger is greatest" (

The GHI is intended to raise awareness and understanding of the struggle against hunger, provide a way to compare levels of hunger between countries and regions, and call attention to those areas of the world where hunger levels are highest and where the need for additional efforts to eliminate hunger is greatest.

W https://www.globalhungerindex.org/about.html

242/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 69% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

who belongs to the managerial class is well versed with rules, regulations, and procedures of administration, and who

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

243/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

Gases that trap heat in the atmosphere are called greenhouse gases',

Gases that trap heat in the atmosphere are called greenhouse gases.

W https://www.epa.gov/ghgemissions/overview-greenhouse-gases

244/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

defined "sustainable development" as "development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs" (

SA SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

245/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

defined "sustainable development" as "development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs" (

SA SC 2.2 - Development Administration.pdf (D158855399)

246/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 87 WORDS 80% MATCHING TEXT 87 WORDS

to be achieved by the year of 2030 (SDGs Booklet, undated): 1. No poverty 2. Zero hunger 3. Good health and well-being 4. Quality education 5. Gender equality 6. Clean water and sanitation 7. Affordable and clean energy 8. Decent work and economic growth 9. Industry, innovation and infrastructure 10. Reduced inequalities 11. Sustainable cities and communities 12. Responsible consumption and production 13. Climate action 14. Life below water 15. Life on land 16. Peace, justice and strong institutions 17. Partnership for the Goals

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

247/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

Gases that trap heat in the atmosphere are called greenhouse gases',

Gases that trap heat in the atmosphere are called greenhouse gases.

W https://www.epa.gov/ghgemissions/overview-greenhouse-gases

248/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 1 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 1 WORDS

coronavirus-lockdown- effect-in-india-polution-free-sites-of-indian-cities-are-mesmerizing-dgtl-1.1140455?

Coronavirus Lockdown Effect in India: Polution Free Sites of Indian Cities Are Mesmerizing dgtl -

W https://www.anandabazar.com/photogallery/national/coronavirus-lockdown-effect-in-india-polution-f ...

249/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 62 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 62 WORDS

sustainable development: "No poverty; Zero hunger; Good health and well-being; Quality education; Gender equality; Clean water and sanitation; Affordable and clean energy; Decent work and economic growth; Industry, innovation and infrastructure; Reduced inequalities; Sustainable cities and communities; Responsible consumption and production; Climate 114 action; Life below water; Life on land; Peace, justice and strong institutions; Partnership for the Goals".

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

250/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 50% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

The Commission was set up by a Resolution of the Government of India, and thus is not rendered the position of a statutory body. Though the plans formulated the Planning Commission was set up through a resolution of the Government of India. It is so not a statutory body and the plans formulated

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

251/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

The Prime Minister attends only the most important meetings of the Commission

the Prime Minister attends only the most significant meetings of the Commission

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

252/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 32 WORDS 53% MATCHING TEXT 32 WORDS

of the union legislature ensures that the Commission's proposals coming up before the Cabinet are viewed objectively. B. The Deputy Chairman- The position of the Deputy Chairman is a full-time of the Commission which ensures that the Commission"s proposals coming up before the cabinet are viewed objectively. Deputy Chairman The day-to-day work of the Commission is looked after through a full-time

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

253/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 82% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

deputy Chairman has been usually a politician of standing belonging to the ruling party at the Centre.

Deputy Chairman who is usually a politician of standing belonging to the ruling party at the Centre.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

254/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 39 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 39 WORDS

there are two types of members, in addition to the Minister of State for Planning who is also an ex-officio member of the Planning Commission. There are certain full-time members. This list includes eminent public persons, administrators, economists

There are two types of members of the Planning Commission in addition to the Minister of State for Planning who is also an ex-officio member of the Commission. First, there are a few full-time members who are eminent public persons, administrators, economists

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

255/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

as a collective body. Each member deals individually with the technical and other aspects of his/her allotted subjects.

as a communal body. While each member individually deals with the technical and other characteristics of his/her allotted subjects,

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

256/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 61% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

the stages in which the Plan should be implemented and put forward the allocation of resources for the completion of every stage.

the stages in which the plan should be accepted and proposes the allocation of possessions for due completion of each stage;

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

257/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 29 WORDS 43% MATCHING TEXT 29 WORDS

in view of the prevailing social and political situation, becomes an important facet for the triumphant implementation of the Plan 150 ? Determining the kind of

in view of the current social and political situation, should be recognized for the successful execution of the plan; Determines the nature of

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

258/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 23 WORDS 78% MATCHING TEXT 23 WORDS

The Planning Commission consulted the Union ministries and the state governments while formulating five-year plans, and annual plans, and oversaw their implementation.

SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

259/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 25 WORDS 52% MATCHING TEXT 25 WORDS

the role of the Planning Commissionone has look at the tasks assigned to the government bythe Indian Constitution in its Directive Principles. Within the

The role of the Planning Commission is directly related to the economic and social tasks assigned to the government through the Indian Constitution in its Directive Principles. The

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

260/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 88% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

the successful execution of each stage of the Plan in all its aspects

SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

261/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 77% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

the state to secure citizens' rightto adequate means of livelihood and control the inequalities in the ownership of wealth and the state to secure right to adequate means of livelihood for its citizens and control the inequalities in the ownership of wealth and

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

262/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 36 WORDS 70% MATCHING TEXT 36 WORDS

either for enabling the discharge of the duties assigned to a division or on a consideration of the existing economic conditions, current policies, measures and development programme or on a study of such specific problems

SA 05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)

263/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 58% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

In addition to the above-mentioned functions, the Planning Commission has been entrusted withresponsibility in the following matters.

In addition to the functions referred to above, the Planning Commission has been entrusted with responsibility in respect of the following matters

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

264/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 28 WORDS 45% MATCHING TEXT 28 WORDS

of the Planning Commission of India? ? Discuss in details the functions of the Planning Commission? ? Explain the organizational structure of the Planning Commission? 1.10.

of the Planning Commission of India. The Prime Minister of the country is the chairman of the Planning Commission, and the first Chairman of the Planning Commission

W https://ddceutkal.ac.in/Syllabus/MA_PUB_ADD/Development_Administration.pdf

265/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

development like Hill Area Development Programme; c) Perspective Planning; 151 d) Institute of Applied Manpower Research; and e)

SA Dissertation WFN.docx (D164020968)

266/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 31 WORDS 69% MATCHING TEXT 31 WORDS

states and the members of the Planning Commission. However, there have been instances when other central ministers who are not members of the Planning Commission have attended the Council's meetings.

States and the members of the Planning Commission. other central ministers who are not members of the Planning Commission also have attended the Council"s meetings.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

267/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

outside experts have also been invited to the Council's meetings whenever outside experts have also been invited to the Council"s meetings whenever

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

268/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

The secretary of the Planning Commission is also the secretary of the NDC.

The Secretary of the Planning Commission is also the Secretary of the NDC.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

269/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 84% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

the National Development Council was set up by a proposal of the Cabinet Secretariat of the Government of India

SA Swayam Prabha- History-State and the Political Economy of Development- Economic Planning- Dr. Syl ... (D141677590)

270/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

is required to meet at least twice a year, has sometimes met more often is required to meet at least twice a year though it has sometimes met more often.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

271/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

the approach paper to the Five-Year Plan, the draft Five Year Plan and the final Five-Year Plan.

the approach paper to the Five Year Plan, the draft Five Year Plan and the final Five Year Plan.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

272/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

The Secretary of the Planning Commission is also the Secretary of the NDC

The Secretary of the Planning Commission is also the Secretary of the NDC.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

273/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 43 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 43 WORDS

in the country. Though the NDC is a non-statutory advisory body which makes recommendations to the Central and State governments, the very stature of the Council has ensured that these 'recommendations' have the prestige of directives which are usually followed and obeyed.

in the country. Though the NDC is a non-statutory advisory body which creates recommendations to the Central and State governments, the very stature of the Council has ensured that these 'recommendations" have the prestige of directives which are usually followed and obeyed.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

274/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 46 WORDS 86% MATCHING TEXT 46 WORDS

to secure the active participation and cooperation of the people, improving the efficiency of the administrative services, ensuring the fullest development of the less advanced regions and sections of the community and, through sacrifice, borne equally, by all citizens, build up resources for national development.

to secure the active participation and cooperation of the people, improve the efficiency of the administrative services, ensure the fullest development of the less advanced regions and sections of the community and, through sacrifice borne equally through all citizens, build up possessions for national development.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

275/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

to determine plan priorities of the state within the framework of the priorities of the national plan

To determine plan priorities of the state within the framework of the priorities of the National Plan •

W https://ddceutkal.ac.in/Syllabus/MA_PUB_ADD/Development_Administration.pdf

276/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 55% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

important questions of social and economic policy affecting national development. e. The review of the working of the Plan

SA 05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)

277/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 110 WORDS 74% MATCHING TEXT 110 WORDS

the power to formulate a plan for the most effective and balanced utilisation of the state's resources by determining the areas according to planned priorities. They define the stages in which the plan should be carried out, and propose the allocation of resources for due completion of each stage; indicate the factors, which tend to retard economic development, and determine the conditions, which in view of the current social and political situation should be created 167 for successful execution of the plan; determine the nature of the machinery, which will be necessary for securing the successful implementation of each stage of the plan in all its aspects;

SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

278/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

with the central working groups, the Planning Commission and the central ministries on the other with the Central Working Groups, the Planning Commission and Central ministries on the other.

W https://niilmuniversity.in/coursepack/humanities/Fundamental_of_Development_Administration.pdf

279/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

the state resources and formulate plans for the most effective and balanced utilization of these resources

the State resources and formulate plans for the most effective and balanced utilization of those resources •

W https://ddceutkal.ac.in/Syllabus/MA_PUB_ADD/Development_Administration.pdf

280/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 36 WORDS 81% MATCHING TEXT 36 WORDS

plan priorities of the state within the framework of the priorities of the National Plan assistance is provided to district authorities in formulating their development plans within the sphere in which such planning is considered

plan priorities of the state within the framework of the priorities of the National Plan • To assist district authorities in formulating their development plans within the spheres in which such planning is considered

W https://ddceutkal.ac.in/Syllabus/MA_PUB_ADD/Development_Administration.pdf

281/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 32 WORDS 93% MATCHING TEXT 32 WORDS

to appraise, from time to time, the progress achieved in the execution of each stage of the plan, and recommend the adjustments of policy and measures that may be necessary 3.3

SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

282/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

recommend such adjustments in policies and measures as the review may indicate.

recommend such adjustments in policies and measures as the review may indicate

W https://ddceutkal.ac.in/Syllabus/MA_PUB_ADD/Development_Administration.pdf

283/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 71% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

to formulate development plans based on a scientific assessment of the available resources, and the growth priorities for the

to formulate development plans based on a scientific assessment of the resources of the state, and the growth priorities. The

W https://mis.alagappauniversity.ac.in/siteAdmin/dde-admin/uploads/4/PG_M.A._Socialogy_34943%20A%20 ...

284/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 30 WORDS 51% MATCHING TEXT 30 WORDS

to enable the state government to formulate development plans based on scientific assessment of the state's resources and growth priorities. The board was also entrusted with the task of

to enable the state governments to formulate development plans based on a scientific assessment of the resources of the state, and the growth priorities. The boards were assigned the task of

W https://mis.alagappauniversity.ac.in/siteAdmin/dde-admin/uploads/4/PG_M.A._Socialogy_34943%20A%20 ...

285/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 62 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 62 WORDS

However, in 2014, the 65-year-old Planning Commission was dissolved and a think tank – NITI Aayog (National Institution for Transforming India) took its place. The NITI Aayog (National Institution for Transforming India), is a think tank of the Government of India established on 1 January 2015 as a Commission to give suggestions to the Governments at the central and state levels.

However, in 2014, the 65-year-old Planning Commission was dissolved and a think tank – NITI Aayog (National Institution for Transforming India) took its place. The NITI Aayog (National Institution for Transforming India), is a think tank of the Government of India established on 1 January 2015 as a Commission to give suggestions to the Governments at the central and state levels

W https://old.amu.ac.in/emp/studym/100015563.pdf

286/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 79% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

the Planning Commission was the five-year plan for the economic development of the country. The 5-year

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

287/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 51 WORDS 91% MATCHING TEXT 51 WORDS

across the spectrum of key departments of policy/development process. The Prime Minister of India heads the Aayog as the Ex-officio Chairperson. Currently Suman Bery is the vice chairperson of the NITI. Further, it has some full-time as well as part-time members along with four Union Ministers serving as ex-officio members

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

288/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

all State Chief Ministers and Lt. Governors of the Union Territories

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

289/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 13 WORDS 87% MATCHING TEXT 13 WORDS

for such a national agenda to the Centre and the individual States.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

290/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 76% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

Additionally, there exists specific regional councils, and the Prime Minister can invite special invitees who are experts and specialists

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

291/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 21 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 21 WORDS

policy dynamo, providing advice on strategic policy matters to the governments at the Centre and the States. Further, it includes

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

292/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

Aayog provides direction to the monitoring and evaluation (M & E) activities in India,

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

293/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 62% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

a group of people that the Government has entrusted the responsibility for formulating and regulating policies

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

294/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

NITI Aayog assists the Government in both social and economic issues

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

295/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

a body that actively monitors and evaluates the implementation of the Government's programs and

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

296/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 62% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

Ex-Officio membership: Maximum four from Union council of ministers to be nominated by Prime minister

Ex Officio members -Maximum of 4 members of the Union Council of Ministers to be nominated by the Prime Minister.

W https://old.amu.ac.in/emp/studym/100015563.pdf

297/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 20 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 20 WORDS

Chief Executive Officer: Appointed by Prime minister for a fixed tenure, in rank of Secretary to Government of India

Chief Executive Officer - appointed by the Prime Minister for a fixed tenure, in the rank of Secretary to the Government of India.

W https://old.amu.ac.in/emp/studym/100015563.pdf

298/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

Governing Council: Chief Ministers of all states and Lt. Governors of Union Territories

SA Swayam Prabha- History-State and the Political Economy of Development- Economic Planning- Dr. Syl ... (D141677590)

299/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

Through structured support initiatives and mechanisms with the States on a continuous basis

SA 05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)

300/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 22 WORDS 78% MATCHING TEXT 22 WORDS

in order to accelerate the implementation of development agenda. 183 10) Maintaining a state-of-the-art Resource Centre. Such a

SA 05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)

301/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 14 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 14 WORDS

by enabling States to have active participation in the formulation of national policy.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

302/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

as well as achieving time-bound implementation of quantitative and qualitative targets. 2. Shared National Agenda •

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

303/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 80% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

State's Best Friend at the Centre 184 • Supporting the States in addressing their own challenges.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

304/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 16 WORDS 89% MATCHING TEXT 16 WORDS

providing consultancy support. 4. Decentralized Planning • Restructure the planning process into a bottom-up model.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

305/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 15 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 15 WORDS

Vision & Scenario Planning • Design medium and long-term strategic frameworks across all sectors.

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

306/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 12 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 12 WORDS

external ideas and expertise into government policies and programmes through a

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

307/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 58 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 58 WORDS

best practices on good governance, through a Resource Centre which identifies, analyses, shares and facilitates replication of the same. 8. Harmonization • Facilitate harmonization of actions across different layers of government through communication, coordination, collaboration, and convergence amongst all stakeholders. The emphasis will be on bringing all together on an integrated and holistic approach to development. 10.

best practices on good governance, through a Resource Centre which identifies, analyses, shares and facilitates replication of the same. 8. Harmonization • Facilitate harmonization of actions across different layers of government through communication, coordination, collaboration and convergence amongst all stakeholders. The emphasis will be on bringing all together on an integrated and holistic approach to development. 9.

W https://old.amu.ac.in/emp/studym/100015563.pdf

308/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 17 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 17 WORDS

This would entail being Government's link to the outside world. 7. Knowledge and Innovation hub •

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

309/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 18 WORDS 90% MATCHING TEXT 18 WORDS

government in benchmarking with latest global trends and providing managerial and technical knowhow. 13. Monitoring and Evaluation government, benchmarking with latest global trends and providing managerial and technical knowhow. 13. Monitoring and Evaluation 7 .....

W https://old.amu.ac.in/emp/studym/100015563.pdf

310/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 26 WORDS 92% MATCHING TEXT 26 WORDS

Coordinating interface with the World 185 • Being the nodal point for strategically harnessing global expertise and resources from multilateral platforms, nations etc

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

311/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 33 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 33 WORDS

Internal Consultancy • Offer an internal consultancy function to central and state governments on policy and program design, specialised skills such as structuring and executing Public Private Partnerships. 12. Capacity building •

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

312/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 11 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 11 WORDS

develop mechanisms to formulate credible plans at the village level

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

313/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 24 WORDS 100% MATCHING TEXT 24 WORDS

To pay special attention to the sections of our society that may be at risk of not benefitting adequately from economic progress. ?

SA HC 2.3 - Major Issues in Indian Administrative System.pdf (D158855566)

314/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 98 WORDS 96% MATCHING TEXT 98 WORDS

To provide advice and encourage partnerships between key stakeholders and national and international like-minded Think Tanks, as well as educational and policy research institutions. ? To create a knowledge, innovation, and entrepreneurial support system through a collaborative community of national and international experts, practitioners and other partners. ? To offer a platform for resolution of inter-sectoral and inter-departmental issues to accelerate the implementation of the development agenda. ? To maintain a state-of-the-art Resource Centre, be a repository of research on good governance and best practices in sustainable and equitable development as well as help their dissemination to

SA 05_planning and niti -comparing analysis.docx (D29506509)

315/319 SUBMITTED TEXT 19 WORDS 83% MATCHING TEXT 19 WORDS

is increasingly being recognised as one of the most important elements of financial stabilization in the rural areas is increasingly being recognised as one of the most important elements of credit linkage in the rural areas. •

W https://www.drishtiias.com/to-the-points/Paper2/self-help-groups-shgs

316/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	22 WORDS	78%	MATCHING TEXT	22 WORDS

in the development agenda. The help in accessing credit to the poor and thus, play a critical role in poverty alleviation

in the rural areas. • They help in accessing credit to the poor and thus, play a critical role in poverty alleviation. •

W https://www.drishtiias.com/to-the-points/Paper2/self-help-groups-shgs

317/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	46 WORDS	87%	MATCHING TEXT	46 WORDS

They also help to build social capital among the poor, especially women. This has empowered women and given them greater voice in the society.Financial independence through self-employment has many externalities such as improved literacy levels, better health care and even better family planning. Functions of

They also help to build social capital among the poor, especially women. This empowers women and gives them greater voice in the society. • Financial independence through self-employment has many externalities such as improved literacy levels, better health care and even better family planning. Genesis of

W https://www.drishtiias.com/to-the-points/Paper2/self-help-groups-shgs

318/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	120 WORDS	99%	MATCHING TEXT	120 WORDS

It looks to build the functional capacity of the poor and the marginalized in the field of employment and income generating activities. ? It resolves conflicts through collective leadership and mutual discussion. ? It provides collateral free loan with terms decided by the group at the market driven rates. 196 ? Such groups work as a collective guarantee system for members who propose to borrow from organised sources. The poor collect their savings and save it in banks. In return they receive easy access to loans with a small rate of interest to start their micro unit enterprise. ? Self-Help Groups have emerged as the most effective mechanism for delivery of microfinance services to the poor. 5.6.

It looks to build the functional capacity of the poor and the marginalized in the field of employment and income generating activities. • It resolves conflicts through collective leadership and mutual discussion. • It provides collateral free loan with terms decided by the group at the market driven rates. • Such groups work as a collective guarantee system for members who propose to borrow from organised sources. The poor collect their savings and save it in banks. In return they receive easy access to loans with a small rate of interest to start their micro unit enterprise. • Consequently, Self-Help Groups have emerged as the most effective mechanism for delivery of microfinance services to the poor.

W https://www.drishtiias.com/to-the-points/Paper2/self-help-groups-shgs

319/319	SUBMITTED TEXT	29 WORDS	100%	MATCHING TEXT	29 WORDS

Any plan for social and economic regeneration should take into account the services rendered by these agencies and the state should give them maximum cooperation in strengthening their

SA resubmit_bablugogogoi@gmail.com.docx (D153883518)

Ouriginal by Turnitin

Document Information

Analyzed document	CC-PA-07.pdf (D164996254)
Submitted	2023-04-25 13:09:00
Submitted by	Library NSOU
Submitter email	dylibrarian.plagchek@wbnsou.ac.in
Similarity	18%
Analysis address	dylibrarian.plagchek.wbnsou@analysis.urkund.com

Sources included in the report

SA	Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf Document Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D44072164)	5
W	URL: https://pdfcoffee.com/local-administration-pdf-free.html Fetched: 2021-09-11 06:32:53	3
SA	Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf Document Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D47315443)	13
W	URL: http://www.mkgandhi.org/ebks/Gandhionvillages.pdf Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:10:00	3
W	URL: https://etheses.whiterose.ac.uk/3567/1/418643.pdf Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:09:00	3
W	URL: https://schoolofpoliticalscience.com/meaning-and-history-of-globalization/ Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:10:00	7
W	URL: https://schoolofpoliticalscience.com/what-are-the-5-types-of-globalization/ Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:10:00	4
W	URL: https://lex.juris.hokudai.ac.jp/global-g/paper/4-04.pdf Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:10:00	2
SA	Unit 9.docx Document Unit 9.docx (D112923149)	37
SA	Ch. 3.Development of Local Government Institution and changing trends in Municipal Corporation of India.docx Document Ch. 3.Development of Local Government Institution and changing trends in Municipal Corporation of India.docx (D106063648)	13

W	URL: https://egyanagar.osou.ac.in/download-slm.php?file=BAPS-02-BLOCK-04.pdf Fetched: 2022-02-20 09:57:09	5
SA	Introduction CHAPTER1.docx Document Introduction CHAPTER1.docx (D37901991)	3
SA	c-2nd.docx Document c-2nd.docx (D21510546)	4
SA	vijay thesis.pdf Document vijay thesis.pdf (D142533225)	6
W	URL: http://www.egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/25820/1/Unit-15.pdf Fetched: 2022-04-20 13:30:17	12
W	URL: https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/78333/3/Unit-9.pdf Fetched: 2022-04-21 10:15:26	8
SA	HarvinderKaur_Pol Sci_Chapter3.pdf Document HarvinderKaur_Pol Sci_Chapter3.pdf (D37034708)	3
SA	Chapter-II.pdf Document Chapter-II.pdf (D22537359)	6
SA	Sanjay Kr. Pandey_Economics_130.pdf Document Sanjay Kr. Pandey_Economics_130.pdf (D44467227)	6
W	URL: http://interstatecouncil.nic.in/isc-formations/ Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:10:00	1
SA	Unit 4.docx Document Unit 4.docx (D112923140)	89
SA	CHAPTER 3 (FINAL).docx Document CHAPTER 3 (FINAL).docx (D25359161)	1
SA	Unit 4 D1.docx Document Unit 4 D1.docx (D112391601)	5
W	URL: http://egyanagar.osou.ac.in/slmfiles/BAPS-09-BLOCK-02.pdf Fetched: 2023-01-16 14:02:43	2
W	URL: https://www.selfstudys.com/sitepdfs/tQHDvJehOc4jvydTrlxx Fetched: 2022-11-11 12:03:17	5
SA	Unit 9 URBAN LOCAL GOVERNMENT STRUCTURE ROLE AND RESPONSIBILITIES.docx Document Unit 9 URBAN LOCAL GOVERNMENT STRUCTURE ROLE AND RESPONSIBILITIES.docx (D88400672)	1

W	URL: https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/68102/3/Unit-14.pdf Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:11:00	1
SA	Final Urban_Local_Governance_in_India-_Organisation__Challenges_and_Prospects.pdf Document Final Urban_Local_Governance_in_India-_Organisation__Challenges_and_Prospects.pdf (D121398204)	4
W	URL: http://rcueslucknow.org/publication/decentralization.pdf Fetched: 2021-06-18 05:47:27	6
SA	Revised_HarvinderKaur_PolSci_Chapter3.pdf Document Revised_HarvinderKaur_PolSci_Chapter3.pdf (D37160247)	1
W	URL: https://egyankosh.ac.in/bitstream/123456789/69457/1/Unit-13.pdf Fetched: 2021-11-18 19:25:33	3
W	URL: https://mohua.gov.in/upload/uploadfiles/files/74th_CAA13.pdf Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:10:00	4
W	URL: https://www.wburbanservices.gov.in/upload_file/act_&_rules/west_bengal_municipal_act.pdf Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:11:00	5
SA	LSG_Abstract mudit.pdf Document LSG_Abstract mudit.pdf (D150981245)	1
SA	8. Local Government.docx Document 8. Local Government.docx (D111215572)	1
W	URL: http://www.wbja.nic.in/wbja_adm/files/The%20Kolkata%20Municipal%20Corporation%20Act,%201980.pdf Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:10:00	1
W	URL: https://www.winmeen.com/local-governments-notes-11th-political-science-for-tnpsc-exam/ Fetched: 2022-12-20 04:58:18	1
SA	Unit 12.doc Document Unit 12.doc (D112923152)	42
W	URL: https://kmda.wb.gov.in/page/cms/kmda_organization_7ab718 Fetched: 2023-04-25 13:11:00	2
SA	Ravindra Prasad_74 CAA - Promise and Performance.docx Document Ravindra Prasad_74 CAA - Promise and Performance.docx (D56596344)	1
SA	74th amendment act new.docx Document 74th amendment act new.docx (D83633774)	1

Entire Document

Ouriginal by Turnitin

PREFACE In a bid to standardize higher education in the country, the University Grants Commission (UGC) has introduced Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) based on five types of courses viz. core, discipline specific, generic elective, ability and skill enhancement for graduate students of all programmes at Honours level. This brings in the semester pattern, which finds efficacy in sync with credit system, credit transfer, comprehensive continuous assessments and a graded pattern of evaluation. The objective is to offer learners ample flexibility to choose from a wide gamut of courses, as also to provide them lateral mobility between various educational institutions in the country where they can carry their acquired credits. I am happy to note that the University has been recently accredited by National Assessment and Accreditation Council of India (NAAC) with grade ''A''. UGC (Open and Distance Learning Programmes and Online Programmes) Regulations, 2020 have mandated compliance with CBCS for UG programmes for all the HEIs in this mode. Welcoming this paradigm shift in higher education, Netaji Subhas Open University (NSOU) has resolved to adopt CBCS from the academic session 2021- 22 at the Under Graduate Degree Programme level. The present syllabus, framed in the spirit of syllabi recommended by UGC, lays due stress on all aspects envisaged in the curricular framework of the apex body on higher education. It will be imparted to learners over the six semesters of the Programme. Self Learning Materials (SLMs) are the mainstay of Student Support Services (SSS) of an Open University. From a logistic point of view, NSOU has embarked upon CBCS presently with SLMs in English / Bengali. Eventually, the English version SLMs will be translated into Bengali too, for the benefit of learners. As always, all of our teaching faculties contributed in this process. In addition to this we have also requisitioned the services of best academics in each domain in preparation of the new SLMs. I am sure they will be of commendable academic support. We look forward to proactive feedback from all stakeholders who will participate in the teaching-learning based on these study materials. It has been a very challenging task well executed, and I congratulate all concerned in the preparation of these SLMs. I wish the venture a grand success. Professor (Dr.) Ranjan Chakrabarti Vice-Chancellor

Netaji Subhas Open University Under Graduate Degree Programme Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) Subject : Honours in Public Administration (HPA) Urban Local Government Course Code : CC-PA-07 First Print—January, 2023 _____ Printed in accordance with the regulations of the Distance Education Bureau of the University Grants Commission

Netaji Subhas Open University Under Graduate Degree Programme Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) Subject: Honours in Public Administration (HPA) Urban Local Government Course Code: CC-PA-07 : Board of Studies : : Members : Chandan Basu Dipankar Sinha Professor of History Professor of Political Science Director, School of Social Sciences, NSOU University of Calcutta Soma Ghosh Pujan Kumar Sen Professor of Political Science Professor of Public Administration Principal, HMM College for Women NSOU Barnana Guha Thakurta (Banerjee) Sital Prasad Nag Associate Professor of Political Science Associate Professor of Political Science NSOU NSOU Manoj Kumar Haldar Debajit Goswami Assistant Professor of Political Science Assistant Professor of Public Administration NSOU NSOU : Writers : : Editor : Block I Units 1-5 Pujan Kumar Sen Avijit Biswas Assistant Professor of Political Science, Professor of Public Administration Dr. Gour Mohan Roy College NSOU Block II Units 1-5 : Format Editing : Souradeep Sen Debajit Goswami Assistant Professor of Political Science, Assistant Professor of Public Administration University of North Bengal NSOU Block III Units 1-5 Avijit Biswas Assistant Professor of Political Science, Dr. Gour Mohan Roy College Block IV Units 1-5 Souradeep Sen Assistant Professor of Political Science, Dr. Gour Mohan Roy College Notification All rights reserved. No part of this Self-Learning Material (SLM) may be reproduced in any form without permission in writing from Netaji Subhas Open University. A.B.Aich Registrar

Netaji Subhas Open University Under Graduate Degree Programme Choice Based Credit System (CBCS) Subject: Honours in Public Administration (HPA) Urban Local Government Course Code: CC-PA-07 CONTENTS Block I Introduction .....1- 30 Block II Origin and Growth of Urban Local Government in India .....31-89 Block III Organization and Structure .....90- 114 Block IV Local Government Finance .....115 - 168

1 CC:VII Urban Local Government Block-I Introduction Unit-I Rationale and Necessity of Local Government 1.0 Stucture 1.1Learning Objectives 1.2 Introduction 1.3Definition of Local Government 1.4 Features of Local Government 1.5 Local Government and Local Self Government 1.6 Significance of Local Government 1.7 Conclusion 1.8 Summary 1.9 Glossary 1.10 Model Questions 1.11References 1.1 Learning Objectives Local Government as a concept is not a new one. Its existence is as old as civilization. Local governments can fulfill the needs of the locals. The success of local government depends on how well we can use it to reach our interest. So we have to learn about local government for the betterment of us as well as our society. By reading this unit we can understand- ● The meaning of Local Government. ● Difference between local government and local-self government. And ● Importance of local government. 1.2 Introduction The concept of local Government is not new in India. It is as old as civilization. In India it has been found in the Vedas, in the epics of Ramayana and Mahabharata, Manu Smriti and in the famous novel called Arthashastra written by Kautilya. Local government was formed to solve the problems of the citizens and maintain the rule of law. Every state wants to reach the goal of their socio-economic and political development. Hence local government plays a crucial role to achieve this. At present, local governments in almost all countries have legal legitimacy.

71% MATCHING BLOCK 1/321 SA Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D44072164)

2 In India there are three tier systems of government, these are union government, state government and local government. Local Government was included in the Indian Constitution in 1992 through the 73rd and 74th amendment act. It operates at both urban (Urban Local Government) and rural level (Rural Local Government). Urban local government consists of institutions like Municipal Corporation, Municipality and Nagar Panchayat and Rural local government consists of institutions such as Gram Panchayat, Panchayat Samiti and Zilla Parishad. Local government is the basic unit of people's participation and governance. It fulfills the basic needs of citizens as well as the society. Local government gives lessons of political consciousness and political socialization which developed the possibilities of successful democracy. Institutions of the local government ensure devolution of power from central level to grass root level for betterment of government services. Citizens cultivate cooperative common interests through the local government. Local government's institutions play a crucial role in the process of democratic decentralized governance. It provides the opportunities for people to participate in governance, developmental policies and decision making processes. It gives an important stage to the rustic people to analyze their problems and emphasis on the responsible and effective local government for the enjoyment of political rights. 1.3 Definition of Local Government Local government has been defined in various ways. According to L. Golding "

68% MATCHING BLOCK 4/321 SA Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D47315443)

Local Government as the management of their affairs by the people of locality". To Harris, local government is "A government of the people themselves through freely elected representatives". John J Clarke said that "

100% MATCHING BLOCK 2/321 W

Local government appears to be that part of the government of a nation or state which deals mainly with such matters as concern the inhabitants of a particular district or place." According to K. Venkatarangaiya "

97% MATCHING BLOCK 3/321 W

Local government is the administration of a locality-a village, a city or any other area smaller than the state-by a body representing the local inhabitants, possessing a fairly large amount of autonomy, raising at least a part of its revenue through local taxation and spending its income on services which are regarded as local and, therefore, distinct from State and Central Services". R.N Prasad in his book 'Urban Self Government in India' has given a more satisfying definition of local government. In his words "Local Government means a system of territorial units with defined boundaries, a legal entity, institutional structure, powers and duties laid down in general and special statutes and a degree of financial and administrative autonomy". A local government is a locally elected administrative unit or administrative structure. This administrative structure is usually elected by local citizens and it solves the problems of the local

3 citizens and adopts the best possible policies for the development. The local government has to be accountable to the local citizens for all its developmental activities. However, the responsibility of implementing various central or state projects is vested in local governments. In this connection, the local government also has to be accountable to the central and state governments. People also get various services from our local government such as drinking water supply, drainage system, roads, garbage cleaning, electricity. It also entertains us by developing parks, playgrounds, tourist attractions,etc. Generally local governments have their own sources of income such as property tax, tax on services etc. In view of the above discussion, we can say that different experts have discussed local government in different ways. It is very difficult to find a universal definition of local government because the nature, powers, functions and structure of local government vary from country to country. 1.4 Features of Local Government From the above definitions, we find some features of local government very easily. The features of local government mentioned below:- ● Local government is a smaller unit with defined area determined by the state or central government. The area of local government can be changed by legislation. ● Local government administration is operated by a body of persons who are directly elected by the citizens belonging in that defined area. ● The primary function of local government is to provide basic amenities to the citizens and the nature of its functions is developmental. ● Local government has limited power to make laws and its enforcement. ● Local government has its own income source. ● Local government's institution is directly accountable to the local citizens for their every action. ● Local governments ensure the participation of the local citizens in the decision making process for their own needs. 1.5 Local Government and Local Self Government Concepts of local government differ from country to country. Various scholars call it 'Local Government' and some scholars call it 'Local Self Government'. The term Local Self Government was used to refer to local government in our country during colonial rule. Pardeep Sachdeva in his book 'Local Government in India' stated that ''the term

90% MATCHING BLOCK 8/321 SA Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D44072164)

local self government has been used in those countries which were under colonial rule. For instance, in our 4 country, the term originated when the country was ruled by the British and we did not have any self-government at the central and provincial levels. After the British government decided to associate us in administering local affairs, it meant a slice of self-government for the people. Hence the term 'local self-government' was meaningful at that time. But now the word 'Self' has become redundant as the country enjoys self rule at all levels." 1.6 Significance/Necessity of Local Government We can guess the rationale and necessity of local government already in the definition and characteristics of local government. However, if we discuss how the local government affects us, its necessity and rationale will be very clear. Local government serves two purposes. The first one is for administrative purposes and the other one is to ensure citizens participation in the decision making process in determining specific local public needs. Democratic rights can be extended to the masses through local government systems. Through this system decentralization is effected and the way is paved for the full development of each individual's personality. The importance of local government institutions as educational centers of democratic thinking is immense. Local governments ensure the environment in which every individual can enjoy their liberty. According to A. Tocqueville " Without Local institutions a nation may give itself a government, but it has not got the spirit of liberty".Mahatma Gandhi rightly said "

Indian

93% MATCHING BLOCK 5/321 W

Independence must begin at the bottom. thus , every village will be a republic, ... having full powers".

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru addressed a conference of Ministers of the Department of Provincial

79% MATCHING BLOCK 10/321 SA Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D47315443)

Local Government in 1948 that "Local Self Government is not and must be the basis of any true system of democracy. We have got rather into the habit of thinking democracy at the top and not so much below. Democracy at the top may not be a success unless you build on its foundation from below." The rationale and necessity of local government is debated from various angles. Some important aspects are discussed below:- 1.6.1 Instrument for Political Participation Local government firmly establishes local democracy. Local government allows the citizens of the local area to participate in the decision-making process. The presence of local government allows people to participate in the political process .Local government institutions develop the civic consciousness of the citizens and enrich the administrative experience. Through local government's institutions, local people get an opportunity to take initiative in law-making and administrative activities. As a result, citizens' political consciousness, responsibility, administrative competence etc. increase.

5 The mindset of participation in government activities is developed among the local people. As a result, the foundations of democracy are strengthened and the success of democracy is assured. H. J. Laski in his famous book 'Grammar of Politics' rightly said that "The institution of local government is educative in perhaps a highest degree at least contingently than any other part of government. And it must be remembered that there is no other way of bringing the mass of citizens into intimate contact with persons responsible for decisions." 1.6.2 Instrument for Political Education Local government plays a crucial role as a source of political education for common people. In general, political education of the people means that the people will be aware of the political and administrative experience at the local level. Since local representative government is closest to the people, direct experience of the structure and functioning of this government is possible. Local government makes people aware of their political rights and duties. Through local government, people get a fair idea of how to vote in elections, and how to make policies on matters of public interest. Also, through participation in local politics, people become aware of national politics and world politics. Thats why, local government plays an important role in the political education of citizens. Getting involved in local government activities, citizens learn a basic education for national or state level politics. 1.6.3 Instrument for Political Socialization Local government is established on the principle of democratic decentralization. Participation and initiatives of local people are ensured at the lowest level of administration through local government. As a result, political socialization of local citizens is possible. Political activities of political parties and groups revolve around local government. Every political party strives to spread its political ideas as much as possible among the citizens. As a result of all these political activities the process of political socialization of the masses is accelerated. 1.6.4 Instrument for Political Leadership Dr. Biswanath Chakraborty elaborates very well with statistics on how local government is regarded as a training ground for political leaders. Local government acts as a training ground for developing the future political leaders of the state. For this reason some have characterized local government as the 'political Industry' of building leaders. In countries where local government is well-established and has a long tradition of local government, a large proportion of national politicians come from local government experience.

6 For example, many members of the United States Legislature come after local government experience. In 1954, a survey found that 11 out of 31 governors in the United States had local government experience. A similar survey in 1955 found that 33 of the United States senators had local government experience. In addition, 29 percent of the members of the United States House of Representatives have local government experience. In Britain and other European countries, participation in local government activities is considered a training ground for going to the central legislature. A survey from 1945 to 1950 found that 56 per cent of the Labor party and 25 percent of Conservative and Liberal parties in Britain's House of Commons had local government experience. In India, both before and after independence, local governments have served as training grounds for the making of national politicians. Examples include Subhash Chandra Bose, Jawaharlal Nehru, Vallabhbhai Patel, Sarojini Naidu, who have emerged as national politicians with local government experience. 1.6.5 Instrument for Political Accountability Since local government is directly elected by local citizens, local government is accountable to the public for its performance. As the local government is closest to the people, the people are able to question the functioning of the government and solve any problem collectively. Since local residents can participate in the decision-making process of local government, they are also responsible for the performance of local government. 1.6.6 Instrument for Socio-economic Development Most modern states are large and populous. The problems of all these states are very complex. It is not possible for the central government or state government to solve all the problems timely. Central government is mostly busy with national issues. State governments are also engaged in dealing with provincial problems. Neither central nor state governments can give due attention to local problems. Through local government institutions it is possible to give proper attention to local socio-economic issues and provide necessary solutions. 1.6.7 Instrument for Decentralized Administration A decentralized administrative structure is made possible through the establishment of local governments. Only the local government understands the problems of local citizens best.Development of local areas can be managed by the local government much more efficiently than the central government or the state government.

7 1.6.8 Instrument for National Integration Local government has a special role as an instrument of national integration of the state. In a state like India with ethnic, tribal, linguistic and religious diversity, the local government has a special role to play in integrating various ethnic and tribal groups into the political process. Local government helps to engage people from different groups in political activities. Only a small number of people can join the national politics. In this case, the local government creates opportunities for a large number of people to participate in the political process. The more people have access to the political system, the more stable a country's political system is. Many experts believe that if the local government can be given the opportunity to operate independently, it will not only ensure the harmonious development of various regional entities in India, but will also strengthen national unity. 1.7 Conclusion The importance of local self-governance in making a democratic system successful and viable is undeniable. Democracy is paved when citizens actively participate in political and administrative activities in maximum numbers. Local government ensures the political participation of the people. The presence of a successful local government is instrumental in the overall development of a country. 1.8 Summary Local government is a government with defined areas operated by elected representatives and it is accountable to the citizens for their functions. The function of local government is to provide services to the citizens. by local government local citizens can participate in the governing process and collectively achieve their common interest. Besides this, local governments implement policies of the central or state government. It is the people's nearest government by which people can solve their problems collectively. It has limited power to make laws and it has its own source of income. Local government ensures the citizen's participation in the decision making process of local governance, ensures political education and political socialization of the masses. It is also used as an instrument for making political leadership and political accountability as well. Local government is also considered as an instrument for national integration and its prime goal is to socio economic development of the citizen as well as the state. 1.9 Glossary Local Government- A government in a particular village or town or city by an elected representative who lives in that particular village or town or city. Rural Local Government- Local government in village areas. Urban Local government- Local Government in town or city areas. Democracy- A political system by whole citizens of a state through elected representatives.

8 Decentralized Governance- A system where power or responsibilities or activities of the government transfer from central level to local administration. Political Participation- Participation of people in the governing process. Political Socialization- The process by which a person integrates with the political culture of the society, gains knowledge of the political values, ideals, and beliefs of the society and acquires a social and political nature. Accountability- The condition of being accountable or responsible. 1.10 Model Questions Long questions ➔ Discuss the meaning and characteristics of local government. ➔ write a note on the necessity of local government. ➔ What is the rationale behind the establishment of local government? Short Questions ➔ How do you define local government? ➔ Write a short note on local government. ➔ What Are the Differences between Local Government and Local-Self Government? ➔ What is the role of local government in political participation and political socialization? ➔ 'Local government is the training ground of future political leaders'-explain it. ➔ What is the role of local government in the expansion of political education? 1.11 References 1. S.R. Maheshwari, Indian Administration, Orient BlackSwan,New Delhi, 2013. 2. L. Golding, Local government. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1975 3. Harris, G.M. Comparative local government. London: oxford, 1948 4. John.J. Clarke, Local Government of the United Kingdom. London:1948 5. P. Sachdeva, Local Government in India. Noida: Pearson, 2011 6. R.N. Prasad,Urban Local Self Government in India. New Delhi:Mittal Publication, 2006 7. Chakraborty, Biswanath: People's Participation in West Bengal Panchayat System, Kolkata, Mitram, 2008.

9 Unit-II Approaches to the Study of Local Government 2.0 Structure 2.1Learning Objectives 2.2 Introduction 2.3 Liberal Approach 2.4 Marxist Approach 2.5 Gandhian Approach 2.6 Public Choice Approach 2.7 Conclusion 2.8 Summary 2.9 Keywords 2.10Model Questions 2.11References 2.1Learning Objectives In order to have a comprehensive understanding of local government, it is necessary to know how various theorists have described it. By reading this unit we will learn about various approaches in the discussion of local government. Here every approach has been discussed separately. 2.2 Introduction We have already observed that there is no specific definition of local government. Because its nature and functions differ from country to country. Therefore, no specific theory of local government has been developed. Theoretical discussions about local government are limited. However, we get the concept of local government from the discussion of some theorists of different genres. They presented different approaches to local government. These are- ● Liberal Approach ● Marxist Approach ● Gandhian Approach ● Public Choice Approach 2.3 Liberal Approach The primary objective of liberalism is to establish individual liberty. Although John Locke was the first to talk about liberalism, we can find discussion of the liberal approach of local 10 government in the writings of J S Mill, Lord Bryce, Alexis de Tocqueville etc. Political liberty has always been important in the discussion of liberalism. Individual freedom is achieved only through the enjoyment of political rights of the individual. And here comes the idea of decentralization. Decentralization of state power is possible through local government. According to the liberal approach, local government is shown as a means of providing public services. Liberals wanted to frame local government in the context of national politics as well as questions of local development. In liberal approach, the positive aspect of liberty is defined as participation in the governing process and local government makes it possible. Because people's participation through local government is the driving force behind democratic decentralization. According to the liberal approach, local government is the government by which the people are educated in democratic ideals of civil rights, their duties as citizens in the society, so that future leaders can be created from society and the liberty of the people can be protected. 2.3.1 J.S Mill on Local Government According to J.S Mill, Representative government is the best form of government. Because only a representative government can highlight the problems of the citizens and ensure its solution. He discussed local government in the light of representative government. According to him, through local government the maximum number of citizens can be represented in the process of governing. In general, the local government creates a positive environment in which citizens can enjoy their liberty. In his book 'Representative Government' argued that the national government is always busy with national issues. For this reason the national government can't look after the local issues. Local government is the government of the local residents. According to him Local government is required to solve all local issues. He also analyzed the need for local government in the context of political education. Local government is the greatest instrument of political education of the people. By participating in local government decision-making processes, people have the opportunity to apply their experiences at the national level. 2.3.2 Alexis de Tocqueville on Local Government Alexis de Tocqueville is one of the authors of the Liberalism approach to local government discourse. The French government sent Alexis de Tocqueville to study in America in 1831. Although his job was officially to review prisons. During his nine-month journey, he was particularly impressed by American civic culture.

11 We find his view on local government in his famous book 'Democracy in America'. In this book he writes "The village or township is the only association which is so perfectly natural that wherever a number of men are collected it seems to constitute itself. The town, or tithing, as the smallest division of a community, must necessarily exist in all nations..." he also added "....local assemblies of citizens constitute the strength of free nations.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 6/321 W

Town-meetings are to liberty what primary schools are to science; they bring it within the people's reach, they teach men how to use and how to enjoy it.

A nation may establish a system of free government, but without the spirit of municipal institutions it cannot have the spirit of liberty." Regarding local government, Tocqueville states that the political life of a citizen begins with the process of urban life. He observes that small towns in the United States are like a state. Power came from these cities or towns. That is, the main power was in the hands of the cities, the state did not leave its power in the hands of the city, but the state was created by taking power from the city. The city administration enjoys complete independence. But when the affairs of the country were presented, the cities willingly accepted the authority of the state. According to him, this was possible because of balance in the entire political process. According to Tocqueville American's democracy lies in the 'Town Spirit'. Urban cohesion is the bedrock of American democracy. In his discussion on local government, we find that the collaboration between local and central government, role of local government for public well being, political participation in local government, civic consciousness. 2.4 Marxist Approach Marxist approach to local government discourse is an alternative approach to liberalism. Although neither Marx nor Engels gave a theory about local government, they discussed local government in the context of socialism. Marxists begin their discussion with a critique of the liberal capitalist state and from here the local government discussion started. According to Marxist approach the nature of local government in a capitalist system is purely capitalist in nature. In a class-based society, local government functions only to protect the interests of the capitalist class. The Second Congress of the Communist International stated that "It is no different with the local government institutions of the bourgeoisie, which it is theoretically incorrect to counterpose to the state organs. In reality they are similar apparatuses of the state machine of the bourgeoisie, which must be destroyed by the revolutionary proletariat and replaced by local soviets of workers' deputies". The nature of local government in a socialist state is reflected in Marx's writings. According to him, after the removal of capitalism, the bureaucracy should be destroyed and communes should 12 be established at the local level. The members of the commune will be elected by the people. This suggests that the devolution of power to civil society at the local level. This will be more understandable if we describe the nature of local government in the Soviet Union. In the Soviet Union Local government representatives were elected by the citizens and were responsible for managing the development of the local area. Each local administrative unit had a functional area and the local administrative units were governed by the principle of democratic centralism. The local government units worked closely with the Communist Party. Local government was run as a functional unit under the direction of the Communist Party. These units of local government could give feedback to the Communist Party leadership and the government, but were bound to follow the instructions of the higher level of the party or the government according to the principle of democratic centralism. Another Marxist writer who conceptualized local government was Cynthia Cockburn in her book 'The Local State'. According to Jong Soo Lee, Cockburn explained local government as being a relatively autonomous instrument of class domination. Accordingly, the main point is placed on the 'structural' context of 'local' government. Local government is not concerned as an issue about organization, but with reference to core theoretical concerns derived from Marxist theories about the state, class relations and policy-making.

94% MATCHING BLOCK 7/321 W

94% MATCHING BLOCK 9/321 W

its basic role is 'continually to reproduce the conditions within which capitalist accumulation can take place. The capitalist state is charged with securing the conditions favorable to capital accumulation as a whole and in the long term. 2.5

Gandhian Approach Mahatma Gandhi is one of the architects of local government in India. His approach towards local government is most relevant. From his concept of Gram-Swaraj we get the concept of local government. Mahatma Gandhi described his ideal village that "

100% MATCHING BLOCK 11/321 W

An ideal Indian village will be so constructed as to lend itself to perfect sanitation. It will have cottages with sufficient light and ventilation built of a material obtainable within a radius of five miles of it. The cottages will have courtyards enabling householders to plant vegetables for domestic use and to house their cattle. The village lanes and streets will be free of all avoidable dust. It will have wells according to its needs and accessible to all. It will have houses of worship for all, also a common meeting place, a village common for grazing its cattle, a co-operative dairy, primary and secondary schools in which industrial education will be the central fact, and it will have Panchayats for settling disputes. It will produce its own grains, vegetables and fruit, and its own Khadi. This is roughly my idea of a model village...

I am convinced that the villagers

100% MATCHING BLOCK 12/321 W

can, under intelligent guidance, double the village income as distinguished from individual income. There are in our villages' inexhaustible resources not for commercial purposes in every case but certainly for local purposes in almost every case. The greatest tragedy is the hopeless unwillingness of the villagers to better their lot." 13

He envisioned a village where all the inhabitants would be self-reliant and they would all work together to manage the village. He very much emphasized on decentralized governance rather than authority to establish self-rule. He wanted to establish Gram-Swaraj through the establishment of Panchayat. Village assemblies are the key of Gandhi's concept of Gram-Swaraj. To him this village assembly will have its own decision-making power and the power to implement the decisions. The village assembly will play a positive role in creating brotherhood among the local people. Instead of a centralized system, Mahatma Gandhi wanted to create a systematic anarchy where the role of the state would be minimal. He introduced the idea of swaraj to establish the sovereignty of the individual instead of state authority. In his Gram-Swaraj the individual would manage his own governance. 2.6 Public Choice Approach The public-choice approach emerged in the early 1960s. The supporters of the public choice approach are James Buchanan, Gordon Tullock, William A. Niskanen, and William C. Mitchell. According to Bidyut Chakraborty, Public choice theory is a method to study the decisional processes for the allocation of scarce resources in the society. It lays emphasis on the element of choice, with the citizen in the role of consumer. It is in favour of the citizen's choice in the provision of public goods and services. The advocates of this approach assume that the individual can make rational decisions about his needs and demands. An individual will act in accordance with his self-interest in order to maximize his decesion. According to the Public Choice approach, the market is a key factor for providing services and goods to the citizens. The prime objective of the public choice approach is to reduce social responsibility of the state. This approach promotes decentralization of power, privatization, maximizing the role of market, and debureaucratization. The supporters of the public choice approach criticize the present structure of the local government and want massive reform. Like the national government, local governments are also struggling through corruption, inefficiency, lack of transparency etc.The public choice approach always supports private initiatives. If the management of local government is entrusted to the appropriate private player on the basis of contract, the competition between different private organizations will increase. As a result, efficiency in local government operations will increase and corruption will also be avoided. 2.7 Conclusion From the above discussion it can be stated that liberal approach in the study of local government is a widely accepted approach in the world. Marxixt model of local government was mostly seen in the socialist state like USSR. The Gandhian ideal concept of local government is the base of the Indian model

14 of local government. The autonomy of the villages that Mahatma Gandhi talked about was not implemented in reality. The local government of India is directly or indirectly accountable to local citizens, state government and central government. The process of privatization in terms of local government services and goods are happening but the role of the state in the socio economic development of the citizens can not be ignored. Local government is responsible for the development of the rustic people. It is the instrument of the marginalized people for their upliftment. 2.8 Summary Although it is very hard to find a universal definition of local government, there is no specific approach in the study of local government. We have found the concept of local government from the various writers of different genres. There are four approaches in local government study. These are Liberal Approach, Marxist Approach, Gandhian Approach and Public Choice Approach. The chief exponent of liberal approach are J.S Mill and Alexis de Tocqueville. According to their perspective, local government is the means for protecting civil rights, individual rights, making future political leaders, public well being, political participation in local government, civic consciousness. Marxist perspective on local government is different. They argued that in a capitalist state, local governments work for the interest of the owner class or capitalist. In a Socialist state, the local government runs as a functional unit under the direction of the Communist Party. The public choice approach promotes privatization. The supporters of the public choice approach want to create a competitive environment where citizens have multiple choices. It increases the transparency and efficiency in the local government. 2.9 Glossary Liberalism- A political philosophy which promotes individual liberty and civil rights. Decentralization- Transfer of responsibility or activity or power from top to bottom of an organization or governmental institutions. Representative Government- A government which is formed by elected representatives. Civic Culture- a culture which implies acceptance of the authority of the states and belief in participation in civic duties by the people. Socialism- A political philosophy which promotes Social ownership of the means of production and a co- operative management of the economy. Gram-Swaraj- Autonomy of village Privatization- The policy of transferring publicly owned assets, organizations or companies to private ownership. Debureaucratization- A process in which dependency on bureaucrats decreases.

15 2.10 Model Questions Long Questions ➔ Discuss the liberal approach in the study of local government. ➔ Write a note on Gandhian conception of local government ➔ How did Marxist approach describe local government? ➔ Which approach has gained the most acceptance in the study of local government? Justify your answer Short Questions ➔ Write a short note on the Public Choice approach in the study of local government. ➔ How did J.S Mill describe the local government? ➔ What was Alexis de Tocqueville's idea about local government? ➔ Write a short note on Mahatma Gandhi's 'Gram-Swaraj'. ➔ How did Cynthia Cockburn describe local government? 2.11 References 1. P. Sachdeva, Local Government in India. Noida: Pearson, 2011 2. R.N. Prasad,Urban Local Self Government in India. New Delhi:Mittal Publication, 2006 3. Lenin, V. (no date) The Communist international[1], The Second Congress of the Communist International. Available at:https://www.marxists.org/archive/lenin/works/1920/jul/x03.htm (Accessed: October 22, 2022). 4. Lee, J.S. ANALYSING POLICY VARIATION IN LOCAL GOVERNMENT . Available at: https://etheses.whiterose.ac.uk /3567/1/418643.pdf (Accessed: November 2, 2022). 5. Gandhiji on Villages. Compiled by: Divya Joshi. Mumbai: Mani Bhavan Gandhi Sangrahalaya; Available from: http://www.mkgandhi.org/ebks/Gandhionvillages.pdf . (Accessed on 2022 OCT 22]. 6. 7. Chakrabarty, B., Kandpal, P.C. and Roy, A. (2020) Public administration in a globalizing world: Theories and practices. New Delhi, India: SAGE Publishing. Unit-III Democratic Decentralization 3.0 Structure 3.1 Learning Objectives 3.2 Introduction 3.3 Concept of Decentralization 3.4 Democracy and Decentralization 3.5 Conclusion

16 3.6 Summary 3.7 Keywords 3.8 Model Questions 3.9 References 3.1 Learning Objectives By reading this unit you will understand the concept of decentralization, democracy and how the process of decentralization makes democracy successful. 3.2 Introduction Today, democratic decentralization is the essence of an ideal political system. According to recent political and social scientists, democratic decentralization is more relevant in developing countries of the Third World. In all these third world countries it is necessary to consider the issue of development in terms of local people's participation and control. Local autonomy is a natural consequence of the combination of democracy and decentralization of power. Local autonomy and democratic decentralization become meaningful through local public participation and control. Political empowerment of all these institutions is essential. The same political ideology that prevails in democratic decentralization finds expression in local self-government. 3.3 Concept of Decentralization Decentralization has broader meaning. In the modern sense, decentralization can be expressed as Transfer of administrative authority from the central government to provincial institutions, local governments, semi-autonomous government institutions, professional bodies and voluntary organizations outside the administration. So, Decentralization refers to a process by which the government transfers some of its responsibilities and duties completely to some other authority. In other words, the government gives responsibility and power to perform some of its responsibilities to lower authorities or organizations. The existence and independence of local bodies in decision-making at the local level through decentralization is fairly recognized. But in the process of decentralization, a sense of collective responsibility is created. In other words, local autonomy is created through the devolution of powers and responsibilities by the ruling government to another local authority. Professor Laski said in his book 'A Grammar of Politics' "It is a training in self government. It entrusts the administration of powers to those who will feel most directly the consequences of those powers."

85% MATCHING BLOCK 13/321 SA Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D47315443)

According to Crook and Manor "Decentralization can be usefully understood as a political process whereby administrative authority, public resources and responsibilities are transferred 17 from central government agencies to lower-level organs of government or to non-governmental bodies, such as community-based organizations (CBOs), 'third party' non-governmental organizations (NGOs) or private sector actors". Most modern state systems are public welfare democratic state systems. This type of state has to perform many and various responsibilities in various fields for the socio-economic and political development of the citizen. Due to this wide spread of government responsibilities, it is necessary to give some responsibilities and powers to some authorities. When all the responsibilities and duties are in existence, arrangements are made to transfer responsibility and power for execution. In the process of decentralization, the central authority has to hand over power and authority to the local level authorities. In many cases to adjust policies and programs according to local conditions the necessity is felt. In all these cases the imperative of discretionary decision of the local authorities is undeniable. Leonard White's definition of the concept of decentralization is significant. In the work titled 'decentralization' this social scientist said "Decentralization denotes the transference of authority legislative, judicial or administrative from higher level of government to lower."

91% MATCHING BLOCK 14/321 SA Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D47315443)

From the above discussion we find some features of decentralization. They are as follows ● Decentralization essentially eliminates the system of administrative promotion and hierarchy at specific levels of governance. ● Decentralization also eliminates the pitfalls of bureaucratic administration. ● The process of decentralization creates a tendency for citizen's participation in administrative affairs and inculcates democratic ideals at the grassroots level. ● Through the process of decentralization citizens can be more empowered to engage in the governing process. And this is the key to the success of democracy 3.4 Democracy and Decentralization Democracy cannot succeed without decentralization. Democratic governance is the most inclusive form of governance in this era. In this type of governance, democratic ideals are put into practice. That is, the democratic ideology is implemented in the administrative organizational structure, and the idea of decentralization is embedded in it. Decentralization as an administrative process is the opposite of centralization. Linked to administrative processes, people's enthusiasm and initiative are stimulated. As a result, the development process in the socio-economic field is accelerated. The process of decentralization creates more enthusiasm and improves morale among local authorities. Camille Cates Barnet in his work titled 'Democratic Decentralization' has stated that "Democratic decentralization is the development of reciprocal relationships between central and 18 local governments and between local governments and citizens. It addresses the power to develop and implement policy, the extension of democratic processes to lower levels of government, and measures to ensure that democracy is sustainable. Democratic decentralization incorporates both decentralization and democratic local governance" Democratic decentralization is a political concept. From this point of view, power is distributed from higher to lower levels through democratic decentralization. Its objective is to expand public participation in the governing process. The main idea of decentralization is the decentralization of power. This decentralization of power is democratic. 3.5 Conclusion Finally, it can be said that democratic decentralization is considered as a means of realizing the political rights of citizens. It further encourages citizens to participate in the governance process. So democratic decentralization is a process in which power is transferred from higher authority to local authority and local authority deals with the people directly. It is the successor of grassroot democracy. 3.6 Summary Decentralization is the process in which power or activities or responsibilities are transferred from higher level to lower level of an organization or governmen's institutions. The essence of democracy is the people's participation in the governing process and the process of decentralization allows citizens to engage in the decision making process of the government. decentralization eliminates the pitfalls of bureaucratic administration. Democratic decentralization fcilates people to be more empowered. 3.7 Glossary Decentralization- Transfer of responsibility or activity or power from top to bottom of an organization or governmental institutions. Democratic Decentralization- The process of devolution of state functions and resources from the center to lower level elected representatives. Local Autonomy- A system in which institutions of local government have sufficient discretion to act on matters of local affairs. 3.8 Model Questions Long Questions ➔ Write a note on Democratic Decentralization.
19 ➔ What is the role of Decentralization in Democratic governance? Short Questions ➔ What do you mean by Decentralization? ➔ What are the characteristics of decentralization? ➔ Write a short note on democratic decentralization? ➔ Can democracy succeed without decentralization? 3.9 References 1. R.N. Prasad,Urban Local Self Government in India. New Delhi:Mittal Publication, 2006 2. Laski, H.J. (2018) A grammar of politics. New Delhi: Anamika Publishers & Distributors (P) Ltd. 3.

73% MATCHING BLOCK 15/321 SA Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D44072164)

Crook, R.C. and Manor, J. (1998) Democracy and Decentralization in South Asia and West Africa. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

Unit- IV Local Government, Democracy and Development 4.0 Structure 4.1Learning Objectives 4.2 Introduction 4.3 Democracy 4.4 Development 4.5 Local government and Democracy 4.6 Local Government and Development 4.7 Conclusion 4.8 Summary 4.9Glossary 4.10Model Questions 4.11References

20 4.1 Objectives Only local government institutions can understand the needs of the local citizens. It also is responsible for the local development. By reading this chapter you will understand the meaning of democracy, development and relation between local government, democracy and development. 4.2 Introduction Currently, democracy is a globalized system. The necessity of local autonomy in democratic governance is undeniable. Many refer to this local autonomy as a sign of democracy. There is no substitute for autonomy of local government. For this reason the system of local autonomy through local government is widely accepted in every democratic state. 4.3 Democracy The meaning and features of local government have already been discussed, so let's start with democracy. The word 'democracy' is derived from two Greek words. The corresponding Greek words are ‘Demos’ and ‘Kratos’. 'Demos' refers to the people and 'kratos' refers to power. So in the etymological sense 'democracy' refers to the power of the people. Andrew Heywood in his book ‘Politics’ stated that “The origin of the term democracy can be traced back to Ancient Greece. Like other words ending in 'cracy' (for example, autocracy, aristocracy and bureaucracy), democracy is derived from the Greek word Kratos meaning power, or rule. Democracy thus means 'rule by the demos' (the demos referring to the people', although the Greeks originally used this to mean 'the poor' or 'the many')." Former American President Abraham Lincon once said that “Democracy is the government of the people, by the people, for the people.” Bernard Crick in his ‘In Defence of Politics’, said that “"... democracy is perhaps the most promiscuous word in the world of public affairs.” According to Rajeev Bhargabha democracy ensures the accountability of those holding power to the people who are the ultimate source of the power. It is the consent of the people which makes government authority legitimate. In general, democracy is a system where power rests in the hands of the people. In other words, democracy refers to a system in which the people have political power. People can exercise that power directly or indirectly. This use of power can be of three types. These three types of exercise of political power are: participation, competition and liberty. Participation is through voting and election. There is competition between political parties. And finally liberty refers to freedom of speech and expression and freedom of assembly etc .

21 4.4 Development The term ‘development’ has multidimensional character. It is complex, ambiguous, contested and elusive in its nature. In general development refers to socio-economic change that allows people to achieve their human potential. It can be said that development is the political term that has different meanings, that depend on the context in which the term is used and it may be used to reflect and to justify a variety of different agendas held by different people or organizations. According to experts, development means bringing the country and the nation towards modernization by causing economic growth and ensuring the country's savings, investment, production and increase in national income. Adam Smith defined national development as total accumulation of capital. At that time the proponents of economic development considered the growth of per capita income as national development. According to the United Nations Development Program (UNDP), development refers to a process that enables people to choose the benefits and standards of living they want. Amartya Sen in his book ‘Development as Freedom’ stated that development simply does not mean GDP growth, industrialization or increasing national income. He elaborated development in the context of freedom. Actual development is possible by securing freedom. Instead of increasing people's income, it ensures people's social security, freedom, welfare etc. 4.5 Local Government and Democracy Democracy promotes the people’s participation in the decision making process in governance. Local government ensures the participation of people at the grassroot level of governance. Through local government citizens can directly participate in the decision making process in the government. Every democratic country establishes an elected local government which deals with the local issues. Local peoples enjoy their liberty and rights through participation in local government. So it can be said that local government is the fundamental unit of a true democratic state. Pradeep Sachdeva stated that the success of national democracy largely depends upon the success of democracy at the grassroots level. According to Anwar Hussain Syed “Local Governments are to total government what basic tissues are to the human body. Without them, the government would have no vitality. The countries, cities, towns, villages and boroughs serve as training schools for the leaders of government, and in the affairs of local government are tried those who aspire to state and national offices``. Jawaharlal Nehru’s speech at the first Local Self-Government Ministries Conference in 1948 is very relevant.

He

Ouriginal by Turnitin

88% MATCHING BLOCK 29/321 SA Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D44072164)

said " Local self Government is and must be the basis of any true system of democracy. We have got rather into the habit of thinking 22 democracy at the top and not so much below. Democracy at the top may not be success unless you build on its foundation from below". Local governments allow citizens to take collective decisions for their socio-economic development. It is also considered as the training ground of the people for realization of democratic values. Democracy is all about power to people. Local governments empower people to secure liberty. 4.6 Local Government and Development Local government is the basic unit for the people's socio-economic development. It is the mediator for implementation of state or central government's developmental programmes and policies. Besides this only the local government can understand the needs of the local people. Local governments are responsible for local development. According to Sachdeva, the local government, being concerned generally with the welfare of the people, deals mainly with those functions which contribute to the socio-economic development of the country. Being more conversant and concerned with the local problems as compared to the government in the capital, it can manage the local affairs more efficiently and effectively. 4.7 Conclusion From the above discussion it can be concluded that local government ensures the grassroot democracy for socio-economic development. Development and grassroot democracy are the two sides of the same coin. Iit is considered a tool for promoting self-governing. After the independence of India 1947, local governments in urban and rural areas in some states played the crucial role to spread democratic values among the citizens and boost the developmental process. 4.8 Summary Democracy is a political system that is governed by the people. In other words, in democracy, people can choose their government by participating in elections. The goal of democratic government is to protect the people's liberty. Local government is the key to making democracy successful. local citizens can choose their local government to achieve their collective interest. the local government performs to ensure the socio-economic development of the people. the local government implements several developmental schemes and policies of the national or state government. 4.9 Glossary Democracy- A political system by whole citizens of a state through elected representatives. Autocracy- A system of government which is governed by one person with absolute power.

23 Aristocracy- A system of government which is governed by the highest class in certain societies. Bureaucracy- A system of government in which most of the governmental decisions are taken by state officials rather than by elected representatives. Development- A process which promotes growth, progress or positive change in the society. 4.10 Model Questions Long Questions What is the relationship between democracy, development and local government? Discuss the expanding role of local government as the successor of democracy. Short Question ➔ Write a short note on Democracy ➔ What do you mean by Development? ➔ What is the role of local government in democracy? ➔ Do you think the local government is responsible for socio-economic development? 4.11 References 1. Crick, B. (2013) In defence of politics. London: Bloomsbury Academic. 2. Bhargava, R. (2008) Political theory: An introduction. New Delhi: Pearson Education India. 3. Nations, U. (no date) What is human development?, Human Development Reports. Available at: https://hdr.undp.org/content/what-human-development (Accessed: November 1, 2022). 4. Sen, A.K. (2001) Development as freedom. Oxford: Oxford University Press. 5. P. Sachdeva, Local Government in India. Noida: Pearson, 2011
24 Unit-V Local Government and Globalization 5.0 STRUCTURE 5.1 Learning Objectives 5.2 Introduction 5.3 Globalization 5.4 Features of Globalization 5.5 Types of Globalization 5.6 Impact of Globalization on Local Government 5.7 Conclusion 5.8 Summary 5.9 Model Questions 5.10References 5.1 Objectives The main objective of the units is to explain the role of globalization in the local government process. By reading this unit you can understand the impact of globalization on local government and its merits and demerits. 5.2 Introduction Globalization process includes economic, political, cultural, and social elements. There is considerable literature on how these elements have affected local government. Globalization has brought enormous changes in our daily life. Due to technological advancement our nature of work has changed drastically. Due to globalization all levels of governments including local governments change their approach towards development. Before looking at how globalization has affected local government, we need to understand the concept of globalization. 5.3 Globalization The Information and Communication Technology (ICT) revolution, the free flow of information-based and knowledge-based economies, the growing integration with the global economy of the national economy, and the market economy, is the key to globalization. So globalization is the process by which the free market economy is ensured all over the world. In this process, foreign companies are doing trade throughout the world. That's why you can get all the foreign products at a minimal price from your doorstep. 25

97% MATCHING BLOCK 16/321 W

Although globalization has been

99% MATCHING BLOCK 17/321 W

broadly used since 1970 but globalization as a concept we can find from ancient times, people have been shown to participate in international trade. Although there was no general policy then. The history of globalization begins thousands of years ago, in the middle Ages, the Silk Road was used to trade China with Europe through Central Asia.

According to Robert Cox “the characteristics of globalization trend include the internationalization of the production, the new international division of labor, new migratory movements from south to north, the new competitive environment that accelerates these processes, and the internationalizing of state...making states into agencies of the globalizing world”. Rosabeth Moss Canter in 'Thriving Locally in the Global Economy' (1995) originally defined globalization as ‘the world is becoming a global shopping mall in which ideas and products are available everywhere at the same time’. 5.4

93% MATCHING BLOCK 18/321 W

Features of Globalization From the above discussion, we also find some features of globalization. These are- 5.4.1 Integration of Economies The integration of economies throughout the world is necessary for interaction and integration among people, companies, and governments worldwide. It is a process in which agreements are made among the countries within a particular geographic region for reducing tariff barriers to ensure a free flow of goods and services. 5.4.2 Liberalization To ensure integration of economies among the countries it is necessary to implement the process of liberalization in their own countries. Like integration of economies, liberalization also is a process by which a country reforms their economic policies

to

98% MATCHING BLOCK 19/321 W

open their market to all. It ensures freedom of the entrepreneurs for the establishment of any kind of legal trades or industries in their own countries or abroad. 5.4.3 Privatization After liberalization, it's time for privatization. Without liberalization there is no existence of privatization. Privatization refers to the transfer of ownership of any property, corporation or business or services from government to the privately owned sectors. 26 Globalization would not be possible without LPG. Here L refers to Liberalization, P for Privatization and lastly G for Globalization. It can be said that liberalization and Privatization are the preconditions of globalization. 5.4.4 Free Trade It refers to free flow trade among the countries without tariff barriers. Free trade can be possible when some countries within

the

100% MATCHING BLOCK 20/321 W

same geographic region sign an agreement for the free trade among their countries. 5.4.5 Interconnectedness It provides us a framework to explore the world through interaction with different people, animals, nature by using several technological tools without any kind of barriers. 5.5

Types of Globalization The impacts of globalization are multidimensional. It affects worldwide societies in the aspects of Economic, Social, Political, Cultural, and environmental. There are the main 5 types of globalization. These are: 5.5.1 Economic Globalization The concept of globalization as a whole is largely economic. Globalization has emerged and developed mainly as an economic concept and system. Economic globalization is the economic connection of a country with the global economic system. Globalization in the economic field is free economic adoption. This is to remove the regulatory rules imposed on a country's economic affairs and to expose the domestic economy to the world. 5.5.2

100% MATCHING BLOCK 21/321 W

Social

97% MATCHING BLOCK 22/321 W

Globalization It is another one of the important types of globalization. Social globalization is a process. As a result of this process, traditional social institutions become weak. The identity of the socialized people is renewed. People are no longer members of a particular community or national because of the new identity. In the pre-modern world, the context of human identity was narrow and limited. In terms of family, ethnicity, tribe, village, religion etcThe identity of individual people was determined. The target population is also made up of the population of the state. As a member of the state, the identity of the citizenship or nationality of the people prevails. 27 According to the opinion of a group of sociologists, as the globalization process expands, the personal and collective identities of people become weaker. Former identities of the past lose its importance. Relationships with people from distant places developed due to the development and expansion of new technologies, the expansion of business and communication systems, In this case the Internet, e-mail, website etc. opens up a new world in front of people. 5.5.3 Cultural Globalization The process of cultural globalization is also sometimes called McDonaldization. Cultural globalization is the process by which a world-class of goods, ideas and information is produced in one part of the world. As a result, cultural differences between different races, regions and individuals are removed. The emergence and development of international or multinational companies and the emergence of global goods have partly driven the process of globalization.The revolutionary development and expansion of information technology, the expansion of satellite-based communication systems, the Internet, the telecommunication infrastructure and various global media corporations are highlighting the process of globalization. However, as culture helps globalization, so does obstruction. As the elements or forces of globalization are enriched by culture, so is resistance. Hollywood movies are screened worldwide. Adidas sports goods are sold around the world. The Coca-Cola market is worldwide. McDonalds has demanded the world's fast food market. Such products are many and varied worldwide. But all these international brands have to do with the dignity of local culture and the touch of social customs. 5.5.4 Political Globalization Political ideology is often referred to as one of the characteristics of globalization. That is, the expression of globalization also occurs in political ideology. The transformation of liberalism is called an example of political ideology in the process of globalization. Moreover, the emergence, development and expansion of Non- Governmental Organizations (NGOs) as an expression of political globalization; The role of the national states is to refer to the role of climate change and so on. The expression of political globalization has occurred in international organizations. All these organizations exceed the national boundaries. Extending the boundaries of the single state of the international organization extends to the international sphere of many states. There are many and many international organizations in the present world. Most of these were formed in the aftermath of World War II. Notable examples of this are the United Nations Organization (UNO), the European Economic Community (EEC), the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), and the World Trade Organization (WTO), etc. 28 Theoretically, nation-states can take initiative in organizing international organizations in a coherent and organized manner without sacrificing their sovereignty. Transnational-state boundaries may force international institutions to impose their will on states. 5.5.5 Environmental Globalization Environmental globalization refers to internationally coordinated practices and regulations in the form of international treaties regarding environmental protection. The growth of globalization and its impact on the global environment is an important concern to the world. According to some environmentalists, there is no doubt that the tide of development that has come under the influence of globalization is actually polluting the environment. To them globalization increases our consumption of

a

100% MATCHING BLOCK 23/321 W

lot of products made through natural resources which is affecting

the

95% MATCHING BLOCK 24/321 W

ecological cycle very badly. Many think that industrialization is a part of globalization and the process of industrialization has been increasing with the help of globalization. Due to industrialization harmful chemicals have been thrown to the environment and it affects the environment dangerously. 5.6 Impact of Globalization on Local Government Globalization is affecting local government in many ways. Globalization has made information and technology readily available. With the use of advanced technology, the local government has been able to increase its scope of work as well as complete its procedures very easily. Simply put, globalization helps improve the efficiency of local governments. As a result of globalization the concept of E-Governance has emerged. Goal of e-Governance is to provide services to the citizens by maintaining transparency and accountability. Local government is the key unit for the implementation of this goal. For many scholars globalization has impacted local government badly. According to Jiro Yamaguchi

100% MATCHING BLOCK 25/321 W

For most local governments, globalization is causing serious problems, especially regarding sustenance of

the

98% MATCHING BLOCK 26/321 W

local economy. First of all, local governments in the rural area still depend on agriculture, which is the least competitive. Even if there is a manufacturing sector, employment is slashed by relocation of the production center. Employment in local communities is supported by the public sector through public investment.

Although there are some negative aspects, the efficiency of local government has increased as a result of globalization. Presently the whole world is interconnected. After World War-II, the United Nations (UN) was formed as a kind of world government. But the UN can't govern the world. It needs the local government to turn their policies into reality. For example, many environmental policies are implemented
29 by the local government throughout the world. But it has to be accepted that the technological knowledge brought by globalization is increasing the communication of the government with the people. 5.7 Conclusion From the above discussion it can be concluded that Globalization is believed to facilitate economic and social development in communities served by local governments. Whether the necessary skills and abilities exist to realize these benefits is debatable. Larger local authorities, or municipalities, supported the idea of globalization and began formulating policies on international relations. Globalization boosts the participation of local citizens in their local governance. 5.8 Summary

100% MATCHING BLOCK 27/321 W

So globalization is the process by which the free market economy is ensured all over the world. In this process, foreign companies are doing trade throughout the world. That's why you can get all the foreign products at a minimal price from your doorstep.

Globalization promotes integration of economies, liberalization, Privatization, and free trade. Globalization can happen in different ways viz economic globalization, social globalization, cultural globalization, political globalization and environmental globalization. technological advancement is the key of globalization and through this technological advancement local government increases its efficiency and effectiveness. although many scholars argue that globalization is causing serious problems, especially regarding sustenance of the local economy. But it has to be accepted that the technological knowledge brought by globalization is increasing the communication of the government with the people. 5.9 Glossary Globalization- A process in which integrates the national economy with the world economy. Liberalization- A process by which government policies are made by the government to promote the free trade. Privatization- The policy of transferring publicly owned assets, organizations or companies to private ownership. 5.10 Model Questions Long Questions Discuss the impact of globalization on local government. Write a note on the meaning and features of globalization.
30 Short Questions ➔ What does globalization mean? ➔ What are the characteristics of globalization? ➔ What are the types of globalization? 5.11 Reference 1. Ghosh, P. (2015) International Relations. Delhi: PHI. 2. Jiro Yamaguchi, Hokkaido University. Available at: https://lex.juris.hokudai.ac.jp/global- g/paper/4-04.pdf (Accessed: November 2, 2022). 3. Biswas, A. (2020)

87% MATCHING BLOCK 28/321 W

What is globalization and history of globalization [4 phases], SCHOOL OF POLITICAL SCIENCE.

Available at: https://schoolofpoliticalscience.com/meaning-and-history- of-globalization/ (Accessed: November 3, 2022). 4. Biswas, A. (2020) 5 important types of globalization, SCHOOL OF POLITICAL SCIENCE. Available at: https://schoolofpoliticalscience.com/what-are-the-5-types-of-globalization/ (Accessed: November 1, 2022). CC VII BLOCK II UNIT I EVOLUTION OF URBAN LOCAL GOVERNMENT IN PRE-INDEPENDENT INDIA Structure 1.0 Objectives 1.1 Introduction 1.2 Stage I: Urban Local Government in Ancient and Medieval Periods
31 1.3 Stage II: Urban Local Government in the British Period 1.4 Conclusion 1.5 Summary 1.6 Glossary 1.7 Model Questions 1.8 References 1.0 Objectives After studying this unit, you are expected to: ? Define Urban Local Government and identify its necessity. ? Identify the ancient and medieval roots of Urban Local Government in India. ? Identify and analyse the role of the British colonizers in the evolution of Urban Local Government in India. 1.1 Introduction In the most generic sense,

41% MATCHING BLOCK 30/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Urban Local Government refers to an institution of governance in a statutory urban setting, demarcated by a definite area and population, which may deliberate, regulate, and implement decisions on subject matters entrusted to it by the law of the land. In India, the rationale for having a three-tier government is to ensure that every variation of regional political values, as well as, problems can be represented or dealt with, seamlessly. Within prosperous states, the Urban Local Bodies (henceforth, ULBs) may be having greater resources as compared to those in poorer towns in less prosperous states, and these would be in a better position to provide a great number of services to its constituents.

81% MATCHING BLOCK 31/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Local governments respond to the needs and aspirations of the inhabitants of the immediate locality, on matters which concern them in their daily lives,

viz. quality of water, access to sanitation, healthcare services, and so on. In India, a country diverse in socio-economic terms, it is a simple fact that the level of services provided by a particular ULB would differ from one city to another within a state, as well as, nationally. A system of good urban governance begs specific institutions to be vibrant and accountable, in the light of the recent population explosion in urban areas, and the consequent expansion of cities in India. According to a UN Habitat report, an estimated 180 million rural people live next to India's 70 largest urban centres, a number that will increase to about 210 million by 2030; by 2030, 60 million residents will reside in Indian cities and there will have to

32 be one Chicago built every year, with an urban population annual growth rate of 2.38% (UN Habitat, 2012-2022). In this unit, the focus will be on the evolution of Urban Local Government in pre- independent India which has its roots both in the country's ancient past and colonial heritage. Urban Local Government in India has emerged through numerous stages which can be broadly divided into the standard chronological sequence of Indian history: from the prehistoric times to the advent of British rule; and from the beginning of the British rule to its end in 1947. The matter of post-independence Urban Local Government in India will be dealt with in the next unit. 1.2 Stage I: Urban Local Government in Ancient and Medieval Periods India represents an ancient civilization that dates back to thousands of years. It is indeed a civilizational state, with perhaps China being the only other state deserving a similar epithet. Urban local government is deeply rooted in Indian history. The excavations in Mohenjodaro and Harappa of the Indus Valley Civilization (c. 3000 BCE) speak volumes about the organized urban life in ancient times, not least, revealing the fact that these were amongst the oldest planned cities of the world. There were wide streets, public offices and agoras, facilities for communal baths, drainage and sewers. These testify to the existence of an informed citizenry, and an effective municipal government. According to Khanna, the people of the Indus Valley were therefore proud residents of perhaps the first urban civilization, giving to the world its earliest planned cities, complete with town planning, drainage systems, not least, the earliest example of city government (1967: 3). For Thakur (1981), the Indian system of highly organized urban local government has also been referenced in the Vedas, in the epics of Mahabharata and Ramayana, in few of the Upanishads, and, most importantly, in the Arthashastra of the great polymath of ancient India, Kautilya. In Kautilya's text there is reference of a regular plan of town administration which was specially designed to deal with the typical urban problems. He envisaged in his scheme, the nagaraka or a city's mayor who would perform various functions in connection with day-to-day administration of the city. In the post-Mauryan times, there used to be a chief executive officer in the city administration and one of the important duties of civic administration seems to have been a prompt arrangement of the city's sanitation which included maintenance of the drainage system and cleanliness of the roads. In the Mauryan and the Gupta periods, the villages developed into large towns and an urban culture grew in places like Pataliputra, Ujjain, and

33 Takshila. During the reign of the Guptas, city administration reached its zenith, with the Parishad as its administrative council. There was also a provision of having elected administrative officers (1981: 247). During the rule of Chandra Gupta, the administrative council of a city like Pataliputra was centred on village communities, as an elected body with definite functions. For Havell, although certain matters were reserved for the control of imperial officials,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 32/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Megasthenes mentions that large cities used to have six bodies of five members each and each of these bodies had been entrusted with important subjects of human activities, which included the registration of births and deaths, care and entertainment of foreigners, and so on (Sachdeva, 2011: 39). Even in the Licchavi kingdom there existed elected administrators and representatives which shows that democracy was not imported to India by the colonial masters, and had existed centuries before the advent of either the Mughals or the British, with an inexorable emphasis upon self-governing institutions and practices (Majumdar, 1981: 576-583). Moving on from the ancient times, medieval India encountered three distinct systems of administration, instituted by: the Rajputs, the Sultans of Delhi, and, finally, the Mughals. According to Pandey, governance during the Rajputperiod led to the state being divided into smaller units, the biggest of which was theprant. As an influence of the later-Vedic era, the stringent caste system of the Rajput Empire precluded anyone other than Brahmins and Kshatriyas from being eligible for civil and military appointments.This made the rest of the people apathetic towards political affairs. By abstaining from direct participation in local administration, they helped to develop initiative, efficiency and self-reliance among the local population (1969: 1-9). While in the Sultanate period, administration was basically military in nature; its rulers obeyed the principles and tenets of Islamic laws and applied those in letter and spirit in their administration.For administrative purposes the state was divided into prants. The head ofthe prant established various departments for administration. For Puri, Theprants were divided into shikos, whosehead was known as shikdar. The shikos were divided into sarkars, sarkars into parganas and parganas intovillages. Pargana was under the shiqqadar in charge of executive affairs and land revenue. At the level of the pargana there were other officials such as amil or the collector of revenue who levied central as well as provincial revenue;diwan, fotahdar or the local treasurer, daroga or the superintendent of accounts,amin or the surveyor, kanungo, munshif, thanadar, patwari, and so on, were there to assist. The diwan in sarkar was the 34 executivehead of the pargana.City administration was run by a centralized bureaucracy, but the villages had some sort of self-rule (Vol. II, 1975: 81).Sachdeva opines thatthe civil administration of the city was vested in a muhtasib. He had multifarious functions including looking after public utilities such as watersupply and wells, provision of amenities for travellers, maintenance of public buildings, demolition of houseslikely to collapse, supervising the markets, inspection of weights, and measures and prevention of adulterationof food, which in modern times are regarded as municipal functions (2011: 39). According to J. N. Sarkar, the renowned historian on the Mughal period, '[T]he Mughal system at one time spread over practically all the civilised and organised parts of India. Now it is dead in our times.Traces of it still survive. But the new has been built upon the old; our present has its roots in our past' (1952: 3). Many of the cities like Delhi, Agra, Lucknow, and Hyderabad, bear the imprint of Mughal influence. Puri opines that during the Mughal times municipal administration was vested in the kotwal or the head of the police in the metropolis. Judicial administration was handled with the help of the qazis and sardars (Vol. II, 1975: 242).InAaini Akbari, Abul Fazal has described the functions of the kotwalin minute details. He was the city governor, combining in him official powers and duties of the chief of thecity police, magistrate and prefect of the municipal administration. In this period, opinesSachdeva, the structure of the societywas predominantly feudal and, therefore, the vast powers and various functions of the state were centred inan individual or institution. The very nature and style of the Mughal Emperors were loath to any kind ofdemocratic administration in the local areas. Democratic administration was denied not only to a city but thevillage was also stripped of its administrative functions. It was reduced to an executive committee of the village community on purely social affairs (2011: 39).The chief officers of the localities like those placed at the heads of province belonged to the mansabdars. The mansab was a commission, which was heldby the officers of the emperor. According to Roy, it was a hierarchical system that comprised the mansabdars ranging fromthose commanding twenty horsemen to those commanding five thousand horsemen (1960: 14).The local people were not associated with the management of civic affairs and the urban local governmentwas directly depended upon and rigorously controlled by the central administration. It can thus be concluded, following Sachdeva that in medieval and early modern India, there were hardly any municipal institutions enjoying powers of self-government and the municipal self-government traditions of ancient India hadsimply

88%	MATCHING BLOCK 33/321	SA	Ch. 3.Development of Local Government Institut ... (D106063648)

35 withered away under the military despotisms of the Sultanate of Delhi and the Mughal Empire(2011: 39). 1.3 Stage II: Urban Local Government in the British Period The development of municipal government since the advent of British rule in India can be divided into two parts: first, the English East India Company's rule up to 1857 and second, the British government rule from 1858 up to 1947.After the death of Aurangzeb in 1707, the Mughal Empire began to disintegrate and the minor rulers started fighting among themselves. The East India Company took advantage of this situation and established its hold over several parts of the country. The defeat of the last Nawab of Bengal at the battle of Plassey (1757) led to the transfer of authority into the hands of the company. After the revolt of 1857, the company's rule ended with the enactment of the Government of India Act (1858) and passed on to Queen Victoria, the then British monarch. The board of control and the court of directors were abolished and their powers were given to the newly created office of the Secretary of State for India. 1.3.1 Urban Local Government 1687-1857

83%	MATCHING BLOCK 34/321	W

The origin of municipal administration in British India dates back to 1687 when a municipal corporation was set up at Madras under a charter granted by James II, the then British monarch with a view to transfer the financial burden of local administration to the local city council.Accoridng toSachdeva, the Royal Charter of 1720 established

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 35/321	SA	Ch. 3.Development of Local Government Institut ... (D106063648)

a mayor's court in each of the three presidency towns of Madras, Bombay, and Calcutta, but these courts were more judicial than administrative in nature (2011: 40).The year 1773 was a landmark in the growth of Indian administration. Before 1773 there was nocentral authority in the country. The 1773 Act restricted the powers of the presidencies from making war or treaties without the sanction of the governor- general-in-council. This started the British Parliament's control over the affairs of the East India Company.Hoshiar Singh and Pankaj Singh opined that the Pitt's India Act of 1784 placed Indian affairs under the direct control of the British government by establishing a board of control representing the British cabinet over the court of directors (2011: 7).However, a statutory basis of the urban local government was not provided until 1793 when the Governor-General-in- Council was empowered to appoint justices of peace for the presidency towns from among converted civilians and the British subjects, who were vested with the authority to impose taxes on houses and lands to provide for the sanitation of the towns. Sachdeva mentions that in 1842, the Bengal Act was passed to set up town committees for sanitary purposes, and in 1850, an Act 36 was passed for the whole country permitting the

74%	MATCHING BLOCK 36/321	SA	Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D47315443)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 37/321	SA	Introduction CHAPTER1.docx (D37901991)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 38/321	SA	c-2nd.docx (D21510546)

formation of local committees to make better provisions for public health and convenience (2011: 40). 1.3.2

Urban Local Government 1858-1947 Since the enactment of the Government of India Act (1858), the portfolio system was introduced in 1859 by Lord Canning, whereby a member of thecouncil would be appointed in charge of one or more departments of the government by the governor-general and he would issue orders on behalf of the Governor-General-in-Council. For Sachdeva (2011: 40), after 1863, a string of municipal acts followed, authorizing governorsto form a municipality in any urban area of the province.The municipal committees were empowered to administer municipal funds but were obliged to expend the proceeds of taxes for the maintenance of the police, and the surplus, if any, could be utilized for the sanitary improvements of the town. Lord Mayo's Resolution (1870) provided for a measure of decentralization from the centre to the provinces

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 39/321	SA	Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D44072164)

emphasizingthe extension of municipal self-government. The resolution encouraged the general application of the principle of election with the objective of developing self-government in urban areas. But in practice, the principle of election was introduced wholly or partially in a few places only and the members continued to be nominated in most of the municipal committees. The measures for developing municipal government during this period proves that it was introduced primarily to serve the British interests rather than promote self-governing bodies in the country. Lord Ripon's Resolution (1882), however, is considered a landmark in the development of local government in India, as it envisaged local bodies to be instruments of political and public education, advocating: a. the establishment of a network of local self-government institutions; b. the reduction of the official element to not more than a third of the total membership;

62%	MATCHING BLOCK 40/321	SA	vijay thesis.pdf (D142533225)

61%	MATCHING BLOCK 41/321	SA	c-2nd.docx (D21510546)

c. exercise of control from without and not from within; and (d) a large measure of financial decentralization; and e. the adoption of election as a means of constituting local bodies.

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 43/321	SA	Ch. 3.Development of Local Government Institut ... (D106063648)

Concomitant legislation introduced an elective principle at the discretion of provincial governments, giving municipal committees the power to elect their presidents subject to government approval. Sachdeva (2011: 41) mentions that the reforms enunciated by Lord Ripon for rejuvenation of local self-government had initially met considerable success, but, these were hampered subsequently due to the following factors:a. the adoption of obstructive tactics by the bureaucracy; b. the hostile attitude of Lord Curzon, the successor of Lord Ripon, who considered the reforms to be too radical to be implemented and preferred administrative efficiency to 37 political education; c. the Deputy Commissioner dominated these institutions as he enjoyed vast powers of supervision and control; and d. elections had also proved unpopular as these were not based on adult franchise and the electorate comprised of only 2 per cent of the total urban population. The Government of India, in its resolution of 28 April 1915, suggested the gradual implementation of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Decentralization (1907), which were largely a replica of Lord Ripon's proposals of 1883. But a programme that was prominent in 1883 was hopelessly outdated in 1915. Moreover, the Government of India Act(1909) had introduced communal electorates for Muslims for legislative councils. In 1910, the Muslim League had demanded separate electorates in local bodies as well. Consequently some municipalities had been constituted on the basis of communal electorates. The introduction of communal electorates in municipal government had become a great impediment in the healthy development of the spirit of self-rule at the local level, as mentioned in both the Montague- Chelmsford (1918) and Simon Commission (1927) reports (2011: 41). Following the Montague-Chelmsford Report (1918), a Government of India Resolution of 16 May 1918 recommended to the provinces that municipal boards were to contain a majority of elected members, franchise was to be lowered, and official chairmen were to be replaced by non-official ones. The Resolution also laid down that minorities should be represented through nomination rather than by separate electorates.The Government of India Act (1919) introduced the diarchical system of government, whereby the local self-government department, being a transferred subject, came under the charge of a popular minister responsible to the provincial legislature.The Act laid down a schedule of taxes which could be levied only byor for the local bodies, thereby enabling these to be relatively independent of the central government. Although democratization was ascendant, the administrativeprocess and efficiency deteriorated due to rampant corruption in the local bodies of various Indian provinces. Moreover, the lack of administrative experience in elected members coupled with the paucity of expert guidance and trained managerial personnel also contributed toadministrative failures (2011: 44).

With

76% MATCHING BLOCK 42/321 W

the inauguration of provincial autonomy under the Government of India Act(1935), the development of municipal government in India received further impetus.The Act abolished the system of diarchy and introduced popular governments in the provinces.

Local government was classified as a provincial subject. But no taxes were earmarked for local bodies under the 38 Act as these could be imposed by the provincial governments, without any specifications regarding how much of it had to be reserved for local bodies.This change had proved rather unfavourable for local authorities as state governments had in certain areas utilized what were previously recognized to be purely local taxes for their own purposes, and with the outbreak of the Second World War in 1939, further democratization of local bodies and improvement of administrative machinery suffered a tremendous setback.The municipal bodies, instead of providing civic amenities, were performing services related to black-outs drills, raising voluntary organizations for defence, increasing first aid, and so on, under the guidance and direct supervision of the district administration (Sachdeva, 2011: 44). Thus, no significant efforts could be made to bring about reforms in municipal government during the period of provincial autonomy, as the British left the country divided, enraged and broke in 1947. 1.4 Conclusion This unit has focussed on the evolution of Urban Local Government in India in two stages, through the historical analysis of institutions of urban local government in ancient and medieval India, and, from the beginning of the British rule thereupon to its end in 1947. Urbanization and the administration of urban areas in India was ascendant during the Indus Valley Civilization, and later during the rule of the Mauryas and the Guptas. The same suffered in the medieval times under the rule of the Rajputs, the Sultans of Delhi, and then the Mughals. With the advent of the British, urban local government was modelled to suit the interests of the East India Company till 1857, and since the demise of the company's iron grip over India, the British government and the Governors General enacted several legislations and resolutions for the betterment of urban administration in India, with notable examples such as Lord Mayo's Resolution (1870), Lord Ripon's Resolution (1882), the Government of India Resolution (1818), and the Government of India Acts of 1919 and 1935. The focus was on democratic representation, taxation and financial independence, and administrative efficacy of ULBs in India. 1.5 Summary This unit has discussed the following: ?

41% MATCHING BLOCK 45/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Urban Local Government refers to an institution of governance in a statutory urban setting, demarcated by a definite area and population, which may deliberate, regulate, and implement decisions on subject matters entrusted to it by the law of the land.

39 ? By 2030, 60 million residents will reside in Indian cities and there will have to be one Chicago built every year, with an urban population annual growth rate of 2.38% ? India is a civilizational stateandurban local government is deeply rooted in Indian history, as excavations in Mohenjodaro and Harappa of the Indus Valley Civilization (c. 3000 BCE) has proved. ? The Indian system of highly organized urban local government has also been referenced in the Vedas, in the epics of Mahabharata and Ramayana, in few of the Upanishads, and, most importantly, in the Kautilya'sArthashastra. ? During the reign of the Guptas, city administration reached its zenith, with the Parishad as its administrative council. ? In medieval and early modern India, the municipal self-government traditions of ancient India had simply withered away under the military despotisms of the Rajputs, the Sultanate of Delhi and the Mughal Empire. ?

80% MATCHING BLOCK 44/321 W

The origin of municipal administration in British India dates back to 1687 when a municipal corporation was set up at Madras under a charter granted by James II, however, a statutory basis of the urban local government was not provided until 1793. ? Lord Ripon's Resolution (1882) is considered a landmark in the development of local government in India. It was followed by similar recommendations suggested by the Royal Commission on Decentralization (1907). ? Following the Montague-Chelmsford (1918) and Simon Commission (1927) reports, the Government of India Act (1919) introduced the diarchical system of government, and local self-government came under the charge of a popular minister responsible to the provincial legislature. ? Under the Government of India Act (1935) the development of municipal government in India

35% MATCHING BLOCK 46/321 SA Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D47315443)

received further impetus. No further development with regard to urban local government in India took place till 1947, owing to the Second World War (1939- 1945) and the retreat of the British from the subcontinent. 1.6 Glossary Diarchy: government by two independent authorities, especially in India from 1919 to 1935. Governor-General/Viceroy: a representative of the British monarch in charge of the administration of British colonies.
40 Kotwal: city governor as well as the chief of the city police, magistrate and prefect of the municipal administration during Mughal times. Mansabdar: a commissioned officer of the Mughal emperor, also a provincial governor. Muhtasib: city administrator during the reign of the Delhi Sultans. Nagaraka: a city's mayor, as described in Kautilya'sArthashastra. Parishad: council for a city's administration in the Gupta age of Indian history. Portfolio system: introduced by Lord Canning in 1859, whereby a member of thecouncil would be appointed in charge of one or more departments of the government by the governor-general, issuing orders on behalf of the Governor-General-in-Council. Prant: smaller geographical units of states, created for administrative purposes in medieval India.

76% MATCHING BLOCK 49/321 SA Ch. 3.Development of Local Government Institut ... (D106063648)

51% MATCHING BLOCK 47/321 W

Urban Local Government: an institution of governance in a statutory urban setting, demarcated by a definite area and population, which may deliberate, regulate, and implement decisions on subject

matters entrusted to it by the Constitution. 1.7 Model Questions Long Answer Type 1. Discuss the ancient and medieval roots

50% MATCHING BLOCK 48/321 W

of Urban Local Government in India. 2. Discuss the development of Urban Local Government in India from 1687 to 1857. 3. Discuss the development of Urban Local Government in India since 1858 with special emphasis on the Ripon Resolution (1882). 4. What were the respective impacts of the 1919 and 1935 Government of India Acts on Urban Local Government in India? Why did Urban Local Bodies remain deficient despite roughly two hundred years of British Rule in India? Short Answer Type 1. Discuss the structure of Urban Local Government in the post-Mauryan times. 2. Discuss the way in which the empire of the Delhi Sultans was divided for administrative purposes. 3. Discuss the type of Urban Local Government under the Mughals. 4. Write a short note on the development of Urban Local Government in India from 1687 to 1784.

41 5. Write a short note on the Mayo Resolution (1870) and the Ripon Resolution (1882). 6. Write a short note on the impact of diarchy on Urban Local Government in India. 1.8 References Havell, E.B.,The History of Aryan Rule in India (London: 1918). Khanna, R.L., Municipal Government and Administration in India (Chandigarh: Mahindra Capital Publishers, 1967). Majumdar, R. C., A Comprehensive History of India. Vol. 3, Part I: A.D. 300-985 (New Delhi: Indian History Congress/People's Publishing House, 1981). Pandey, A. B., Society and Government in Medieval India (Allahabad: College Book Depot, 1969). Puri, B. N., History of Indian Administration, Vol. II (Bombay: Bhartiya Vidya Bhavan, 1975). Roy, N. C., The Civil Service in India (Calcutta: Firma KLM, 1960). Sachdeva,P., Local Government in India (New Delhi: Pearson, 2011). Sarkar, J. N.,Mughal Administration (Calcutta: M. C. Sarkar and Sons Ltd., 1952). Singh,H. and P. Singh, Indian Administration (New Delhi: Pearson, 2011). Thakur, V. K.,Urbanisation in Ancient India (New Delhi: Abhinav Publications, 1981). UN Habitat Reports (2012-2022). URL: https://unhabitat.org/fr/node/91195. UNIT II EVOLUTION OF URBAN LOCAL GOVERNMENT IN POST-INDEPENDENT INDIA Structure 2.1 Learning Objectives 2.2 Introduction 2.3 The Committees and Commissions on Urban Local Government 2.4 The national-level conferences on urban local government 2.5 Towards constitutional recognition 2.6 Conclusion 2.7 Summary
42 2.8 Glossary 2.9 Model Questions 2.10 References 2.1 Learning Objectives After studying this unit, you are expected to: ? Define Urban Local Government and identify its necessity in modern India. ? Identify the post-independence evolution of Urban Local Government in India till the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992. ? Identify and analyse the reasons for the lopsided development of urban local bodies in India and the steps taken towards constitutional recognition of such institutions. ? Understand the implications of the findings and recommendations of various government-appointed committees and commissions, vis-à-vis the betterment of such institutions. 2.2 Introduction In the most generic sense,

41% MATCHING BLOCK 50/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Urban Local Government refers to an institution of governance in a statutory urban setting, demarcated by a definite area and population, which may deliberate, regulate, and implement decisions on subject matters entrusted to it by the law of the land. In India, the rationale for having a three-tier government is to ensure that every variation of regional political values, as well as, problems can be represented or dealt with, seamlessly.

81%	MATCHING BLOCK 51/321	SA	Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Local governments respond to the needs and aspirations of the inhabitants of the immediate locality, on matters which concern them in their daily lives,

viz. quality of water, access to sanitation, healthcare services, and so on. In India, a country diverse in socio-economic terms, it is a simple fact that the level of services provided by a particular ULB would differ from one city to another within a state, as well as, nationally. A system of good urban governance begs specific institutions to be vibrant and accountable, in the light of the recent population explosion in urban areas, and the consequent expansion of cities in India. According to a UN Habitat report, an estimated 180 million rural people live next to India's 70 largest urban centres, a number that will increase to about 210 million by 2030; by 2030, 60 million residents will reside in Indian cities and there will have to be one Chicago built every year, with an urban population annual growth rate of 2.38% (UN Habitat, 2012-2022).
43 In this unit, the focus will be on the evolution of Urban Local Government in post- independent India. After achieving independence in 1947, India adopted its constitution on 26 January 1950, a Constitution which was heavily influenced by its colonial legacy and the acts of the British India government, notable amongst which was the 1935 Government of India Act. The Constitution of independent India directs the state vide its Article 40 of the Directive Principles of State Policy to organize panchayatsand to empower them adequately so that they become viable units of self-government, but it does notcontain counterpart provision for urban settlements (2007: 22).The only reference to urban self-government is to be found in two entries: Entry 5

91%	MATCHING BLOCK 52/321	SA	vijay thesis.pdf (D142533225)

of

95%	MATCHING BLOCK 53/321	SA	Ch. 3.Development of Local Government Institut ... (D106063648)

List II of the Seventh Schedule (the State List) and Entry 20 of the List III (Concurrent list) (2007: 327, 332). For Sachdeva (2011: 44), the

84%	MATCHING BLOCK 54/321	SA	Ch. 3.Development of Local Government Institut ... (D106063648)

Constitution places local government including urban local government within the legislative competence of the states, and the role of the central government will necessarily have to beadvisory and catalytic rather than one of dominance. The development of urban local government in India, therefore, took place without much constitutional guarantees before the central government accepted the recommendations of the National Commission on Urbanization (1985) and incorporated them in the Constitution (63rd Amendment) Bill, 1989, which was later enacted as the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992. This unit will thus be divided into the following parts: it would first describe the manner in which the committees and commissions appointed by the central government, as well as, the various state governments in India have functioned and the recommendations that these legal bodies have proffered from time to time on the question of urban local government; and second, it would focus on the activities and recommendations of the various national-level conferences on urban local government which ultimately paved the way for the enactment of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992) to provide constitutional sanctions to the structures and functions of urban local bodies in India. 2.3 The Committees and Commissions on Urban Local Government

57% MATCHING BLOCK 55/321 SA HarvinderKaur_Pol Sci_Chapter3.pdf (D37034708)

In the absence of the constitutional recognition of its powers, functions and resources, urban local bodies have remained neglected in India, despite the popular opinion during independence that these would be used more and more as instruments of national policy. As the Indian has been predominantly centered upon a rural setup, even the Planning Commission did not pay much importance to urban local bodies, making no significant policy statement about it till the 44 Third Five Year Plan (1961-1966) in which it received only a passing and tacit mention. According to Sachdeva (2011: 45), the Fourth Five Year Plan referred to recommendations made by the Rural–Urban Relationship Committee and the Local Self Government Ministers' Council on Augmentation of Financial Resources and hoped that the state governments will take all the measures necessary to augment resources at the local level. However, as late as the Seventh Plan (1985-1990), many of the municipal bodies were moribund or have stood superseded, being ill-administered and ill-financed. The National Commission on Urbanization has also observed that urban local bodies in India were in a mess (1985). To overcome such deficiencies, however, the central and state governments in India instituted from time to time various committees and commissions, a few of which are worth a study. 2.3.1 Committees and Commissions appointed by the Central Government The central government of India has, from time to time, appointed various committees and commissions to enquire into the functional aspects of urban local government before the 74 th Amendment Act (1992). These bodies have also made valuable suggestions for their improvement which has snowballed into the constitutional recognition of urban local government in India. According to Sachdeva (2011), the important amongst them are: 1.

The Local Finance Enquiry Committee (1949-1951) 2. The Taxation Enquiry Commission (1953–54) 3.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 56/321 SA Chapter-II.pdf (D22537359)

The Committee on the Training of Municipal Employees (1963) 4. The Rural–Urban Relationship Committee (1963–66) 5.

The

100% MATCHING BLOCK 57/321 SA Sanjay Kr. Pandey_Economics_130.pdf (D44467227)

Committee of Ministers on Augmentation of Financial Resources of Urban Local Bodies (1963) 6.

The Committee on Service Conditions of Municipal Employees (1965–68) 7. The AdministrativeReforms Commission (1967) The basic focus and recommendations of each of these can be mentioned succinctly. 1. The Local Finance Enquiry Committee (1949-51) had recommended a separate and distinct tax zone for utilization by local governments without any encroachment by the state or centralgovernment. 2. The Taxation Enquiry Commission (1953–54) had observed that there is a discrepancy between the growth of municipal revenue and the growth of municipal expenditure with 45 regard to important civic services, and had recommended the setting aside of certain taxes for exclusive utilization by or for local government. 3. The Committee on the Training of Municipal Employees (1963) had emphasized on the need forimparting training to municipal personnel and recommended the setting up of training institutes at thecentral level and also in the states. It had entrusted, among other things, the central institute with theresponsibility to prescribe the standards of training and research and to itself serve as a model in this respect. 4. The Rural–Urban Relationship Committee (1963–66) made a comprehensiveenquiry into the urban government set-up,

Ouriginal by Turnitin

78% MATCHING BLOCK 58/321 SA Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D47315443)

urban development and planning machinery, the structureof urban local bodies, municipal personnel, finances of urban local bodies, public participation in urbancommunity development, relation between the state government and local administration, and aboveall, into the rural–urban relationship. It recommended the evolution of a system of local governmentwhich is capable of responding to the process of interaction and interdependence between the town andits adjoining villages. 5. The set upby the Central Council of Local Self Government, identified the reluctance of local bodies to step up taxation even in the field earmarked for it. It recommended them to levy taxes put at their command, to take up remunerative activities which would create permanent non-tax revenue, and to set up statutory urban development boards to undertake town development. 6. The Committee on Service Conditions of Municipal Employees (1965–68), also set up by the CentralCouncil of Local Self-Government, recommended the constitution of state- wide cadres of municipalemployees to ensure that the personnel available for municipal employment would have the desiredcompetence and prestige enjoying appropriate conditions of service. 7. The Administrative Reforms Commission (1966) had, among other agenda, urban local government as its subject of enquiry, and a chapter in the Report of the Study Team on District Administration, set up by the same Commission, is devoted exclusively to urban local bodies. The study team agreed with most of the recommendations of theRural– Urban Relationship Committee (1966). According to Sachdeva (2011: 47), concomitantly, the task forces set up by the Planning Commission in 1983 have 46 suggested thestrengthening of municipalities by improving their tax-base, ensuring timely elections, providing better personnel, improving training programmes, etc., and to merge the urban development authorities into themunicipal system. The state governments have also been appointing committees and commissions to look into one or the other aspect of urban local governments—mainly into their finances, system of grants-in-aid and personnel system. Some state-government-appointed committees on administrative reforms have also included urban local government into their area of study, e.g., the Corporation of Calcutta Investigation Commission (1950) and thePatna Municipal Corporation Committee (1969). For Sachdeva (2011), some of the committees and commissions constituted by the states exclusively for surveying and recommending on urban local governments are as follows: 1. Assam: The Finances of Municipal Committee (1969). 2. Delhi: The Delhi Municipal Organization Enquiry Committee (1948); the Commission on Financesof the Municipal Corporation of Delhi; and New Delhi Municipal Committee (1968). 3. Gujarat: The Municipal Rationalization Committee (1961) and the Grants-in-aid Code Committeefor Municipalities (1964). 4. Haryana: Resource Committee (Local Bodies), 1988 and Municipal Grants Commission (1969). 5. Kerala: The Municipal Grants Enquiry Committee (1965). 6. Madhya Pradesh: The Urban and Local Self Government Committee (1959); the Committee ofEnquiry on the Emoluments and Conditions of Service of the corporation and Municipal Employees (1965). 7. Maharashtra: The committee for the unification of acts relating to municipalities in MaharashtraState (1963). 8. Odisha: The Orissa Local Body (Urban) Administration Enquiry Committee (1963). 9. Punjab: the Local Government (Urban) Enquiry Committee (1957); Reorganization of District Administration (1969); the Punjab Municipal Employees Pay Committee (1969). 10. Tamil Nadu: White Paper on the Reforms of Local Administration in Madras State (1950).

100% MATCHING BLOCK 59/321 SA Sanjay Kr. Pandey_Economics_130.pdf (D44467227)

Committee of Ministers on Augmentation of Financial Resources of Urban Local Bodies (1963-1965),

47 2.3. 2 The Central Council of Local Self Government Apart from the recommendations of the committees and commissions constituted by the central and state governments in India, the activities of the Central Council of Local Self Government are worth mentioning.Although the Central Council of Local Self-Government as a purely advisory body was convened in 1948, it was constitutedunder Article 263 of the Constitution of India by an order of the president in 1954 (Inter-State Council Secretariat,Ministry of Home Affairs, GoI, 2016). It consisted first of the central minister of health, and presently, the minister of urban development as its chairman and the ministers of local self-government in the states. The Council is empowered to invite experts and technical advisers to its meetings but they have no right to vote. It may set up committees to investigate into the problems of urban local governments, e.g., the committee of ministers on the

67% MATCHING BLOCK 60/321 SA Sanjay Kr. Pandey_Economics_130.pdf (D44467227)

Augmentation of Financial Resources of Urban Local Bodies (1963) and the Committee on Service Conditions of Municipal Employees (1965).

Originally it addressed problems of both the rural and urban local governments, but since 1958 it has mainly dealt with issues of the latter. The Council considers and recommends broad lines of policy vis-à-vis local government in almost all of its aspects. It prepares proposals for legislation on matters relating to local government, draws up common programmes of action, not least, makes recommendations to the central government regarding allocation of funds to local bodies. It is also empowered to review the objectives accomplished in different areas, especially those where central funds have been utilized. In its annual meetings, the Council passes resolutions and reviews implementation of earlier resolutions (Inter-State Council Secretariat,Ministry of Home Affairs, GoI, 2016). 2.4 The national-level conferences on urban local government The central government in India has, from time to time, convened various conferences of state ministers of local self-government, All India Council of Mayors, commissioners of municipal corporations, housing ministers, and ministers of town and country planning. It has also sponsored various regional and all-India level seminars conducted on topics related to urban government where a constant refrain had been in favour of the constitutional recognition of urban local bodies. To exemplify, the Indian Institute of Public Administration conducted a seminar on Improving City Government (1958) and on the Cabinet System in Municipal 48 Government (1969). Coupled with these seminars, the conferences on urban local government led first to the constitution of the National Commission on Urbanization (1985), and ultimately, to the adoption of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992). According to Sachdeva (2011), the noteworthy conferences regularly convened on urban local government are: 2.4.1 The Conferences of All India Council of Mayors The All India Council of Mayors serves as the forum of the mayors of municipal corporations in India. It was convened in 1959 and has been meeting annually under the chairmanship of the minister of health, when urban development was a part of the Ministry of Health, and under the union minister for urban development since 1985, when a separate ministry of urban development was created. The Council is empowered to discuss matters of interests pertaining to the position of the mayor such as executive responsibilities vis-à-vis constitutional provisions and the amendments thereto, the grant of emergency powers to the mayors, the introduction of the mayor-in-council system, the delegation of additional powers to the mayors vide relevant government orders, and especially, the grant of constitutional recognition to local bodies, and so on. The Council has an executive committee which meets in between its official sessions to deal with issues of municipal corporations that may come up when the Council is not in session (All India Council of Mayors, 2018). 2.4. 2 The Municipal Commissioners' Conference The Municipal Commissioners' Conference was first convened in 1965 at the initiative of the municipal commissioner of Delhi Municipal Corporation. There exists at the state level similar organizations of presidents of municipal committees and executive officers of the municipal committees. For Sachdeva (2011) the conferences of the presidents of municipal committees are empowered to take joint decisions about the implementation of decisions taken by the state government, while the conferences of the executive officers of the municipal committees discuss civic problems, with an emphasis on the improvement of the conditions of civic facilities and services. 2.4. 3 Conferences of State Ministers of Local Self Government/Ministers of Town and Country Planning/Housing Ministers According to Sachdeva (2011: 49), the Ministry of Urban Development convenes conferences of state ministers of local self-government, ministers of town and country planning and housing ministers from time to time to enable them to exchange their views on civic problems, matters

49 relating to regional and urban planning, suggest legislative, administrative and financial measures to solve the problems confronting the states in these fields and to report on the decisions previously taken, and to formulate new policies on the subjects under discussion. 2.5 Towards constitutional recognition A great landmark in the evolution of urban local government in the post-independence period was the setting up of Ministry of Urban Development in 1985. Sachdeva (2011) mentions that in the beginning, urban local government was the responsibility of the Ministry of Health as local government had its beginning in an urge to improve sanitary conditions as recommended by the Royal Army Sanitation Commission (1863). The Ministry of Health looked after both rural and urban government until 1958, when the former was separated from it and put under the charge of Ministry of Community Development. In January 1966,a part of local government, namely, urban development was made the responsibility of the Ministry ofWorks and Housing which was later renamed as the Ministry of Works, Housing and Urban Development.In 1967, the subject of urban development was transferred to the Ministry of Health, which was designated as Ministry of Health, Family Planning, Works, Housing, and Urban Development.

45% MATCHING BLOCK 61/321 SA c-2nd.docx (D21510546)

In February 1973, the subject of urban development was transferred to the Ministry of Works and Housing. Therefore, with regard to the constitutional status of urban local government two additional developments would have to be mentioned: the role of the Ministry of Urban Development, established in 1985; and, the recommendations of the National Commission on Urbanization, established in 1985 which snowballed into the very basic elements of the constitution amendment bill by which urban local government received constitutional status in 1992. 2.5.1 The Ministry of Urban Development For Sachdeva (2011), it was in 1985 that on realizing the magnitude and complexity of urban problems resulting from urbanization taking place at an alarming rate in the country that Government of India decided to set up a separate Ministry of Urban Development and entrusted it with the responsibilities of broad policy formulation and monitoring programmes in the areas of housing, urban development, urban poverty alleviation, urban water supply and urban transport, in addition to construction and maintenance of central government buildings and management of central government land and property. The ministry has under its administrative control the Central Public Works Department, Directorate of Estates, and National Building
50 Organization as attached offices; Controller of Stationery, Controller of Publications, Land and Development Office, and Town and Country Planning Organization as subordinate offices; Delhi Development Authority, Delhi Urban Arts Commission, National Capital Regional Planning Board, and National Institute of Urban Affairs as autonomous and statutory bodies; and National Building Construction Corporation Ltd., Housing and Urban Development Corporation Ltd. (HUDCO), and Hindustan Prefab Ltd. as public sector undertakings.The state governments have also set up departments/directorates of urban local government in conjunction with other departments of allied nature or as separate departments, on the recommendations of the Committee on Augmentation of Financial Resources of Urban Local Bodies (1963), the Central Council of Local Self Government (1965), the Rural–Urban Relationship Committee (1966), and the Study Team on District Administration of the Administration Reform Commission (1967), to reduce the congestion of work at the secretarial level, to fulfil the need for a field organization on the pattern of the directorates ofother departments, and to serve as a bridge between the municipalities and the state level institutions. 2.5.2 The National Commission on Urbanization Another landmark in the evolution of urban local government was the setting up of National Commission on Urbanization in 1985 by Government of India to make acomprehensive analysis of the rapidly growing phenomenon of urbanization and of the problems caused by it for the urban governments, and to suggest measures to combat it. For Sachdeva (2011), theCommission was set up after a lapse of twenty years of the submission of the reports of the Rural–Urban Relationship Committee (1966) which had also examined the urban government setting comprehensively. The National Commission on Urbanization had examined the various urban problems in depth especially those of dimensions of urbanization, urban future, urban pattern, spatial planning, urban poverty, finance, urban management, housing, conservation, transport, water and sanitation, energy, people's participation, information system, and legal framework, and made recommendations for their solution in its seven volume report submitted in 1988 (Report of National Commission on Urbanisation, Vol. I, 1988). The government had since accepted most of these recommendations and incorporated them in the Constitution (63rd Amendment) Bill, 1989, which was later enacted as the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 62/321 SA Introduction CHAPTER1.docx (D37901991)

51 According to a literature of the Indian Council of Social Science Research (Vol. I, 1973), the central government has been conscious of the deficiencies in the organization and functions of urban local government and the factors responsible for their dismal performance and deterioration in the post-independence period, such as (a) the drafting of top national leaders in the Parliament and the central government and to some extent in the state legislatures and state governments, resulting in the domination of local bodies by inept politicians and consequent increase in political nepotism and corruption; (b) the increase in functions of municipal bodies due to the increasing pace of urbanization has not been matched by a corresponding increase in their finances resulting in their inability to cope with their increased responsibilities and the deterioration in the quality and quantity of services; (c) local bodies continue to be governed by the early nineteenth century framework of municipal administration, laws and by-laws, rulesand regulations, practices and procedures—the cities today have to plan for the twenty-first century whilethe institutions which are supposed to implement these plans are a hangover of the nineteenth century; (d)the Five Year Plans have hopelessly admitted the severe limitations of municipal administration while doing very little about introducing radical changes in such administration; (e) the Finance Commission which is appointed every five years under the constitution of India is not required to look into the problem of local finance; (f) the states do not generally consider urban problems as of any particular consequence and usually the Ministry of Local Self Government is one of the unimportant ministries; (g) the state governments superseded municipalities and corporations on political grounds though some other excuse was given; (h) the corporations and municipalities are, by and large, centres of inefficiency, corruption, and political nepotism. Most of them are bankrupt and cannot in any way tackle the big problems in the fi eld of housing, transport, environmental pollution, etc. In short, the municipal bodies are not geared to urban planning as understood today but perform municipal functions as understood in the nineteenth century. They have neither the financial viability nor the legal backing to confront urban problems except in the limited sphere of zoning, land use planning, and so on. For Sachdeva (2011), the central government had introduced the Constitution (63rd Amendment) Nagarpalika Bill, in August, 1989, with a view to give power to the people and to strengthen, revamp, and rejuvenate urban local governments. Its main provisions were the constitution of nagarpanchayat for areas in transition from rural to urban areas, ward committees

52 in nagarpalikas and zonal committees in mahanagarpalikas, reservation for Scheduled Cases/Scheduled Tribes and women, state finance commission to recommend the principles to ensure soundness of local bodies finances, conduct of elections by the State Election Commission,

83%	MATCHING BLOCK 63/321	SA	HarvinderKaur_Pol Sci_Chapter3.pdf (D37034708)

audit of accounts by the Comptroller and Auditor General of India, and above all, the grant of constitutional status to local bodies.The Nagarpalika Bill introduced in 1989 was hailed as historic and momentous. It was passed by the Lok Sabha, but it was defeated in the Rajya Sabha by a narrow margin of three votes. The Congress (I) Government again in power, introduced the bill in the formof the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill on 16th September, 1991. The Bill was passed as the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992. It would prove to be the greatest landmark in removing the deficiencies that the urban local governments have been suffering from for the last one hundred years and in strengthening them to ensure their efficient and effective organization and functioning in the best interests of the residents of urban areas in India. 2.6 Conclusion To conclude the current unit it may be observed that the evolution of urban local government in post-independence India has been remarkably sluggish, owing mostly to the inertia of the central and state governments. It was only during the mid-1980s that the central government took some ground-breaking decisions insofar as setting up the Ministry of Urban Development, appointing the National Commission on Urbanization, and the introduction of the Nagarpalika Bill were concerned. These were done with the explicit objective of rejuvenating urban local bodies in the country, with received the ultimate impetus with the enactment of the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill (1991) in 1992. Keeping in mind the prognosis of the UN Habitat Report that India would encounter an urban population annual growth rate of 2.38% (UN Habitat, 2012- 2022), the central and state governments would have to step up in future to make Indian cities liveable. With the faithful execution of the various provisions of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992, a revolutionary and accountable functioning of urban local bodies in India can indeed be expected. 2.7 Summary This unit has discussed the following:

53 ?

41% MATCHING BLOCK 64/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Urban Local Government refers to an institution of governance in a statutory urban setting, demarcated by a definite area and population, which may deliberate, regulate, and implement decisions on subject matters entrusted to it by the law of the land. ? After achieving independence in 1947, India adopted its constitution on 26 January 1950 where the only reference to urban self-government is to be found in two entries of the State List and the Concurrent List. ? To overcome such deficiencies, the central governments in India instituted from time to time various committees and commissions,

100% MATCHING BLOCK 67/321 SA vijay thesis.pdf (D142533225)

100% MATCHING BLOCK 65/321 W

such as, the Local Finance Enquiry Committee (1949-51), the Taxation Enquiry Commission (1953–54), the Administrative Reforms Commission (1966), and so on. ? The state governments also, from time to time, constituted committees and commissions for similar purposes concerning urban local bodies, notably in Assam, Delhi, Gujarat, Haryana, Kerala, Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra, Odisha, Punjab, Tamil Nadu, and West Bengal. ? The Central Council of Local Self Government, established under Article 263 of the Constitution of India by an order of the president in 1954can investigate into the problems of urban local governments, can consider and recommend broad lines of policy vis-à-vis local government in almost all of its aspects.It is also empowered to review the objectives accomplished in different areas, especially those where central funds have been utilized. ? The central government in India has, from time to time, convened various conferences of state ministers of local self-government, All India Council of Mayors, commissioners of municipal corporations, housing ministers, and ministers of town and country planning. It has also sponsored various regional and all-India level seminars conducted on topics related to urban government where a constant refrain had been in favour of the constitutional recognition of urban local bodies. ? A great landmark in the evolution of urban local government in the post-independence period was the setting up of Ministry of Urban Development in 1985. It has been entrusted it with the responsibilities of broad policy formulation and monitoring programmes in the areas of housing, urban development, urban poverty alleviation, urban water supply and urban transport, and so on.

54 ? Another landmark in the evolution of urban local government was the setting up of National Commission on Urbanization in 1985 by Government of India to make a comprehensive analysis of the rapidly growing phenomenon of urbanization and of the problems caused by it for the urban governments, and to suggest measures to combat it. ? The Nagarpalika Bill introduced in 1989 was hailed as historic and momentous. Facing rejection in 1989, it was reintroduced in as the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill on 16th September, 1991. The Bill was passed as the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992. It would prove to be the greatest landmark in providing constitutional status to urban local bodies in India. 2.8 Glossary Commission/Committee: A commission is usually appointed by Government and is entrusted to carry out a task, while a committee can discuss matters only according to fixed rules to make recommendations. Concurrent List:The Concurrent List or List-III is a list of 52 items given in the Schedule Seven to the Constitution of India. Constitution (Amendment) Act: An amendment is an addition/alteration made to a constitution or any legal document. In case of the Constitution of India, the parliament may amend the provisions of the Constitution following procedures mentioned in Article 368. Mahanagarpalika: Municipal Corporation in India. Nagar Panchayat: Town Council or Notified Area Council in India. Nagarpalika: Municipality with its own local council and officials in India. State List: The State List or List-II is a list of 61 items. Initially there were 66 items in the list in Schedule Seven to the Constitution of India.

51% MATCHING BLOCK 66/321 W

Urban Local Government: an institution of governance in a statutory urban setting, demarcated by a definite area and population, which may deliberate, regulate, and implement decisions on subject

matters entrusted to it by the Constitution. 2.9 Model Questions Long Answer Type 1. Discuss in detail the roles and recommendations of the committees and commissions on urban local government set up by the central government in India.
55 2. Discuss in details the composition and functions of the Central Council of Local Self Government in India. 3. What have been the contributions of the national-level conferences on urban local government convened by the central government in India? 4. What roles did the establishment of the Ministry of Urban Development and the National Commission on Urbanization have with regard to providing constitutional recognition to urban local bodies in India? Short Answer Type 1. Discuss briefly the powers and functions of the All India Council of Mayors. 2. Discuss briefly the issue areas in which state-level commissions/committees on urban local government have made recommendations in India. 3. What were the recommendations of the Administrative Reforms Commission with regard to urban local government in India? 4. What according to the Indian Council of Social Science Research (1973) were the factors responsible for the poor performance of urban local bodies in India? 5. Discuss briefly the politics through which the Nagarpalika Bill (1989) become the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992? 6. What were the reasons behind the establishment of the National Commission on Urbanization? 2.10 References “Augmentation of financial resources of urban local bodies: report of the Committee of Ministers constituted by the Central Council of Local Self Government" (

89% MATCHING BLOCK 69/321 SA c-2nd.docx (D21510546)

New Delhi: Controller of Publications, 1965). "Formations,"

100% MATCHING BLOCK 68/321 W

Inter-State Council Secretariat (Ministry of Home Affairs, Government of India, 2016).

URL: http://interstatecouncil.nic.in/isc-formations/. "History of AICM," All India Council of Mayors (2018). URL: https://www.allindiamayorcouncil.com/index.php/about/history/history-of-aicm. "Report of Committee on the Service Conditions of Municipal Employees" (New Delhi: Ministry of Health and Family Planning and Urban Development, 1968). "Report of National Commission on Urbanisation," Vol. I (Government of India, Ministry of Urban Development, 1988). URL: https://indianculture.gov.in/reports-proceedings/report- national-commission-urbanisation-vol-i.
56 "Report of the

100% MATCHING BLOCK 70/321 SA Sanjay Kr. Pandey_Economics_130.pdf (D44467227)

Committee of Ministers on Augmentation of Financial Resources of Urban Local Governments" (New Delhi: Manager of Publications, 1965). "Report of the Committee on the Training of Municipal Employees" (New Delhi: Ministry of Health, 1963). "Report of the Local Finance Enquiry Committee" (Delhi: Manager of Publications, 1951). "Report of the Rural–Urban Relationship Committee," Vol. 1 (New Delhi: Ministry of Health and Family Welfare, 1966). "Report of the Study team on District Administration" (Delhi: Manager of Publications, 1967). "Report of the Taxation Enquiry Commission," Vol. 3 (New Delhi: Ministry of Finance, Government of India, 1953–54). A Survey of Research in Public Administration,Vol. I(New Delhi: Allied Publishers, 1973). Sachdeva, P., Local Government in India (New Delhi: Pearson, 2011). The Constitution of India (New Delhi: Ministry of Law and Justice, Government of India, 2007). UN Habitat Reports (2012-2022). URL: https://unhabitat.org/fr/node/91195. UNIT III CONSTITUTIONAL STATUS

71% MATCHING BLOCK 72/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

OF URBAN LOCAL GOVERNMENT Structure 3.1 Learning Objectives 3.2Introduction 3.3The Structure of Urban Local Government in India 3.4 Role and Responsibilities of Urban Local Government 3.5

Issues and Challenges necessitating Reforms of Urban Local Bodies 3.6 Conclusion 3.7 Summary 3.8 Glossary 3.9 Model Questions 3.10 References 3.1

41% MATCHING BLOCK 71/321 W

Learning Objectives After studying this unit, you are expected to: ? Identify the structural and functional aspects of Urban Local Government in India before the enactment of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992.

57 ? Identify and analyse the roles and responsibilities of Urban Local Bodies in India and the issues which necessitated their constitutional recognition. ? Understand the requirement for further reforms in the light of recent issues and challenges faced by ULBs in India. 3.2 Introduction Although there is a long history of urban local government (ULG) in India, there has been inadequate provisions in the Constitution of India with regard to urban local bodies (ULBs) which show that activities of such bodies in urban areas were initially not considered as obligatory or binding. The Directive Principles of State Policy (

70% MATCHING BLOCK 73/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Part IV of the Constitution of India)
refer only to village panchayats, whereas, the State List (Entry 5) and the Concurrent List (Entry 20) implicitly refers to the subject of the ULBs: the powers of municipal corporations, improvement trusts, district boards, and other local authorities for the purpose of local government or village administration (2007: 22, 327, 332). In the lack of constitutional recognition, therefore, urban local bodies were left to the discretion of the respective states which then passed Municipal Acts to legitimise the organisation and functioning of such bodies. But,

89% MATCHING BLOCK 74/321 SA CHAPTER 3 (FINAL).docx (D25359161)

92% MATCHING BLOCK 75/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

irregular elections to these bodies, indefinite and frequent suspensions, inadequate devolution of powers and resources led to the weakening of the structure and processes of urban local bodies throughout India. There was an urgent need to evolve mechanisms guaranteed by the Constitution, in terms of defining and improving the relationship between ULG and state governments, to demarcate its functions and sources of revenue, and to ensure regular elections and participation of members in planning and implementation of various development schemes and projects,

96% MATCHING BLOCK 76/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

not least, the

96% MATCHING BLOCK 77/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

representation of all sections of the society through reservation of minimum seats for vulnerable sections. The year 1985 saw the beginning of urban reforms in India with the creation of the Ministry of Urban Development by the Government of India. The Ministry then promptly formed the National Commission on Urbanisation (NCU) in 1985 to study urban issues and recommend strategies of development. It held several workshops, seminars, and consultations before submitting its report. The report of the NCU paved the way for legislative actions, snowballing into the constitutional recognition of ULBs in India.

60% MATCHING BLOCK 78/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

The Joint Parliamentary Committee (JPC) conducted extensive studies of the functioning of municipalities and held discussions with state governments. The proposed Constitution Amendment Bill concerning 58 urban local government was introduced in parliament in 1989. It was passed by the Lok Sabha, but it was defeated in the Rajya Sabha by a narrow margin of three votes. The Congress (I) Government again in power, introduced the bill in the form of the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill on 16th September, 1991. The Bill was passed as

the Constitution (74

77%	MATCHING BLOCK 79/321	SA	Unit 4 D1.docx (D112391601)

th Amendment) Act, 1992. It came into force on 1st June, 1993. A window of one year was given to the state governments to adopt legislations ensuring

69%	MATCHING BLOCK 80/321	SA	Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

conformity with the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992). In effect state municipal laws were amended to incorporate various provisions with regard to the composition and functions of municipal bodies. In this unit, the focus would be on the constitutional status of urban local government in India. It would delineate the structure, role and responsibilities of urban local government in India, before the passage of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992). It would also describe the issues and challenges faced by urban local bodies in India which necessitated a direct intervention by the central government to bestow constitutional recognition on ULBs to ensure uniformity of organization and functional efficiency. 3.3 The Structure of Urban Local Government in India Prior to the 74 th Amendment Act (1992), the statutes of respective states and Union Territories determined the constitution of municipal bodies in India. There were two types of Acts, viz. the Municipal Corporation Act and the Municipal Act which prescribed the structure of ULB in respective states. There has been a deliberative wing consisting of the elected body—headed by the city's Mayor or a Chairman, as the case may be—which had the power to advice or take action in an issue-based manner. On the other hand, there has been an executive wing led by the Municipal

73%	MATCHING BLOCK 81/321	SA	Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 83/321	SA	Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Commissioner, normally an officer of the state government. In bigger municipal corporations, the Commissioner is a cadre of the Indian Administrative Service or a senior member of the state civil service. In cities like Mumbai or Delhi, the organization of the municipal corporation comprise the Mayor on top of the system, followed by the Standing Committee, the Commissioner and additional zonal commissioners in charge of various affairs ranging from education to electricity taxes and transfer duty. On the other hand, smaller municipalities catering to about 120 thousand inhabitants have limited number of departments, limited roles and functions. The departments may range from Public Works, Public Health, and Water Supply, to License, Town Planning, Street Light, and Taxes. The roles and functions may range from ensuring maintenance of civil services and 59 facilities such as water supply and sewage system, issuing license and permits for shops and businesses, regulating shops and markets, running health services, to the maintenance of land record and properties owned by it.

53%	MATCHING BLOCK 82/321	W

60%	MATCHING BLOCK 84/321	SA	Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

The Municipal Commissioner, a state-appointed officer, is the head of the executive arm of the Municipality. The Commissioner is vested with executive powers, although the Municipality as a legislative body lays down policies for the governance of the city. The tenure of the Commissioner is fixed by the concerned state government, whereas his/her powers are delineated in the statutes and/or delegated by the corporation or the Standing Committee.

75%	MATCHING BLOCK 85/321	W

The Mayor in the Municipal Corporation is usually chosen through indirect election by the Ward Councillors from among themselves for a term of one year, which is renewable. The Mayor is generally not vested with

71%	MATCHING BLOCK 86/321	SA	Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

executive authority. The Councillors act by the Standing Committee exercising executive, supervisory, financial, and personnel powers.

The Standing Committee is composed of elected members. The Mayor-in Council system was introduced in West Bengal in 1984. The system comprises the

92%	MATCHING BLOCK 87/321	SA	Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Mayor and a Council of elected members with individual portfolios. The Municipal Commissioner acts as the Principal Executive Officer and is

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 88/321	SA	Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

subject to the control and supervision of the Mayor as the Chief Executive Officer, thereby ensuring adequate checks and balances. In India, a city is divided into wards. All the wards of a city form a Ward Committee, comprising elected Councillors. The Ward Committee is subject to general supervision of the Mayor-in-Council.

55%	MATCHING BLOCK 89/321	SA	Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

It looks after the functioning of water supply, drainage, collection and removal of solid waste, disinfection and health services, housing services, lighting, repair and maintenance of roads, parks, and drains. Article 243S of the Constitution of India provided for the constitution and composition of Wards Committees, etc. (2007: 141). There may also be a Directorate of Municipal Administration headed by the Director Local Bodies. Normally, the Municipal Commissioner is a senior officer than the Director Local Bodies, thereby placing him/her directly under the control of the concerned state government. However, as noted by Maheshwari (1971),

100% MATCHING BLOCK 90/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

100% MATCHING BLOCK 91/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

76% MATCHING BLOCK 92/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

the control of the state government over ULBs has often degenerated into spasmodic, intermittent bouts, and was often negative, thereby necessitating a uniform system of accountability and intervention. Citing a variety of reasons for the weakness and ineffectiveness of ULBs in many states which included the failure to hold regular elections, prolonged supersession and inadequate 60 devolution of powers and functions,

100% MATCHING BLOCK 93/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

the central government introduced the 73 rd Amendment Bill(1991) which was enacted as the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 95/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

The Act introduced political, functional and fiscal empowerment with reservation of seats to women and other weaker sections (243T), the duration of Municipalities, etc. (243

82% MATCHING BLOCK 94/321 W

U), creation of wards committees (243S),listing municipal functions with the Schedule XII in the constitution, and creation of State Finance Commission (243Y) (2007: 141-143, 144-145, 356). Among these Schedule XII and Article 243Y are discretionary: states have not devolved the functions as per Schedule XII in many cases, but other functions are implemented as per constitutional mandates. As per the Sixth Report of the Second

58% MATCHING BLOCK 96/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Administrative Reforms Commission (2007), there were no major changes in the structural and functional elements of ULBs till the 74 th Amendment Act (1992), despite rapid urbanization and the consequential increase in the issues and problems of urban areas in India. The powers and functions of these bodies were subject to the discretion of states, which in most cases were apathetic towards city administration. The 74 th Amendment Act (1992) brought about a paradigm shift by bestowing constitutional status upon ULBs. The Amendment conforms to the principal of subsidiarity, which stipulates that functions shall be carried out closest to citizens at the smallest unit of governance possible, and delegated upwards only when the Local Unit cannot perform the task.

98% MATCHING BLOCK 97/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

The report of the Second Administrative Reforms Commission (ARC) recommended that the same principle must inform the future

51% MATCHING BLOCK 98/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

reform packages for the ULBs. The constitutional status of the ULBs has ensured permanency to these entities of self-government, bestowing them with the mandate of planning for development and social justice in local areas. 3.4 Role and Responsibilities of Urban Local Government According to Vaidya (2009), municipal governance in general was not stable in India till the passage of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992). Prior to its enactment,

31% MATCHING BLOCK 99/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

the ULBs were either summarily suspended or superseded. Even when they were functioning, their financial status was abject. The National Commission on Urbanization (1985) submitted its report in 1988, advising the rejuvenation of the financial status of ULBs for which three measures were suggested: first, the development of mechanisms for the devolution of funds to ULBs from the state budget; second, the allocation of more finance in the Five-Year Plans; and third, the strengthening of the taxation base of ULBs (Report of National Commission on Urbanisation Vol. VIII, 1988).

61

71% MATCHING BLOCK 100/321 SA vijay thesis.pdf (D142533225)

The Article 243W of the Constitution of India states the powers, authority, and responsibilities of Municipalities, etc. (2007: 144). It directs the legislature of a state to endow Municipalities with such powers and authority as may be necessary to enable them to function as institutions of self-government.

Over the years, however, the assigned functions and revenues of the ULBs have been steadily encroached upon by certain specialized agencies of the state government. These agencies, such as, Infrastructure Boards, and so on, had usurped various responsibilities of municipalities like water supply and sewerage. These agencies often worked without the knowledge or support of the ULBs, and as noted by the report of the Second ARC (2007) contributed to the weakening of the authority of municipal bodies. Consequently, ULBs remained ill-equipped to respond to emerging problems or issues, lacking necessary organizational ability, manpower, and resources. Moreover, to make matters worse,

68% MATCHING BLOCK 101/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

urban areas attracted less attention from politicians and policy-makers due to predominantly rural character of Indian society. In India, there are multiple agencies operating in similar issue-areas within a definite city which often leads to jurisdictional and technical complications. These include a range of para- municipal agencies as well,

100% MATCHING BLOCK 102/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

such as Development Authority or Improvement Trust, local-level Water and Sanitation Agency, and so on. Functions and responsibilities listed in the Schedule XII have not been transferred to ULBs in most states. The specialized agencies of the state governments and the ULBs at times have overlapping mandates, such as housing and infrastructure development. The agencies often become unaccountable to the local population, as they are not answerable to the ULBs or have more powers than the latter. In effect, a strong need has been felt to devise suitable mechanisms for better coordination at the local level, by treating the ULB as the primary local institution for vertical and horizontal coordination, representing local needs and enjoying popular support. In this regard, the Schedule XII has to be reviewed by the parliament to determine local accountability, and the mandatory—not discretionary—transfer of functions to the ULBs. 3.5 Issues and Challenges necessitating Reforms of Urban Local Bodies According to the Government of India (2014), urban local government is expected to play many roles, as:

100% MATCHING BLOCK 103/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

a) A Regulator, namely the administration of various acts and regulations. 62 b) A Provider, that involves providing urban services efficiently and equitably by managing its accounts effectively and efficiently. c) An Agent that takes the schemes of higher-level Government to the people. This includes promotion of popular participation. d) A Welfare Agency, which provides active assistance to higher level governments in the equitable distribution and delivery. e) An Agent of Development, who strives for improvement in the quality of life through the augmentation of infrastructure. Additionally,

ULBs are required to provide various services to the inhabitants of urban areas, and to serve as mechanisms for deepening democratic participation. The demand for standardizing and rationalizing the structure of ULBs led to the enactment of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992). Although the Act

76% MATCHING BLOCK 104/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

did not specify the manner of election, tenure or powers of the Mayors of urban local bodies, some states have directly elected mayors, with varying tenure and powers. According to Kumar (2019),

95% MATCHING BLOCK 106/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

the directly elected Mayor is expected to tap the support of bureaucrats by presenting himself as a people's representative of the city. The direct election provides the required legitimacy to the Mayor to interact, demand, and get work executed in the best interest of the city.There is also an obverse view that an empowered executive at the city can be achieved through an indirectly elected Mayor-in-Council system in which the Mayor remains accountable to the council.

52% MATCHING BLOCK 105/321 W

The Mayor has to form a Council out of the elected Councillors which was to aid and advice the Mayor.

In effect, a cyclical system has been established in most states. The Second ARC (2007) noted that theMayor in the Urban Local Government in most states enjoys primarily a ceremonial status, with the Commissioner, appointed by the State Government, having all the powers.

84% MATCHING BLOCK 107/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

According to Jha (2018), often the Mayor ends up acting as the opposition to the Municipal Commissioner, which is a major issue if the latter is averse to negotiations. Such situations create gridlocks which are difficult to overcome without the direct intervention of the concerned state government. There are two recommendations in this regard: first, with regard to powers and functions; and second, with regard to tenure. In the first case, it has been recommended that the functions of chairing the Municipal Council and exercising executive authority should be combined in the same functionary, i.e., Chairman or Mayor, while the MunicipalCommissioner is to perform the functions delegated to him/her.

87% MATCHING BLOCK 108/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

The selection of the Municipal Commissioner is also 63 recommended to the authority of the Mayor who is expected to be accountable to the electorate. Secondly, the uniformity of the Mayor's tenure has also been recommended at five years across the country, so as to ensure continuity and accountability. Similarly, according to theAnnual Survey of India's City-Systems, ASICS (2016), the tenure of the Municipal Commissioner is also recommended to be fixed for a reasonably fair period. With regard to the role of ULBs in Flagship Programmes of the Government of India, it has been recommended that an excessive reliance on private consultants must be avoided, with an increase in popular participation, and a thorough rejection of common sets of solutions for all cities across India as impractical, therefore, redundant. According to Khan et al. (2018), Flagship Programmes such as the prior Jawaharlal Nehru National Urban Renewal Mission or the current Smart Cities Mission have often eroded the autonomy of ULBs, leading to more direct control of such bodies by the state governments. This is also a trend which has to change, if the future efficacy of ULBs is to be secured. 3.6 Conclusion The effective governance of urban areas demands institutions of local government that are vibrant and accountable—with sufficient autonomy to be able to respond to the needs and aspirations of the inhabitants of urban areas. Although this has been accepted in theory, in practice there has been a remarkable reluctance to share power in the post-independence era with local bodies, which has directly contributed towards the latter's underdevelopment. Acknowledging these aspects and as a means for redressal, the central government resolved to bestow constitutional recognition upon urban local bodies in India. The 74 th Amendment Act (1992) attempted to redress the situation, however, despite the passage of three decades, the real transfer of power to ULBs is still to occur. With remarkable strides in urbanization, cities in India are now experiencing infrastructural and service-oriented crises. To tackle these, the central government is giving a wide berth to the state governments, with the expectation that these would undertake reforms at the level of the ULBs to strengthen its organization and resource base. Just as the constitutional status of ULBs were an issue in the early 1990s, being resolved with the passage of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992), the urgent matter now is with regard to further reforms vis-à-vis the roles and responsibilities of ULBs, necessitating further legislative action.

68% MATCHING BLOCK 110/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

64 3.7 Summary This unit has discussed the following: • Although there is a long history of urban local government in India, there has been inadequate provisions in the Constitution of India with regard to urban local bodies (ULBs). •

96%	MATCHING BLOCK 109/321	W

The Directive Principles of State Policy (Part IV of the Constitution of India)

refer only to village panchayats, whereas, the State List (Entry 5) and the Concurrent List (Entry 20) implicitly refers to the subject of the ULBs. • In the lack of constitutional recognition, urban local bodies were left to the discretion of the respective states which passed Municipal Acts to legitimise the organisation and functioning of such bodies. • Various functional problems led to the weakening of the structure and processes of urban local bodies throughout India. There was an urgent need to evolve mechanisms guaranteed by the Constitution to regularize the functioning of ULBs in India. • Prior to the 74th Amendment Act (1992),

33%	MATCHING BLOCK 111/321	SA	Unit 9 URBAN LOCAL GOVERNMENT STRUCTURE ROLE A ... (D88400672)

the statutes of respective states and Union Territories determined the constitution of municipal bodies in India. There has been a deliberative wing consisting of the elected body headed by the Mayor, and an executive wing led by the Municipal Commissioner. • The creation of the Ministry of Urban Development (1985) which set up the National Commission on Urbanisation (NCU) in the same year ultimately snowballed into the constitutional recognition of ULBs in India. • The proposed Constitution Amendment Bill concerning urban local government was introduced in parliament in 1989. The Bill was passed as the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992. It came into force on 1st June, 1993. • Although state municipal laws were amended to incorporate various provisions with regard to the composition and functions of municipal bodies, the transfer of powers to municipal bodies has been neglected. • The 74th Amendment Act (1992) conforms to the principal of subsidiarity, which

83%	MATCHING BLOCK 112/321	SA	Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

98%	MATCHING BLOCK 113/321	SA	Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

stipulates that functions shall be carried out closest to citizens at the smallest unit of governance possible, and delegated upwards only when the Local Unit cannot perform the task. •

Article 243S of the Constitution of India provided for the constitution and composition of Wards Committees, etc. Although

71%	MATCHING BLOCK 114/321	SA	vijay thesis.pdf (D142533225)

Article 243W of the Constitution of India states the powers, 65 authority, and responsibilities of Municipalities, etc.

the assigned functions and revenues of the ULBs have been steadily encroached upon by certain specialized agencies of the state government. Consequently, ULBs remained ill-equipped to respond to emerging problems or issues, lacking necessary organizational ability, manpower, and resources. • The Flagship Programmes of the Government of India have also sometimes eroded the autonomy of ULBs, however, certain recommendations have been put forward to ensure the future efficacy of ULBs and its jurisdictional autonomy vis-à-vis their respective state governments. 3.8 Glossary Concurrent List:The Concurrent List or List-III is a list of 52 items given in the Schedule Sevento the Constitution of India. Constitution (Amendment) Act: An amendment is an addition/alteration made to a constitution or any legal document. In case of the Constitution of India, the parliament may amend the provisions of the Constitution following procedures mentioned in Article 368. Nagarpalika: Municipality with its own local council and officials in India.

83% MATCHING BLOCK 116/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Principle of Subsidiarity: The Principle stipulates that the functions shall becarried out closest to citizens at the smallest unit of governance possible, anddelegated upwards only when the Local Unit cannot perform the task.

State List: The State List or List-II is a list of 61 items. Initially there were 66 items in the list in Schedule Seven to the Constitution of India.

51% MATCHING BLOCK 115/321 W

Urban Local Government: an institution of governance in a statutory urban setting, demarcated by a definite area and population, which may deliberate, regulate, and implement decisions on subject

matters entrusted to it
by the Constitution. 3.9 Model Questions Long Answer Type 1. Discuss the process of granting constitutional status to urban local government in India, with special reference to the 74th Amendment Act (1992). 2. What has been the role of the National Commission on Urbanization (1985) toward the grant of constitutional status to urban local bodies in India? 3. What are the ways in which ULBs in India were structured prior to the enactment of the 74th Amendment Act (1992)? What was the function of the Mayor-in-Council?
66 4. What were the types of empowerment introduced by the 74th Amendment Act (1992) for city dwellers in India? What are the major issues and challenges faced by ULBs in India? Are administrative reforms vis-à-vis ULBs necessary? Short Answer Type 1. Discuss briefly the politics through which the Nagarpalika Bill (1989) become the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992? 2. What were the reasons behind the establishment of the National Commission on Urbanization? 3. Discuss the relationship between the Mayor and the Municipal Commissioner as the state-appointed officer of the Municipality. 4. What were the recommendations of the Second Administrative Reforms Commission (2007) with regard to the principal of subsidiarity followed by urban local bodies in India? 5. According to the Government of India (2014), what are the roles that ULBs are expected to play, and what are the services that they are expected to deliver? 6. What are the recommendations by various experts vis-à-vis diminishing the tussle between the office of the Mayor and the office of the Municipal Commissioner in India? 3.10 References "Second Administrative Reforms Commission (6th Report), Local Governance," (New Delhi: Government of India, 2007). URL:

80% MATCHING BLOCK 117/321 W

https://www.darpg.gov.in/sites/default/files/local_governance6.pdf. Annual Survey of India'

s City-Systems (Bengaluru: Janaagraha, 2016).

76% MATCHING BLOCK 119/321 SA Unit 9.docx (D112923149)

Government of India Statistical Yearbook (New Delhi: Ministry of Statistics and Plan Implementation, 2014). Jha, R., "Strengthening Municipal Leadership in India: The Potential of Directly Elected Mayors with Executive Powers," ORF,Occasional PaperNo. 168 (2018). Khan, S., Taraporevala, P. & Zerah, M. H., "Mission Impossible: Defining Indian Smart Cities," Economic & Political Weekly—Review of Urban Affairs, (2018), 53(49). Kumar, N., "Directly Elected Mayors: A Step towards Democratic Urban Governance," Economic & Political Weekly, (2019) 54(46). Maheshwari, S. R., Local Government in India (Bombay: Orient Longman, 1971).

The Constitution of India (New Delhi: Ministry of Law and Justice, Government of India, 2007).
67 UNIT IV 74 th CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT ACT: FEATURES Structure 4.1 Learning Objectives 4.2 Introduction 4.3 The Constitution and Composition of Municipalities and Ward Committees 4.4 Powers, Authority, and Responsibilities of Municipalities 4.5 Elections, Finances, and the Committees for District and Metropolitan Planning 4.6 Conclusion 4.7 Summary 4.8 Glossary 4.9 Model Questions 4.10 References 4.1 Learning Objectives After studying this unit, you are expected to: ? Identify the necessities of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992. ? Identify and analyse the features and provisions of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992. ? Understand various aspects of municipal finances and district/metropolitan planning as functional domains of Urban Local Government in India. 4.2 Introduction Prior to the enactment of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992, in the lack of constitutional recognition, urban local bodies (ULBs) were left to the discretion of the states which comprise the Indian Union. These states had passed Municipal Acts to legitimise the organisation and functioning of such bodies. But, irregular elections to these bodies, indefinite and frequent suspensions, inadequate devolution of powers and resources led to the weakening of the structure and processes of urban local bodies throughout India. There was an urgent need to evolve mechanisms guaranteed by the Constitution, in terms of defining and improving the relationship between ULG and state governments, to demarcate its functions and sources of 68 revenue, and to ensure

55% MATCHING BLOCK 118/321 W

92% MATCHING BLOCK 120/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

96% MATCHING BLOCK 121/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

regular elections and participation of members in planning and implementation of various development schemes and projects,

not least, the

96% MATCHING BLOCK 122/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

representation of all sections of the society through reservation of minimum seats for vulnerable sections. The year 1985 saw the beginning of urban reforms in India with the creation of the Ministry of Urban Development by the Government of India. The Ministry then promptly formed the National Commission on Urbanisation (NCU) in 1985 to study urban issues and recommend strategies of development. It held several workshops, seminars, and consultations before submitting its report. The report of the NCU paved the way for legislative actions, snowballing into the constitutional recognition of ULBs in India.

60% MATCHING BLOCK 123/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

The Joint Parliamentary Committee (JPC) conducted extensive studies of the functioning of municipalities and held discussions with state governments. The proposed Constitution Amendment Bill concerning urban local government was introduced in parliament in 1989. It was passed by the Lok Sabha, but it was defeated in the Rajya Sabha by a narrow margin of three votes. The Congress (I) Government again in power, introduced the bill in the form of the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill on 16th September, 1991. The Bill was passed as

the Constitution (74

77% MATCHING BLOCK 124/321 SA Unit 4 D1.docx (D112391601)

th Amendment) Act, 1992. It came into force on 1 st June, 1993. A window of one year was given to the state governments to adopt legislations ensuring

69% MATCHING BLOCK 125/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

conformity with the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992). In effect state municipal laws were amended to incorporate various provisions with regard to the composition and functions of municipal bodies. The present unit will deal with the features and provisions of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992. It will be divided into three sections based on the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992: 1-6): first, on the constitution, composition and duration of municipalities and ward committees, with special emphasis on reservation of seats; second, on the powers, authority, and responsibilities of municipalities; and third, on municipal elections, finances, audit, and committees for district and metropolitan planning. 4.3 The Constitution and Composition of Municipalities and Ward Committees As the 74 th Amendment Act (1992) came into effect on 1 st June, 1993, a new section was inserted in the Constitution of India, viz. Part IXA relating to the Municipalities (Articles 243P through 243ZG) (2007: 139-149) along with

36% MATCHING BLOCK 126/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

the Schedule XII

97% MATCHING BLOCK 127/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

which defines the functions in respect of which schemes for economic development and social justice are to be implemented by the municipalities

vide Article 243W of the Constitution of India. According to the 74 th Amendment 69 Act, the state government is required to constitute either of the three types of municipalities depending upon the population/population density, size of area, revenue generated for local bodies, percentage of employment/dependence on agricultural or non-agricultural activities, vide Art. 243Q of the Constitution of India: a. Nagar Panchayats for transitional areas, i.e., transition from rural to urban areas. These areas are neither purely rural nor purely urban with regard to their social, economic, and cultural aspects. It must have a population that is less than 25 per cent dependent upon agriculture and/or exhibiting rural socio-cultural norms, or remaining on industrial and service-sector employment. b. Municipal Council for a smaller urban area. c. Municipal Corporation for a larger urban area.

91% MATCHING BLOCK 128/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

60% MATCHING BLOCK 129/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

The
Act does not include areas demarcated as military cantonments and/or Industrial Townships. As demographic and other factors—on which the constitution of these bodies is based—varies from state to state, the respective state legislatures frame their own laws to declare the form of Urban Local Government for any particular area.

98% MATCHING BLOCK 130/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

The state governments, vide Art. 243R (1), are responsible for holding direct elections for the Ward Councillors. The number of Councillors is also fixed by the state government.

77% MATCHING BLOCK 131/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Direct election of Ward Councillors enable the realization of grassroots democracy. Along with directly elected Ward Councillors, persons with special knowledge or expertise can be nominated to the municipalities, vide Art. 243R (2ai) of the Constitution of India. This can channelize their expertise towards the betterment of the community, although such individuals cannot vote in local bodies. Moreover, any elected member of the Lok Sabha or the state legislative assembly residing in the area of a particular municipality is also its ex-officio member. This provision boosts the resource base of the local body, as such elected Members of Parliament or State Legislative Assembly often serve as interfaces between the local and state/Union administration. Vide Art. 243S, all Chairpersons of the Committees constituted as per Clause 5 are the members of the respective ULB. Various ward committees are constituted in such a way that their Chairpersons would, in theory, ensure realistic plan formulation and implementation, keeping the links between ULBs and state/central government intact. The state governments are also required to evolve the process of elections of the Chairpersons of ULBs, not least, decide on matters relating to disqualification of any member of 70 the municipality, vide Art. 243V (2). The state governments have been directed by the 74 th Amendment Act (1992)

47% MATCHING BLOCK 132/321 SA Unit 4 D1.docx (D112391601)

58% MATCHING BLOCK 133/321 SA Unit 4 D1.docx (D112391601)

to constitute and decide upon the composition of Wards Committees in all municipalities having a population of more than three lakhs (Art. 243S). The Ward Committees serve as the bridge between ULBs and the citizens, providing

60% MATCHING BLOCK 134/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

a space for their active participation local-level planning. These committees prepare and submit ward development schemes for allotment of funds, ensure proper utilization of allotted funds, oversee maintenance of public utilities safeguarding the assets of the municipal corporation. All the aforementioned mandates of the state governments are to be carried out with due obeisance to reservation policies of the Government of India.In order to ensure adequate representation to Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes and women, seats have been reserved

81% MATCHING BLOCK 135/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

in urban local bodies, vide

88% MATCHING BLOCK 136/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Article 243T (2007: 141-142).The proportion of seats reserved for SC/ST candidates to the total member of seats is nearly same as the proportion of the population of SC/ST in the municipal area, with a minimum one-third of the total member of seats reserved for SC/ST being reserved for women belonging to communities. These

SC/ST

78% MATCHING BLOCK 137/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

mandatory provision is applicable only on directly elected members. The state governments may decide reservation criteria to the offices of Chairpersons in case of SC/ST and women candidates. It has the optional power for reservation of member for

87% MATCHING BLOCK 138/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

seats with regard to Backward Classes as Members or Chairpersons of Municipalities. In order to bring uniformity, the term for each Municipality has been fixed for five years from the date appointed for its first meeting, vide Art. 243U. State governments, through the office of Chief Election Commission, are responsible for conducting elections before the expiration of the duration of the municipality. It has no power to supersede/suspend the ULBs but, may dissolve any municipality. In this regard, a reasonable opportunity must be provided to the concerned municipality, before its dissolution. In case of dissolution, elections have to be conducted within six months from the date of dissolution. As per the provisions of the Act, the municipality constituted owing to dissolution of the previous will be in office only for the remaining duration of the term. 4.4 Powers, Authority, and Responsibilities of Municipalities Urban local government functions on the basis of the principle of decentralization of powers which demands a balanced sharing of authority between the state and Urban Local Governments to make municipalities truly a unit of local self-government, enabling them to administer their 71 respective areas, as well as to ensure democracy at the grassroots. As per the 74 th Amendment Act (1992: 3),

89%	MATCHING BLOCK 139/321	SA	Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

88%	MATCHING BLOCK 140/321	SA	Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

state governments are to bestow requisite powers and authority so as to enable ULBs to prepare plans for bringing economic development and ensuring social justice to carry out their functions and responsibilities conferred upon them including those in relation to the matters listed in Schedule XII. Also, toimplement various schemes, projects and programmes, etc.

Under Art. 243W there are 18 Schedule XII functions (2007: 356) entrusted to municipalities in India:

92%	MATCHING BLOCK 141/321	SA	Chapter-II.pdf (D22537359)

urban planning including town planning;regulation of land use including construction of buildings; planning for economic and social development;

provisions for

85%	MATCHING BLOCK 142/321	SA	Final Urban_Local_Governance_in_India-_Organis ... (D121398204)

roads and bridges; water supply for domestic, industrial and commercial purposes; public health, sanitation conservancy and solid waste management; maintaining fire services; urban forestry, protection of the environment and promotion of ecological aspects; safeguarding the interests of the weaker sections of the society including the handicapped and mentally retarded; slum improvement and up gradation; urban poverty alleviation; provision of urban amenities and facilities such as parks, gardens and playgrounds; promotion of cultural, educational and aesthetic aspects; burials and burial grounds and cremations, cremation grounds and electronic crematoriums; cattle pounds and prevention of cruelty to animals; vital statistics including registration of births and deaths; public amenities including street lighting, bus stops, parking lots and public conveniences; and finally, regulation of slaughter houses and tanneries.

77%	MATCHING BLOCK 143/321	SA	Final Urban_Local_Governance_in_India-_Organis ... (D121398204)

Apart from these powers, municipalities in India can be entrusted with other functions by acts of legislature in order to bring about a qualitative change in the standard of living and to ensure overall sustainable development. 4.5 Elections, Finances, and the Committees for District and Metropolitan Planning

95% MATCHING BLOCK 144/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

The State Election Commission constituted under article 243K of Part IX of the Indian Constitution has been vested with the power to superintend, direct, and control the preparation of electoral rolls for the smooth, free and fair elections to the municipalities. This function has been entrusted under Article 243ZA of the Constitution of India (2007: 145). Apart from elections, for the transparent execution of the Schedule XII functions, it is essential to provide municipalities with adequate financial resources, which is ensured by Art. 243X. The state legislature can authorize the municipalities within its domain

68% MATCHING BLOCK 145/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

to levy, collect and appropriate taxes, duties, tolls, and fees. It may also assign taxes and duties collected by the state government to municipalities,

72

100% MATCHING BLOCK 147/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

and grants-in-aid from the Consolidated Fund of the state. It also provides for constitution of funds by the municipalities for crediting and withdrawal of monetary funds.

90% MATCHING BLOCK 146/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

The Finance Commission constituted under Art. 243Y (2007: 144-145) for reviewing the financial position of Panchayati Raj Institutions has also been assigned the task of reviewing the financial position of municipalities. It makes recommendations: a. for distributing between the state and municipalities the netproceeds of taxes, duties, tolls and fees, which are leviable by the state government; b. for allocation of share of such proceeds between municipalities at all levels in the state; c. to determine the taxes, duties, tolls and fees to be assigned or appropriated by the municipalities; d. for grants-in-aid to municipalities from Consolidated Fund ofState; and e.

88% MATCHING BLOCK 148/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

for measures needed to improve the financial position of municipalities. Moreover, the maintenance of accounts of municipalities and their audit under Art. 243Z is to be done as per the provisions of the respective state law. The State Legislatures can make provisions for this purpose as per the local needs and available institutional framework.

Further, to bring about

85% MATCHING BLOCK 149/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

coordination and cohesiveness between different governing bodies like Panchayats Raj Institutions (PRIs) and Municipalities, comprehensive planning mechanisms had to be evolved.

To fulfil

89% MATCHING BLOCK 150/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

this aim, provision for the constitution of Planning Committee at the District Level has been incorporated in 74 th Amendment Act (1992: 4-5) under Art. 243ZD for the consolidation of plans of PRIs and Municipalities so as to ensure overall development of the district. As per the Act,

67% MATCHING BLOCK 152/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

four-fifth of the total number of the members of Planning Committee must be elected from among the directly elected members of PRIs and Municipalities and their representation should be in proportion to the ratio of rural and urban population in the district. The District Planning Committee is to prepare plans giving due regard to

the

77% MATCHING BLOCK 151/321 W

common interest between panchayats and municipalities including spatial planning, sharing of water, other physical and natural resources, integrated development of infrastructure and environmental conservation, as well as the extent and type of available financial and other resources. The draft plans are to be forwarded by the Chairperson of the Committee to the state government for approval. Vide Art. 243ZE (2007: 147-148), there exists a provision for constituting a Metropolitan Planning Committeefor the areas designated as Metropolitan with the size of population of 10 73 lakhs and above. The purpose is to prepare aconsolidated and comprehensive plan for the Metropolitan area as a whole.

77% MATCHING BLOCK 153/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

As per the 74 th Amendment Act,

85% MATCHING BLOCK 154/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

two-thirds of the total member of its members must be selected from among the directly elected members of Municipalities and their representation should be in proportion to the ratio of rural and urban population in that area. To ensure better planning

and

100% MATCHING BLOCK 155/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

close cooperation and coordination between Union, State and Local government, provisions have

100% MATCHING BLOCK 156/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

been made to have representation of various Union and State level Committees, organisations and institutions, if deemed necessary.

The

100% MATCHING BLOCK 157/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Metropolitan Planning Committee is to prepare the draft plans giving due regard to

the

98% MATCHING BLOCK 158/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

draft development plans prepared by panchayats and municipalities of the area, common interest between panchayats and municipalities including co-ordinated spatial planning, sharing of water, other physical and natural resources, integrated development of infrastructure and environment conservation, the extent and type of investments likely to be made by the Union and State government and type of available financial and other resources. The draft plan has to be prepared keeping in view the overall objectives and priorities set by both the Union and State Governments.

The

92% MATCHING BLOCK 159/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

draft plans are to be forwarded by the Chairperson of the Committee to the State Government. Vide Art. 243ZC (2007: 146), nothing in Part IXA shall apply to Scheduled areas and Tribal areas as referred to in the Art. 244 of the Constitution. However, the Parliament may by law, extend the provisions of the Part IXA to these areas, subject to such exceptions and modifications as may be specified in that law.

The

83% MATCHING BLOCK 160/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Ministry of Urban Development undertook necessary steps to ensure that the provisions of State Municipal Laws were brought in conformity with the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992: 6). It was fixed that 31 st May, 1994 would be the target date for bringing about conformity between the state laws and the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act. This was achieved through various measures undertaken by the Ministry of Urban Development including organising seminars, meetings, and through frequent correspondence with the state-level stakeholders. 4.6 Conclusion

91% MATCHING BLOCK 161/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

84% MATCHING BLOCK 162/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Before the 74 th Amendment Act, Municipalities were classified under 'Local or Other Authorities' under Art. 12 of the Constitution of India (2007: 6). Through a Constitution Amendment Bill of 2016

100% MATCHING BLOCK 163/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

an Institution of Self-Government status for municipalities had been sought

to widen

66% MATCHING BLOCK 164/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

the ambit of the definition of the 'State' under Art. 12 of the Indian Constitution. 74 Various governmental reports and research studies reveal that only marginal changes, which were mandatory have been carried out, while the real purpose of the Act stands defeated because of the state-sponsored specialized agencies are now performing most of the functions of ULBs. Functions assigned as per Art. 243W

are discretionary in nature

71% MATCHING BLOCK 165/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

and fiscal powers are assigned as per Art. 243X are also discretionary. Even, mandatory clauses of

Articles 243

100% MATCHING BLOCK 166/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

D and 243ZE are not implemented in its letter and spirit. In this regard, it is imperative for the states to curb the mandates of specialized agencies that are extra-constitutional in nature, thereby providing adequate

97% MATCHING BLOCK 167/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

freedom to ULBs to act independently in order to function as autonomous bodies at the grassroots level.

The ULBs must be involved more into

100% MATCHING BLOCK 168/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

the planning, regulation, slum development and water supply and sanitation functions, as it is empowered withthe District Planning Committee and Metropolitan Planning Committee. State Finance Commissions has to be constituted in a timely manner and their recommendations be implemented so as to strengthen the fiscal base of the ULBs, keeping in mind that local fiscal autonomy is inversely related to local dependency. To realise the true potential of the 74 th Amendment Act, there is an urgent need now to create an efficient and reliable administration with coordination between elected and state appointed functionaries;

91% MATCHING BLOCK 169/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

96% MATCHING BLOCK 170/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

to

77% MATCHING BLOCK 171/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

intensify and improve the local governance with more involvement of elected representatives; and finally, to enhance accountability and responsiveness with the improved capacity of the local people to participate in the decision-making process, especially vis-à-vis service delivery with enhanced motivation. 4.7 Summary This unit has discussed the following: • Prior to the enactment of the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992, urban local bodies (ULBs) were left to the discretion of the states which comprise the Indian Union. These states had passed Municipal Acts to legitimise the organisation and functioning of such bodies. • The creation of the Ministry of Urban Development (1985) which set up the National Commission on Urbanisation (NCU) in the same year ultimately snowballed into the constitutional recognition of ULBs in India. • The proposed Constitution Amendment Bill concerning urban local government was introduced in parliament in 1989. The Bill was passed as the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992. 75 • As the 74th Amendment Act (1992) came into effect on June 1, 1993, a new section was inserted in the Constitution of India, viz. Part IXA relating to the Municipalities (Articles 243P through 243ZG) along with the Schedule XII. • According to the 74th Amendment Act, the state government is required to constitute either of the three types of municipalities depending upon the population/population density, size of area, etc. These are Nagar Panchayats, Municipal Council, and Municipal Corporation. • The state governments, vide Art. 243R (1), are responsible for holding direct elections for the Ward Councillors. The state governments are also required to evolve the process of elections of the Chairpersons of ULBs, and decide on matters relating to disqualification of any member of the municipality, vide Art. 243V (2). •

40% MATCHING BLOCK 172/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

96% MATCHING BLOCK 173/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

100% MATCHING BLOCK 174/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

In order to ensure adequate representation to Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes and women, seats have been reserved in urban local bodies, vide Article 243T.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 176/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

In order to bring uniformity, the term for each Municipality has been fixed for five years from the date appointed for its first meeting, vide Art. 243U. • Under Art. 243W there are 18 Schedule XII functions entrusted to municipalities in India. Apart from these powers, municipalities in India can be entrusted with other functions by acts of legislature. •

96% MATCHING BLOCK 177/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

The State Election Commission constituted under article 243K of Part IX of the Indian Constitution conducts elections to the municipalities. Vide Art. 243X, the state legislature can authorize the municipalities within its domain

100% MATCHING BLOCK 175/321 W

to levy, collect and appropriate taxes, duties, tolls, and fees. •

94% MATCHING BLOCK 178/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

The Finance Commission constituted under Art. 243Y (2007: 144-145) for reviewing the financial position of Panchayati Raj Institutions has also been assigned the task of reviewing the financial position of municipalities.

93% MATCHING BLOCK 179/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

The maintenance of accounts of municipalities and their audit under Art. 243Z is to be done as per the provisions of the respective state law. •

86% MATCHING BLOCK 180/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Planning Committee at the District Level has been incorporated in 74th Amendment Act under Art. 243ZD for the consolidation of plans of PRIs and Municipalities so as to ensure overall development of the district.

Vide Art. 243ZE,

90% MATCHING BLOCK 181/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

there exists a provision for constituting a Metropolitan Planning Committee for the areas designated as Metropolitan with the size of population of 10 lakhs and above. 76 • The

85% MATCHING BLOCK 182/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Ministry of Urban Development undertook necessary steps to ensure that the provisions of State Municipal Laws were brought in conformity with the provisions of the 74th Amendment Act by 31st

May, 1994. This

Ouriginal by Turnitin

100% MATCHING BLOCK 184/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

was achieved through various measures undertaken by the Ministry of Urban Development. 4.8

Glossary Conformity of Legislation: to ensure that state laws conform to union laws so that one does not clash with the other, in which case the law of the union or federation will prevail. Constitution (Amendment) Act: An amendment is an addition/alteration made to a constitution or any legal document. In case of the Constitution of India, the parliament may amend the provisions of the Constitution following procedures mentioned in Article 368. Decentralization: the transfer of control of an activity or organization to several local offices or authorities rather than a single, centralized one. Nagar Panchayat: Town Council or Notified Area Council in India.

51% MATCHING BLOCK 183/321 W

Urban Local Government: an institution of governance in a statutory urban setting, demarcated by a definite area and population, which may deliberate, regulate, and implement decisions on subject

matters entrusted to it
by the Constitution. 4.9 Model Questions Long Answer Type 1. What was the state of Urban Local Bodies prior to the enactment of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992)? Discuss in details. 2. What are the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act with regard to the constitution and composition of municipalities and Ward Committees? 3. What are the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act with regard to the powers, authority, and responsibilities of Municipalities in India? 4. Discuss the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act with regard to the composition of Municipal Finance Commission, District Planning Committee, and Metropolitan Planning Committee. Short Answer Type 1. Discuss the difference between Nagar Panchayats, Municipal Council, and Municipal Corporation in India.
77 2. Discuss the provisions for setting up Wards Committees, etc., as enshrined in Art. 243S of the Constitution of India. 3. Discuss the reservation policies of the Government of India with regard to institutions of Urban Local Government. 4. Mention six Schedule XII functions that municipalities are required to carry out in India. 5. Discuss the process of constituting Municipal Finance Commission under Art. 243Y of the Constitution of India. 6. What are the provisions for setting up Metropolitan Planning Committee as per Art. 243ZE of the Constitution of India? 4.10 Reference The Constitution of India (New Delhi: Ministry of Law and Justice, Government of India, 2007). "The Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992," (New Delhi: Government of India, 1993). URL:https://www.education.gov.in/sites/upload_files /mhrd/files/upload_document/74amend.pdf . UNIT V IMPLICATIONS OF THE 74 th CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT ACT Structure 5.1 Learning Objectives
78 5.2 Introduction 5.3 Salient Features of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992 5.4 Implications of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992 5.5 Criticisms of the Procedural Aspects vis-à-vis the Enactment of the Amendment Bill 5.6 Conclusion 5.7 Summary 5.8 Glossary 5.9 Model Questions 5.10 References 5.1 Learning Objectives After studying this unit, you are expected to: ? Be aware of the salient features of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992. ? Identify and analyse the various implications of the features and provisions of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992 vis-à-vis Urban Local Government in India. ? Understand the criticisms levied against the procedural aspects of the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill, 1991, which became the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act (1992). 5.2 Introduction The year 1985 saw the beginning of urban reforms in India with the creation of the Ministry of Urban Development by the Government of India. The Ministry then promptly formed the National Commission on Urbanisation (NCU) in 1985 to study urban issues and recommend strategies of development. It held several workshops, seminars, and consultations before submitting its report. The report of the NCU paved the way for legislative actions, snowballing into the constitutional recognition of ULBs in India.

60% MATCHING BLOCK 185/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

The Joint Parliamentary Committee (JPC) conducted extensive studies of the functioning of municipalities and held discussions with state governments. The proposed Constitution Amendment Bill concerning urban local government was introduced in parliament in 1989. It was passed by the Lok Sabha, but it was defeated in the Rajya Sabha by a narrow margin of three votes. The Congress (I) Government again in power, introduced the bill in the form of the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill on 16th September, 79 1991. The Bill was passed as the Constitution (74

77% MATCHING BLOCK 186/321 SA Unit 4 D1.docx (D112391601)

th Amendment) Act, 1992. It came into force on 1 st June, 1993. A window of one year was given to the state governments to adopt legislations ensuring

69% MATCHING BLOCK 187/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

conformity with the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992). In effect state municipal laws were amended to incorporate various provisions with regard to the composition and functions of municipal bodies. As

36% MATCHING BLOCK 188/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

the 74 th Amendment Act (1992) came into effect on 1 st June, 1993, a new section was inserted in the Constitution of India, viz. Part IXA relating to the Municipalities (Articles 243P through 243ZG) (2007: 139-149) along with

the Schedule XII

97% MATCHING BLOCK 189/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

which defines the functions in respect of which schemes for economic development and social justice are to be implemented by the municipalities

vide Article 243W of the Constitution of India. The present unit will deal with the implications of the features and provisions of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992vis-à-vis Urban Local Government in India. It would first provide the salient features of the Act to setup a context for evaluating the implications thereof, providing also the list of functions that the Act bestows upon Municipalities that comprise the Schedule XII of the Constitution of India.

58% MATCHING BLOCK 192/321 SA Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D47315443)

The provisions with regard to the constitution of finance commission to review the financial position of Municipalities will also be mentioned. Only then will the implications and criticisms of the Act follow. 5.3 Salient Features of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992 The Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill that was passed as the Constitution (74th Amendment) Actin 1992 provided for the following, according to Sachdeva (2011): 1. Three categories of nagarpalikas: Nagar Panchayats for transitional areas, that is areas in transition from rural to urban, with a population between 10,000 and 20,000; municipal councils for urban areas with a population between 20,000 and three lakhs; municipal corporations with a population exceeding three lakhs. 2. Wards committees in nagarpalikas with a population of 100,000, and zonal committees in territorial areas of municipal corporations as an intermediate level between the ward committees and the municipal corporations. 3. Direct elections of nagarpalikas and ward committees, and constitution of zonal committees by the chairpersons of the wards committees comprised within the territorial areas of the zonal committees; representation of chairpersons for Ward Committees in municipal councils and of chairpersons of zonal committees in municipal corporations.

80 4. Reservations in nagarpalikas and wards committees for the scheduled castes and the scheduled tribes in proportion of their population, and 30 per cent reservation for women. 5. A fixed tenure of five years for nagarpalikas including the nagar panchayats and ward committees, and in the event of their dissolution the holding of elections within six months. 6. A committee at the district level for harmonizing and consolidating

69%	MATCHING BLOCK 190/321	W

the plans of panchayats and nagarpalikas in the district and preparing a draft development plan for the district as a whole, and its elections

60%	MATCHING BLOCK 191/321	W

from among the members of the panchayats and nagarpalikas in the district in proportion to the ratio of the population covered by them. 7. Sound finances by securing authorization from state legislatures for grants-in-aids from the consolidated fund of the state as also assignment to or appropriation by nagarpalikas of the revenue of designated taxes, duties, tolls and fees. 8.

80%	MATCHING BLOCK 193/321	SA	HarvinderKaur_Pol Sci_Chapter3.pdf (D37034708)

A finance commission to review the finances of the nagarpalikas, and recommend principles on the basis of which their soundness could be secured. 9. Superintendence, direction and control of elections to the nagarpalikas, including nagar panchayats and other elected committees by the Election Commission. 10.

88%	MATCHING BLOCK 194/321	SA	Revised_HarvinderKaur_PolSci_Chapter3.pdf (D37160247)

The Comptroller and Auditor General of India to cause the accounts of the nagarpalikas, ward committees, and zonal committees to be audited in such manner as he may deem fit. 11. Factors that would disqualify a person from membership. 12. The governor's decision on the question of disqualification, which he would take after obtaining the opinion of the Election Commission, to be treated as final. 13. Barring of the jurisdiction of the courts in matters relating to elections. For Sachdeva (2011), the bill had been hailed as historic, revolutionary, and momentous. The government had assured that it would try to remove all the difficulties that it might encounter in its implementation. The Bill was passed by the Lok Sabha but it failed to get the support of two-thirds majority in Rajya Sabha—it was defeated by a narrow margin of three votes only—and therefore could not become a statute. The Congress (I) government was replaced by the National Front government as a sequence of general elections held in November, 1989. The new government, under the stewardship of Shri V.P. Singh, was committed to strengthen the local governments, both urban and rural, and to bring a new legislation in the nearfuture to recast, restructure, revamp, and revitalize them in a much improved form. This was 81 to be done by incorporating the provisions of the defeated legislation with a view to remove the deficiencies inherent in the structure, organization, and functioning of urban local governments, and to ensure their rehabilitation as instruments of genuine democracy at the grassroots level and agencies for provision of basic civic amenities, development, and welfare of the people living in the towns and cities. But the National Front government could not honour its commitment to the people by introducing the promised legislation for due to its preoccupation with other complex problems demanding its immediate and urgent attention, and the eclipse of its rule within a short span of eleven months. The Janta Dal government under the prime ministership of Shri Chander Shekher would survive only four months. The bill aimed at rectifying the defects, deficiencies, and inadequacies in the structure and organization of urban local governments and at revitalizing and strengthening them. For Sachdeva (2011), the government had introduced the Nagarpalika Bill as the Constitution (65th Amendment) Bill in the Parliament, which was highly commended on account of its strong points. These were: 1. The setting up of three types of nagarpalikas—the nagar panchayats for transitional areas, municipalcouncils, and municipal corporations for urban areas. The nagar panchayats are meant for areas in transition from rural to urban with a population between 10,000 and 20,000, the municipal council for urbanareas with a population between 20,000 and three lakhs, and municipal corporations for urban areas witha population exceeding three lakhs. 2. Setting up ward committees and zonal committees to enable the local bodies become the traininggground for democratic institutions in the country. 3. Apart from giving power to the people, placing responsibility on them at various levels so that a newleadership emerges. 4. Empowering the state election commission to hold the elections in order to see that periodical elections of local bodies are free and fair. 5. Reserving thirty percent of the seats for women and for the scheduled castes and scheduled tribes inproportion to their population in the areas concerned. 6. Appointing a state finance commission to look into the needs of local bodies, and empowering theComptroller and Auditor General to audit the accounts to provide a safety valve to the people againstthe misuse of funds.

82 7. Banning the jurisdiction of the courts in matters relating to the elections to urban local bodies. 8. Above all, granting the ULBs constitutional status by amending the constitution. These provisions were expected to strengthen democracy right from the grassroots level and enable the people to shape their own destinies. 5.3.1 The Schedule XII Functions As per the 74 th Amendment Act (1992: 3),

88% MATCHING BLOCK 195/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

state governments are to bestow requisite powers and authority so as to enable ULBs to prepare plans for bringing economic development and ensuring social justice to carry out their functions and responsibilities conferred upon them including those in relation to the matters listed in Schedule XII. Also, toimplement various schemes, projects and programmes, etc.

Under Art. 243W there are 18 Schedule XII functions (2007: 356) entrusted to municipalities in India: 1.

97% MATCHING BLOCK 196/321 SA Ch. 3.Development of Local Government Institut ... (D106063648)

Urban planning including town planning. 2. Regulation of land-use and construction of buildings. 3. Planning for economic and social development. 4. Roads and bridges. 5. Water supply for domestic, industrial and commercial purposes. 6. Public health, sanitation, conservancy and solid waste management. 7. Fire services. 8. Urban forestry, protection of the environment and promotion of ecological aspects. 9. Safeguarding the interests of weaker sections of society including the handicapped and mentally retarded. 10. Slum improvement and up-gradation. 11. Urban poverty alleviation. 12. Provision of urban amenities and facilities such as parks, gardens, playgrounds. 13. Promotion of cultural, educational and aesthetic aspects. 14. Burials and burial grounds; cremations, cremation grounds and electric crematoriums. 15. Cattle pounds; prevention of cruelty to animals. 16. Vital statistics including registration of births and deaths. 17. Public amenities including street lighting, parking lots, bus stops and public conveniences. 83 18. Regulation of slaughter houses and tanneries.

Apart from these powers, municipalities in India can be entrusted with other functions by acts of legislature in order to bring about a qualitative change in the standard of living and to ensure overall sustainable development. 5.3.2 Article 243I: Constitution of Finance Commission to Review Financial Position According to Clause 1 of this Article (2007: 134-135): 1. The Governor of a State shall,
as soon as may be

92% MATCHING BLOCK 197/321 SA Chapter-II.pdf (D22537359)

within one year from the commencement of the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Act, 1992, and thereafter at the expiration of every fifth year, constitute a Finance Commission to review the fi nancial

86% MATCHING BLOCK 198/321 SA Ch. 3.Development of Local Government Institut ... (D106063648)

position of the Panchayats and to make recommendations to the Governor as to— a. the principles which should govern— i. the distribution between the State and the Panchayats of the net proceeds of the taxes, duties,tolls and fees leviable by the State, which may be divided between them under this Part andthe allocation between the Panchayats at all levels of their respective shares of such proceeds; ii. the determination of taxes, duties, tolls and fees which may be assigned to, or appropriatedby, the Panchayats; iii. the grants-in-aid to the Panchayats from the Consolidated Fund of the State; b. the measures needed to improve the financial position of the Panchayats; c. any other matter referred to the Finance Commission by the Governor in the interests of soundfinance of the Panchayats.

Interestingly, the above extract of Article 243I existed in Clause 2 of the Constitution (73 rd Amendment) Act, 1992, which was referred to in the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992. 5.4 Implications of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992 The

83% MATCHING BLOCK 199/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Ministry of Urban Development undertook necessary steps to ensure that the provisions of State Municipal Laws were brought in conformity with the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992: 6). It was fixed that 31 st May, 1994 would be the target date for bringing about conformity between the state laws and the provisions of the 74 th Amendment Act. This was achieved through various measures undertaken by the Ministry of Urban Development including 84 organising seminars, meetings, and through frequent correspondence with the state-level stakeholders. Although

91% MATCHING BLOCK 200/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

100% MATCHING BLOCK 201/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

it has been stated by the Ministry of Urban Development that the states have brought in the necessary amendments in their respective Municipal Laws to ensure conformity with the 74th Amendment Act, for Aizaz (2007), various State Government Reports reveals some of the provisions particularly with regard to

85% MATCHING BLOCK 202/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

constitution of Ward Committees, District Planning Committees etc. have not been implemented in reality.

84% MATCHING BLOCK 203/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Before the 74th Amendment Act, Municipalities were classified under 'Local or Other Authorities' under Art. 12 of the Constitution of India (2007: 6). Through a Constitution Amendment Bill of 2016

100% MATCHING BLOCK 204/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

an Institution of Self-Government status for municipalities had been sought

to widen

66% MATCHING BLOCK 205/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

the ambit of the definition of the 'State' under Art. 12 of the Indian Constitution. Various governmental reports and research studies reveal that only marginal changes, which were mandatory have been carried out, while the real purpose of the Act stands defeated because of the state-sponsored specialized agencies are now performing most of the functions of ULBs. Functions assigned as per Art. 243W

are discretionary in nature

71% MATCHING BLOCK 206/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

and fiscal powers are assigned as per Art. 243X are also discretionary. Even, mandatory clauses of

Articles 243

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 207/321	SA	Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

D and 243ZE are not implemented in its letter and spirit. In this regard, it is imperative for the states to curb the mandates of specialized agencies that are extra-constitutional in nature, thereby providing adequate

97%	MATCHING BLOCK 208/321	SA	Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

freedom to ULBs to act independently in order to function as autonomous bodies at the grassroots level.

The ULBs must be involved more into

100%	MATCHING BLOCK 209/321	SA	Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

the planning, regulation, slum development and water supply and sanitation functions, as it is empowered with the District Planning Committee and Metropolitan Planning Committee. State Finance Commissions has to be constituted in a timely manner and their recommendations be implemented so as to strengthen the fiscal base of the ULBs,

91%	MATCHING BLOCK 210/321	SA	Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

keeping in mind that local fiscal autonomy is inversely related to local dependency. To realise the true potential of the 74th Amendment Act, there is an urgent need now to create an efficient and reliable administration with coordination between elected and state appointed functionaries;

96%	MATCHING BLOCK 211/321	SA	Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

to

77%	MATCHING BLOCK 213/321	SA	Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

intensify and improve the local governance with more involvement of elected representatives; and finally, to enhance accountability and responsiveness with the improved capacity of the local people to participate in the decision-making process, especially vis-à-vis service delivery with enhanced motivation.

85 However, for Sachdeva (2011), the issues requiring in-depth study, discussions, deliberations, and decisions were the need for the constitutional recognition of local bodies and the need for clear statutory delineation of the powers, functions, and resources of urban bodies. It is in this regard that the 74 th Amendment Act has had the greatest impact, providing answers to questions ranging from, what should the criteria for the constitution of different types of local authorities be—population, non-rural character of population, density of population, income or combination of all these—should there be a reclassification of municipal bodies. To questions pertaining towho should conduct the elections to municipal bodies, the Election Commission or the state government, and who should bear the expenses. 5.5 Criticisms of the Procedural Aspects vis-à-vis the Enactment of the Amendment Bill For Sachdeva (2011), the provisions of the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill, 1991, which became the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act (1992) are by and large exceptional, as they fulfil the long-standing need of the urban local bodies to revamp and thus enable them to serve as efficient instruments—exercising the inherent democratic right of the people to govern themselves, and providing civic amenities to them. But the Bill has been criticized for its following procedural weaknesses: 1. Political parties and people were not consulted at least till the establishment of the Inter- state Council in 1990. 2. Boycotting of Chief Ministers' Conference by the Chief Ministers of Non-Congress Governments who felt that the Bill was a potentially dangerous idea aimed at undermining the federal structure of the constitution by breakingit into districts and nagarpalikas owing direct allegiance to the Centre. 3. The timing of the introduction of the Bill and suspects on Sponsors' motives since the Bill was introduced right at the end of the five-year term of the Rajiv Gandhi government. 4. The States were not consulted in passing on their jurisdiction to nagarpalikas, although self-government is a state subject. 5. The involvement of centre–state relations in the Bill make it open to challenge in courts of law, despite the claim of the government that the bill did not involve centre-state relations.

86 6. There was no clear-cut relationship described between the tiers of governments, with the Constitution already heavily tilted in favour of the central government insofar as centre- state relations are concerned. 7. The mandates of MLAs, MPs, and bureaucrats have not been defined in any detail, which creates variations from one state to another. 8. State Election Commission not adequately equipped to conduct elections, which may lead to electoral malpractices and other attendant issues which are against the promotion of grassroots democracy. 9. The bill gives wide powers to the governor, who may in some cases act contrary to the interests of grassroots democracy. 10. The different treatment of Scheduled Areas is also based on the discretionary powers of the governor. 5.6 Conclusion As Sachdeva (2011) has pointed out, the criticism offered by the critics of the bill, when analysed objectively and dispassionately, would confirm that there was no dispute whatsoever about the contents of the bill, which had been applauded and appreciated by one and all, and the criticism centres round the undemocratic manner of eliciting the opinion of the public, political parties, and the states. The crux of the whole issue that the states had been bypassed and their jurisdiction had been invaded by the Centre and the basic structure of the constitution had been changed, could be decided by the Supreme Court. The government planned to get constitutional sanction for ensuring democracy in urban local bodies and to endow them with the responsibilities and finances required to ensure that urban India flourishes and leads the country forward to progress and prosperity.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 212/321 W

Although three decades have relapsed since the enactment of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992),what has been actually observed so far seems to fall short of the expectations raised by the Act. This can be attributed to the bureaucratic and political rigmaroles in India which have hindered the evolution of urban local governments as institutions of self-government. Although the Act has had tremendous implications vis-à-vis the entire edifice of urban local government and centre-state relations in India, the lack of political will and the obstructive attitude of the bureaucracy are the greatest hurdles in the devolution of powers to the local bodies. 5.7 Summary

87 This unit has discussed the following: ? The salient features of the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992, with regard to the three categories of nagarpalikas; the constitution of wards committees; direct elections nagarpalikas and ward committees, and constitution of zonal committee; reservations in nagarpalikas and wards committees for the scheduled castes and the scheduled tribes, and for women; the tenure of nagarpalikas; the finances of nagarpalikas; district and metropolitan planning committees; the audit of the accounts of nagarpalikas; and, barring the jurisdiction of the courts in matters relating to elections. The 18 Schedule XII functions have also been delineated, along with Article 243I dealing with the Constitution of Finance Commission to Review Financial Position of Municipalities. ? The implications of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992 vis-à-vis state Municipal Acts. Such Acts had to be amended to bring about conformity between the state laws on urban local government and the 74 th Amendment Act (1992) before the cut- off date of 31 st May, 1994.Various State Government Reports reveals some of the provisions particularly with regard to constitution of Ward Committees, District Planning Committees etc. have not been implemented in reality.

75% MATCHING BLOCK 214/321 SA Smriti_Thesis_Full_Paper_for_checking.pdf (D47315443)

85% MATCHING BLOCK 215/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

83% MATCHING BLOCK 217/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Various governmental reports and research studies reveal that only marginal changes, which were mandatory have been carried out, while the real purpose of the Act stands defeated because of the state- sponsored specialized agencies are now performing most of the functions of ULBs. ? With regard to the need for the constitutional recognition of local bodies and the need for clear statutory delineation of the powers, functions, and resources of urban bodies, the 74 th Amendment Act has had the greatest impact, providing answers to a range of technical and procedural questions vis-à-vis ULBs. ? The criticisms of the provisions of the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill, 1991, which became the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act (1992) for itsprocedural weaknesses, pertaining to the lack of consultations with political parties and people, in general; the miscommunication of intent by the Congress (I) central government to the non-Congress state governments; the timing of the introduction of the Bill and suspects on Sponsors' motives; the lack of direct consultation with state governments despite self-government being a state subject; the involvement of centre-state relations in the Bill make it open to challenge in courts of law; no clear-cut relationship described between the tiers of 88 governments; the mandates of MLAs, MPs, and bureaucrats; the limitations of State Election Commissions; and finally, the discretionary powers of the governor, especially with regard to the administration of Scheduled Areas. 5.8 Glossary Constitution (Amendment) Act: An amendment is an addition/alteration made to a constitution or any legal document. In case of the Constitution of India, the parliament may amend the provisions of the Constitution following procedures mentioned in Article 368. Mahanagarpalika: Municipal Corporation in India. Nagar Panchayat: Town Council or Notified Area Council in India. Nagarpalika: Municipality with its own local council and officials in India. State List: The State List or List-II is a list of 61 items. Initially there were 66 items in the list in Schedule Seven to the Constitution of India.

51% MATCHING BLOCK 216/321 W

Urban Local Government: an institution of governance in a statutory urban setting, demarcated by a definite area and population, which may deliberate, regulate, and implement decisions on subject

matters entrusted to it

by the Constitution. 5.9 Model Questions Long Answer type 1. What are the salient features of the Constitution (74 th Amendment) Act, 1992? Discuss in Details. 2. What were the strong points of the Nagarpalika Bill which was introduced as the Constitution (65th Amendment) Bill in the Parliament? 3. What are the implications of the Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992, with regard to the state laws pertaining to urban local government in India? 4. In what ways could the procedural aspects of the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill, 1991 be criticized? Do criticisms mean that the 74 th Amendment act has failed in its objectives? Argue cogently. Short Answer Type 1. Discuss the difference between Nagar Panchayats, Municipal Council, and Municipal Corporation in India. 2. Discuss the reservation policies of the Government of India with regard to institutions of Urban Local Government.
89 3. Mention six Schedule XII functions that municipalities are required to carry out in India. 4. Discuss the process of constituting Finance Commission under Art. 243I of the Constitution of India. 5. Discuss two implications of the 74 th Amendment Act (1992). 6. Discuss five criticisms of the procedural aspects of the Constitution (73rd Amendment) Bill, 1991. 5.10References "The Constitution (74th Amendment) Act, 1992," (New Delhi: Government of India, 1993). URL:https://www.education.gov.in/sites/upload_files/mhrd/files/upload_document/74amend.pdf .

100% MATCHING BLOCK 222/321 SA Unit 4.docx (D112923140)

Aizaz, R., "Challenges for Local Government in India" Asia Research Centre, Working Paper 19 (2007).

Sachdeva, P., Local Government in India (New Delhi: Pearson, 2011). The Constitution of India (New Delhi: Ministry of Law and Justice, Government of India, 2007). CC:VII Urban Local Government Block- III Organization and Structure Unit: I Urban Local Government - Organization and Structure Structure 1.1 Learning Objectives 1.2 Introduction 1.3 Organization and Structure 1.4 Conclusion 1.5 Summary 1.6 Glossary 1.7 Model Questions
90 1.8 References 1.1 Learning Objectives The main objective of this unit is to provide basic knowledge to the reader about the basic structure of urban local government and its organization. 1.2 Introduction Urban local government in India refers to the governance of a town or city through representatives elected by the residents of a particular area. The state government determines the territory of local government in urban areas. According to Dr. Annapurna Nanda

63% MATCHING BLOCK 218/321 W

an urban area is one which is officially declared by its statutory establishment as a municipal body or a notified area or a cantonment by a specific Act. So, Urban Local Government is a government consisting of elected representatives in town or city areas. Urban local government is the main provider of essential civic services and amenities in urban areas and ensures grassroots democracy at the local level. Cities and towns contribute substantially to the economic development of the country. These urban centers play an important supporting role in the development of the rural hinterland. People and theirs to keep this economic transformation in line with needs and realities at the grass root level Representatives are fully involved in the planning and implementation of programs at the local level. To keep democracy strong and stable in Parliament and State Assemblies, its roots must reach the towns and villages and the towns where the people live (74 th Amendment Act 1992). 1.3 Organization and Structure The Urban Local Government came into effect in 1993 by the 74th constitutional amendment act. There are three tier systems in urban local government. These are Municipal Council for smaller urban areas,

57% MATCHING BLOCK 219/321 W

Municipal Corporation for larger urban areas, and

96% MATCHING BLOCK 220/321 W

Nagar Panchayat for an area in transition from rural to urban area. Municipal Council

Municipal Council
also known as Municipality, Nagar Palika or Nagar Palika Parishad is an urban local government in smaller urban areas. Necessity for creation of municipality are a density of 1000 people per square mile, the total population of the inhabitants of the urban areas shall not be less than 3000 and the occupation of at least three-fourths of the total adult male population of that urban areas shall be mainly non-agricultural.
91 The 74th Constitutional Amendment Act states that The seats shall be filled by direct elections in the municipal council.

100% MATCHING BLOCK 221/321 W

Besides the seats filled by direct elections, some seats may be filled by nomination of persons having special knowledge and experience in municipal administration. Persons so nominated shall not have the right to vote in the meetings of the municipality. The Legislature of a State may, by law, also provide for the representation in a municipality of members of the House of the People and the members of the Legislative Assembly of the State representing constituencies which comprise wholly or partly the Municipal area and also the Members of the Council of States and the members of the Legislative Council of the State registered as electors within the municipal area. The manner of election of Chairpersons of municipalities has been left to be specified by the State Legislature.

There is a reservation policy adopted in the municipality for adequate representation of SC, ST and Women. These reservations will be applied for direct election only. The tenure of the municipal council is only five years. The municipalities are responsible for the development of urban areas. There are 18 functions they have to perform which are stated in the Twelfth Schedule of the Constitution. Municipal Corporation Municipal Corporation is the top most urban local government. According to American Encyclopedia, 'A Municipal Corporation is a legal institution formed by the sovereign power creating a popular community of prescribed area into a body politic and corporate with a corporate name and continuous succession and for the purpose and with authority of subordinate self-government for improvement and administration of the affairs of the area'. Municipal Corporations are formed in big cities like Kolkata, Mumbai, Delhi etc. It has a statutory status. Before the 74th constitutional Act, Municipal Corporations were non-sovereign bodies but they had statutory status. In India municipal corporations are created by the state government by passing acts such as Bombay Municipal Corporations act(1988), Calcutta Municipal Corporation Act (1951) etc. According to Pardeep Sachdeva, 'A perusal of the various municipal corporation acts of different states in India reveals that no scientific basis, guidelines or criteria have been laid down or followed for determining the eligibility of a city for the grant of corporation status. Consequently decisions for upgrading any municipality to corporation are taken arbitrarily by the state government concerned, often under the pressure and pulls exerted by political and vested interests. It should, therefore, not be surprising to observe that whereas small cities like Chandranagar, Rajpur and Ujjain with populations of 75238, 174518, and 203278 respectively, had corporations, bigger cities like Jaipur and Srinagar, with a population of 617208 and 403414 respectively, were being governed by municipal committees'.
92 Nagar Panchayat A nagar panchayat is a rural-to-urban transition settlement in India and therefore a form of urban political unit comparable to a municipality. An urban center with a population of more than 12,000 and less than 40,000 is classified as a Nagar Panchayat. Nagar Panchayat also known as Panchayat Towns. The structure and functions of Nagar Panchayat are decided by the state government. In India, the Nagar Panchayat or Panchayat Town can be observed in states like Karnataka, Maharashtra, Tamil Nadu, Kerala. Each nagar panchayat is operated by the ward committee, the chairman and ward members. Each member of the nagar panchayat is elected from their respective ward on the basis of adult franchise for five years. The provision of reservation in representation is there. One third seats are reserved for the SC,ST, and Women. Apart from Municipal Council, Municipal Corporations and Nagar Panchayat there are also six urban bodies that exist in India. They are-

96%	MATCHING BLOCK 223/321	SA	Final Urban_Local_Governance_in_India-_Organis ... (D121398204)

Notified Area Committee, Town Area Committee, Cantonment Board, Township, Port Trust, Special Purpose Agency.

Notified area committee State governments constitute notified area committees to take over the administrative responsibilities of a notified area. A notification passed by the Government Gazette identifies a notified area as an essential semi-urban element. A notified area committee enforces certain provisions of the State Municipal Act as specified in the notification issued by the Gazette. The notified area committee is constituted by the nominated members by the state government. Thus it is not a statutory body and not an elected body also. Town area Committee Town Area Committee is a semi urban body and it has performed limited civic functions such as street lighting, drainage, roads, conservancy, etc. The Town Area Committee is established by the state government's act. In terms of Town Area Committee members it depends on the state governments whether they can be fully or partially elected or fully or partially nominated. Cantonment board Cantonment board is a civic administrative body in India which is under control of the Ministry of Defense. As per the Cantonment Act, 2006, the members of the cantonment board are elected and ex-officio and some members are nominated. The term of elected members is only five years. The act stated that The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare any place or places including boundaries where any part of the force is quartered or which, being in the vicinity of any such place or places, is required or required for service. Such 93 force shall be a cantonment for the purposes of this Act and all other laws for the time being in force and may by a similar notification declare any cantonment to cease to be a cantonment. Township Township is another form of urban local government. Townships are established by the public sector enterprise to provide civic amenities to employees of the public sectors. It has no elected members. Basically it is an extension of the bureaucratic structure of the Public Sector Enterprises. The public sector enterprise appoints an administrator to administer the township body. Port Trust Port Trust is established in the port areas. The basic function of the Port Trust is to conduct shipping and trade through a commercial seaport and ensure the civic amenities of the residents. Port Trust consists of both elected and nominated members as well. It is a statutory body. Special Purpose Agency States may create specific agencies to look after specific functions that 'legally' belong to any of the above local city governments. These organizations are task based and not area based like the above seven organizations. They are known as 'special purpose' or 'single purpose' bodies or 'functional local bodies'. They are created as statutory bodies by an Act of the State Legislature or by an Executive Resolution.

66%	MATCHING BLOCK 224/321	W

57%	MATCHING BLOCK 225/321	SA	LSG_Abstract mudit.pdf (D150981245)

They act as autonomous bodies that carry out their assigned functions independently of the urban local government. They are not subordinate to any urban local governing body. 1.4 Conclusion From the above discussion it can be concluded that although the journey of urban local government began long before independence, it was formally established by the 74th Constitutional Amendment Act in 1992. So it was constitutionally recognized long after independence. The development of urban areas is being completed through urban local government. They are playing a crucial role in providing basic amenities to the citizens. Citizens can participate in the local governing process for their development.

94 1.5 Summary The 74th Constitutional Amendment Act, 1992 led to the formal introduction of Urban Local Government in India. There are three tier system urban local governments in India. These are Municipal Corporation, Municipality and Nagar Panchayat. Municipal Corporations are established in the big cities like Kolkata, Mumbai, Chennai, Delhi etc. Municipalities are established in small cities and towns. Nagar panchayat is a rural-to-urban transition settlement in India and therefore a form of urban political unit comparable to a municipality. Apart from these urban bodies there are more urban bodies in India such as Notified Area Committee, Town Area Committee, Cantonment Board, Township, Port Trust, Special Purpose Agency.

96% MATCHING BLOCK 227/321 SA Final Urban_Local_Governance_in_India-_Organis ... (D121398204)

The Notified Area Committee is operated in the semi urban areas. Town area committee is the semi urban body and it has performed limited civic functions. The

81% MATCHING BLOCK 226/321 W

Cantonment Board is a civil administrative body in India under the control of the Ministry of Defence.

