

PREFACE

With its grounding in the “guiding pillars of Access, Equity, Equality, Affordability and Accountability,” the New Education Policy (NEP 2020) envisions flexible curricular structures and creative combinations for studies across disciplines. Accordingly, the UGC has revised the CBCS with a new Curriculum and Credit Framework for Undergraduate Programmes (CCFUP) to further empower the flexible choice based credit system with a multidisciplinary approach and multiple/ lateral entry-exit options. It is held that this entire exercise shall leverage the potential of higher education in three-fold ways – learner’s personal enlightenment; her/his constructive public engagement; productive social contribution. Cumulatively therefore, all academic endeavours taken up under the NEP 2020 framework are aimed at synergising individual attainments towards the enhancement of our national goals.

In this epochal moment of a paradigmatic transformation in the higher education scenario, the role of an Open University is crucial, not just in terms of improving the Gross Enrolment Ratio (GER) but also in upholding the qualitative parameters. It is time to acknowledge that the implementation of the National Higher Education Qualifications Framework (NHEQF), National Credit Framework (NCrF) and its syncing with the National Skills Qualification Framework (NSQF) are best optimised in the arena of Open and Distance Learning that is truly seamless in its horizons. As one of the largest Open Universities in Eastern India that has been accredited with ‘A’ grade by NAAC in 2021, has ranked second among Open Universities in the NIRF in 2024, and attained the much required UGC 12B status, Netaji Subhas Open University is committed to both quantity and quality in its mission to spread higher education. It was therefore imperative upon us to embrace NEP 2020, bring in dynamic revisions to our Undergraduate syllabi, and formulate these Self Learning Materials anew. Our new offering is synchronised with the CCFUP in integrating domain specific knowledge with multidisciplinary fields, honing of skills that are relevant to each domain, enhancement of abilities, and of course deep-diving into Indian Knowledge Systems.

Self Learning Materials (SLM’s) are the mainstay of Student Support Services (SSS) of an Open University. It is with a futuristic thought that we now offer our learners the choice of print or e-slm’s. From our mandate of offering quality higher education in the mother tongue, and from the logistic viewpoint of balancing scholastic needs, we strive to bring out learning materials in Bengali and English. All our faculty members are constantly engaged in this academic exercise that combines subject specific academic research with educational pedagogy. We are privileged in that the expertise of academics across institutions on a national level also comes together to augment our own faculty strength in developing these learning materials. We look forward to proactive feedback from all stakeholders whose participatory zeal in the teaching-learning process based on these study materials will enable us to only get better. On the whole it has been a very challenging task, and I congratulate everyone in the preparation of these SLM’s.

I wish the venture all success.

1.1 Objective

After Reading this Unit the learners will be able to :

- Know the different factors which led to the formation of Constituent Assembly
- Understand the Composition of Constituent Assembly
- Learn about the nature and features of Constituent Assembly
- Realise the working of the Constituent Assembly in making the Constitution of India

1.2 Introduction

The idea of making a Constitution for India did not emerge in a single day. It took several years of thinking and deliberation of national leaders. The process for the preparation of a Constitution started during the freedom struggle against the colonial rule and continued unabated till a new Constitution was drafted after series of debates and discussion. The new Constitution of India was framed by a Constituent Assembly comprising of representatives of people of India. It worked for a period of three years since December 9, 1946 and adopted on November 26, 1949. The Constitution of India started its functioning after two months of its adoption particularly on January 26, 1950, Which is regarded as the day of the commencement of Indian Constitution.

1.3 Constituent Assembly : an Outcome of Indian National Movement

Generally, the framing of a constitution of a Sovereign democratic nation is enacted by a representative body, known as the Constituent Assembly. This Constituent Assembly plays a pivotal role in making the constitution of a nation. The genesis of the Constituent Assembly of India can be traced back to the Indian national movement. The credit for the above achievement must go to the national leaders and their enlightened leadership during that critical period. The concept of a Constituent Assembly comprising of Indian people to frame a constitution was first noticed in opposition to the Government of India Act 1919. Particular reference of Constituent Assembly for India though not in those words on definite name, was found in the statement of Gandhi in 1922 when he said "Swaraj will not be a free gift of the British Parliament. It will be a declaration of India's full self-expression. That it will be expressed through an act of Parliament is true"

1.3.1 Commonwealth of India Bill

At Simla due to initiative of Annie Besant a joint meeting of the members of the two houses of Central Legislative was summoned in 1922. The decision of the said meeting was to call a convention for the framing of a constitution. Another conference was arranged at New Delhi attended by the members of the Central and Provincial Legislatures at New Delhi in February 1923. This conference framed essential elements of a constitution positioning India as equal to the self-governing Dominions of the British Empire. A National convention was summoned on 24th April 1924 in the context of Indian nationalist movement that believed it was time for Indians to be governed by a constitution framed by the Indians. This convention under the chairmanship of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru drafted a bill known as 'Commonwealth of India Bill'. The commonwealth of India Bill was a political proposal presented in the British Parliament in 1925. It was a comprehensive bill that outlined a framework for self-governance in India with British Empire. The convention sat again in 1924 in Bombay and Submitted an amended draft of the Bill to a sub-committee appointed by the All parties Conference, 1925, of which Annie Besant was the chairwoman.

The Bill comprised of 127 Articles and 10 Chapters. It appeared as a full-fledged constitution and comprehensive. It included almost all the phenomena that is expected in a constitutional document. This bill was sent to an influential leader of Labour party of Great Britain along with a memorandum signed by the 42 leaders of various political parties. The bill was widely accepted by the Labour party and presented in the British Parliament by Mr. George Lansbury, after a slight modification in December 1925. But it did not move beyond the first reading stage in the house of Commons due to defeat of Labour party in the elections.

1.3.2 Boycott of Simon Commission

In response to the continuous demand of the national movement, the British government appointed Simon Commission in November 1927 to recommend constitutional changes. There was not a single Indian representative in the Simon Commission. Further, The Secretary of State, Lord Borkenhead, challenged the Indians "Let them produce a Constitution which carries behind it a fair measure of general agreement among the great peoples of India" in 1925 and reiterated the challenge again in 1927, moving a bill for the appointment of the Simon Commission. Indian people boycotted Simon Commission on the ground that it not only "amounted to a deliberate insult to the people of India" but also denied to them "the right to participate in the determination of the constitution of their own country."

1.4 The Nehru Report(1928): First Attempt to Prepare a Constitution by the Indians

At the Bombay Session of the Congress on 17 May, 1927 Motilal Nehru placed a resolution to frame a constitution of India in consultation with the elected members of the Central and Provisional legislatures and leaders of political parties. A committee was appointed under the chairmanship of Motilal Nehru on 19 May 1927 in an all parties conference with an aim to "determine the principles of the Constitution of India". The committee submitted its report on 10 August 1928 which was later considered as the famous Nehru Report. For the first time an effort was made by the Indians to make a full fledged constitution. The Nehru Report emphasised on the universal suffrage for adults and responsible government both at the centre and the provinces. It, however, favoured Dominion Status, which advocated not complete independence for India. It meant that Indians would have freedom to legislate on certain limited matters under the control of the British India government. In 1934 M.N.Roy the pioneer of the communist movement initiated an idea of a constituent assembly for framing the Indian Constitution. Leaders of the Indian National Congress gave their consent to the idea of formation of a Constituent Assembly. Finally, Jawaharlal Nehru in 1938 on behalf of Indian National Congress officially demanded for the formation of Constituent Assembly comprising of Indian people, without the interference of outsiders. In an article entitled "The Only Way" on 19 November 1939 Gandhiji proclaimed that only way to solve the communal and other problems was a Constituent Assembly.

1.5 Formation of the Constituent Assembly

1.5.1 The Cripps Mission

For the first time in principle, the demand for a Constituent Assembly was authoritatively accepted by the British in the August offer of 1940. In 1942, the British government sent its cabinet member - Sir Stafford Cripps with the draft declaration on proposals (regarding formation of Constitution for Indians) to be implemented at the end of the World War II on condition that both the Muslim League and the Indian National Congress had agreed to accept them.

The Indian National Congress (INC) expressed its unhappiness with Cripps Mission. They felt that the proposals did not meet their demand for full independence. Gandhi also revealed his dissatisfaction and called the proposals a "post-dated cheque," indicating that they were not a genuine offer but rather a tactic to appease Indian sentiments while maintaining British control.

The Muslim League, led by Muhammad Ali Jinnah, brushed off the proposals as well. They believed that the Cripps Mission did not adequately address the concerns of Muslims in India. The League argued that the proposals were biased and did not provide a fair representation of Muslim interests.

1.5.2 The Cabinet Mission

The British Government took several initiatives to bridge the fundamental differences between the Indian National Congress and Muslim league . But it failed to do so. In 1945, the newly elected Labour Government in Great Britain sent the Cabinet Mission with a proposal of creating Constituent Assembly for India that would frame India's Constitution. The Cabinet Mission recommended a basic framework for the Constitution and prescribed the procedure to be followed by the constitution-making body. The Cabinet Mission realised that the members of the Constituent Assembly be indirectly elected and that would be "fairest and most practicable plan" in the circumstances. Accordingly, the members of the Constituent Assembly were elected by the provincial Legislative Assembly. Election for the 296 seats assigned to the British Indian Provinces were held by July-August 1946. The Congress won 208 seats including all the General seats except nine and the Muslim League 73 seats, that is, all but five of the seats allotted to Muslims. Out of remaining 15 seats, Independence got 8 seats, small groups like Krishak Praja, Communist Sikh Praja (non-Congress), Scheduled Castes Federation (Dr. BR.Ambedkar), Unionist Scheduled Castes Federation and the Unionist -got one seat each.

With the Partition of India into two dominions namely India and Pakistan on 14-15 August , the Constituent Assembly of India truly became an independent body totally free from any interference. The Muslim League left the Assembly when the Constituent Assembly first met on December 9, 1946 and Constituent Assembly became a platform of domination of Indian National Congress. By 15 August 1947 most of the Princely States nominated their representatives in the Constituent Assembly and the remaining States also sent their representatives in due course.

1.6 Nature and Features of the Constituent Assembly

It is utmost necessary to highlight some important facts about the nature of the constituent assembly. Makers of the constituent assembly initiated to make a body of representatives which will represent the diversity and pluralism of India.

1.6.1 Representation of major Religious Communities

Constituent Assembly was represented by all major religious communities like Hindus Christians, Parsees, Sikhs and Muslims. On the question of gender, the Assembly was no doubt a male-dominated body. only fifteen women members were there. In regard to caste composition it was appeared that the Assembly was dominated by upper castes. But it does not mean that members from lower-caste backgrounds were not represented. B.R.Ambedkar who arguably played a major and critical role in the debate of the Assembly, was a Dalit. S.Nagappa and D. Velayudhan were other Dalits. According K. Santaram "There was hardly any shade of opinion not represented."

1.6.2 Dominance of Congress Party

Within the Constituent Assembly congress appeared as the dominant party. Congress obtained 58 percent of the total seats in the Provincial Legislatures. Within the Constituent Assembly, the INC secured 203 seats out of 212 general seats respectively. Thus the Congress represented 69 percent of the total seats of the Constituent Assembly. This percentage increased to 82 percent after partition. Thus the Constituent Assembly was dominated by the Congress party. It would be worthwhile to mention that there were also representatives of other parties like Akali Dal, Krishak Praja Party, Scheduled Caste Federation, the Unionist and Communists.

1.6.3 Election on the basis of Proportional Representation

The Constituent Assembly was to have 389 members out of which 296 were to be elected from the British Indian Provinces and 93 were to be the nominated members of different 69 Princely States. Members of each Provincial Legislative Assembly community selected their representatives using the proportional representation method and a single transferable vote. Out of the 296 elected members 212 were put in the general category, 4 seats were reserved for Sikhs and the Muslims. The nominees of the Princely States were not elected by the people of the States but were nominated by the respective Princes. This made the Assembly less representative.

1.6.4 Dominance of the Middle Class

Most of the members of the Constituent Assembly belonged to an extremely small Westernized middle class who were educated under the British education system in India. It would be worthwhile to mention that members of the Constituent Assembly were indirectly elected by the restricted adult franchise confined to the elite sections of society - the educated and tax payers. These members inherited a radical and alien social perspective, based largely on the European experience in the 20th century.

1.6.5. Historic Objective Resolutions

Jawaharlal Nehru placed the historic "Objective Resolution" on 13 December 1946 in the Constituent Assembly which outlined the philosophy of the Constitution of India. These Objective Resolutions acted as the guiding principles for building the constitution and ultimately took the shape of the Preamble to the Indian Constitution. These Objective Resolutions included certain fundamental propositions :

- Establishment of an Independent Sovereign Democratic Republic India
- Recognition of the people of India as source of all powers
- Guarantee of social, economic, and political fairness; equality of position and opportunity; equality before the law; and basic freedoms - of expression, belief, faith, worship, vocation, association and action to all people
- Adequate safeguards to the minorities, backward and tribals, depressed and other backward classes
- Preservation of territorial integrity of the Republic, as well as its sovereign rights on land, sea and air, should be preserved in accordance with civilised country justice and law
- Formation of a union comprising former British Indian territory, Indian States, and additional areas outside of British India and the Indian States that choose to join the Union.

These objective resolutions were finally accepted by the Constituent Assembly on 22nd January 1947.

1.6.6 Committees of the Constituent Assembly

The Constituent Assembly, during the Constitution-making process, formed several committees on different aspects of the Constitution to conduct preliminary research and deliberations within smaller groups. These committees were created with a view to ensure the smooth functioning of the Constitution-making process. Each committee was assigned with a distinct purpose, addressed areas such as rules, finances, state negotiations, procedural matters, and more, contributing to the efficient drafting of India's Constitution. Other than the Organizational Committee, the Constituent Assembly also formed several Principal Committees to address key aspects of the Indian Constitution. These Principal Committees are Advisory Committee on fundamental rights, minorities, Tribal areas and excluded areas, Union Powers Committee, Union Constitution Committee, Provincial Constitution Committee and Drafting committee. Other Committees are Rules of procedure committee, Steering Committee, Staff and Finance Committee, Credentials Committee, Order of Business committee etc.

There were also Sectoral Committees like Ad-hoc Committee on citizenship, Committee on Chief Commissioner's provinces and Experts Committee on Financial Provisions of Constitution.

1.7. Framing the Constitution

The first session of the Constituent Assembly was held for the first time on 9th December 1946. But it was boycotted by the Muslim League to assert their demand for Pakistan, as a result, out of 296 members there were 207 members present at the Assembly's first meeting. Dr Sachchidananda Sinha Assembly's eldest member was appointed as the temporary President. On 11 December 1946, Dr. Rajendra Prasad was elected as the permanent President of the Constituent Assembly. H.C. Mukherjee and V.T. Krishnamachari were the two Vice Presidents. B.N. Rao was appointed as the constitutional advisor. On 13 December 1946, Jawaharlal Nehru moved resolution regarding the Objectives of the Constituent Assembly as already discussed.

To deal with the various aspects of the problem of framing the constitution, Constituent Assembly formed different committees. Following nationalist leaders acted head of such committees.

- Advisory Committee on Fundamental Rights, Minorities and Tribal and Excluded Areas had 54 members and chaired by Sardar Ballabh bhai Patel
- Union Power committee led by Jawaharlal Nehru which had nine members
- Committee on Union Constitution had 15 members with Jawaharlal Nehru as its chairman.
- Provincial Constitution Committee composed of 25 members headed by Sardar Ballabh bhai Patel
- Committee on Union Constitution had 15 members with Jawaharlal Nehru as its chairman.
- Steering Committee consisted of 3 members chaired by Dr. K.M. Munshi

After an in depth study of these reports and a discussion, Constituent Assembly formed a Drafting Committee on 29 August 1947 under the chairmanship of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar. The first draft of the Constitution of India was prepared by Sir B.N. Rau Advisor to the Constituent Assembly in October 1947. A 7-member Committee was constituted to examine the Draft. The "Draft Constitution prepared by the Drafting Committee was submitted to the President of the Assembly on 21 February 1948. A good number of comments, criticisms and suggestions were placed before the Drafting Committee in connection with amendment of the draft constitution. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar placed the Draft Constitution for consideration in the Constituent Assembly on 4 November and replied against some common criticism. Describing the draft constitution as formidable Ambedkar commented that, "It is workable, it is flexible and it is strong enough to hold the country together both in peace and in war time." The clause by clause discussion on the draft resolution was completed on October 17, 1949. This was considered as second reading. The third reading began on November 17, 1949 and was finished on November 26, 1949 on which date it was declared as passed. In its final form, the constitution had 395 Articles and 8 schedules. Finally a constitution for free India was prepared and signed by the members of the Constituent Assembly on 24 January 1950 which was the last day of Constituent Assembly. Constitution of India came into operation on 26 January 1950.

1.8 Conclusion

Constituent Assembly faced enormous criticisms from different corners of the society in respect of its functioning. Yet one can not deny that framing of a constitution in a land inhabited by the millions of people having numerous diversity by the Constituent Assembly is the greatest milestone in the modern history of the country. Members of the Constituent though elected indirectly it was a representative body of the people of India. From the technical point of view at the time of its formation it might not be regarded as a sovereign body, but from the very beginning it acted as a sovereign body. On the basis of unanimity, the Assembly adopted decisions by consensus. It had taken initiative to reconcile differences of opinion and to eliminate biases. It also emphasized the country's independence as the Independent National Republic. It provided equal political, economic, and social justice for all people, as well as religious freedom, thought, religion, belief, expression, and vocation. The new constitution of India emerged as a basis for all the people of India to work in cooperation and collaboration in a mighty attempt to build a new free India as stated by Ambedkar. In regard to effectiveness of the newly adopted Constitution of India Dr. B. R. Ambedkar stated that "I feel that the constitution is workable; it is flexible and it is strong enough to hold the country together both in peace-time and in war time. Indeed if may say so, if things go wrong under the new constitution, the reason will not be that we had a bad constitution. What we will have to say is that man was vile."

1.9 Summing Up

- The new Constitution of India was an outcome of continuous battle between the national movement and British rulers.
- Constitution of India was framed by a Constituent Assembly comprising of the representatives of Indian People.
- Leaders of the Constituent Assembly who played a key role in making the constitution were English educated, Western-oriented urban intellectual.
- For the smooth functioning of the constitution making process Constituent Assembly formed several committees on different aspects of the constitution.
- Finally a constitution for free India was prepared. This constitution was adopted on 26th November, 1949 and came into operation on 26th January, 1950. Thus India became a Republic.

- To analyse the nature and significance of the Preamble.
- To deal with the question of amendability of the Preamble.

2.2 Introduction

The Constitution of every country has a philosophy. This philosophy includes those ideals or policies on which is based the Constitution. Jawaharlal Nehru's 'Objectives Resolution' helps us understand the philosophy of the Indian Constitution. Nehru placed these resolutions before the Constituent Assembly on 23rd December, 1946 and they were adopted in an amended form on 22nd January, 1947. These resolutions declared India as an "Independent Sovereign Republic". Indian people were described as the source of all power and authority. In addition, social, economic and political justice, equal status and opportunities, equality before law, freedom of expression, faith, and religion and adequate provisions for the preservation of the interests of the SCs and STs were included in the resolutions. Nehru's 'Objectives Resolution' also incorporated ideals like the integrity of the territory of the Republic, promotion of world peace and the welfare of mankind. The preamble of the Indian constitution has given an important place to the 'Objectives Resolution' of Nehru.

2.3 The Preamble

“We, the people of India, having solemnly resolved to constitute India into a Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, Democratic, Republic and to secure to all its citizens :

Justice, social, economic and political;

Liberty of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship;

Equality of status and of opportunity; and to promote among them all

Fraternity assuring the dignity of the individual and the unity and integrity of the Nation;

IN OUR CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY this twenty-sixth day of November, 1949, do Hereby Adopt, Enact and Give to Ourselves this Constitution.”

2.4 Key concepts of the Preamble and their Elucidation

- Sovereign
- Socialist
- Secular
- Democratic
- Republic
- Justice
- Liberty

- Equality
- Fraternity

- Sovereign

This word implies that India is neither a dependence nor a dominion of any other nation but an independent state. There is no authority above it, and it is free to conduct its own affairs (both internal and external). Being a sovereign state, India can either acquire a foreign territory or cede a part of its territory in favour of a foreign state.

- Socialist

Even before the term was added by the 42nd Amendment in 1976, the Constitution had a socialist content in the form of certain Directive Principles of State Policy.

Notably, the Indian brand of socialism is a 'democratic socialism' and not a 'communistic socialism' (also known as 'state socialism') which involves the nationalization of all means of production and distribution and the abolition of private property. Democratic socialism, on the other hand, holds faith in a 'mixed economy' where both public and private sectors co-exist side by side'. As the Supreme Court says, 'Democratic socialism aims to end poverty, ignorance, disease and inequality of opportunity. Indian socialism is a blend of Marxism and Gandhism, leaning heavily towards Gandhian socialism'.

- Secular

The term 'secular' too was added by the 42nd Constitutional Amendment Act of 1976. However, as the Supreme Court said in 1974, although words 'secular state' is not mentioned in the Constitution, there can be no doubt that Constitution-makers wanted to establish such a state and accordingly Articles 25 to 28 (guaranteeing the fundamental rights to freedom of religion) have been included in the constitution.

The Indian Constitution embodies the positive concept of secularism i.e., all religions in our country (irrespective of their strength) have the same status and support from the state.

- Democratic

A democratic polity, as stipulated in the Preamble, is based on the doctrine of popular sovereignty, that is, possession of supreme power by the people.

The Indian Constitution provides for the representative parliamentary democracy under which the executive is responsible to the legislature for all its policies and actions. Universal adult franchise, periodic elections, rule of law, independence of judiciary, and absence of discrimination on certain grounds are the manifestations of the democratic character of the Indian polity.

The term ‘democratic’ is used in the Preamble in the broader sense embracing not only political democracy but also social and economic democracy.

- Republic

A democratic polity can be classified into two categories—monarchy and republic. In a monarchy, the head of the state (usually King or Queen) enjoys a hereditary position, that is, he comes into office through succession as in Britain. In a republic, on the other hand, the head of the state is always elected directly or indirectly for a fixed period as in the USA.

Therefore, the term ‘republic’ in our Preamble indicates that India has an elected head called the President. He is elected indirectly for a fixed period of five years.

- Justice

The term ‘justice’ in the Preamble embraces three distinct forms—social, economic and political, secured through various provisions of Fundamental Rights and Directive Principles. Social justice denotes the equal treatment of all citizens without any social distinction based on caste, colour, race, religion, sex and so on. It means the absence of privileges being extended to any particular section of the society, and improvement in the conditions of backward sections of society like the SCs, the STs, the OBCs and the Women.

- Liberty

The term ‘liberty’ means the absence of restraints on the activities of individuals, and at the same time, providing opportunities for the development of individual personalities.

The Preamble secures to all citizens of India liberty of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship, through their Fundamental Rights, enforceable in court of law, in case of violation.

Liberty as elaborated in the Preamble is very essential for the successful functioning of the Indian democratic system. However, liberty does not mean ‘license’ to do what one likes, and has to be enjoyed within the limitations mentioned in the Constitution itself. In brief, the liberty conceived by the Preamble or fundamental rights is not absolute but qualified.

- Equality

The term ‘equality’ means the absence of special privileges to any section of the society, and the provision of adequate opportunities for all individuals without any discrimination.

The Preamble secures to all citizens of India equality of status and opportunity. This provision embraces three dimensions of equality—civic, political and economic.

- Fraternity

Fraternity means a sense of brotherhood. The Constitution promotes this feeling of fraternity by the system of single citizenship. Also, the Fundamental Duties (Articles 51-A) say that it shall be the duty of every citizen of India to promote harmony and the spirit of common brotherhood amongst all the people of India transcending religious, linguistic, regional or sectional diversities.

The Preamble declares that fraternity has to assure two things, the dignity of the individual and the unity and integrity of the nation. The word ‘integrity’ has been added to the preamble by the 42nd Constitutional Amendment, 1976.

2.5 Nature of the Preamble

It should be noted that the first Constitution to have a preamble was that of the United States of America in the year 1787. The other countries having a preamble to their Constitutions include Japan, Ireland, Myanmar, India etc.

In India, there is much debate about whether the preamble is the part of the constitution. In Berubari case, the Supreme Court refused to recognize the preamble as part of the Constitution. But in Keshavananda Bharati case, the majority of Judges of the Supreme Court of India, mentioning the debates in the Constituent Assembly, opined that the preamble is very much a part of the Constitution.

In fact, in spite of the preamble being an inviolable part of the Constitution, it cannot be considered to be the source of power as well as it cannot impose restrictions on power. In Berubari case in 1960 and in Indira Gandhi vs. Rajnarayan judgement in 1975, the Supreme Court Judges opined that the preamble is a part of the constitution but it is not a part of the effective part of the constitution. Renowned constitution expert, Dr. Durgadas Basu also agreed with this opinion.

Despite being not an effective part of the constitution, it cannot be denied that the preamble helps us get a clear idea about the objectives of the framers of the constitution. Taking part in a debate of the Constituent Assembly, Alladi Krishnaswamy Iyer commented that the preamble is 'a sort of introduction to the Statute'. In Golaknath case in 1967 and in Keshavananda Bharati case, the Supreme Court expressed the similar view.

From the above, it can be said that the preamble to the Indian constitution has very little legal importance. Firstly, it is not associated with the effective part of the constitution and secondly, it cannot give legal explanation of the effective part of the constitution. All the functions of the Indian state are conducted and controlled as per the basic part of the constitution. Moreover, if any citizen ignores the ideals and principles of the preamble, the Court has no power to force him or her to follow these ideals and principles.

2.6 Significance of the Preamble

Although the Preamble is not a part of the basic constitution, its importance and significance cannot be denied.

- The Preamble helps in the clarification of any ambiguities relating to any word or sentence of the effective part of the constitution. The Preamble plays a very important role in removing the ambiguities of the constitution.
- The Preamble acts as a key to opening the mindset of the constitution-makers. In other words, the Preamble helps us understand the objectives and concerns of the makers of the constitution. In Berubari and Golaknath case, the point, that through the Preamble, the aspirations of the constitution-makers have found expression, has been made very clear. While delivering the judgement, the then Chief Justice of Supreme Court commented that the Preamble was, in short, an expression of the "ideas and aspirations" of the constitution.

- The Preamble is the philosophical foundation of the constitution. The social, economic and political ideals of the makers of the constitution have got reflected through the Preamble. The Preamble has not only reflected the ideals of popular sovereignty, state sovereignty, democracy, socialism, secularism and republicanism, determination to establish economic and political justice, freedom of expression, faith and belief, equality, fraternalism has also found an important place in the Preamble. Moreover, the Preamble has gone to the extent of declaring establishing a welfare state coupled with democratic socialism in the country. Unity and integrity of the country have also been emphasized on by the Preamble. In this way, the Preamble has, in a nutshell, described the aims and objectives and principles of our constitution. Even, we can know the date of adoption of the constitution and the date from which it came into effect. Subba Rao commented that the ideals and principles, on which our constitution is based, have been given a place of pride in the Preamble.
- The Preamble is very important not only nationally but also internationally. The majority ruling in the Golaknath case categorically stated that the Parliament has no power to amend the fundamental features enshrined in the Preamble as the edifice of Indian constitution rests on these features. If any one of these features is weakened, the entire structure of the constitution will break down. Internationally, the Preamble plays a very important role as the principle 'Fraternity' acts as the basis of our national and international affairs. Our foreign policy is bound to fail unless bound by fraternity. Article 51 of our constitution has clearly stated the ideals of our foreign policy and for these policies to be realized, we must adopt the ancient Indian principle of "Basudhaiva Kutumbakam". The 'Fraternity' principle must not be confined within the four walls of our national boundary, it must also be extended to the international sphere.
- The Preamble has immense moral significance. No government can ignore the principles and ideals embedded in the Preamble as that will spell political doom for the party in power. Hence, it is considered to be a moral duty of any government to implement these ideals and principles contained in the Preamble.

Considering the importance of the Preamble, Thakurdas Bhargava said that the Preamble is "the most precious part of the constitution". It is the 'soul' of the constitution, a key to understand the essence of the constitution. Bhargav considered the Preamble as “a jewel set in the constitution” and “superb prose-poem”. Dr. Dhirendranath Sen went to the extent of calling the Preamble as a “solemn resolve”. He criticized the Preamble as nothing more than a law serving the interests of the capitalist class. So, it must be kept in mind that what is important is not the ideals and principles enshrined in the Preamble, but its class-character. Any Preamble should be analysed in terms of the criterion of political power of the class concerned.

2.7 Can the Preamble be amended ?

There is much disagreement as regards whether the Preamble can be amended under Article 368 of the constitution. Even the Supreme Court judgements in various cases at different times are not similar. The reason for this may be due to the fact that the Preamble is not related to the effective part of the constitution and thus, it has no legal value.

Whether the Preamble is amendable under Article 368 came to be discussed by the Supreme Court first in the Keshavananda Bharati vs the State of Kerala case in 1973. The petitioners claimed that the power to amend the constitution under Article 368 was not unlimited and an implied limitation has been imposed by the Preamble on this power of the Parliament as the basic elements or the fundamental features of the constitution have been codified in the Preamble. These features cannot be changed by amendment of the constitution. In addition, as the Preamble is not a part of the constitution, it cannot be amended with the help of Article 368 as this Article can be used only to amend the constitution. The Supreme Court gave this ruling in Berubari case in 1960. But in Keshavananda Bharati case in 1973, the Supreme Court was of the view that as the Preamble is very much a part of the constitution, it can be amended by Article 368.

But it should be kept in mind that the majority of the judges in this case opined that certain conditions must be followed while amending the Preamble. They said that the Preamble could be amended by applying Article 368 but the basic features contained in the Preamble could not be amended under any circumstances as our constitutional edifice was grounded on these basic features. So the judgement of the Keashavananda Bharati case made it clear that although the Preamble is amendable, the basic structures of the constitution are not.

It may be in order to mention that in 1976, constitution was amended and like other parts of the constitution, Preamble was also amended and three words were inserted into the Preamble, namely, 'socialist', 'secularism' and 'integrity'. Nobody objected to these amendments as these were important principles like already-existing ones like 'sovereignty', 'democratic', 'republic', 'social-economic and political justice', 'freedom of expression', 'faith and belief' etc. There was no novelty in inserting these three principles as there were provisions already existing in the constitution relating to these principles as enshrined in the Directive Principles of State Policy and Fundamental rights. They were just explicitly given place in the Preamble.

2.8 Conclusion

The Preamble is the cornerstone of the Indian constitution. Although it is not binding on the Government of the day to always act in accordance with the Preamble, it is at its own political risks that the Government can disregard or ignore the principles and ideals enshrined in the Preamble. The Preamble represents the spirit of the Indian political system as a democratic, sovereign, socialist, secular republic. The Preamble has lost much of its sheen due to the policy of liberalization, privatization and globalization initiated since 1991 by the then Congress led Government at the Centre. The ideals enshrined in the Preamble are at odds with the market-oriented principles of governance being resorted to by the rulers of our country.

2.9 Summing up

- Indian Constitution has a highly admired Preamble.
- Preamble of the Indian Constitution has immense political and moral significance.
- Preamble of the Indian Constitution can be amended keeping the basic features of the constitution in mind.
- Preamble of the Indian Constitution acts as a guide for the rulers of the day.
- Ideals enshrined in the preamble have lost much of their sheen due to market oriented policies followed by the Governments at the national level since the 1990s of the last century.

3.1 Objective

- To dwell on the features of the Constitution in some detail.
- To make an assessment of these features.

3.2 Introduction

The features of a constitution help us understand the nature or character of the same. The Constitution of India is a unique constitution framed by a Constituent Assembly. The Constituent Assembly took almost three years to frame the constitution after a lot of debates and discussions. It is the largest written democratic constitution of the world and it contains a number of important features which help us understand not only the character of our constitution but also the nature of the Indian political system. Since its inauguration on 26th January 1950, the Constitution of India has more or less successfully influenced the direction and progress of India.

3.3 Salient Features of the Indian Constitution

1) Written constitution – Like the constitutions of various other countries of the world, the constitution of India is also a written one. There were 395 articles and 8 schedules in the original Indian constitution. Subsequently, as a result of amendment of the constitution, the number of Articles and Schedules got increased. In the present constitution, there are more than 450 Articles and 12 Schedules. The amendments at various times have made the constitution a sizable one which has, in turn, made it a complex constitution too.

2) Unwritten conventions – Though the Indian constitution is written and there is no place for the convention in it, yet these have made their way into it. The conventions and traditions grow automatically and make their entry into the constitutional system. Though these are not recognized by the Courts, yet, these are there and not violated. The constitution of UK has influenced our constitution in this regard.

The important conventions of the Indian Constitution are :

- The PM in Lok Sabha and the CMs in the State Legislatures are the leaders of their respective parties.
- Generally, the Speaker of the Lok Sabha belongs to the majority party and Deputy Speaker is chosen from the opposition.
- The President dissolves the Lok Sabha on the recommendation of Prime Minister, etc.

3) Constitution starts with a Preamble – The constitution of India starts with a Preamble. Although the Preamble is not a part of the Constitution, yet through the 42nd Amendment, the Parliament has increased its importance manifold.

The Preamble has its own importance, that is why it is variously known as the “mirror of the Constitution”, “soul of the Constitution” or the “key to the constitution”. It includes the objectives and ideals of the Constitution such as Sovereignty, Democracy, Republicanism, Socialism, Secularism Liberty, Equality, and Justice, Fraternity etc. From the Preamble we can know the source of the constitution, date of its adoption etc.

4) Constitution was drawn from various sources – The constitution of India has been drawn from various sources as our objective was not to enact an original constitution rather enact a good and workable constitution. The following basic principles were taken from other constitutions such as :

1. Parliamentary form of Government and the Rule of Law from the British Constitution.
2. Fundamental Rights from the Constitution of the USA.
3. Directive Principles of State Policy from the Constitution of Ireland.
4. Federal system of India from the Constitution of Canada.
5. Emergency powers of President from the Constitution of Germany.

5) Rigid as well as a Flexible constitution – The unique feature of the Indian constitution is that it is a mixture of rigidity and flexibility. It is neither as rigid as the constitution of the USA nor as flexible as the constitution of Great Britain.

Article 368

Some parts of the Constitution can be amended by the Union Parliament by passing a resolution with 2/3rd majority of the members present and voting like the Fundamental Rights, Directive Principles of State Policy etc. Then, in amending some parts like the election of the President, distribution of powers between the Center and the States etc, support of two/thirds majority is required for passage by the Parliament and then the approval of half of the Legislature of the States is a must. These two methods are proof of the rigidity of the Indian constitution. Besides, there are certain other parts of the constitution which can be amended by the Parliament with a simple majority like the changing of the boundary of a state or changing of the name of a state and the abolition or the creation of the Legislative Council etc. So, the constitution of India is a mixture of rigidity and flexibility.

6) Universal Adult Franchise – India is a democratic state, therefore, the constitution of India, under article 326, provides for universal adult franchise and every citizen, male or female, who is 18 years of age is given the right to vote without making any discrimination on the basis of sex, caste, color, religion, etc.

7) Single Integrated Judicial system – The constitution of India provides for the single integrated judicial system. Unlike other federal countries of the world, in India, there are no separate courts for the states and the union government.

The entire judicial system of India is organized into a hierarchical order :

Supreme Court is at the top of the judicial administration. Below that there are High Courts at the state level and District courts at the district level. All the courts of India are bound to accept the decision of the Supreme Court.

8) Rule of Law – The Constitution of India provides for rule of law for which our constitution is indebted to the Constitution of Britain. The rule of law means that nobody is above law and everybody is equal before the law.

9) Single Citizenship – In some federal States, people enjoy double citizenship. First, they get the citizenship of the State in which they live and then they enjoy the citizenship of the country. This principle of double citizenship has been adopted in federal States like the USA, Canada, etc.

But in India there is single citizenship. A person may be living in any State but he is a citizen only of India.

10) Hindi to be the official language of the Union Government – The Constitution of India has given recognition to 22 regional languages and to promote unity and mutual cooperation among the people speaking different regional languages, Article 343 states, ‘The official language of the Union shall be Hindi in Devnagri Script.’

11) Independent Judiciary – The Constitution of India makes provisions for the independence of the Judiciary because only an independent Judiciary can safeguard the rights and liberties of the people, and can protect the supremacy of the Constitution. To make the Judiciary independent, the following provisions have been made :

1. An impartial method has been adopted for the appointment of the Judges.
2. Provisions have been made for long tenure of the Judges. Judges of the Supreme Court work till the age of 65 and the Judges of the High Courts can be in service till the age of 62.
3. No Judge can be removed except on grounds of proved ‘misbehavior’ and ‘incapacity’
4. No question can be asked in the Parliament relating to the reasonability of the rulings of the Judges.

5. No Judge can act as a lawyer in any court after retirement.
6. The salary and allowances of the Judges cannot be reduced generally during their office.

But the sad fact is that many Judges in our country don't hesitate to become pro-government of the day in order to have plum posting after retirement. Corruption has also made its presence felt in the Judiciary.

12) Secular State – The Constitution of India has declared India to be a secular State and the word 'secular' was inserted into the Preamble of the Constitution through the 42nd amendment of the Constitution made in the year 1976. But this does not mean that India was not secular before 1976. India was secular even before 1976 because the Right to Religious Freedom was in existence in the Constitution since the very beginning.

Every citizen is free to profess, practice and propagate the religion of his or her choice.

But it has also been directed by the Constitution that no religious instruction shall be provided in any educational institution wholly maintained by State funds. Also, no tax can be imposed by the State in the name of religion. No discrimination will be allowed to be made while making an appointment in higher offices, rather appointments are to be made on the basis of required qualifications.

13) Special provisions for the protection of the interests of the Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes and Backward Classes and Minorities – The Constitution of India has made special provisions for the protection of the interests of Scheduled castes, Scheduled Tribes, Backward Classes, and the Minorities. According to the Constitution, everybody is given the right to equality. Untouchability has been prohibited and practice of it in any form is declared a crime and punishable under the law. Provisions are also there for the reservation of seats for Scheduled Castes in Lok Sabha, State Legislative Assemblies and Local Self-Governments.

Special provisions have been made for the protection of the interests of minorities under Articles 29 and 30 of the Constitution.

14) Fundamental Rights – Rights are essential for the development of an individual and to achieve this purpose, Fundamental Rights have been included in Chapter 3 of the Constitution under Articles 12 to 35.

Following are the fundamental rights of the Indian citizens :

1. Right to Equality
2. Right to Freedom
3. Right against Exploitation
4. Right to Religious Freedom
5. Cultural and Educational Rights
6. Right to Constitutional Remedies

15) Directive Principles of State Policy – Articles 36 to 51 of the constitution deal with the Directive Principles of State Policy and the constitution makers were inspired by the Constitution of Ireland in this regard. These principles are considered to be the guiding principles for the Government to make India a welfare state. Directive Principles concerning social ideals, legal and executive reforms and international relations are also of great importance.

But we must remember that these principles are not enforceable by the Courts but these principles are nevertheless fundamental in the governance of the country and it shall be the duty of the state to apply these principles in making laws. So, these principles have moral importance to the Government and it is morally bound to fulfill these principles. In case of failure to implement these principles, the Government may have to pay a heavy political price too.

16) Balancing between the supremacy of the Judiciary and the sovereignty of the Parliament – One of the important features of the Indian Constitution is to make a balance between the supremacy of the Judiciary and the Parliamentary sovereignty. In the USA, the Supreme Court is guided by the ‘due process of law’ principle and hence it can declare any law passed by the Congress as null and void if such law is found to be unconstitutional or is against natural justice. But in India, the Supreme Court can consider any law passed by the Indian Parliament on the basis of the principle of ‘procedure established by law’, that is, it can declare any law as null and void only in case such law is not passed in accordance with the rightful procedure. It cannot nullify any law on the ground of its being anti-natural justice. On the other hand, the Indian Parliament can override any ruling of the Supreme Court by amending the Constitution. It may be mentioned that in 1986, the government headed by Rajiv Gandhi passed a law for overriding the ruling of the Supreme Court in the Shahbanu case. Earlier, by amending the Constitution (24th and 25th amendment acts), the then government made the ruling of the Supreme Court in Golaknath case ineffective. In Keshavananda Bharati case, the Supreme Court ruled that the Parliament has no power to amend the 'basic structure' of the constitution. But the then Government headed by Indira Gandhi passed the 42nd Constitution Amendment Act and brought the matter of constitution amendment outside the purview of the consideration of the Supreme Court. In 1980 Minerva Mills Case, the Supreme Court nullified those parts of the 42nd Amendment Act. Thus, a tug of war continues between the Supreme Court and the Parliament around the issue of supremacy. This is also a fact that the Supreme Court, many a time, asserted itself and acted independently leading to the emergence of 'Judicial Activism' which has become a debatable point in Indian politics.

16) Federal in form but Unitary in nature – Indian constitution is regarded as a mixture of both Federalism and Unitarianism. Features of federalism exist in India like the distribution of powers between the Center and the States by the constitution, existence of a written and rigid constitution and the presence of a Federal Court, that is, the Supreme Court. So far as centralizing tendencies are concerned, the Central Government can issue directions to the States, the President can impose President's rule in any State, the prevalence of the Central legislation over the State legislation in case of a conflict between the two. Centralization may also occur through the power of the Central Government to utilize the 'Grants-in-Aid' as per its preferences. K.C.Wheare has described the Indian constitution as 'quasi-federal'.

17) Fundamental Duties of the citizens- Although the original constitution had no provision for fundamental duties, 42nd Constitution Amendment Act passed in 1976 has added 10 fundamental duties for the citizens of India by inserting IV-A in the fourth part of the constitution. Later, one more fundamental duty has been added and presently, there are 11 fundamental duties in our constitution.

18) Provisions for emergency powers of the President – To meet emergency situations, the President of India has been given three types of emergency powers and they are there in the 18th part of the constitution. President has emergency powers relating to 1. National Emergency (Article 352) 2. President's rule in the states in case the administration of a State cannot be carried on in accordance with the constitution (Article 356) (Constitutional Failure). 3. Financial Emergency (Article 360). It should be remembered that the President cannot declare any type of emergency without the approval of the Council-of-Ministers headed by the Prime Minister.

19) Pacifism – In the Indian constitution, emphasis has been put on the establishment of world peace and fraternalism in the international sphere. Article 51 has clearly stated this position of the Indian Government. This craving for peace is most evident in the foreign policy of the Indian State. Author like A.R.Desai does not agree with this formulation. According to him, being a capitalist country, India is more inclined towards the capitalist world but the reason for India seeking world peace is that India is economically and militarily weak.

20) Special status for Jammu and Kashmir – Through Article 370, J&K was given special status under which Jammu and Kashmir would enjoy certain privileges like having a constitution of its own and autonomy in some other spheres. This made the State a bone of contention to many. The present dispensation at the centre, after coming to power for the second time in 2019, has done away with this special privilege enjoyed by the state of Jammu and Kashmir.

3.4 Conclusion

The features of the Indian constitution are innovative in all respects. Through these features, the ideal of individualism had been combined with the ideal of social welfare and efforts were evident in making India a welfare state. But post-economic reforms in the nineties of the last century, the concept of welfare state has taken a back seat and neo-liberal philosophy has been adopted as the guiding principle of governance. As a result, the aims and objectives of the Indian State have got changed from being a welfare State to a minimal State in keeping with the dictates of the International Financial Organizations.

3.5 Summing up

- Indian Constitution is the largest written Constitution of the World and as such, contains so many important features.

- Understanding these features is very crucial for knowing not only the character of our constitution but also the nature of the Indian political system.
- The features of the Indian Constitution are innovative in many respects.
- These features have combined the ideal of Individualism with the ideal of Collective Welfare.
- Due to adoption of principles like Liberalization, Privatization and Globalization, many features of the Indian Constitution have lost their earlier importance.

4.1 Objective

- To discuss the important features and amendability of the Fundamental Rights.
- To study the Fundamental Rights as enshrined in various Articles.
- To dwell on the Writs issued by the Courts (Supreme Court and High Courts) to protect the Fundamental Rights of the citizens.
- To highlight the circumstances under which Fundamental Rights can be suspended.

4.2 Introduction

In any democratic set-up, fundamental rights are a must for the citizens. It is due to the fundamental rights that the individuals are able to develop their personalities to the full. Like many constitutions of other countries of the world, Indian constitution has provided the Indian citizens with some fundamental rights. The Constituent Assembly set up many committees for constitution making and one committee headed by Sardar Patel was entrusted with the stupendous task of dealing with the fundamental rights of the citizens. After much discussions and deliberations, the committee came to identify the essential rights for the citizens of India making them enforceable in courts. Fundamental rights have been highly praised and their importance highlighted. They have been called, “conscience of the constitution” and the very “soul of the constitution”.

4.3 Important features of the Fundamental Rights

- Fundamental rights are different from ordinary legal rights in the manner in which they are enforced. If a legal right is violated, the aggrieved person cannot directly approach the SC bypassing the lower courts. He or she should first approach the lower courts.
- All the fundamental rights are available to the citizens, while persons other than citizens residing in India are entitled to enjoy some fundamental rights.
- Fundamental rights are not absolute rights. They have reasonable restrictions which means they are subject to the conditions of state security, public morality and decency and friendly relations with foreign countries.
- They are justiciable, implying they are enforceable by courts under Articles 32 and 226. People can approach the Supreme Court directly in case of violation of fundamental rights. High courts can also be approached through Article 226.
- Fundamental rights can be amended by the Parliament by a constitutional amendment but only if the amendment does not alter the basic structure of the Constitution.

- Fundamental rights can be suspended during a national emergency. But, the rights guaranteed under Articles 20 and 21 cannot be suspended.
- The application of fundamental rights can be restricted in an area which has been placed under martial law or military rule.
- Fundamental rights can be classified into two types-Positive and Negative. Some fundamental rights like Article 14, 15(1), 16(2), 18(1), 20, 21, 22(1), and 28(1) impose restrictions on the state from doing something. On the other hand, Articles 19(1), 25, 29(1), and 30 (1) are positive fundamental rights in the sense that they direct the state to perform certain functions. Former Chief Justice of India, Justice P.B.Gajendragadkar went to the extent of saying that, “a legally enforceable right governing the relations between the state and citizens has both a negative and positive aspect. It must, as the words indicate, be fundamental. It does not mean a right of liberty permissible under law: it also means a Right to Liberty in a positive sense which enables an individual to develop his personality and his faculties and to live his life in his own interest and in the interests of the community as a whole.”
- Fundamental rights are not only binding on the state and its agencies but also on the individuals and organizations. If untouchability or any other discrimination is practiced by any person then he or she is subjected to punishment under the law
- Certain fundamental rights are there which are available against private individuals like Article 15 (2), Article 17, Article 18 (3)-(4), Article 23 and Article 24.
- Another important feature of the fundamental rights is that the Right to Property, which was a fundamental right, has been taken away from the chapter of the fundamental rights by the 44th constitution amendment act, 1978 and it has been made a legal right under Article 300A which says, “No person shall be deprived of his property save by authority of law.”

4.4 Amendability of the Fundamental Rights

The fundamental Rights are a bulwork against the State interference as well as individual infringement of fundamental rights. Still, the question of amenability of the fundamental rights takes us to the point whether the fundamental rights can be amended under Article 368. Till the time Golaknath case was not there, it was the general view that no part of the constitution is immune from amendment and the Parliament can amend any part of the constitution taking advantage of Article 368. But in Golaknath case of 1967 it was upheld by the Supreme Court that fundamental rights as enshrined in Part-III of the constitution cannot be amended by any authority as the fundamental rights have been given a transcendental position by the constitution. To override this judgement, Parliament passed the 24th Amendment Act in 1971 and made the fundamental rights amendable in accordance with the procedure of Article 368. In the case of Keshavananda Bharati v. State of Kerala, the opinion of the Supreme Court may be expressed in a nutshell: 1) Golak Nath's case is overruled; 2) Article 368 does not enable Parliament to alter the basic structure of the Constitution; 3) The 24th Constitution Amendment Act, 1971 is valid.

4.5 Fundamental Rights

Right to Equality (Articles 14 to 18)

Article 14 states, "The state shall not deny any person equality before law or equal protection of the laws within the territory of India." This is both a negative and positive fundamental right. The positive side relates to the equal protection of all persons under equal circumstances and the negative side relates to the expression equality before law which implies the absence of privilege or favour towards any individual irrespective of his status or rank. Equality before law means that among equals, the law should be equal and the like should be treated alike.

The Supreme Court of India, while interpreting the ambit of Article 14, upheld that

- Equal protection means equal protection under equal conditions
- The state can make reasonable classification for purposes of making laws
- Presumption of reasonableness is for legislation
- The burden of proof is on those who will prefer to challenge the laws

However, there are some exceptions in Article 14 which are as follows :

- The President or the Governor of a state shall be exempted from being answerable to any court for the exercise and performance of the powers and functions of their office or any act done or to be done in the exercise of their powers and functions

- No criminal proceedings can be initiated against the President or the Governor of a state in any court during his/her term of office.
- No civil proceedings can be initiated against the President or a Governor of a state when he or she is in office relating to any act done or to be done in exercise of his or her powers and functions.

Article 15

Article 15 states that 1. the state shall not discriminate against any citizen on grounds only of religion, caste, sex, place of birth, or any of them and 2. Any citizen would not be subject to any disability, liability, restriction, or condition with regard to

- Access to shops, public restaurants, hotels, places of public entertainment or the use of Wells, Tanks, Bathing Ghats, Roads and Places of public Resorts maintained wholly or partially by the state fund or dedicated to the use by the people.

However, there are four exceptions. These are :

- Nothing in this Article shall prevent the state from making any special provisions for the women and the children.
- Nothing in this Article shall prevent the State from making any special provision for the advancement of the socially and educationally backward classes of people or for the people belonging to Scheduled Castes or Scheduled Tribes.
- This clause was added by 93rd Amendment Act, 2005. It empowers the State to make special provisions for the above mentioned classes regarding their admission to private educational institutions.
- This clause was added by 103rd Amendment Act, 2019. It states that nothing in Art. 15 shall prevent the State from making any special provision for the advancement of any economically weaker sections of citizens, other than the classes mentioned in clauses (4) and (5).

Article 16

Article 16 stipulates that

There shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the State.

No citizen shall, on grounds of religion, race, caste, sex, descent, place of birth or any of them, be ineligible for any office under the State.

There are certain exceptions in Article 16 regarding public employment :

- Parliament may lay down the condition of residence within the State for employment [(Article 16 (3))]
- The State may reserve any post or appointment in favour of any backward classes of citizens who, in the view of the State, are not adequately represented in the services under the State (Article 16 (4))
- Offices related to a religious or denominational institution may be reserved for members professing the particular denomination to which the institution relates [(Article 16 (5))]
- The claims of the people belonging to Scheduled Castes or Tribes shall be taken into consideration in matters of appointment to services and posts under the Union and the States in keeping with the maintenance of efficiency in the administration (Article 335)
- Art 16(6) was added by 103rd Amendment Act, 2019. It states, “Nothing in this article shall prevent the State from making any provision for the reservation of appointments or posts in favour of any economically weaker sections of citizens other than the classes mentioned in clause (4).”

Article 17

Article 17 states that, “Untouchability is abolished and its practice in any form is forbidden. The enforcement of any disability arising out of untouchability shall be an offence punishable in accordance with law.”

This particular Article has to be read along with Article 35 which confers on the Parliament the power to make laws for prescribing punishments for offences as mentioned in Part-III of the constitution. Acting on this provision, the Parliament passed the Untouchability (Offences) Act 1955 which was later amended in 1977 and renamed as the Protection of Civil Rights Act, 1955.

The Act recommended certain acts of untouchability as offences :

- Refusing admission any person to public institutions, such as Hospitals, Dispensary, Educational Institutions;
- Preventing any person to from worshipping or offering prayers in any place or public worship;
- Subjecting any person to any disability with regard to access to any shop, public restaurant, hotel, or public entertainment or with regard to the use of any reservoir, tap or other sources of water, road, cremation ground or any other place where services are rendered to the public.

The scope of the Act was further widened in 1976 following an amendment.

The various aspects of the amendment are :

- Insulting anybody belonging to Scheduled Caste or Scheduled Tribe community on the ground of untouchability
- Preaching untouchability, directly or indirectly
- Justifying untouchability on historical, philosophical or religious grounds or on grounds of religious tradition.

Article 18

Article 18 of the Indian constitution abolishes the use any sort of titles which were conferred by the British rulers when India was under their subjugation. The Article enshrines :

- No title, not being a military or academic distinction, shall be conferred by the State 18 (1)
- No citizen of India shall accept any title from any foreign State 18(2)
- No person who is not a citizen of India shall accept without the consent of the President any title from any foreign State 18 (3)
- No person holding any office of profit or trust under the State shall, without the consent of the President, accept any present, emolument, or office of any kind from or under any foreign State. 18 (4)

The constitution of India seeks to prevent such abuse of titles by prohibiting the State from conferring any title at all as such abuse creates artificial distinctions in society.

The State is allowed to confer military or academic distinctions and it can also confer awards or distinctions for excellence in social, cultural, public service or extra-ordinary services leading to achievement in art, literature and science, like Bharat Ratna, Padma Vibhushan, Padma Bhushan and Padma Shri, which cannot be used as titles.

4.6 Right to Freedom (Articles 19-22)

Right to Freedom in the Indian constitution consists of four Articles, Article 19, 20, 21 and 22. Article 19 has given us several rights. They are :

- Right to freedom of speech and expression
- Right to assemble peacefully and without arms
- Right to form associations or unions
- Right to move freely throughout the territory of India
- Right to reside and settle in any part of the territory of India
- Right to practice any profession, or to carry on any occupation, trade or business

4.7 Restrictions on the Right to Freedom

No freedom can be unrestricted. Therefore, to strike a balance between individual freedom and public order, reasonable restrictions have been imposed under Article 19 in the sub-clauses (2) to (6). The grounds of restrictions can be Public Order or Morality, Sovereignty and Integrity of India, the Security of the State, and Friendly relations with foreign Nations etc. For example, the rights of a non- ST citizen can be restricted in an area exclusively inhabited by the Scheduled Tribes.

The freedoms guaranteed by Article 19 are sought to be protected further by Articles 20, 21 and 22.

Protection in respect of conviction of offences.

Article 20 protects us from conviction in respect of certain offences. The Article states :

- No person shall be convicted of any offence except for violation of existing laws.
- No person shall be prosecuted and punished for the same offence more than once.
- No person accused of any offence shall be compelled to be a witness against himself.

Protection of Life and Personal Liberty

Article 21 provides for protection and personal liberty. It says, “No person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law.”

Subsequent judicial pronouncements and interpretations have broadened the scope of Article 21 to include within it a number of rights like livelihood, clean environment, good health, speedy trial and humanitarian treatment for those who are behind the bar.

Right to Education.

The right to education at the elementary level has been made one of the fundamental rights under Article 21 A by the 86th Constitution Amendment Act, 2002. The newly added Article 21 reads thus, “The State shall provide free and compulsory education of children of the age of six to fourteen years in such manner as the State may, by law, determine.”

Protection against Arbitrary Arrest and Detention.

Article 22 provides specific rights to arrested and detained persons:

- The arrested person must be informed about the ground of arrest.
- The arrested person must be allowed to consult a lawyer of his or her own choice.
- The arrested person must be produced before nearest Magistrate within 24 hours of arrest and the freedom not to be detained beyond that period without an order of the Magistrate.

The above safeguards are not allowed to be enjoyed by (a) an enemy alien
(b) A person arrested or detained under a law permitting preventive detention.

Article 22 provides for what the State can do in case a person is detained under laws relating to preventive detention:

- The State can detain such person without trial for only three months and
- Any detention for a longer period must be authenticated by the Advisory Board.
- The person who has been detained will have the right to be informed about the grounds of detention and be allowed to make a representation against detention at the earliest opportunity.

Preventive Detention Act was first enacted by the Indian Parliament in the year 1950. Subsequently, this was replaced by Acts like MISA in 1971, COFEPOSA in 1974, NSA in 1980, and ESMA in 1980 and the latest being UAPA. All these laws empower the State to put people under detention.

The Preventive Detention Act was challenged in the Gopalan v the State of Madras case, 1950 when the Court went to the extent of observing that Preventive Detention could not be challenged on the pretext of violation of fundamental rights as guaranteed under Article 19. This ruling was overturned in the subsequent Maneka Gandhi's case in 1978.

4.8 Right Against Exploitation (Articles 23 and 24)

Articles 23 and Article 24 of the constitution ensure the right of the citizens, particularly of the weaker sections of society, against exploitation by upholding

- Traffic in human beings and begar and similar forms of forced labour are prohibited and any contravention of this provision shall be an offence punishable in accordance with law
- Nothing in this article shall prevent the State from imposing compulsory service for public purposes, and in imposing such service, the State shall not make any discrimination on grounds only of religion, race, caste or class of any of them.

These provisions bear similarity with the 13th Amendment of the American constitution through which slavery or involuntary servitude was done away with. Indian constitution, in order to make the purview of Article 23 wider, has inserted the term 'traffic in human beings' instead of slavery so that it not only prohibits slavery, but also any kind of traffic in women or children or the crippled for immoral or other purposes.

Article 24 states that, “No child below the age of fourteen years, shall be employed to work in any factory or mine or engaged in any other hazardous employment.” This Article can be said to be related to the Directive Principles of State Policy which imposes the duty on the State to ensure universal compulsory and free primary education for children of the age upto 14.

4.9 Right to Freedom of Religion (Articles 25-28)

The Preamble of the constitution of India has ideals of secularism inscribed in it. It has described India as a secular State. India has no ‘State Religion. ‘Articles 25-28 ensures the religious neutrality and impartiality of the Indian State and also guarantees the minority rights.

Article 25 contains the freedom of conscience and free profession, practice and propagation of religion. It states that:

- “Subject to Public order, Morality, Health and to other provisions of this part, all persons are equally entitled to freedom of conscience and the right freely to profess, practice and propagate religion.
- Nothing in this Article shall affect the operation of any existing law or prevent the State from making any law
 - a) regulating or restricting any economic, financial, political or other secular activity which may be associated with religious practice;
 - b) providing for social welfare and reform or throwing open of Hindu religious institutions of a public character to all classes and sections of Hindus.”

However, it must be kept in mind that although this Article has given the right to propagate and spread the tenets of one’s religion, it has prohibited forceful conversion of people belonging to one religion to another religion. The wearing and carrying of kripans by the Sikhs are to be thought of as a part of the profession of the Sikh religion and the sub-clause (b) of (2) refers to Hindus which must include a reference to persons professing religions like Sikhism, Jainism or Budhism and the Hindu religious institutions must be construed as such.

Article 26 bestows upon the various religious denominations the right to manage their own religious affairs. As per this Article, religious communities shall have the right, subject to public order, morality and health, 1. to establish and maintain institutions for religious and charitable purposes; 2. to manage its own affairs in matters of religion; 3. to own and acquire movable and immovable property; and 4. to administer such property in accordance with law.

Article 27 is related to the right with regard to payment of taxes for promotion of any particular religion. According to this article, “No person shall be compelled to pay any taxes, the proceeds of which are specifically appropriated in payment of expenses for the promotion or maintenance of any particular religion or religious denominations.”

Article 28 is with reference to the freedom as to attendance at religious worship in certain educational institutions. It enshrines;

“(1) No religious instructions shall be provided in any educational institution wholly maintained out of State funds.

(2) Nothing in Clause (I) shall apply to educational institution which is administered by the State but has been established under any endowment or trust which requires that religious instruction shall be imparted in such situations.

(3) No person attending any educational institution recognized by the State or receiving aid out of State funds shall be required to take part in any religious instruction that may be imparted in such institution or to attend any religious worship that may be conducted in such institution or in any premises attached thereto unless such person or if such person is a minor, his guardian has given his consent thereto.”

4.10 Cultural and Educational Rights (Articles 29-30)

Indian constitution guarantees cultural and educational rights to the citizens which are very crucial for the preservation of one's language, script or culture. Article 29 aims at protecting the interests of the minorities. It goes thus;

“(1) Any section of citizens residing in the territory of India or any part thereof having a distinct language, script or culture of its own shall have the right to conserve the same.

(2) No citizen shall be denied admission into any educational institution maintained by the State or receiving aid out of State funds on grounds of any religion, race, caste, language or any one of them.”

Article 30 empowers the minorities to establish and administer their own educational institutions and says;

(1) “All minorities whether based on religion, language shall have the right to establish and administer educational institutions of their choice.

(1A) In making any law providing for the compulsory acquisition of any property of an educational institution established and administered by a minority, referred to in clause (1), the State shall ensure that the amount fixed by or determined under such law for the acquisition of such property is such as would not restrict or abrogate the right guaranteed under that clause.

(2) The State shall not, in granting aid to educational institutions, discriminate against any educational institution on the ground that it is managed by a minority, whether based on religion or language.”

4.11 Right to Constitutional Remedies (Article 32)

A declaration of fundamental rights is of no meaning unless there is an effective machinery for implementation of the rights. For this reason, the framers of our constitution argued for special provisions guaranteeing the right to constitution remedies. Article 32 provides for such right.

Article 32 has four sections. The first section is general and says that “the right to move the Supreme Court by appropriate proceedings for the enforcement of the rights conferred by this Part is guaranteed.”

The second section deals, in more specific terms, with the power of the Supreme Court to issue writs including writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamas, prohibition, quo warranto and certiorari for the enforcement of any rights. The third section empowers Parliament to confer the power of issuing writs or orders on any other courts without prejudice to the power of issuing writs on any courts. The last section deals with the conditions under which this right can be suspended.

Therefore, the Supreme Court has been given the authority to play the role as the guarantor and protector of the fundamental rights. The power to issue writs for the enforcement of the fundamental rights has been conferred on the Supreme Court (Article 32) and High Courts (Article 226). Supreme Court can issue writs under Article 32 only for enforcement of fundamental rights whereas the High Courts, acting under Article 226, can issue writs for enforcing fundamental rights as well as for redress of any injury or illegality arising out of violation of ordinary legal rights. It should be noted that the right guaranteed under Article 32 cannot be suspended except during Proclamation of Emergency in the manner laid down by the Constitution (Article 359).

4.12 Writs

Habeas Corpus

It is a Latin term meaning “to have the body”. In India, the court secures the body of a person detained or imprisoned to be brought before it and secure the release of the person from confinement if it is found that there is no ground of detention and hence unlawful. This writ can be issued both by the Supreme Court or High Courts. By issuing this writ, the Court directs the person who has kept another person in detention, to bring the body of the detained person before the court.

Mandamas

Mandamas means, “We order”. It is an order issued by the Supreme Court and High Courts directing a person to perform some public or quasi-public duty which he or she has refused to do and there is no legal remedy left for its enforcement. The High Court may refuse to issue Mandamas if there is alternative remedy available for redress of injury. A writ of Mandamas can be issued not only against officers or persons engaged in public duty, but also the government itself.

Apart from protecting fundamental rights, the High Courts can issue a writ of Mandamas for purposes of enforcement of the performance of a statutory duty of a public officer conferred upon him by a statute or the constitution itself, to compel a Court or Judicial Tribunal to exercise its jurisdiction which it has failed to do and to direct a public official or the Government not to enforce any law which may be unconstitutional.

Prohibition

It is a writ issued by the Supreme Court to refrain the lower courts from usurping jurisdiction or overstepping their jurisdiction in any proceedings before it. Prohibition is a writ which warrants inaction when Mandamas wants public officials to act. It is applicable only against a body empowered to exercise public functions of a judicial or quasi-judicial character.

Certiorari

It is a prerogative writ by which order can be issued for removal of a suit from an inferior court to higher court. By a writ of certiorari, a decision of a lower court or tribunal can be quashed when there is an error of law or the subject is beyond the jurisdiction of the body or it assumes jurisdiction on the basis of a wrong decision or the inferior court or tribunal has violated the principle of natural justice. High Courts can issue this writ and quash the decision of a lower/inferior court while the Supreme Court can issue this writ if some fundamental rights have been infringed upon in such cases.

Quo Warranto

By issuing this writ, the Supreme Court or the High Courts may prevent a person from occupying a public office which he or she is not entitled to hold and may remove the person from enjoying the office and declare the office to be vacant. But a writ of Quo Warranto can only be issued when there is a usurpation of an office of public nature and an office which is substantive in nature, and there has been a breach of constitutional norms or a statute or statutory instrument in appointing that person to that particular office. This writ is a discriminatory remedy and may be refused by the Court on the basis of factual and legal evidences.

4.13 Suspension of Fundamental Rights

Despite being the ‘conscience of the constitution’, fundamental rights are not unrestricted and one can enjoy these rights subject to restrictions like, the Sovereignty and Integrity of the country, the Security of the State, Public order, Decency or Morality. The fundamental rights remain suspended during National Emergency proclaimed by the President of India (Article 352). Even in normal times, these fundamental rights can be restricted when someone has been booked under Preventive Detention Act like MISA, NSA, ESMA, COFEPOSA, POTA, TADA, UAPA etc. The misuse of these restrictions by authorities can make the enjoyment of fundamental rights by the citizens a complete mockery.

4.14 Conclusion

Fundamental rights are essential for the development of individual personality. These rights are expected to create a congenial atmosphere so that individuals would be able to develop their personalities to the fullest extent. Indian constitution has given six fundamental rights to the citizens of India. It was not an easy task for the Constituent Assembly to draw up a list of fundamental rights. It had to make difficult compromises in order to arrive at a consensus on fundamental rights. In independent India, fundamental rights have come to face many hurdles created both by the Legislature and the Executive. Critics argue that fundamental rights are not fundamental rights in reality, but they are just an apology for them. More important rights like the right to work, education have been left out. Many are of the opinion that draconial laws like preventive detention have taken much of the spirit and substance of the 3rd chapter of the constitution. Another category of people argue that the fundamental rights have been hedged in with so many exceptions, explanations and qualifications that it becomes very difficult for ordinary citizens to understand what exactly is available to them in the form of fundamental rights. The only consolation has been the role played by the Supreme Court and the High Courts. Whenever fundamental rights of the citizens have been infringed, the Courts have come forward to protect these rights. Overall, the chapter of fundamental rights has worked as a bulwark of individual liberty, a code of public conduct and a strong and sustaining basis of Indian democracy.

4.15 Summing up

- Fundamental Rights are those rights which help individuals to be at their best selves, that is, with the help of these rights, the individuals can develop their personalities to the fullest extent.
- Fundamental Rights are not absolute. Reasonable restrictions can be imposed on them and they can be suspended during national emergency and even in normal times when someone is booked under the Preventive Detention Act.
- Fundamental Rights are amendable as has been proved by the fact that by the 44th Constitution Amendment Act, 1978, the Fundamental Right to property has been abolished and it has been made a legal right under Article 300(A) of the Indian Constitution.
- The Supreme Court and the High Courts have been given the power to protect these fundamental rights in case of violation and they have the power to issue various writs like Habeas Corpus, Mandamus etc. for the purpose of protecting the fundamental rights of the Indian Citizens.

5.1 Objective

- To show the distinctions between the Directive Principles and the Fundamental Rights.
- To study the important features of the Directive Principles.
- To describe the Directive Principles of State Policy as enshrined under Articles 35 to 51.
- To analyse the significance of the Directive Principles.

5.2 Introduction

Directive Principles of state policy exist in the Part-IV of the Indian constitution. Ivor Jennings opined that the constitution-makers were influenced by the principles of Fabian socialism in incorporating these principles in the constitution. According to Durgadas Basu, the constitution of Ireland has its imprint on the directive principles of state policy as enshrined in the Indian constitution. In order for democracy to be successful, civil and political rights are not enough, economic and social rights are also necessary. Economic and social rights have found their place in the form of Directive Principles of State Policy in the constitution. The framers of the constitution, through these principles, wanted to make India a welfare state. Many are of the opinion that the directive principles of state policy are major steps forward towards realizing Nehru's "socialistic pattern of society." Unlike the fundamental rights, directive principles are not justiciable, that is, they cannot be enforced by the courts. The importance of these principles lie in their being the guiding principles of governance.

5.3 Distinctions between the Directive Principles and the Fundamental Rights

There are some differences between the Directive Principles and Fundamental rights which are as follows :

- a) Directive principles are positive in the sense that they direct the state what it should do while the fundamental rights are negative as they impose limitations on the state as regards what it cannot do.
- b) Directive principles cannot be operational without laws, but fundamental rights can come into force without laws.
- c) Directive principles are not justiciable, that is, no citizen can go to the courts for enforcement of the Directive Principles but fundamental rights are enforceable by the courts. If one's fundamental rights are violated then one can seek redressal in the court.
- d) Government cannot enact any law on the basis of Directive Principles, but the government can enact laws on the basis of fundamental rights. For example, Parliament has enacted some laws on untouchability basing on Article 17 which has prohibited behaviour and campaigning relating to untouchability.
- e) Article 13 of the constitution has stipulated that any law enacted by parliament or any executive order which is against fundamental rights will be declared null and void by the court. In 1950, the Supreme Court nullified a part of the preventive detention act passed by the parliament in 1950. But the courts cannot declare any law null and void if it is against any directive principle.

- f) If any conflict arises between a fundamental right and a directive principle, the fundamental right will prevail. At present, directive principles under Articles 39 (B and C) will prevail over Article 14 and Article 19 which deal with the right to equality and right to freedom.
- g) According to many, the objective of the fundamental rights is to build up a democratic society but the objective of the directive principles is to create a welfare state. In other words, fundamental rights are political in nature but the directive principles are social and economic in nature.
- h) Fundamental rights are not unlimited. The state can impose limitations on them in public interests. So a kind of balance between individual interests and collective interests has been forged through the fundamental rights. But no limitation can be imposed on the directive principles.
- i) Fundamental rights have limited the powers of the state. On the other hand, directive principles have expanded the state's power both nationally and internationally.
- j) According to some, fundamental rights are not as dynamic as the Directive Principles of State Policy.
- k) The importance of the directive principles lies in the fact that they are expected to play an important role in socio-economic revolution. On the other hand, fundamental rights are more geared to ensure political equality.

5.4 Features of the Directive Principles of State Policy

- Directive Principles of State Policies are not enforceable in a court of law.
- They were made non-justifiable considering that the State may not have enough resources to implement all of them or it may even come up with some better and progressive laws.
- It consists of all the ideals which the State should follow and keep in mind while formulating policies and enacting laws for the country.

- The Directive Principles of State Policies are like a collection of instructions and directions, which were issued under the Government of India Act, 1935, to the Governors of the colonies of India.
- It constitutes a very comprehensive economic, social and political guidelines or principles and tips for a modern democratic State that aimed towards inculcating the ideals of justice, liberty, equality and fraternity as given in the Preamble. The Preamble consists of all the objectives that needs to be achieved through the Constitution.
- Adding Directive Principles of State Policies was all about creating a “welfare state” which works for the individuals of the country which was absent during the colonial era.

5.5 Art 36-51

Article 36. Definition.—In this Part, unless the context otherwise requires, “the State” has the same meaning as in Part III.

Article 37. Application of the principles contained in this Part.—The provisions contained in this Part shall not be enforceable by any court, but the principles therein laid down are nevertheless fundamental in the governance of the country and it shall be the duty of the State to apply these principles in making laws.

Article 38. State to secure a social order for the promotion of welfare of the people :

- (1) The State shall strive to promote the welfare of the people by securing and protecting as effectively as it may a social order in which justice, social, economic and political, shall inform all the institutions of the national life.
- (2) The State shall, in particular, strive to minimize the inequalities in income, and endeavor to eliminate inequalities in status, facilities and opportunities, not only amongst individuals but also amongst groups of people residing in different areas or engaged in different vocations.

Article 39. Certain principles of policy to be followed by the State.—The State shall, in particular, direct its policy towards securing—

- that the citizens, men and women equally, have the right to an adequate means of livelihood;

- that the ownership and control of the material resources of the community are so distributed as best to subserve the common good;
- that the operation of the economic system does not result in the concentration of wealth and means of production to the common detriment;
- that there is equal pay for equal work for both men and women;

- (d) Encourage settlement of international disputes by arbitration.

5.6 Significance of the Directive Principles of State Policy

In the Indian constitution, the Directive Principles of State Policy have been given a lot of importance so far as socio-economic implications are concerned. But compared to fundamental rights, the Principles enjoy secondary position in legal terms. In spite of legal inferiority, the principles have political and moral significance. If any government fails to implement these principles then the government may have to face an unsatisfied electorate at the time of election. The principles have also constitutional significance as Article 37 stipulates that it is the duty of the state to keep these principles in mind at the time of enacting laws. The central government can issue directives to the states to implement 1) Article 39(d) relating to equal pay for equal work irrespective of gender 2) Article 40 regarding introduction of the Panchayat system and 3) Article 47 prohibiting intoxicating drinks and drugs. The Directive principles are considered to be complimentary to social revolution through constitutional means as they have not only socialist principles in them, they have also helped us to find ways of implementing these principles. G.Austine described these principles as “clearer statement of the social revolution”. Moral importance of these principles cannot also be denied as they act as a reminder to the government as regards its economic, social and international duties. The Directive Principles are said to have no legal importance. But this is not wholly true because the Supreme Court, many a time, has considered the validity of laws on the basis of these principles. Prof. K.C.Wheare has pointed out the educative value of these principles. These principles make the people aware of their rights and duties. In fine, it can be said that these principles have given birth to new wants and aspirations among the people. Prof. Pylee has described these principles as symbol of minimum hopes and aspirations of the Indian people. Directive Principles can make India a welfare state, if implemented seriously.

It should be kept in mind that both the Fundamental rights and the Directive Principles are complementary to each other. What is necessary is that both the two should made to balance each other. As Austin says, “By establishing these positive obligations of the State, the members of the Constituent Assembly made it the responsibility of future Indian governments to find a middle way between individual liberty and the public good, between preserving the property and privilege of the few and bestowing benefits on many in order to liberate the powers of all men equally for contributions to the common good.”Hence, it can be said that the Directive Principles are no less important than the Fundamental Rights in making India a truly democratic country.

5.7 Conclusion

Despite high ideals being expressed through the Directive Principles of State Policy, exploitation of the people, particularly the poor, discrimination based on caste, gender are very much in existence in India. Ignorance, caused by illiteracy on the part of a large section of people in society, has led to their religious enchainment and superstitious behavior. Liberalization, privatization and globalization policies followed by Governments since the 90s of the last century have weakened the objective of making India a ‘socialistic pattern of society’ as dreamt of by Nehru through the implementation of these Directive Principles of State Policies. What needs to be noted in particular is the non-enforceability of these principles where more important socio-economic rights of the people reside. The unwillingness to implement the important Directive Principles by Governments coming to power at various times for political reasons has also been a bane for establishing a society based on equality.

5.8 Summing up

- Economic and social rights have found their place in the form of Directive Principles of State Policy.
- Directive Principles are different from the Fundamental Rights in many respects.
- While the objective of the Fundamental Rights is to build a democratic society, the objective of the Directive Principles of State Policy is to create a welfare state.
- Directive principles of state policy are not justiciable, that is, the courts can do nothing in case any principle is not implemented by the Government.
- Directive principles of state policy consist of principles—which can be categorised as social, economic and international. Maintenance of international peace and security has been given an important place in the Directive Principles.

6.2 Introduction

The Supreme legislature of the Union of India is called the Parliament . India has adopted a parliamentary system of government. Like in England, its union legislature is called a 'Sansad' which means a Parliament. In accordance to the Constitution of India, a bicameral legislature exists at the Union in India. Bicameralism implies that there are two houses or chambers in the Parliament namely Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha. As the Constitution established a federal system of government, there was almost unanimity among the framers for achieving a balance between the direct representation of the people and the representation of units as such, by setting up two houses, one representing the people as a whole and the other the federated units. In fact the Parliament of India consists of the President and the two houses. The lower house is called the House of the People while the upper house is called The Council of States. This is in accordance with Article 79. The lower house is popularly known as the Lok Sabha while the upper house is well known as the Rajya Sabha. The names of the houses fairly reflect the character of their composition. The House of the People is composed of directly elected representatives on the basis of adult franchise and territorial constituencies. The Council of States is composed mainly of representatives of the states elected by the State Assemblies. The President is an integral part of the Parliamentary Government. Although the President is not a member of the Legislature, his/her participation in the legislative process is ensured by making him/her a part of the Parliament. The fact that he/she is the chief executive authority and that the executive power is co extensive with the legislative power also makes it necessary that he/she should become an integral part of the Legislature.

Now before discussing the composition and functions of both the houses it is essential for us to know what prompted India to adopt a Parliamentary model over the Presidential one? The often repeated argument of the previous experience of the Indians in running the governmental system based on Parliamentary model, no wonder, is one of the reason but it is not the only factor behind its adoption. The adoption of the Parliamentary system of governance by the Constituent Assembly was more in keeping with the advantages expected to accrue from the institution of the Parliament in future than the familiarity of Indians with the functioning of representative bodies in the country in the past.

First, as Austin pointed out, the framers sought to achieve the objective of unity in the country through the mechanism of popular government by uniting Indians into one mass electorate having universal adult suffrage and by providing for the direct representation of the voters in genuinely popular assemblies, the culmination of which are to be found in the Parliament.

Second, the parliamentary system appeared to be the thing that could have accommodated all sorts of imperatives bothering the Constitution makers on the eve of Independence, quite evidently, along with the democratic system of governance, the federal nature of polity with the supremacy of the Constitution responsible for the successful functioning of other institution, independent judiciary-all these would not have been possible without the adoption of the parliamentary model. As against it, going in for a Presidential model for the sake of a strong executive to ensure the unity and integrity, if the nation may also have the dangers of the President turning into a despot as happened in many other newly independent countries including her neighbours.

Finally, the institution of Parliament was probably the only operational guarantee which the framers could think of, to ensure the harmonious coexistence of the centre as well as the states under the overall rubric of the Union of India. Infact, the well thought out mechanism of ensuring the sanctity of federal nature of the polity and formulating the broad guidelines regulating the relations between the centre and the states was obtained in the form of the Parliament.

6.3 Loksabha : Composition

The Parliament of India is composed of two houses namely the upper house or the Council of States and the lower house or the House of the People. The House of the People is commonly known as the Lok Sabha. It is the lower or the popular chamber of the Indian Parliament. The members of the Lok Sabha are elected directly by the people. Unlike many other constitutions, the maximum numbers of member to be elected to the Lok Sabha is fixed by the Constitution. Originally, this number was fixed at 500. But the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution following the reorganization of the states in 1956 raised it to 520. The Forty Second Amendment of the Constitution further raised it to 545(Art 81). However at present it consists of 550 elected members. Of these a maximum of 20 seats are reserved for members from the Union Territories. The remaining 530 members are to be chosen by direct election from territorial constituencies in the States. For this purpose, each State is allotted a certain number of seats on the basis of its population in proportion to the total population of all the States.

6.4 Electoral Method of Lok sabha

For the purpose of election, each State is divided into territorial constituencies which are more or less of the same size in regard to population. Though the Constitution has abolished the system of Communal electorates, it provides for the reservation of seats for the scheduled castes and scheduled tribes. For the purpose of election from the territorial constituencies, a number of seats are allotted to each State and Union Territory in such a manner that the ratio between the number of the representatives and the size of population is as far as practicable, the same for all the units of the Indian Union. Each state is therefore, divided into territorial constituencies in such a manner that the ratio between the population of each constituency and the number of seats allotted to it, is as far as practicable and is the same throughout the State. Under the Delimitation Commission Act of 1962, the Election Commission is authorized to determine forthwith the number of seats in the Lok Sabha on the basis of the latest census figures with due regard to the constitutional provisions on the subject. Accordingly, on the basis of the 1951 Census, India had a population of 360 million. But in 1981, it was about 700 million and by 1991 it has gone over 840 million. By the year 2001, the population of India has exceeded 1000 million. Yet, there has been no change in the total number of elected members to the Lok Sabha. Infact, by an amendment of the Constitution in 2001, the present strength of the Lok Sabha will remain the same until the year 2026.

Here, it may be pointed out that the election of the House of the People being direct requires that the territory of India should be divided into suitable territorial constituencies, for the purpose of holding such elections. Article 81 has provided for uniformity of representation in two respects - (a) as between the different States and (b) as between the different constituencies in the same State. Thus, there shall be allotted to each State a number of seats in the House of the People in such manner that the ratio between that number and the population of the State is, so far as practicable, the same for all States; and each State shall be divided into territorial constituencies in such manner that the ratio between the population of each constituency and the number of seats allotted to it is, so far as practicable, the same throughout the State.

As regards the House of the People and the Legislative Assembly of the State the system of proportional representation has been abandoned and instead, the Constitution has adopted the single member constituency with reservation of seats for some backward communities namely scheduled castes and tribes. The reasons held by the Constituent Assembly for not adopting proportional representation were the following:-

- i) Proportional Representation presupposes literacy on a large scale. It presupposes that every voter should be a literate, at least to the extent of being in a position to know the numerals and mark them on the ballot paper.
- ii) Proportional representation is ill suited to the Parliamentary system of government laid down by the Constitution. One of the disadvantages of the system of proportional representation is the fragmentation of the Legislature into a number of small groups. This means that every time anything happened which displeased certain groups in Parliament, would on those occasions withdraw support to the government with the result that the Government, losing the support of certain groups, would fall to pieces.

6.5 Essential qualifications to become a Member of Lok Sabha

To be qualified for election to the Lok Sabha, the following conditions are required to be fulfilled :-

1. Must be a citizen of India.
2. He must be above 25 years of age.
3. Must possess all other qualifications that are prescribed by law of the Parliament.
4. No person can be a member of both the houses of the Parliament, or of a house of the Parliament and of some State Legislature at the same time.
5. Must not hold any office of profit under the Government of India or of some State except that of a Minister or any other exempted by a law of the Parliament.
6. Must not be a man of unsound mind or a bankrupt declared by the court. In case there is any complaint about the disqualifications of a member of the Parliament, it must be addressed to the President who will take suitable action after having the report of the Election Commission.

Criterion for disqualification

The Constitution has laid down certain disqualifications for membership. These are the following :-

1. No person can be a member of both the houses of Parliament or a member both of Parliament and of a State Legislature.
2. A person will be disqualified, if he/she absents himself/herself for a period of sixty days from the meetings of the house without the permission of the house.
3. If he/she holds an office of profit under any Government in India.
4. If he/she voluntarily acquires the citizenship of another country or is under any acknowledgement of allegiance to a foreign State.

In pursuance of the powers granted under Article 372 to regulate matters of election, the Representation of the People's Act of 1951 also lays down certain conditions for disqualifications which are also applicable to the members of a State Legislature. These are:

1. A member must not have been found guilty by a Court or an election Tribunal of certain election offences or corrupt practices in the elections.
2. He must not have been convicted by a Court of any offence and sentenced to imprisonment for a period of more than two years.
3. He must not have failed to lodge an account of his/her election expenses within the time and in the manner prescribed by law.
4. He must not have been dismissed for corruption or disloyalty from Government services.
5. He must not be a director or a managing agent nor hold an office of profit under any corporation in which the Government has any financial interest.
6. He must not have any interests in Government contracts, execution of governmental work or service.

It is required that the candidate seeking election to the Lok Sabha must not incur any of these disqualifications at time of filing his/her nomination papers.

6.6 Term of the Lok Sabha

The normal term of the Lok Sabha is five years. It begins from the date of its first meeting. The President is empowered to dissolve Lok Sabha at any time and this matter cannot be challenged in a court of law. When the second Lok Sabha was dissolved by the President on 11th March 1962, a few days earlier than the full term of five years, a writ petition was filed by Dr. N.C.Samantsinha in the circuit bench of the Punjab High Court in New Delhi under Article 226 praying that a rule will be issued declaring the premature dissolution void and ineffective. It was dismissed by the court on April 4 1962. Further, the President is also empowered to extend the life of the house for one year at a time during a National Emergency. But in any case, the life of the house cannot be extended beyond six months after the emergency has ceased to operate. Infact it is necessary that elections must take place at the most within a period of six months after the revocation of emergency.

6.7 Sessions of Lok Sabha

The house shall meet atleast twice a year and the interval between two consecutive sessions shall be less than six months. The time and the place of meeting will be decided by the President who will summon the house to meet. He/she has also the power to prorogue the house. For a session to be legally valid it is essential for the Lok Sabha to assure the presence of minimum number of members which is known as the quorum. Without a quorum, Lok Sabha cannot legally decide over a matter nor can it comply any of its essential functions. The quorum of Lok Sabha is 1/10th of the total strength of the house. Its presiding officer is the Speaker who is assisted by the Deputy Speaker during the period of his/her absence. The debates and discussions within a Lok Sabha is usually done either in English or in Hindi but in case a member is not comfortable in either of the two languages then the member may do so in his/her mother tongue.

6.8 Powers and Functions

India has adopted the model of a parliamentary democracy. In such a system usually the authority of the lower house is established. This is so, since, the House is composed of members who are directly elected by the people. In India too, the importance of Lok Sabha is established in carrying out the administration of the country. The powers and functions of the Lok Sabha are wide and varied. For our convenience, they can be discussed in the following manner :-

1. Legislative : The principal business of the Lok Sabha is to deal with the matters relating to legislation. A non-money bill can originate in either house of the Parliament and it cannot be taken as passed by the Parliament unless it is so agreed to by both the houses of the Parliament. In the event of a difference of opinion between the two houses, the President is required to call a Joint Session for resolving the deadlock. The Lok Sabha can make a law relating to subjects included in the Union List and the Concurrent List but in case of subjects under State list, certain conditions on part of the Lok Sabha is required to be fulfilled. They are :
 - i. To make a law under State list it is required for the Rajya Sabha to pass a special resolution.

- ii. The Lok Sabha can do so, if, National Emergency under Article 352 is declared for the entire country
- iii. If there is a request by two or more states
- iv. If there is the implementation of some international treaty or convention.

However, it may also be noted that the Lok Sabha has exclusive control over the residuary subjects.

2. Executive : The Lok Sabha exercises control over the Executive. According to the Indian Constitution the Union Council of Ministers headed by the Prime Minister shall be collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha. The Council of Ministers will have to resign, if, a vote of no confidence is passed in the Parliament. In case the Lok Sabha rejects a Government bill or a budget, or disapproves official policy, or shows its lack of confidence in the Government by making alterations in the policies and programmes of the Government against its wishes, it shall amount to the expression of a vote of no confidence. Infact the executive power of the Lok Sabha extends to the control of the executive through various devices like calling attention motion, questions and supplementary questions, tabling motions on matters of urgent public importance for discussion, half an hour discussion, No Confidence Motion and other means.
3. Financial : As far as the financial power of the Lok Sabha is concerned a Money bill can originate only in the Lok Sabha. It is sent to the Rajya Sabha where it is required to pass within a period of 14 days. In case the Rajya Sabha returns the money bill with some recommendations of its own, it shall depend upon the will of the Lok Sabha to accept them or not. However, a money bill can in no case be referred back to the Rajya Sabha for a second time. Moreover, it is one of the powers of the Speaker to decide whether a bill is a money bill or not. It is therefore, clear that the Lok Sabha alone is powerful in the sphere of financial legislation. Again, the annual budget is placed before both the houses but it is adopted by the Lok Sabha alone. Again, Rajya Sabha has no power to vote on the demand for grants of the Ministries / Departments, as this is the exclusive domain of the Lok Sabha. The Lok Sabha has further control over the Contingency Fund of India. It bears the sole responsibility to study the reports of the Estimate Committee and Public Accounts Committee.

4. Judicial : The Lok Sabha shares equal powers with that of the Rajya Sabha in taking punitive action against the outsider as well as its own members who commit a breach of its privileges. Lok Sabha jointly with Rajya Sabha can establish a High Court in the Union Territories and can even enhance its power in such areas. Lok Sabha shares equal powers relating to the removal of the Chief Justice and the Judges of the Supreme and High Court.
5. Powers related to Amendment : Lok Sabha plays a crucial role with regard to the amendment of the bills. It shares equal authority with that of the Rajya Sabha in this respect. If a constitutional amendment bill is passed in the Lok Sabha but is rejected in the Rajya Sabha then the bill becomes non-functional. Not only that, on issues related to Supreme Court High Court, distribution of powers between Union and the States, Constitutional Amendment, election of the President requires the ratification of half of the states as well. However, on all other issues Parliament can alone amend the Constitution of India.
6. Miscellaneous Powers : Lok Sabha performs a number of miscellaneous functions. It shares with the Rajya Sabha equal authority in matters relating to the election and removal of the President. It elects its Speaker and Deputy Speaker. It shares with the Rajya Sabha authority in matters relating to the approval of the Emergency declared by the President. Both the houses of the Parliament can act in emergency times for setting up Martial Law Courts for dealing with the offences committed by the civilians. Besides, the Lok Sabha shares with the Rajya Sabha, the powers of discussing reports submitted by autonomous officials, agencies like the Union Public Service Commission, Comptroller and Auditor General of India, Finance Commission, Language Commission, Minorities Commission, Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes Commission and the like. Lok Sabha also plays a severe role in providing important information related to the administration. The members query about governmental policies and activities on which the ministers concern had to reply. The answers of the ministers are expected to be based on informations collected from the official sources. These information helped the people to have an idea of the governmental activities. Lok Sabha also criticizes the governmental policies, if, it goes against the interest of the public. So, in this sense it tries to aware the people and alerts them on governmental activities. It in a way, helps to form the public opinion and it is public opinion which helps the democracy to flourish even further.

7. Other Powers :

- i. According to Article 2 of the Indian Constitution, Parliament by its discretion can create a new state or can include any part within the territory of India. According to Article 3 Parliament can enact a law relating to reorganizations of the states and of creating a new state. Parliament can expand the territory of a particular state or can even limit its territorial boundary and can even change the name of the state.
- ii. Parliament by virtue of Article 16 can determine additional residential qualification regarding jobs under state governments or that of the Union Territories.
- iii. Parliament can make final decision regarding creation or elimination of the upper chambers of the state legislatures. If the majority members present and the $\frac{2}{3}^{\text{rd}}$ members of State Legislature agreed to pass a bill then, the Parliament based on such decision can take a decision in its favour. Here, it must also be noted that the Lok Sabha shares equal authority with that of the Raya Sabha in this respect.

6.9 Speaker of the Lok Sabha

Each house of Parliament has its own presiding officer and secretarial staff. There shall be Speaker to preside over the House of the People. The office of the Speaker is of great honour, dignity and authority. In the Order of Precedence, he/she is ranked seventh and is bracketed with the Chief Justice of India. The Speaker represents the house and because the house represents the Nation, in a particular way, the Speaker becomes the symbol of the Nations liberty and freedom.

The Speaker is chosen by house from amongst its members. He/she holds his/her office until he/she ceases to be a member or resigns from his/her office or he/she is removed from the office by a resolution of the house passed by a majority of all the then members of the house. Infact, under Article 93 of our Constitution, both the Speaker and Deputy Speakers are elected. Usually a member belonging to the ruling party is elected as a Speaker. However, in most cases the ruling party generally nominates its candidate after informal consultations with the leaders of other parties in the house. There are also instances when members not belonging to a ruling party or coalition were elected to the office of the Speaker. Somnath Chatterjee has been associated with the Communist Party of India (Marxist) for most of his/her life but he/she was the Speaker of the Lok Sabha from 2004 to 2009 when UPA I was in power and the Left Parties had extended support from outside. The first meeting after election in which Speaker is elected by the members of Lok Sabha, is held under the senior most member of Parliament who is commonly known as the Proterm Speaker. The Proterm Speaker presides over the sitting in which the Speaker is elected, if it is a newly constituted house.

Tenure

The normal term of a Speaker is that of five years. There is however, no restriction on his/her seeking another term or terms. He/she continues in office notwithstanding the fact, that the house has been dissolved, and he/she vacates it immediately before the first meeting of the new house after General Election. The Speaker or a Deputy Speaker will normally hold office during the life of the house, but his/her office may terminate earlier in any of the following ways :

- i) By his/her ceasing to be a member of the house
- ii) By resignation in writing, addressed to the Deputy Speaker and vice versa.
- iii) By removal from office by a resolution, passed by a majority of all the then members of the house (Art 94).

Here it must also be noted, that at least 14 days notice should be given to the Speaker in case a motion of no confidence is brought to remove him/her from office. It is also provided that the Speaker shall not preside over the house in case such a motion is under consideration. But in such a case, he/she will have every right to present himself/herself in the house for speaking anything in his/her defence. He/she may also entitle to take part in the proceedings of, the house, and shall have a right of vote except in the case of equality of votes (Art 96).

6.10 Powers and Functions of the Speaker

The Speaker occupies an office that carries both great dignity and high authority. The functions and powers of the Indian Speaker emanate both from the provisions of the Constitution and the Rules of Procedure made in pursuance of them for conducting the business of the Parliament. Two things deserve special mention at this stage. First, the Speaker possesses some unwritten or unspecified powers to supplement his/her other powers. The reason for this should be discovered in the important position that the speaker holds. Second, though the office of the presiding officer of our popular chamber is largely modelled on that of the English Speaker, the Indian Speaker has wide powers than his/her counterpart in the United Kingdom.

The powers of the Speaker may be roughly classified into four parts like regulatory, supervisory and censoring administrative and special or miscellaneous.

1. Regulatory : In the first place, the regulatory powers of the Speaker include his/her entire authority and responsibility for conducting the business of the house in an orderly manner. Thus, he/she maintains order and decorum in the house. He/she allots time for the debates and discussion and allows the members to express their views within the time determined by him/her. The Speaker interprets the rules of the Constitution and of the Procedure for the guidance of the members. He/she puts matters for division and announces the result. In the event of a tie he/she exercises his/her casting vote. It is within his/her powers to admit motions, resolutions and points of order and then make arrangements for discussion on them.

The Speaker may adjourn the house in the event of the absence of quorum or grave disorder. He/she may make his/her address on an important matter under consideration for the enlightenment of the members. The business of the house is conducted in English and Hindi languages, but he/she may allow a member to speak in some other language that happens to be his/her mother tongue and then make arrangements for authentic translation of the statements of the member into Hindi and English languages. No representation can be moved by members of the house without his/her consent. A secret meeting of the house can take place at the request of the leader of the house after its approval by the Speaker. Finally, the Speaker gives his/her ruling to settle a matter of dispute and his/her version is final. It can be challenged only when a substantive motion is brought by the members of the house.

2. Supervisory : Allied with the regulatory powers of the Speaker are also his/her supervisory or censuring powers. The Speaker is the head of the Parliamentary Committees. Some important committees like Rules Committee and Business Advisory Committee work under his/her chairmanship. He/she appoints the Chairman of the various committees of the house and may issue instructions and directions for their guidance. He/she may ask the Government to supply such information to the house or to its committees that is so essential in the public interest.

The Speaker sees to it that no member speaks unparliamentary language or becomes unnecessarily argumentative or verbose in his/her expression. He/she may force a member to withdraw his/her indecent expression or make amends. He/she may warn the member in the event of his/her disorderly behaviour or he/she may also ask him/her to withdraw from the house. He/she may also make use of his/her Marshal for getting a member out of the house in the event of his/her highly disorderly behaviour. He/she may even adjourn the house in the event of grave disorder or some serious situation. No member can be arrested, nor can any legal proceedings be served on him/her without the permission of the Speaker. The Speaker may even issue warrants of arrest for bringing an alleged offender of the privileges of the house and it is his/her function to implement the decision of the house with regard to the punishment given to a person for the breach of privileges or contempt of the house.

3. Administrative : The Lok Sabha Secretariat functions under the control and direction of the Speaker. The Speaker's authority over the Secretariat staff of the house, its precincts and its security arrangements is supreme. All strangers, visitors and press correspondent are subject to his/her discipline and orders. No alternation and addition can be made in the Parliament house, and no new structure can be erected in the Parliament Estate without the Speaker's permission. He/she makes provisions for the accommodation and other amenities of life granted to the members of the house. He/she regulates the lobbies and galleries meant for the press and the public. It is his/her concern to make arrangements for the sittings of the house and its Committees. He/she is the custodian of the honour of the house. It is his/her concern to see that the life and persons of members are secure and that the staff and property of the house are immuned from any danger.

Besides, by virtue of 33rd Constitution Amendments Act of 1974, he/she has been empowered not to accept the resignation of a member of the house in case he/she finds it submitted under duress. He/she may disqualify a member from the membership of the house and then declare his/her seat vacant on the ground of being a defector. On 11 January 1991s the Speaker gave a historic ruling whereby he/she disqualified eight members of the ruling Janata Dal including five ministers, on the ground that they were defectors under Schedule X of the Constitution and as such their seats were declared vacant. He/she ruled that a split in the ranks of the Janata Dal had taken place on 5th November and the event of persons leaving the original party on that date could be taken as a split. Moreover, they could be given a benefit of doubt in view of the highly uncertain conditions of the time. But the defection of eight other members after a few days could not be regarded as a split, because their number could not be equal to the 1/3rd strength of the residual strength of the Janata Dal. The important point of his/her ruling to be noted here, is that the spilt could be one time affair and could not be an ongoing or continuous process or phenomenon.

4. Miscellaneous : Finally we come to the miscellaneous or special powers of the Speaker. He/she gives his/her certificate to a Bill that is passed by the house. He/she alone can decide whether a bill is a money bill or not. He/she presides over the Joint Session of the Parliament. He/she acts as a sole channel of communication between the President and the house. He/she makes obituary reference in the house and delivers a valedictory address on the expiry of the term of the house. He/she makes formal reference on some occasions to important national and international events. He/she can correct patent errors in a bill after it has been passed in the house. He/she may even make changes in the bill consequential on the amendments accepted by the house. He/she acts as a ex officio chairman of the conferences of the presiding officers in the country. He/she can make nominations for the Parliamentary delegations visiting various parts of the country or abroad.

6.11 Position of the Speaker

A study of the powers of the Speaker in practice, however, shows that he/she has not been able to gain that high level of dignity which is enjoyed by his/her English counterpart for the obvious reason that India is yet develop a sound tradition of our Speakers being a non - partyman. That is why, there have been occasions when a move for removing the Speaker from office was made or that some angry members went to the length of undermining the high office of the Speaker until they were forcibly pushed out of the house by the Watch and Ward Staff headed by the Marshal. G.V. Mavalankar dismissed the proposal of Speaker's being a distinctly non political man on the ground that he/she could establish another tradition of remaining above politics inside the house while living like a man of politics out of it. It was certainly the biggest day in the history of the Speakership in India when N.Sanjiva Reddy after being elected to this great office on 17 March 1967. He/she observes that his/her office requires him/her to be impartial and judicious in the conduct of his/her work. Unfortunately, this high tradition failed to prevail when Sanjiva Reddy relinquished his/her office to jump into the fray of the politics of the Presidential election in 1969. As such the tradition had a serious setback.

No less unfortunate has been the tradition of conferring gubernatorial assignments on the persons after their retirement from the great office of the Speaker. In this way, instead of setting up of a healthy tradition like that of conferring the distinguished membership of the Upper Chamber of our Parliament by means of Presidential nominations upon one after his/her retirement from the office of the Speaker, new rooms for lucrative temptations have been opened whereby the occupant of this great office might fall prey to the charm of executive patronage. Sometimes the bias of the Speaker becomes well discernible in his/her attitude towards the Party in power as a result of which vocal members of Opposition lose their temper and demonstrate their resentment by means of shouts and walkouts. The Speaker often do so on the request of the ruling party and sought to justify his/her unjustifiable action in the name of 'extra-ordinary circumstances'.

The office of the Speaker has a dignity of its own. As such it is a matter of regret that his/her authority is undermined on several occasions. There are several important reasons behind it of which some has been enumerated by J.C. Johari in the following manner :

1. The holders of this office seldom resign their political affiliations and remain active politicians.
2. They generally pronounce rulings and decisions, admit or reject motions, appoint members to various committees and treat members on partisan lines.
3. They remain ambitious to become Ministers, Governors or Chief Ministers, try to form factions and win favour from their groups.
4. They tend to please the powers and favour them out and out.
5. The leaders of the Opposition may resort to unparliamentary methods to fight the ruling party in the house. When checked by the Speaker, they defy and blame him/her.
6. The Opposition leaders are seldom consulted at the time of the election of the Speaker and for this reason, they look upon him/her as the nominee of the ruling party.

Thus, the above mentioned circumstances suggests that the Speaker is sometimes compelled to adopt a partisan line and favour the ruling party either because he/she gets political favour and patronage which is required by him/her to remain in office or he/she needed the support of the majority in the house for conduction of the house properly.

6.12 Rajya Sabha : Composition

The maximum membership of the Rajya Sabha is limited to 250, just about half of the maximum membership originally fixed for the House of the People. Its composition has unique features. Out of 250 members, there shall be 12 members nominated by the President and the remaining members i.e. 238 shall be representatives of the States and the Union Territories elected by the method of indirect election. This is in accordance with Article 80 of our Constitution. For convenience let us examine the members of the Council of States in the following manner :-

1. Nomination : The 12 nominated members shall be chosen by the President from amongst persons having special knowledge or practical experience in literature, science, art and social service. The Constitution thus, adopts the principle of nomination for giving distinguished persons a place in the upper chamber.
2. Representation of States : The representatives of each state shall be elected by the elected members of the legislative assembly of the state in accordance with the system of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote.
3. Representation of Union Territories : The representatives of union territories shall be chosen in such manner as Parliament may prescribe [Art 80(5)]. Under this power, Parliament has prescribed that the representatives of union territories to the Council of States shall be indirectly elected by members of an electoral college for that territory, in accordance with the system of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote.

Here, is an attempt to combine different principles of representation in the composition of the same legislative body. The American principle of equality of states in representation which has been followed by several federal constitutions and was rejected as undemocratic. At the same time, the election of the majority of its members by the state assemblies is intended to give recognition to the federal principle. Another principle that is given recognition in the composition of the Council of States is representation of talent, experience and service. The number of nominated members is constitutionally limited to 12. Such members would be persons having special knowledge or practical experience in respect of matters like literature, science, art or social service.

The Council of States is a permanent body like the American Senate. This means it is a continuing chamber and not subject to dissolution like that of the Lok Sabha. Like the American Senators the members of the Rajya Sabha are elected for six years. At the end of every second year, one-third of the members are re-elected. This provision enables the council to retain its political complexion in a more stable manner than the House of the People which after every election is a completely new house. It follows, that there will be an election of 1/3 of the membership of the Council of States at the beginning of every third year [Art 83(1)]. The order of retirement of the members is governed by the Council of States Order, 1952, made by the President in exercise of powers conferred upon him/her by the Representation of the People Act, 1951. The representation of the People Act 1951 provided that in order to be elected as a member of Rajya Sabha from a state the candidate must be an ordinary resident of that state. This qualification was deleted in 2003. The election to Rajya Sabha was done by secret ballot. By the same amendment Act in 2003 it was made an open ballot.

However, regarding composition of Rajya Sabha several criticisms had been advanced by scholars which for our convenience can be discussed in the following manner :

1. It is argued that enough justice is not done in keeping parity with the name i.e. Council of States and the nature of the house. It was assumed that the upper chamber of the Parliament is likely to be composed of representatives of different states but 12 members were nominated by the President. It is quite possible that the nominated members represent the centre and not the states and may tilt the balance in crucial moments of division. So, Rajya Sabha in real terms may not be regarded as the Council of States.
2. The composition of the Rajya Sabha is often viewed as against the conventions and structures of a federation. The composition is not done on the basis of population or area of a state. Many are of the opinion that such composition is unjust in the sense that it places bigger states of the Indian Union in a position of greater advantage.
3. M.P.Sharma interestingly opined that Rajya Sabha represents neither the people, nor the Government nor the State Legislature. It may so happen that after the second annual election of the Rajya Sabha, General Assembly election is held in a state and there may occur drastic change in electoral seats in such an assembly election. Under such circumstances, the newly elected government in the state may not be able to control the members of the Rajya Sabha.

6.13 Debate related to bicameralism in India

Now why India has adopted a system of bicameralism, its advantages along with its negative aspects are some of the essential questions which are needed to be answered at the very beginning of our discussion. On the basis of Indian Administration Act of 1919 bicameralism was first introduced in India. Later the Indian Administrative Act of 1935 has also retained this system. After achieving independence Indian Parliament too followed the legacy of the British era and established a bicameral legislature. Infact, during the days of the framing of the Constitution the problems related to bicameralism has not been discussed in detail. The scholars too seem to have divergent opinions with regard to the advantages of the bicameral system. There were many who were against it. This is perhaps one of the reasons, why many were reluctant to have a second chamber called Rajya Sabha along with the Lok Sabha in India. Many were even critical of the significance or the advantages in the very existence of the second chamber in India.

However, in citing the significance of the second chamber in India several arguments were forwarded by one of the members of the Drafting Committee namely Gopalaswami Ayyenger. Citing him/her the following arguments can be advanced :

1. There is a fear that in case of a single chamber legislature a law passed may be a product of a temporary emotions and excitement. But if there are two chambers in a Parliament then a bill is likely to be passed with sufficient consideration and carefulness. A bill passed in a house is placed in before the second house in which it is thoughtfully re-evaluated. This might results in evolving a more accurate and error free law. So in a way, it helps to secure the national interest of the country. Again, the existence of the Rajya Sabha as an upper chamber plays the role of regulating and to some extent controlling the popular chamber of the Parliament. In doing so, it assumes a significant position in the liberal democratic country like that of India. It is through constructive debates, contradictions discussions and evaluation of both the houses that a law is evolved in our country. Consequently, it provides a greater assurance for an evolution of welfare and well thought law of our country.
2. The second chamber is composed of indirectly elected members along with a few nominated one. So several personalities who are well experts and experienced in respective field are usually the members of the upper house. They hardly want to get involved in the electoral process and contest election. So, it is expected to have the presence of these unassociated personalities as members of the house. In doing so, their skill and expertise knowledge may be found useful in the formulation of laws. In Lok Sabha only 12 members are nominated but in Rajya Sabha the composition of the house being different gives an opportunity to reasonable people who might be willing to participate in the debate with an amount of learning and importance not really associated with the House of the People.

3. The existence of a second chamber is regarded as inevitable, if one adopts a federal system of administration. The second house is also composed of the members of the federating units. This helps to reserve the interest of the states. Infact, there is a need to retain a balance between the interest of a nation and the regional interest within a federal system of government. The national interest is well represented by the popular or the Lok Sabha of the country while the member of the Rajya Sabha represents the interest of the states. So without Rajya Sabha the regional interest would not have been represented in the Parliament.
4. If there is a Unicameral Legislature then there is a possibility of the house to turn into a dictator. But, if Parliament is composed of two houses then the possibility of turning into a dictator is probably bleak. So the existence of two houses counter check each other. This enhances the liberty of an individual. According to Lord Acton the second chamber of the Parliament provides an inevitable security to individual liberty. So, Rajya Sabha can prevent Lok Sabha from turning into a dictator and it can also ensure the liberty of the individual. If the Lok Sabha takes an initiative to pass a bill which opposes individual liberty then the Rajya Sabha may take positive initiative in preventing it.
5. The responsibilities of the state have increased to a great extent in the recent years since it has declared itself as a welfare state. As a result, the workload of the Parliament has also expanded. A bicameral legislature to a certain extent may distribute the workload into two houses. So the pressure of the lower house is also shared to a certain extent by the upper house as well. The formulations of laws on comparatively less significant issues can be vested to the Rajya Sabha by the Lok Sabha.

6. One of the limitations of a liberal democratic system is that it tends to safeguard the interests of the majority. Keeping this in mind, it may be noted that the members of the Rajya Sabha are elected by means of proportional representation. As a result the minority communities in India also get an opportunity to send their representatives in Rajya Sabha. So the interests of the minorities are not only represented but also well preserved in the Parliament.
7. The debates and discussions that are likely to take place in the Rajya Sabha are expected to be rich in content since the members are renowned in their own distinctive fields and their expertise knowledge has a great educational value and therefore, its significance cannot be denied. Infact it was argued that the second chamber was expected to hold dignified debates on important issues and to delay legislation which might be the outcome of passions of the moment until passions have subsided and calm consideration could be bestowed before the Legislature.

Now, if there are arguments showing the significance of the principles of bicameralism then there are also counterarguments as well to show the limitations of the system. Let us examine them in the following manner :-

1. As rightly being pointed out by Harold Laski, that legislation is not made out of clean sky, finds it a way to the statute book. The drafts of each bill are prepared by lawyers. After a thorough and careful evaluation and discussion the bill is passed in the popular chamber. A bill in order to become an Act has to pass through several stages. At every stage debates, discussions and exchange of opinion takes place between the Government bench and the members of opposition. The crux matter of the bill is also communicated to the masses through print and electronic media. This helps in formulating a public opinion regarding the bill. The reaction of the people and an analysis of the nature of public opinion help in taking final decision regarding the bill. That is why, it is argued by many that a law relating to be enacted out of sporadic emotions is baseless. Infact for a well thought formulation of law the role played by Lok Sabha is sufficient and there is hardly any need of the second chamber.

2. Many critics argue that the composition of Rajya Sabha is undemocratic. This is so since the members of the Rajya Sabha are either indirectly elected through proportional representation or they are nominated by the President of India. At the other side, the members of the Lok Sabha are elected directly by the people. So it is a democratic body in the truest sense of the term. In such a situation the interference of the Rajya Sabha over the decisions of the Lok Sabha implies opposing the democratic conventions. A question has been raised whether it is at all desirable by an undemocratic body like that of Rajya Sabha to do so for a highly democratic institution like Lok Sabha. This is perhaps one of the major reasons that in practice Rajya Sabha hardly succeed in obstructing a decision of the Lok Sabha against its will. So viewed from this perspective its existence becomes less meaningful.
3. One of the logical argument behind the existence of the Rajya Sabha lies in the fact, that it is composed of distinguished personalities from various fields whose expertise knowledge are applied in framing up of the laws. This argument too, has been discarded by many. They argued, even if the members of the Rajya Sabha are elected by proportional representation they are in reality being done on the basis of their party affiliation. Consequently, the possibility of electing an unassociated, impartial and experienced expert is nothing but a myth. Again, the members who are nominated by the President are actually being done on the basis of advice given by the Prime Minister to the President. This again implies that an expert is a one who is in reality nominated by the Union Government or specifically the political party in power at the Union. As such K.C.Wheare remarked that, if second chambers are to be anything more than debating societies or discussion circles, party is bound to come in. Practically, the Rajya Sabha preserves the interest of a particular class.
4. The argument that Rajya Sabha preserves the right of the state has also been challenged. The Indian Constitution is a written one and is partially flexible. The distinction of powers between the centre and the states has been explicitly stated in the Constitution. Apart from that, the rights of the states from the clutches of the Union have also been protected in the Constitution. Further, the country also has a federal court known as the Supreme Court of India who along with other functions is also entrusted with the protection of the interests of the federating units.

5. Further, the members of the Rajya Sabha are elected indirectly by proportional representation on the basis of population of the state. This has resulted into a division among states on the basis of population. Densely populated states have a greater say as they are represented in more numbers in Rajya Sabha compared to the lowly populated states. This had adversely affected the federal structure of the country. So it is argued that the protection of interests of the smaller states is almost at a stake as even ignoring their interest and desires the bigger states can change the federal system of the country.
6. Rajya Sabha is expected to retain the interests of the minority communities. But this is also not acceptable entirely by many since minority based political parties do not always send their representatives to the Rajya Sabha in adequate numbers.
7. Again, it is argued that the existence of Rajya Sabha does not enable the Lok Sabha to take quick decisions over an issue. Sometimes it becomes an absolute necessity on part of the Government to take swift decision which is not possible due to the mere existence of the Rajya Sabha.
8. Moreover, the expenditure incurred for maintaining the system of bicameralism is a huge one. As such expenses for the Rajya Sabha seems to be unjustified for many as they feel there is hardly any relevance of its existence.

6.14 Eligibility and disqualifications for membership

A candidate for the Rajya Sabha's election must possess the following qualifications :

1. He must be a citizen of India.
2. He must be above 30 years of age.
3. He must possess all other qualifications as laid down by an Act of the Parliament. The Representation of the People Act of 1951 says that a person to be chosen as a member of this house from any state excluding Jammu and Kashmir must be an elector for a parliamentary constituency in that state.

Disqualifications

The disqualifications for the membership of the house are the following :

1. Holding any office of profit under the Government of India or of the states except that of a minister or any other exempted by a law of Parliament.
2. Being of unsound mind as declared by the competent court.
3. Being an undischarged bankrupt.
4. Being an alien or non citizen.
5. A member may be disqualified, if he/she remains absent from all meetings and sessions of the house for a period of 60 days without the permission of the house or if he/she is expelled from the house.
6. Being disqualified under any law of Parliament.

6.15 Session of Rajya Sabha

The Rajya Sabha holds its session under the chairmanship of the Vice – President who is its ex-officio presiding officer. It elects its own Vice Chairman who functions during the absence of the Chairman. Its quorum is 1/10 of the total number of the members. The presiding officers of the Council of States are called the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman. The Vice President of India is the ex officio Chairman of the Council of States. As the presiding officer of the Rajya Sabha his/her functions and powers are the same as those of the Speaker of the Lok Sabha. He/she is however, not a member of the house. The Vice President will act for the President under certain contingencies. During such period he/she will not perform the duties of the office of the Chairman of the Council nor will he/she draw the salary or allowances payable to the Chairman.

In the absence of the Chairman, the Council is presided over by the Deputy Chairman. He/she is a member of the house and is elected by the members of the house. When he/she ceases to be a member of the council he/she automatically vacates the office of the Deputy Chairman. The Deputy Chairman is empowered to discharge all the functions and to perform all duties of the office of the Chairman, whenever Chairman's office is vacant or when the Vice President is acting for the President. The Council of States also has a panel of members called "Vice Chairmen" nominated by the Chairman for the purpose of presiding over the house in the absence of both the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman. The Secretariat of the Rajya Sabha is headed by a Secretary General who discharges the same functions as his/her counterpart in the Lok Sabha.

6.16 Powers and Functions of Rajya Sabha

For our convenience the powers and functions of the Rajya Sabha can be discussed under the following heads :

Firstly, the Rajya Sabha has almost equal powers as compared to the powers of the Lok Sabha in non-money matters. It is provided that a non money bill may originate in either house of Parliament and that no bill can be taken as passed by the Parliament unless agreed to by both the houses. In the event of disagreement between the two houses, the President is empowered to call a joint session of the two houses in order to dissolve the deadlock. In this way, the position of the Rajya Sabha is not weak like that of the English House of Lords that may do nothing else than to obstruct the will of the House of Commons by causing a delay of one year. However, it may be pointed out that the position of the Rajya Sabha, in this direction is not as strong as that of the American Senate. In the United States, it is provided that in the event of a conflict between the two houses of the Congress, the matter shall be resolved by the role of the conciliation committee having equaled number of representatives taken from both the houses and the decision of the committee shall be final.

Different from this, in our country, the position of the Rajya Sabha is comparatively weak due to three reasons. First, the Joint Session is to be presided over by the Speaker of the Lok Sabha. Second, the factor of numerical strength is likely to go in favour of the Lok Sabha, unless there is a very sharp cross division among the members of the popular chamber. Third, the initiative of calling a joint session or dropping the piece of controversial legislation depends upon the decision of the Council of Ministers that is collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha.

Secondly, the Rajya Sabha has some executive powers. It is true to say that the Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha; it does not mean that the Rajya Sabha has no control over the Government. In fact the Rajya Sabha may exercise its control over the government by means of asking questions, tabling important motions, introducing resolutions and call attention motions and demanding half an hour discussions. Thus, it has ample opportunities to criticize the policies and activities of the government.

Thirdly, the Rajya Sabha is powerless in money matters. A money bill can originate in the Lok Sabha alone and the Rajya Sabha has to adopt it within a period of 14 days. In case it returns a money bill with some recommendations to the Lok Sabha, it depends upon the will of the lower house to accept them or not.

Fourthly, the Rajya Sabha has some other powers where it has equal authority with the Lok Sabha. They are :

1. It has equal powers in matters of constitutional amendment where it is required that a bill must be passed by both the houses by special majority. Such a bill may originate in either house of the Parliament and it is not provided that in the event of disagreement between the two houses, the President shall call a joint session to resolve the deadlock.
2. The Rajya Sabha enjoys equal authority with the Lok Sabha in the election and removal of the President. It also applies to the passing of a special address to remove the Chief Justice and a Judge of a Supreme Court or High Courts or some High Officers like Comptroller and Auditor General of India.
3. A proclamation of emergency made by the President must be approved by both the houses of the Parliament.
4. Annual reports of various autonomous agencies like the UPSC, Comptroller and Auditor General of India, Minorities Commission etc. are considered by both the Rajya Sabha and the Lok Sabha.
5. In cases the government makes a proposal to take away an appointment from the purview of the UPSC both the Rajya Sabha and Lok Sabha must agree to it.
6. Every order issued by the President suspending the enforcement of Fundamental Rights or laying down the canons of financial propriety is to be laid before each house of the Parliament.
7. Rajya Sabha shares equal powers with Lok Sabha in matters like setting up Martial Law Courts during National Emergency for dealing with offences committed by the civilians and indemnifying officers for their acts done in good faith

8. Lastly, the delegated legislation and the rules framed by various departments must be approved by both the houses.

Finally, there are certain special powers which the Rajya Sabha exclusively enjoy and are not at all shared by the Lok Sabha. These are :-

1. The Rajya Sabha vide Article 249 may pass a resolution by its 2/3rd majority to shift an item of the State List to the Concurrent List or to the Union List on the plea that it is expedient in the national interest.
2. The Rajya Sabha vide Art 312, is empowered to create an All India Service if it adopts a resolution by its 2/3 majority saying that it is necessary or expedient in the national interest.
3. It is the Rajya Sabha alone that can apply a democratic check on the exercise of the emergency powers of the President in case the Lok Sabha stands dissolved.
4. Finally, the Rajya Sabha alone can initiate proposals for removing the Vice President of India.

6.17 Relation between Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha

Discussion on the pros and cons of a bicameral system would make it much easier for us to analyse the relation between the House of the People and the Council of States. The relation between the two houses can be done from three perspectives in terms of exercising their powers in different areas. Broadly, there are three main ways through which the relation of both the houses is to be discussed. They are :-

1. Lok Sabha sharing equal powers with that of the Rajya Sabha.
2. Lok Sabha enjoying greater powers as compared to Rajya Sabha and
3. Rajya Sabha having certain special powers which Lok Sabha does not seem to enjoy.

For our convenience let us discuss them in the following manner :-

Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha sharing equal powers

Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha shares equal powers with each other on the following :-

- a) On matters related to election of the President and Vice President
- b) Removal of the Judges of the Supreme Court and High Court,
- c) Removal of the Chairman and the other members of UPSC,
- d) Removal of Chief Election Commissioner, Comptroller and Auditor General and so on.
- e) In all other matters of legislation, including constitutional amendments, the extent of the council's power is the same as that of the house. A bill can be initiated either in the house or in the council. The council may amend or reject a bill that is passed by the house. If the house does not agree with the action of the council, the contested measure is placed before a Joint sitting of both the houses and passed by a simple majority.
- f) Annual reports of various autonomous agencies like the UPSC, Comptroller and Auditor General of India, Minorities Commission etc. are considered by both the Rajya Sabha and the Lok Sabha.
- g) Rajya Sabha shares equal powers with Lok Sabha in matters like setting up Martial Law Courts during National Emergency for dealing with offences committed by the civilians and indemnifying officers for their acts done in good faith.

Lok Sabha having more powers than Rajya Sabha

- a) Dominant position in the Executive: The Lok Sabha exercises control over the Executive. According to the Indian Constitution the Union Council of Ministers headed by the Prime Minister shall be collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha. Infact Lok Sabha exercises exclusive power with relation to the formation of Council of Ministers, its existence and even demanding for its resignation before its normal tenure of five years. The Council of Ministers will have to resign if a vote of no confidence is passed in the Parliament. In case the Lok Sabha rejects a Government bill or a budget, or disapproves official policy, or shows its lack of confidence in the Government by making alterations in the policies and programmes of the Government against its wishes, it shall amount to the expression of a vote of no confidence. If a no confidence motion is passed in the Rajya Sabha, it will not have any impact upon the party forming the government and in power at the centre. Infact the Council of Ministers has every right to be fully informed of all matters connected with the government's activities which are raised on its floor. But it has no right to pass a censure motion against the Government of the day. The confidence of the Parliament means the confidence of the House of the People and the responsibility of the Executive means the responsibility to the House of the People. This principle can be justified only on the basis of the popular character of the house. How vulnerable is the position of the Rajya Sabha can be cited through an instance. In 1978, Rajya Sabha passed a proposal for forming an investigation committee against Kantibhai Desai, the son of then Prime Minister Mr. Morarji Desai. The Morarji Government ignored and rejected the proposal. So, it shows that the Rajya Sabha has the power to discuss and debate over matters of important issues but it can no way pass a vote of no confidence against it. So, the Rajya Sabha has hardly any power to control the executive of the country. Lok Sabha happens to be supreme in this domain.

- b) Money Bill: Rajya Sabha has no power related to money bill. As far as the financial power of the Lok Sabha is concerned a money bill can originate only in the Lok Sabha. It is sent to the Rajya Sabha which it must pass within a period of 14 days. In case the Rajya Sabha returns the money bill with some recommendations of its own, it shall depend upon the will of the Lok Sabha to accept them or not. However, a money bill can in no case be referred back to the Rajya Sabha for a second time. Moreover, it is one of the powers of the Speaker to decide whether a bill is a money bill or not. It is therefore, clear that the Lok Sabha alone is powerful in the sphere of financial legislation.
- c) Ordinary Bill: In case of ordinary bill apparently, it seems that Rajya Sabha and Lok Sabha shares equal powers but in reality it is not so. An ordinary bill requires the approval of both the houses. It cannot be taken as passed by the Parliament unless it is so agreed to by both the houses of the Parliament. In the event of a difference of opinion between the two houses, the President is required to call a Joint Session for resolving the deadlock. A joint sitting is presided by the Speaker of the Lok Sabha. Again, the numbers of members are more in Lok Sabha than in Rajya Sabha. So naturally, even in a joint sitting the probability of retaining the decision of the Lok Sabha is therefore, much higher. However, there are certain instances of exception as well. In 1961, in a joint sitting of both the houses, one of the proposal of Rajya Sabha was included in the Dowry Prohibition Bill. But at the same time it must be noted that they are exceptions and rarely happens.

- d) Emergency: Lok Sabha shares with the Rajya Sabha authority in matters relating to the approval of the emergency declared by the President. But according to 44th Constitutional Amendment Act of 1978, if, the Lok Sabha accepts the proposal relating to the dissolution of the emergency then the President is bound to abide by its decision and declared it as off. Again if 1/10th members of Lok Sabha request to discuss on matters of emergency then the President is bound to summon a session and the Speaker is also bound to create an opportunity for its discussion. Here it must be noted, that Rajya Sabha has no powers relating to it.

There are certain provisions in the Constitution which confer upon the council as the sole representative of the states, powers in its own right and to the exclusion of the house. These are of considerable importance from a constitutional point of view. They are the following :-

- a) Under Article 249, the Council with the support of two-third of its members sitting and voting is empowered to declare that, in the national interests, Parliament should make laws with respect to a matter that is included in the State Legislature list. On the passing of such a resolution, it becomes lawful for Parliament to make laws with respect to a matter that is included in the State Legislature List. On the passing of such a resolution, it becomes lawful for Parliament to make laws with respect to that matter for the whole or any part of India for a period of one year.
- b) The second exclusive power of the Council is connected with the setting up of All India Services. The special characteristic of an All India Service is that it is common to the Union and the States. As such, the setting up of such a service affects the powers of the States. Therefore, here again, the Council is given the power to decide by a resolution supported by a two-thirds majority the question of setting up of an All India Service. Hence, any laws connected with such a service can be initiated only if, the Council passes such a Resolution.

- c) The Vice President by virtue of its position is the Chairman of the Rajya Sabha. He/She presides the meetings of the Rajya Sabha. The proposal relating to the removal of the Vice President can be initiated only in the Rajya Sabha and not in Lok Sabha. For this reason, Rajya Sabha has special powers and dignity within the political system of the country.
- d) Along with the above mentioned constitutional provisions there is also an operational advantage of the Rajya Sabha which at critical juncture might enhance its power. The Council of States is a permanent body like the American Senate. This means it is a continuing chamber and not subject to dissolution like that of the Lok Sabha. Like the American Senators the members of the Rajya Sabha are elected for six years. At the end of every second year, one-third of the members are re elected. This provision enables the Council to retain its political complexion in a more stable manner than the House of the People which after every election is a completely new house. What is worth mentioning, is that, an unprecedented change takes place in the functioning of the Upper Chamber when a party has a comfortable majority in Rajya Sabha while it formed the Opposition in the Lok Sabha. Such an incident occurred in the year 1977, when the Congress had a majority in the Rajya Sabha while occupied the opposition bench in the Lok Sabha. It placed the then Janata Government in a very difficult position. The Non Congress government had the taste of its strong position when the Congress members stalled two official bills on April 11, 1977. Almost a similar situation can be traced in the recent years when the Modi Government despite its majority in the Lok Sabha finds it difficult to pass a bill in the Rajya Sabha. This creates a compelling ground on part of the Union Government to win over and maintain a fruitful relation with some of the State Government, so that, it could ensure their support in the Rajya Sabha.

These provisions make the Council an important part of the Governmental machinery and not an ornamental superstructure or an inessential adjunct. It was not designated to play the humble role of an unimportant advisor, nor of an occasional check on hasty legislation. Its comparatively small and therefore, compact size, its permanent character which ensures a certain degree of stability and continuity in thought and action, and its having a large number of “elder statesmen” among its members, and its broad based representative character, all these, in course of time, should help to establish it not only as a respectable but also beneficial and influential body though not equal in power in all respects with the House of the People.

In India, the Council of States in relation to the House of the People is nowhere near as powerful as the American Senate, nor is it at par with its Australian counterpart; but it is much more powerful than the Canadian Senate. It is true that the Constitution clearly recognizes the supremacy of the House of the People over the Council in certain matters but not in all. The co equal power of the Council on constitutional amendment is of great significance. It means that the Constitution cannot be amended unless the Council of States as the representatives of the States also agrees to such change. This provision alone will show the significantly important role the framers of the Constitution have assigned to the Council. Infact, what is perhaps required is the participation and collaboration of both the houses for all legislative activities. Without such collaboration practically nothing can be done in the legislative field. Infact a bicameral legislature was probably the only operational guarantee which the framers could think of, to ensure the harmonious coexistence of the centre as well as the states under the overall rubric of the Union of India.

6.18 Evaluation of Rajya Sabha

A critical study of the composition and working of the Rajya Sabha shows that it has neither proved itself like a mere ornamental chamber as is found in the British House of Lords nor has it been able to assert itself like a powerful upper chamber having a formidable replica in the American Senate. In fact what is interesting to learn, that it has never intended to be a pale shadow of the lower chamber. It has indeed provided occasional checks on the activities of the popular chamber of the Parliament but in doing so hardly created a deadlock situation thereby, obstructing the functioning of the government. It therefore, in a sense, has evolved itself into a house of action when situation so demands thereby, giving a unique Indian version of the institution. Let us enumerate certain points for a critical study of the Rajya Sabha in the following manner :-

First, the mode of composition of this house is defective. As the name Council of States suggests it ought to have representatives from the states but it is surprising to see that it has members nominated by the President. So it is quite possible that the nominated members represent the centre and not the states and may tilt the balance in crucial moments of division.

Second, the principle of distribution of seats according to the factor of population is unjust in a sense that it places bigger states of the Indian Union in a position of greater advantage. It therefore, violates the principle of uniformity that desires equal representation of the federal units irrespective of their geographical size or their demographic composition.

Third, the method of indirect election by means of proportional representation with single transferable vote system makes it highly convenient for a very affluent person to purchase votes in the election and thereby, have the privilege of being a member of the Indian Parliament.

Fourth, the indirect election enables even the minor parties to grab some seats in proportion to their strength in the State Legislative Assemblies. The Rajya Sabha thus, has the representatives indirectly elected by the State Vidhan Sabha's who are supposed to fight for the cause of their parties than that of the States as a whole.

Fifth, it is also possible that after the state general election the assembly may have a different party wise composition that might entail their loss of control over the representatives chosen by the previous house for a term of six years. The result is that the members of this house are the representatives of neither the state governments nor of the state legislature.

Sixth, the actual working of the Rajya Sabha has failed to realize the expectations of the founding fathers who desire to give an opportunity to seasoned people more interested in participating in debates. Though we cannot deny the fact, that this house has seen several seasoned people but a matter of pity is that party politics has done a lot of damage to the high standards of this chamber. On several occasions, persons rejected in general polls but having very strong position in the party hierarchy or are close associates of the party chief has been inducted into the house without judging their abilities and efficiency so required in this regard.

Finally, what is worth mentioning is that an unprecedented change takes place in the functioning of the Upper Chamber when a party has a comfortable majority in Rajya Sabha while it formed the Opposition in the Lok Sabha. Such an incident occurred in the year 1977, when the Congress had a majority in the Rajya Sabha while occupied the Opposition bench in the Lok Sabha. It placed the then Janata Government in a very difficult position.

6.19 Conclusion

A comparative study of the functions and powers of the two houses of our Parliament may lead to an impression that the Lok Sabha is more powerful than the Rajya Sabha. There is no doubt that the Indian Parliament is constituted on the basis of the principle of bicameralism, that is, legislature having two houses or chambers. The lower house or the House of the People being composed of directly elected members has an edge over the upper chamber. But here, it must be noted that the Constitution has also established a federal system of government. Even there was unanimity among the framers for achieving a balance between the direct representation of the people and the representation of the units. Keeping in mind the aspirations of our forefathers, the two houses should not be designated as such to exalt one and denigrate the other. In fact, what should prevail is the convention of harmony and cooperation between the two.

6.20 Summing Up

The Parliament of India consists of the President and the two houses. The lower house is called the House of the People or Lok Sabha while the upper house is called The Council of States or Rajya Sabha .

- The members of the Lok Sabha are elected directly by the people. The Rajya Sabha is the indirectly elected upper chamber .

- At present Lok Sabha consists of 550 elected members. Of these a maximum of 20 seats are reserved for members from the Union Territories. The maximum membership of the Rajya Sabha is limited to 250, just about half of the maximum membership originally fixed for the House of the People.
- Members of the Lok Sabha are elected from each state which is divided into territorial constituencies that are more or less of the same size with regard to population. Each state is divided into territorial constituencies in such a manner that the ratio between the population of each constituency and the number of seats allotted to it, is and as far as practicable, same throughout the state.
- The normal term of the Lok Sabha is five years which begins from the date of its first meeting. Like the American Senators the members of the Rajya Sabha are elected for six years. At the end of every second year, one-third of the members are re elected.
- Lok Sabha has presiding officer called the Speaker who presides over the House. The Speaker occupies an office that carries both great dignity and high authority.
- The Rajya Sabha holds its session under the chairmanship of the Vice - President who is its ex-officio presiding officer. It elects its own Vice Chairman who functions during the absence of the Chairman. Its quorum is 1/10 of the total number of the members.
- Lok Sabha or the House of the People being composed of directly elected members has an edge over the upper chamber or the Rajya Sabha

7.1 Objective

After reading this unit learners will be able to :

- Know the purposes of the parliamentary practices and procedures.
- Understand the rights and immunities that are enjoyed by the members of the parliament.

- Explain the constitutional provisions related to Parliamentary Practices and Privileges
- Realize the several challenges in Parliamentary Privileges

7.2 Introduction

The Parliamentary system in India is based on the model of the British Westminster System. The Constitution of India, adopted in 1950, lays the foundation for the functioning of the Parliament, which is the supreme legislative body in the country. Parliament is made up of all representatives together which controls and guides the government. Functioning of the parliament in a proper and healthy way is thus utmost necessary. Over the years, we have made several innovative mechanisms in our parliamentary rules, procedures, customs and conventions in order to strengthening our parliamentary institutions and making the Executive accountable to the elected representatives of the people. The practice of Parliamentary procedures in India is vital for maintaining the order, discipline and smooth functioning of the legislative process. Similarly, Parliamentary privileges play a pivotal role in the functioning of the Indian Parliament ensuring that its members can carry out their duties without unnecessary external interference. These privileges while often appear as ceremonial, serve a larger purpose safe-guarding the integrity, dignity and independent functioning of Parliament. The concept of Parliamentary Privileges, which originated in the British Parliament, was inherited by India due to its colonial past.

In India, Parliamentary Privileges serve not only to protect the Parliamentary process but also to ensure the proper functioning of a democratic government. They allow members of Parliament to participate in debates, pass laws and represent their constituents without fear of external pressures, legal consequences, or undue influence. As such, Parliamentary Privileges act as a foundational pillar for upholding democratic principles in the country.

7.3 Structure of Indian Parliament

The Constitution of India, republican in character and federal in structure, embodies the salient features of the parliamentary system. It provides for a Parliament for the Union consisting of the President and the two Houses, namely, the Rajya Sabha (Council of States) and the Lok Sabha (House of the People).

7.3.1 Lok Sabha(House of People)

The Lok Sabha is the lower house of the Parliament and represents the people of India directly. The members are elected by the people of India through general elections hold every five years. The number of members in the Lok Sabha cannot exceed 552 and they represent constituencies across the country. The speaker of the Lok Sabha is elected by the members, presides over the meetings and ensures during debate.

7.3.2 Rajya Sabha(Council of States)

The Rajya Sabha is the upper house of Parliament and represents the State and Union Territories, using a system of proportional representation. The Vice-President of India serves as the ex-officio Chairman of the Rajya Sabha. The Chairman and Deputy Chairman are responsible for maintaining order and decorum in the house.

7.3.3 President of India

The President of India is the constitutional Head of the State and is an essential part of the Parliament. The President's role is largely ceremonial, and he holds significant powers on certain circumstances, such as when a bill is passed by both houses or when a State of emergency declared.

7.4 Parliamentary Practices and Procedures

Parliamentary practices and Procedures in India are guided by the Constitution. The rules of procedures for smooth functioning of the parliament have developed over the years. These practices and procedures govern the conduct of business, discussions, debates, voting and other functions of Parliament which can be discussed in the following manner:

- Sessions of Parliament : Parliament holds three regular Sessions each year, the Budget Session, the Monsoon Session and the Winter Session. These Sessions are divided into sittings, which are the individual meetings of the House. During a Session, Parliament meets on specific days to transact business.
- Quorum : A quorum refers to the minimum number of members required to be present for the House to conduct business. In the Lok Sabha, the Quorum is one-tenth of the total membership of the House.

- Order of Business: The Order of Business refers to the items listed for discussion on action in the house in a particular day. It includes the introduction of bills, motions, questions and discussions or action in the House on a particular day. It includes the introduction of bills, motions, questions and discussions on various issues. The speaker or Chairman ensures that the business is conducted in orderly manner.
- Question Hour: One of the most important features of Parliamentary practice is the Question Hour which is held everyday during a Session, usually at the beginning of the sitting. It is a time when members ask questions to the Government and Ministers who are required to answer them. The questions can be written or oral, requiring ministers to provide answers in the House.
- Debates: Parliamentary debates are a key feature of the democratic process, allowing members to express their views on bills, policies and issues of national importance. A bill is usually debated at several stages: first reading(introduction), second reading (general discussions) and third reading (final approval).

In addition to bills, resolutions, motions and other matters can also be debated. The Speaker or Chairman controls the proceedings and ensures the debates are conducted in a disciplined manner.

- Bills and Legislation: The introduction of a bill in Parliament is an essential step in the legislative process. Bills can be introduced by the Government(Government Bills)or by the individual members.
- Private Members' Bills: Once a bill is introduced, it is debated and may go through a service of readings and Committee scrutiny before it is passed by both houses. After passing both houses, the bill is sent to the President for assent. If the President gives assent, it becomes law.
- Motions and Resolutions: Motions are proposals made by members for the consideration of the House to seek approval, discussion or action on a particular matter. A motion can be formal or informal.
- Committees : Committees are vital part of Parliamentary Practice in India. They play a key role in scrutinizing legislation, examining policy, ensuring government accountability. There are different types of committees in parliament, including standing committees, select committees and joint committees. These committees consist of members from both houses and focus on various areas such as finance, defence and social justice.

- Voting : Voting is an essential aspect of Parliamentary practice, used to decide on bills, motions and practice and solutions. In both the Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha, voting may be conducted through a voice vote, division vote or electronic voting. A majority vote is required to pass most legislative measures. The Speaker or Chairman decides on the mode of voting, depending on the circumstances. The process ensures that decisions are made democratically and transparently.
- Adjournment and Suspension : Adjournment refers to the suspension of a sitting until later time or date. The Speaker or Chairman may adjourn a session or sitting due to various reasons such as disorder, lack of quorum, or the completion of the day's agenda.

Suspension refers to temporary removal of a member from the house for violating rules or causing disruptions. A member can be suspended by the Speaker or Chairman for a specified period.

- Privileges and Immunities of Members: Members of Parliament enjoy certain privileges and immunities including freedom of speech within the House, Protection from arrest while attending Parliament Sessions and immunity from legal actions related to their Parliamentary activities.

7.5 Role of Opposition

In India, the opposition plays a crucial role in the functioning of Parliament. The main duties of the opposition include:

- Criticizing government policies and actions.
- Holding the government accountable through debates, questions and motions.
- Offering alternative views and solutions on National issues.
- Ensuring transparency and fairness in the legislative process.

The leader of the largest opposition party is designated as the Leader of the opposition and they are provided with certain privileges, such as participating in key committees and engaging with the Government on various matters.

7.6 Challenges in Parliamentary Practice

While India's Parliamentary system is designed to promote democracy, it faces several challenges which are discussed below:

Disruptions and unruly behavior: Frequent disruptions in proceedings undermine the functioning of Parliament. Protest, Walkouts and disruptions by members can hinder important legislative work.

Lack of meaningful debate: On occasions, details are superficial and the focus shifts to party politics rather than constructive discussions on issues.

Delays in Legislation : Due to procedural complexities and political deadlock, legislation is sometimes delayed, affecting the timely implementation of policies.

7.7 Parliamentary Privileges

Parliamentary Privileges refers to the special legal protections granted to the members of Parliament to enable them to perform their legislative functions without fear of outside influence. The term 'Privilege' in this context refers to the rights, immunities and protections that Parliament and its members enjoy in the course of their Parliamentary duties.

In India, the source of Parliamentary Privileges are outlined primarily in two key legal documents: The Constitution of India (Art. 105 and 194) and the law made by Parliament. While the Constitution guarantees certain privileges, Parliament has also enacted its own rules and procedures to ensure the protection of these privileges.

Parliamentary Privileges can be classified into two broad categories (a) Collective Privileges (b) Individual Privileges

7.7.1 Privileges of the House Collectively

Collective Privileges are those that are enjoyed by each house of Parliament collectively. They include:

- Make rules to regulate its own procedure and conduct of its business and to adjudicate upon such matters.

- Exclude strangers from its proceedings and hold secret sittings.
- The right to publish its reports, debates and proceedings and also to prohibit others from publishing the same.
- Punish members as well as outsiders for breach of its privileges or its contempt by reprimand, admonition or imprisonment.
- Right to receive immediate information of the arrest, detention, conviction, imprisonment and release of a member.
- Institute inquiries and orders the attendance of witnesses and send for relevant papers and records.
- The Courts are prohibited to inquire into the proceedings of a House of Committees.
- No person can be arrested and no legal process can be served within the precincts of the House without the permission of the Presiding Officer.

7.7.2 Privileges enjoyed by the members individually

These privileges are enjoyed by the members individually. It includes:

- Freedom of speech in Parliament : No member is liable to any proceedings in any court for anything said or any vote given by him in Parliament on its committees. The freedom is subject to the provisions of the Constitution and to the rules and standing orders regulating the procedure of Parliament.
- Protection from arrest : In Civil Cases during the Session of Parliament 40 days before the beginning and 40-days after the end of Session. This privilege is not available in Criminal Cases or preventive detention cases.
- Exemption from Jury Service: Members can refuse to give evidence and appear as a witness in a case pending in a Court when Parliament is in Session. \
- Privilege of Confidentiality: Certain deliberations, documents and proceedings within Parliament are protected under the Privilege of Confidentiality.
- Privilege from Obstruction and Molestation: MPS enjoy protection from molestation or any form of obstruction while performing their Parliamentary duties.
- Exemption from Legal Actions for Parliamentary Functions: Members of Parliament cannot be sued for defamation or held liable for any statement or vote made within the House

7.7.3 Breach of Privileges and Contempt of Parliament

A breach of privilege occurs when the rights or privileges of Parliament or its members are violated. A breach may involve a variety of actions including interference with the free speech of an M.P., the obstruction of Parliamentary proceedings, or any attempt to disrespect the authority or dignity of the House.

7.7.4 Power of Parliament to Punish for Contempt

Parliament has the authority to take actions against any breach of privilege or contempt committed against it. Parliament protects its members and may take actions on the following grounds.

- Freedom of Speech: This privilege ensures that M.Ps. can speak, debate and express their views without fear of demotion suits or legal consequences
- Parliamentary Privileges and the Press: The Press plays a critical role in informing the public about the proceedings of Parliament. However, the media must operate within the framework of Parliamentary privileges and should not violate the rights of Parliament. The relationship between Parliamentary Privileges and the Press is delicate, as the freedom of Press is a fundamental right, but it must not undermine the integrity of Parliamentary functions.

The Media must be careful when reporting on certain matters that are under sub-judice, as this could be deemed as contempt of Parliament. Thus, while the Media has the right to report freely, it must respect confidentiality of Parliamentary matters to avoid Contempt.

- Privileges of Freedom from Arrest or Molestation :

Members of Parliament enjoy certain legal protections including the privilege of freedom from arrest in Civil matters during Parliament Sessions and for a short period before and after a Session. This privilege ensures that M.Ps can perform their duties without the fear of being obstructed by legal proceedings.

7.8 Criticism

- Contradicts Constitutionalism: The founding father envisaged codification of Parliamentary Privileges by Parliament by law. But the absence of codified laws gives unfettered power to the Parliament, which goes contrary to the idea of Constitutionalism.

- Outdated Concept: Parliamentary privileges originated during the struggle for democracy and Citizen's rights in Britain, between a monarch and Parliament, as Kings used to interfere in Parliamentary affairs. However, such situations do not exist in India.
- Undefined Boundaries: Since no law has made and these privileges remain undefined, it has been a matter of debate that what constitutes the breach of privilege and what punishment it will entail.
- Protect Corrupt Members: Legislators have relied on Privileges to protect themselves from corruption charges. The best example is the P.V. Narasimha Rao Case.
- Tool to Suppress Genuine Criticism: The restrictive interpretation of the Supreme Court holding freedom of speech subject to legislative privileges has been misused from time to time, mostly as a weapon against Journalists and Critics.

7.9 Conclusion

Parliamentary practice in India is rooted in the principles of democracy, accountability and transparency. The Parliament's role in law making, policy discussion of the government is Central to India's democratic structure. As India grows politically and economically, the efficacy of parliamentary practice will be vital in addressing the needs of diverse and rapidly evolving nation. On the other hand, Parliamentary privileges act as a crucial aspect of the legislative system, providing lawmakers and legislative institutions with essential rights and immunities utmost necessary for the effective functioning of democracy. Rooted in constitutional provisions and historical precedents, these privileges empower parliamentarians to carry out their duties without fear or hindrance, ensuring the autonomy, integrity, and efficiency of legislative bodies. There is a need for proper codification of privileges, as suggested by the National Commission to review the working of the Constitution in its report in 2002. For this, India can look into Australia, as the country has codified the privileges and working without much tussle since 1987.

Parliamentary Privileges are fundamental to the functioning of a democratic legislature in India. These privileges ensure that Parliament operates independently and efficiently and without external interference while those privileges grant substantial powers to members of Parliament, they are not without limitations.

8.1 Objective

After studying this unit learners will be able to :

- Understand the aim of the framers of the Constitution to have a constitutional head in the country
- Know the essential Qualification required to become the President.
- Examine the powers and functions of the Indian President including the emergency powers
- Assess the powers as given by the Constitution and the real experience in Indian politics
- Analyse the constitutional position of the President of India
- Know vice President highest dignitary next to President
- Understand the function of Vice-President
- Realise the position of Vice-President
- Explain the origin of emergency provisions under British rule in India
- Analyse the conditions in which the President can proclaim a national emergency under Article 352
- Discuss the various effects of National Emergency relating to the executive, legislative and financial matters and fundamental Rights.

- Explain the circumstances in which President can proclaim 360
- Discuss the effects of an emergency in the state on President's rule.

8.2 Introduction

India has adopted a federal system of government. At the head of the Union executive, stands the President of India. The Constitution of India provides for a President of India and the executive power of the Union Government including the supreme command of the defence forces, is vested on him/her. Infact, Article 52 states that there shall be a President of India. Article 53 declares that the executive power of the Union shall be vested in the President. However, it must be noted that India has adopted for a Parliamentary form of government in which the President happens to be the constitutional head and the real executive powrs vested in the Council of Ministers. The Prime Minister being head of the Council of Ministers is the real head of the executive.

The Constitution of India Provides for a Vice President who serves as the second highest dignity in the country after the President. The office of the Vice President of India, as envisaged by the constitution, combined legislative and executive responsibilites in such a way so us to ensure the smooth functioning of the Indian parliamentary system as well as overall governance of the country.

Almost all constitutions are intended to cope with uncertain times and events. therefore, emergency provisions are highly important. In constitutional terms, an emergency is a situation that includes 'some imminent danger to the life of the nation, requiring some immediate action' by the government to preserve the prevailing constitutional order. the concept of emergency has passed into political theory. However, the exercise of emergency powers is oftentimes curtailed by various conditions, both in theory and in practice. To guard against the accidental emergence of dictatorship as a result of war, external aggression, or internal disturbance, it is always desirable to make specific emergency provisions in the constitution. With this end in view, the Constituion of India has allotted a separate part altogether to emergency provisions. Part XVIII, therefore, is an element of modernism in our Constitution.

8.3 President of India

The position of the President in our Constitution is one of the highest honours, dignity and prestige. All executive powers of the Union is vested in him and is to the exercised by him either directly on through officers subordinate to him. Article 74 mandates that there shall be a Council of Minister to aid and advice the President in the exercise of his/her functions. It is further Prescribed that President shall act in accordance with such advice. The constitution has no article stating that the President is answerable or responsible to Loksabha.

8.4 Essential Qualifications

Article 58 of the Constitution requires that a candidate for the office of the President should possess the following qualifications.

- He/She should be a Citizen of India
- He/She must have completed 35 years of age
- He/She must possess all qualifications prescribed for election as a member of the Lok Sabha
- Besides He/She must not hold any office of profit under the government of India or any state Government or any local authority subject to the control of central or State Government.
- Article 59 says that she/he must not be a member of either house of Parliament or of any State Legislature.

8.5 Election of the President

The procedure of Presidential election is contained in Article 54 and 55 of our Constitution. The President of India is elected by indirect election, that is, by an electoral college, in accordance with the system of proportional representation by means of a single transferable vote. According to Article 54 the Electoral College shall consist of —

- (a) The elected members of both houses of Parliament and
- (b) The elected members of the Legislative Assemblies of the States.

Article 55 provides for the formula of uniformity in the scale of representation of different states, as far as practicable, by incorporating the method of proportional representation with single transferable vote system. This condition seeks to ensure that the votes of the states, in the aggregate, in the Electoral College for the election of the President, shall be equal to that of the people of the country as a whole. In this way the President shall be a representative of the nation as well as a representative of the people in the different States. It also gives recognition to the status of the States in the federal system.

The whole procedure of Presidential election has been discussed by J.C.Johari with the help of the following steps :

- Each elected member of a State Legislative Assembly shall have as many votes as there are the multiples of one thousand in the quotient by dividing the population of the State as given in the last census report by the total number of the elected members of the Assembly. Moreover, if after taking the said multiples of one thousand, the remainder is more than 500 then the votes of each member shall be further increased by one. Its formula may be put as under :

$$\begin{array}{l} \text{Total number of votes} \\ \text{of an elected M.L.A.} \end{array} = \frac{\text{Population of the State}}{\text{Total no. of elected M.L.A.'s}} \div 1,000$$

To take a hypothetical example, we may say, that if there is a population of 5,000,000 in a State and there are 50 elected M.L.A.s, then the value of the votes of each of them will be: $5,000,000 / 50 = 100,000 / 1000 = 100$.

- Each elected member of the Parliament shall have such number of votes as may be obtained by dividing the total number of votes assigned to all the elected M.L.A.'s of the country by the total strength of the elected M.P.'s is to be counted as one vote more, otherwise it shall be discarded. Its formula may be put as under :

$$\begin{array}{l} \text{Total number of votes} \\ \text{of an elected M.P.} \end{array} = \frac{\text{Total number of votes assigned to all elected M.L.A.'s of the country}}{\text{Total no. of the elected members of Parliaments}}$$

To take a hypothetical example again, we may say that in case the total value of votes of all the elected M.L.A.'s of the country is 2,00,000 and the total strength of the elected M.P.'s is 500, then the value of the votes of each elected M.P. will be 400.

- Finally, it is provided that the election of the President shall be by secret ballot and in accordance with the system of proportional representation with single transferable vote. It means that the voter shall be given a ballot paper having the names and party symbols of the candidates on the left side with blank columns on the right that he/she has to fill up by showing his/her preferences. The voter shall place the figures of 1,2,3 and so on in the blank columns to show his/her order of preferences after the polling is over, counting shall take place. First of all, invalid paper shall be rejected and electoral quota shall be taken out by means of this formula :

Then counting will begin. In case a candidate secures vote's upto the figure of electoral quota in the first round, he/she shall be declared elected. Otherwise, subsequent rounds shall be made to declare the results. A candidate having least number of votes shall be eliminated and his/her votes shall be transferred to other candidates according to second preferences. Thus, the votes of other candidates will be enhanced. The process will continue until the result is available.

A historical study of the Presidential polls tells us that not first, second and third, but the fourth and fifth elections assumed unprecedented significance. The fourth election of 1967 and, shortly after that, the fifth one of 1969 made a history of their own in view of the dwindling position of the Congress Party heading towards an inevitable split. The fourth Presidential election witnessed a meaningful political contest between a united Congress and a more or less united Opposition. It looked like a straight fight between Dr. Zakir Hussain as the nominee of the Congress party and K. Subba Rao as a chosen leader of the opposition parties, excluding the leftist element. But a more significant episode took place in the fifth Presidential poll of 1969. It marked an unprecedented contest between a divided Congress and a disunited opposition each thriving on the bickering of the other. The result was that no candidate could win in the first round and the victory of the unofficial Congress nominee (Mr. V.V.Giri) at the expense of the official candidate (Mr.N.Sanjiva Reddy) occurred owing to the process of elimination.

8.6 Evaluation of the method of election of the President

A critical examination of the system of the Presidential election in India shows that there are certain serious loopholes in it though some of them have been removed in course of time :

1. The expression of Article 55(3) providing for proportional representation system is incorrect in the sense that there can be no proportion unless there are at least two seats. That is, the system of proportional representation cannot apply to a single member constituency. Prof. M. P. Sharma was the first critic to point out in 1950 that the nomenclature of proportional representation is incorrect. According to him, the question of proportion can arise only when there are at least two things to compare. Infact in his book entitled The Government of the Indian Republic, he argued in favour of preferential or alternative vote system.

2. The Constitution is not clear as to what shall happen if the Electoral College is in a lame-duck situation. The XI Constitution Amendment Act was rushed through in 1961 to provide that the election of the President shall not be invalid if there were some vacancies in the Electoral College. However, it does not lay down whether the election will take place if any state is under President's rule. It must also be noted that a new device of half state emergency was invented in 1966 to keep the Legislative Assembly of Punjab under suspended animation. the question arises as to what shall happen if there is no Legislative Assembly in a state. This controversy arose in 1974 owing to President's rule in Gujrat. The matter was referred by the President to the Supreme Court for its advisory opinion. The Court advised in favour of the Government desiring election without a State Assembly.
3. The present system of Presidential election hardly provides any chance for the election of a non political persoality. The prospects of victory are there for one supported by the party having its overwhelming majority in the Electoral College, or for one backed by a combination of parties, big and small, that somehow manage to come together for the purposes of having a friend of their own in the Rastrapati Bhawan.
4. The procedure of Presidential election is highly complex and is beyond the understanding of the ordinary citizens. If a political party ceases to have unanimous and absolute majority in both the houses of the Parliament and if, in such a situation many candidates of different political parties express their desires to contest for Presidential election then, there is no doubt that such a procedure of Presidential election is bound to be even more complicated.
5. Dr. K.V.Rao in his book entitled Parliamentary Democracy of India has mentioned the voting system of the President as highly unscientific. According to him, this system of election is more or less like a knock out tournament since in the method of proportional representation the first preference is given a greater value compared to the second one.

On the question of Presidential election opinion in the Constituent Assembly was at first divided. There were those who advocated the adoption of the Presidential system of government prevalent in the United States of America and advocated in favour of the direct election. But they formed only a small minority and the overwhenlming majority was decisively in favour of an indirect election. Several reasons were cited in this regard by the members. They are :

- 1 India has adopted a parliamentary system of government. The President is a mere titular head in such a system. If the President is directly elected then there might arise a possibility of conflict between the President and the Prime Minister. It is not desirable for the President to get involved into a conflict with the Prime Minister and council of Ministers.
2. The role of the President in India is mere consitutional. It was also desired by some other members that, as the manner of direct election would amount to a colossal waste of time, energy and money and also would lead to immense political difficulties, the President should be elected by the member of the Parliament.
- 3, Incase of direct election of the President for two or more candidates there is a possibility of electing the one who has the support of the majority.

As such what was finally accepted was the Nehru –Ambedkar formula of indirect election of the President by an enlarged electoral college consisting of the elected members of the Union and the State legislatures in accordance with the principle of proportional representation with single transferable vote system. This formula, as stressed by Nehru and Ambedkar, had the support of three essential reasons-vast size of our electorate, strain on the administrative machinery and nominal position of the head of the State in our parliamentary form of the government. In this way, the principle of the indirect election of the President had its happy coincidence with the framework of our federal system implying division of powers between the Centre and the States with the President being a chosen nominee of both. Thus, it has been remarked that the method adopted for the eletion of our President "is an original contribution to constitutional practice."

8.7 Tenure and Removal from Office

The President holds his/her office for a period of five years from the date he/she takes the oath in the presence of the Chief Justice of India. As the Constitution say nothing regarding the number of terms that a person may avail of, it is clear that the President is elegible for any number of elections. The President may also resign before the expiration of his/her term of office for any number of elections. The President may also resign before the expiration of his/her term of office for any reason. It is provided that his/her resignation should be addressed to the Vice-President who is required to communicate it to the Speaker of the Lok Sabha. A voluntary resignation of the President may presumably be in any of the following four cases :

1. He/she may resign due to the reason of continued ill-health.
2. There may be a voluntary abdication in a case where the President may not be in harmony with the Council of Ministers and would prefer to quit rather than create a constitutional crisis. The resignation in such a situation may also be due to a directive from the high command of the party in order to avoid the likely conflict.
3. The resignation of the President may also be to avoid removal by impeachment when such proceedings seem to be in progress.

The resignation of the President may also be a threat against the ministry or the majority party on some vital issue which might reveal something damaging to the ministers who can thus, be coerced to reconsider their stand, reconsider their differences, if possible, or offer themselves to resign.

Infact a vacancy of the office of the President may be caused in any of the following ways—

- (i) On the expiry of his/her term of five years.
- (ii) By his/her death.
- (iii) By his/her resignation
- (iv) On his/her removal by impeachment.
- (v) Otherwise.

When the vacancy is going to be caused by the expiration of the term of hte sitting President, an election to fill the vacancy must be be completed before the expiration of the term [Articel 62(1)] but it is at the same time provided that the outgoing President must continue to hold office, until his/her successor entirs upon his/her office [Art 56(1)].

In case of a vacancy arising due to reason of any cuase other than the expiry of the term of the incumbent in office, an election to fill the vacancy must be held as soon as possible after, and in no case later than, six months from the date of occurrence of the vacancy.

Apart from the permanent vacancy, the President may be temporarily unable to discharge his/her functions, owing to his/her absence from India, illness or any other cause, in which case the Vice President shall discharge his/her functions until the date on which the President resumes his/her duties. [Art 65 (2)].

Article 56(1) provides that the President of India may be removed by the process of impeachment for the 'violation of the Constitution.' An impeachment is a quasi-judicial procedure in Parliament. Either house may prefer the charge of violation of the Constitution before the other house which shall then either investigate the charge itself, or cause the charge to be investigated. But the charge cannot be preferred by a house unless—

- (a) A resolution containing the proposal is moved after a 14 days' notice in writing signed by not less than $\frac{1}{4}$ of the total number of members of that house and
- (b) The resolution is then passed by a majority of not less than $\frac{2}{3}$ of the total membership of the house.

The President shall have a right to appear and to be represented at such investigation. If, as a result of the investigation, a resolution is passed by not less than $\frac{2}{3}$ of the total membership of the house before which the charge has been preferred declaring that the charge has been sustained, such resolution shall have the effect of removing the President from his/her office with effect from the date on which such resolution is passed [Art 61]. Since the Constitution provides the mode and ground for removing the President, he/she cannot be removed otherwise than by impeachment, in accordance with the terms of Arts. 56 and 61.

A critical examination of the procedure for the impeachment of the President shows that it is full of loopholes and inconsistencies which may be enumerated as under :

- The phrase 'violation of the Constitution' is delightfully vague. It is not clear as to what it includes and what it excludes. One may, and one may not agree with the view of Dr. Ambedkar that President's refusal to summon the Parliament, for example, on the advice of the Prime Minister constitutes a violation of the Constitution. Prof. B. M. Sharma feels, that any act of the President without or against the wishes of the Council of Ministers would amount to a violation of the Constitution.
- The members of the state legislatures have been deprived of any part in this process in spite of the fact that they have their full part in the election of the President. There ought to have been some provision for the ratificatory role of the state legislative assemblies.
- The provision of at least $\frac{1}{4}$ members at the time of the initiation of the move in either house of the Parliament and of $\frac{2}{3}$ majority of the whole house at the time of the adoption of the resolution include all the members of the house whether elected or nominated. One may ask, as to why the nominated members of the house have been given the right to take part in the impeachment proceedings when they have no such rights in matters of Presidential election.
- The provision that the other house of the Parliament shall investigate the charge is understandable but it is not clear whether the house will do the tedious job itself or appoint some judicial commission for the said purpose.

- It is not clear, as to what time the investigating house will give to the President for making his/her defence, since the term 'short notice' does not give any idea of specific time period and personal equation with the President and are more likely to influence the outcome.
- As the President has the power to summon and prorogue the parliament and dissolve the Lok Sabha, he/she might use these powers thereby delaying the process of impeachment.
- The Constitution makes no mention of the disqualifications that a person shall incur after his/her removal from the office of the President.
- Above all, the requirement of the 2/3 majority of the house makes the whole affair highly tedious that goes to the benefit to the President.

8.8 Powers and Functions

India is a democratic republic. As such, it has a democratically elected Government. That is why, the head of the State is neither a nominated representative, nor a hereditary monarch, but an elected representative of the people even though the election may be indirect. The president of India is the head of the State and occupies the highest office in India. Under Article 53 of the Constitution, the executive power of the Union is vested in the President who is empowered to exercise it either directly or through officers subordinate to him/her. Owing to the manifold expansion of the functions of the State, all residuary functions have practically passed into the hands of the executive. Viewed in this perspective, it appears that the President is the highest authority of the land in matters of executive as well as legislative powers. For the sake of convenience, the normal powers and functions of the President can be classified into five categories namely-Executive, Legislative, Financial, Judicial and others. Let us discuss them in the following manner :-

Executive Powers

The President is the chief executive of the Indian administration. The supreme executive authority of the Union is vested in him/her that he/she can exercise it either directly or through officers subordinate to him/her. The executive power may be enumerated in the following manner :-

1. The entire administration of the Union Government is conducted in the name of the President and all important decisions of the Government of India are formally taken by him/her. He/she makes rules of business whereby the work of the Government is conducted. He/she also allocates works among the Ministers.

2. The President must be kept informed by the Prime Minister of all decisions of the cabinet. He/she can ask the Prime minister to submit a decision of any Minister for the consideration of the Council of Ministers in order to have the decision of the cabinet as a whole on that important subject.
3. Important appointments are made by the President and they include the Prime Minister and all Union Ministers and Deputy Ministers, Attorney General of India, Comptroller and Auditor General of India and so on. Besides he/she has the power to appoint the Chairman and members of several commissions and statutory bodies like the Election Commission, Finance Commission, Official Language Commission and so on. As he/she is the appointing authority, he/she can also remove the officers appointed by him/her in certain situations. For instance, he/she can dismiss the Judge of the Supreme Court or of a High Court and can even remove A member of the UPSC after having an enquiry report from a judge of the Supreme court.
4. The President is the administrator of all Union Territories and Tribal areas. Every union territory is administered by him/her through an administrator appointed by him/her. H/she may also entrust the administration of a neighbouring union territory to the Governor of a state who will act according to the instructions of the President and not according to the Council of Ministers of his/her State.
5. By virtue of being the head of the State, the President maintains the foreign relations. All diplomatic business is conducted in the name of the President. All treaties and international agreements are negotiated in his/her name, though they cannot be effected unless ratified by the Parliament subsequently.
6. The President is the Supreme Commander of the Defence Forces. He/she appoints the Chiefs of the Army, Navy and Air Force. He/she may confer the title of Field Marshall. He/she is the head of the National Defence Committee. Thus, as per the decision of this important body, he/she may make a declaration of war and peace.
7. The President has the power of making rules and regulations governing matters like the Joint Session of the Parliament, appointment of the officers of the Supreme Court, administrative power of the Comptroller and Auditor General and so on. Similarly the prior approval of the President is necessary for certain administrative actions or decisions of other authorities as those of the Supreme Court governing its procedure, determination of the forms of accounts by the Comptroller and Auditor General and Union Public Service Commission serving the needs of some of the States.

8. Finally, the President can issue directives to the State Governments whereby their administration should be carried on. In this direction, he/she has the power of exercising superintendence and control over the administration of the States. He/she can issue instructions which the State Governments must follow to ensure due compliance with the Union Laws and unimpeded operation of the union administration. In case a State Government fails to carry out the instructions or directions of the President, he/she may invoke Article 356 to take over its administration in his/her own hands.

Legislative Powers

Like the British Monarch the President is the integral part of the Parliament. Our Constitutional arrangement like that of its English counterpart should be described in this connection, as the President in Parliament. The legislative powers of the President should be taken as a supplementary part of his/her formal powers vested in him/her as the Head of the State. The legislative powers of the President can be enumerated in the following manner :

1. The President has the power to summon and prorogue the session of the Parliament. He/she can dissolve the Lok Sabha. It is required that the President shall summon the sessions of the Parliament in a way that the intervening gap is of a duration of not more than six months. In case of a deadlock situation between the two houses on a non-money bill, the President may call a joint session of the Parliament and frame rules for the transaction of business therein.
2. The President nominates twelve members to the Rajya Sabha from among persons having special knowledge or practical experience in respects of literature, science, arts and social service. He/she can nominate two persons from the Anglo Indian Community to the Lok Sabha in case he/she finds that this community has not been able to have its adequate representation in the popular chamber.
3. The President has the power to address and send messages to the Parliament. He/she may address either house of the Parliament or both assembled together and for that purpose require the attendance of the members. The first session of the Parliament after a General election and its first session of a new year must open with the inaugural address of the President. The President may send his/her message to either house of Parliament with respect to a bill then pending or otherwise, and may be required by the President to be taken up for consideration.
4. The bills passed by the Parliament can only become laws after the President has given his/her assent to them. The President has veto power over bills passed by the Parliament. In the case of a Non-Money Bill, he/she may either give his/her assent, or withhold it or he/she may return the bill to the Parliament for its reconsideration. It is provided, that in case the same bill is re passed by the Parliament, whether his/her recommendations have been accommodated or not, he/she cannot withhold his/her assent. However, it must be noted that he/she has no veto power over the money bills and constitutional amendment bills nor does he/she have a pocket veto like that of the American President.

5. Money bills cannot be introduced in the Lok Sabha without prior consent of the President. Bills seeking alterations of State boundaries or changes in the name of State again has to be introduced in the Parliament with the prior consent of the President. This category also includes a bill making provision for the enactment of certain laws relating to some language, or an amendment affecting taxation in which the States are interested, or which involves expenditure from the Consolidated Fund of India.
6. In the event of some special necessity, but at a time when the Parliament is not in session, the president may promulgate an ordinance that shall have the force of law. Such a step is taken by the President if he/she is satisfied that the obtaining circumstances so require. The 42nd Amendment Act has made the Presidential act immuned from judicial scrutiny but the 44th Amendment Act has repealed it. The President may withdraw his/her ordinance at any time, or it shall cease to have effect after six weeks.
7. The President is required to lay before the parliament, the reports and recommendations of several important bodies like the Union Public Service Commission, Finance Commission, Comptroller and Auditor General of India and so on.
8. The President has absolute veto power over bills passed by the State Legislatures. In case of a state bill which may be reserved by the Governor for the consideration of the President, if it happens to be essential by the Parliament or may be in conflict with the Union legislation already in force, or with any policy matter considered essential by the Governor of the state. The President for such bills may give his/her assent, withhold it, with or without assigning any reason, or may return it to the state after seeking the opinion of his/her Council of Ministers or of the Supreme Court.
9. Finally, the President has the power to direct by a public notification that from such date, as may be specified therein, some Union or State law shall not apply to any major part or shall apply the subject to such exceptions or modifications as may be specified therein.

Financial Powers

The financial powers of the President may include the following :-

1. No money bill and particularly no bill imposing or varying any tax or duty in which the states are interested can be introduced in the Lok Sabha without his/her prior recommendations.
2. The Contingency Fund of India is at his/her disposal. He/she can make advances out of it to meet unforeseen expenditure pending its authorization by the Parliament.
3. The President shall cause to be laid before the Parliament the budget and supplementary budget if any, for its approval.
4. The President can also appoint from time to time a Finance Commission to make recommendations regarding the distribution of certain taxes between the Union and the States. He/she may take action on the report of the Finance Commission, if he/she thinks it to be necessary.
5. The President has the power of determine state's share of the income tax, and the amount of yearly grants-in-aid to certain eastern states in lieu of their share of the jute export duty.

Judicial Powers

The judicial powers of the President constitute his/her prerogative of mercy. He/she has the power to pardon offenders, or remit, or suspend or commute their sentence in three cases—

- i) Where the punishment is given by the court martial
- ii) Where it is for an offence against a law relating to a matter to which the executive power of the Union extends and
- iii) Where it is a sentence of death.

In Kehar Sing's case in the year 1989 the following principles were laid down :-

- a) The convict seeking relief has no right to insist on oral hearing.
- b) No guideline needs to be laid down by the Supreme Court for the exercise of the power.
- c) The power is to be exercised by the President on the advice of the Central Government.
- d) The President can go into the merits of the case and take a different view.
- e) Exercise of the power by the President is not open to judicial review.

Miscellaneous Powers

There are some miscellaneous powers of the President which are the following :

- The President may refer any question of public importance involving a question of law as well as of fact to the Supreme Court for having its opinion
- He/she may make regulations determining the number of the members of the Union Public Service Commission, their tenure and conditions of service etc.
- In the matter of official language, although the use of English has been retained by the Official language Act of 1963 (as amended in 1967) he/she can authorize the use of Hindi in addition to it for such official purposes as he/she thinks fit and may appoint the Official Language Commission from time to time for their recommendations over the issue.
- The President has some very important powers in regard to the administration of Jammu and Kashmir. He/she may issue orders for the extension of the provision of fundamental rights, or of the jurisdiction of the Election Commission and the Supreme Court. His/her prerogative of mercy covers the state of Jammu and Kashmir as well.

8.9 Emergency Powers

The executive of Indian administration is assigned with certain special powers to meet the critical situation. This is required since normal powers do not help to face the abnormal or emergency situation. This is more required in case of a federal system of administration since in a federation the power is decentralized. The abnormal functions and powers of the President are contained in Part XVIII of the Constitution titled, 'Emergency Provisions'. The Constitution stipulates three kinds of emergencies namely the National Emergency caused by war, external aggression or armed rebellion, in the country (Art 352); State Emergency caused by the breakdown of constitutional machinery in a state (Art 356) and Financial Emergency when the financial stability or the credit of India or any part thereof is in danger (Art 360). Let us discuss these three emergency powers of the President in the following manner :

National Emergency

Article 352 empowers the President to declare national Emergency whenever he/she is satisfied that a serious situation has arisen, or is most likely to arise, threatening the security of the country by war, external aggression or armed rebellion in the country. The satisfaction of the President, for all practical purposes, depends upon the advice of the Council of Ministers. It is, however, subject to the control of the Parliament. Such a Proclamation shall be laid before the parliament and unless approved by it shall cease to have its effect. Such a proclamation can remain in force for a period of one month at the most, or its extension must be approved by the parliament. The constitution, further, provides that in case the Lok Sabha stands dissolved, the power of giving any approval shall be exercised by the Rajya Sabha. If the Rajya Sabha passes it, it must still be approved by the house within thirty days after the meeting of the new Lok Sabha. If the Rajya Sabha itself has not approved the proclamation, it will cease to be valid. It must also be noted that the power of the President to declare an Emergency may be made use of even before the actual occurrence of the aggression or disturbance, if the President is satisfied that there is imminent danger.

The 44th Constitutional Amendment Act of 1978 has made some important changes. Apart from substituting the phrase 'internal disturbance' by 'armed rebellion' and reducing the period of 'two months' by 'one month' at the most whereby the declaration of the President may remain imposed without the approval of the Parliament, it makes the following important arrangements :-

1. Such a proclamation can be made by the president on the written advice of the Union Cabinet.
2. The approval of the parliament shall require adoption of the resolution in each house by a majority of the members, present and voting.
3. A specific time limit has now been set. It says that the extension of duration in one instance cannot be for a period of more than six months. However, no maximum time-limit has been specified.
4. It is also given that at least one tenth members of Lok Sabha may place a requisition of a special session at any time to reconsider the continuity of the proclamation. Such a notice shall be addressed to the Speaker (in case the house is in session) or to the President (in case the house is not in session). Thus, a special sitting would be held within fourteen days of the receipt of such notice.
5. Such a proclamation may be varied or revoked by the President at any time by a subsequent proclamation.

The effects of a Proclamation of Emergency may be discussed under four heads namely Executive ii) Legislative iii) Financial and iv) As to Fundamenta Rights. For our convenience, we will discuss them in the following manner :-

- (i) Executive : When a proclamation of emergency has been made, the executive power of the Union shall, during the operation of the proclamation extends to the giving of directions to any state as to the manner in which the executive power thereof is to be exercised [Art 353(1)]. In normal times, the Union Executive has the power to give directions to a state, which includes only the matters specified in Arts. 256-257. But under a proclamation of emergency, though the State Government will not be suspended, it will be under the complete control of the Union Executive, and the administration of the country insofar as the proclamation goes, will function as under a unitary system with local sub-divisions.

- (ii) Legislative : (a) While a proclamation of emergency is in operation, Parliament may, by law, extend the normal life of the Lok Sabha for a period not exceeding one year at a time and not extending in any case beyond the period of six months after the period of proclamation has ceased to operate. (b) During the operation of Proclamation of Emergency, parliament shall have the power to legislate as regards State List as well [Art 250(1)] So far as, the Union is concerned, the Union Parliament may meet the emergency by legislation over any subject as may be necessary as if, the Constitution were unitary. (c) In order to carry out the laws made by the Union parliament under its extended jurisdiction as outlined above, parliament shall also have the power to make laws, in respect of any matter, even though such matter normally belonged to state's jurisdiction [Art 353(b)].
- (iii) Financial : During the operation of the proclamation of Emergency the President shall have the constitutional power to modify the provisions of the Constitution relating to the allocation of financial resource relation between the Union and the States, by his/her own order. But no such order shall have effect beyond the financial year in which the proclamation itself ceases to operate, and further such order of the President shall be subject to approval by the parliament [Art 354].
- (iv) As regards Fundamental Rights : Articles 358-359 lay down the effects of a proclamation of emergency upon fundamental rights. With a proclamation of National Emergency Article 358 comes into operation automatically to suspend Art 19. Again the suspension of enforcement under Article 359 shall relate only to those fundamental rights which are specified in the President's order, excepting Articles 20 and 21. The President shall be entitled to suspend fundamental freedoms enshrined in Article 19 and their enforcement given in Arts 32 and 226 of the Constitution. He/she shall also be entitled for suspending the enforcement of any of the fundamental rights except those of life and personal liberty given in Articles 20 and 21. It is, however, required that such an order of the President shall be placed for the approval of the Parliament, as soon as possible, It does leave some option for the President to make reasonable delay in placing his/her order for the suspension of enforcement of fundamental rights before the Parliament for its approval.

National Emergency has been declared in our country three times so far. For the first time, emergency was declared on 26 October 1962 after China attacked the Indian borders in the north-east and lasted till to January 1968. For the second time, it was declared on 3 December 1971 in the wake of the second India-Pakistan war, and was lifted on 21 March 1977. Third national emergency (called internal emergency) was imposed on 25 June 1975. This emergency was declared on the ground of internal disturbance. Both the second and third proclamations were revoked in March, 1977.

State Emergency

The provision of State Emergency is contained in Art 356 of the Constitution that empowers the President to take over the administration of any state in the event of the breakdown of the constitutional machinery there. Either on the report of the Governor of the state concerned or on the basis of his/her own satisfaction, that virtually implies the satisfaction of the Union Cabinet, the President may invoke this article of the Constitution. The proclamation under Art. 356, shall remain in force for a period of two months at the most, unless the period of extension is approved by the Parliament. In regard to the duration of this type of emergency, the constitution provides that a resolution to this effect must be passed by each house in with simple majority. In case the Lok Sabha stands dissolved the Rajya Sabha may pass a resolution to this effect. However, the duration so extended by the Rajya Sabha shall continue for thirty days at the most. However, 44th Amendment Act has once again restored the original position of six months. The total period of state emergency cannot go beyond three years.

It should carefully be noted here that phrase 'breakdown of the constitutional machinery in the states' as described by M.C. Setalvad, is of 'widest import'. In June, 1977 it was invoked by the Janata government to sack nine Congress Government on the plea that the Lok Sabha election results of March, 1977 had demonstrated loss of people's faith in Congress rule. The Congress (I) Government under Mrs. Gandhi took almost a similar stand some three years after.

The scrutiny of the political development, in this direction, leaves this important impression that the rulers of the centre has largely may use of this important reserve power in the interest of their party politics. While factional rivalry between the two congress leaders like Gopi Chand Bhargava and Bhim Sen Sachar was enough to call for the invocation of the Art. 356 in Punjab for the first time in 1951, smooth transfer of the assets and liabilities between the state of Punjab and the newly created state of Haryana warranted the imposition of state emergency in 1966. The extraordinary arrangement of half state emergency was withdrawn after the state of Haryana found its place in the political map of India. We find that the Centre has made use of this reserve power sometimes to remove a political deadlock and sometimes to maintain the status quo in its own favour, while at other times to frustrate the efforts of other parties to have the opportunity of making an alternative government. This constitutional provision has been said to be explained by the ruling party at the Centre according to its political expediency. That is why, a good number of states have come under the President's rule on several occasions.

Again, one peculiar development that has taken place in this regard is the imposition of, what may be termed, 'half emergency'. It depends upon the will of the President to dissolve or suspend the State Legislative Assembly. In case the Assembly is dissolved, there is full state emergency and the way is cleared for the next general election, in case there is half emergency, it means that the Assembly is placed under 'suspended animation' and it depends upon the President to revive it or to destroy it.

The effects of the imposition of emergency under Art 356 may be given below :

1. The President shall assume all functions of the State Government and conduct its administration through the Governor or administrator who may, or may not, be assisted with some advisors.
2. As the state legislature shall be out of work on account of being dissolved or kept in a state of suspended animation, the Parliament shall have the power to make laws or pass budget for that state. It should be noted here that the law made by the Parliament for such a state during this period shall remain in force unless withdrawn by it earlier, but cease to operate beyond a period of six months at the most after the revocation of the emergency.
3. In case the Lok Sabha is not in session, the President may issue an order authorizing the expenditure out of the Consolidated Fund of that state subject to the eventual sanction of the Parliament.
4. The President may make any necessary or incidental or consequential changes in the provisions of the Constitution relating to the state authority so as to give desirable effect to the objects of the proclamation. The President either on his/her own initiative or on the resolution of the Parliament may confer powers or impose duties upon the Union, its officers and authorities.
5. This type of emergency does and entitle the President to curtail or take away the powers of the High Court.

Emergency under Article 356 was first imposed in 1951 in the state of Punjab. In 1959, Kerala was put under the President's Rule. There have been many cases of proclamation of state emergencies over the years like in Orissa in 1961, Haryana in 1967, U.P. in 1970, Tamil Nadu in 1976, nine states in India in 1977, Pondicherry in 1978 and so on. However, after 1995 the use of this provision has rarely been made.

Financial Emergency

If the President is satisfied that a situation has arisen whereby the financial stability or credit of India or of any part of the territory thereof is threatened, he/she may by a proclamation make a declaration to that effect [Art 360(1)].

The consequences of such declaration are :

1. During the period any such proclamation is in operation, the executive authority of the Union shall extend to the giving of directions to any state to observe such canons of financial propriety as may be specified in the directions.
2. The President may give any direction that includes a provision requiring the reduction of the salaries and allowances of all or of any class of persons serving in connection with the affairs of the State Governments, or a provision requiring that all money bills or other bills to which the provision of Art. 270 apply to be reserved for his/her consideration by the Governors after they are passed by the legislatures of the States.
3. It shall be competent for the President during the period that any such proclamation is in operation to issue directions for the reduction of salaries and allowances of all or any class of persons serving in connection with the affairs of the Union including the Judges of the Supreme Court and the High Court [Art 360 (3) and (4)].

The language of Art 360 is delightfully vague. It is not clear whether proclamation of such an emergency shall apply to the whole of the country or to some of its part or parts. It may also be pointed out that while other types of emergencies shall be declared in the event of some factual situation, it might be invoked in the event of the opinion of the President acting on the advice of his/her Council of Ministers. The most formidable part of this provision finds place in its psychological impact. Instead of dealing with a situation of emergency, it might lead to the emergence of a situation of greater emergency. Finance is a very delicate matter and any declaration of emergency in this regard would create such a panic as any bring about a condition of economic instability. Till date the financial emergency has never been proclaimed in India.

8.10 Critical Appraisal of Powers

The enormous powers of the President during the times of three kinds of emergencies have been studied by the critics with a sense of lurking apprehensions. These have been labelled as 'undemocratic' 'unfederal' and inherent with the possibilities of any amount of mischief.

1. It is pointed out that these provisions confer sweeping power on the President who may transform himself/herself from the role of a guardian to a power drunk ruler.
2. The emergency provisions are incompatible with the doctrine of federalism. In fact on the unscrupulous use and deliberate misuse of Art 356, Prof. Rao comments that, no doubt, our constitution contains many unfederal features, but this Article "may be called the crown of all".
3. A deeper study of the provision of the State Emergency leads to the examination of many serious loopholes. If the people are the makers of the Government, they are capable enough to be also its unmakers, or the judges, or the controllers of its activities. The issue then becomes like a tussle between the centre and the people of the state.
4. What is a matter of grave concern is that the duration of national and financial emergencies can be extended for any length of time and the government may not like to revoke it even when normal times may be said to prevail.

8.11 Position of the President

In view of the powers of the President we need to analyse the position that he/she occupies in the political system. The Indian Constitution has hardly any detailed explanation with regard to the real nature of the Indian Presidency. An overall assessment however, suggests that in different aspects the President has been assigned with greater powers by the Constitution of India. Despite such enormous powers assigned to the President by the Constitution, yet like Pylee, we too fear whether these powers are at all to be exercised by him/her or not. On the answer to this question will depend the real position of the President in the governmental system established by the Constitution rather than what may appear from a literal reading of the Constitutional provisions. Infact to a great extent the position of the President depends on the nature of relationship which he/she shares with the Council of Ministers more particularly with that of the Prime Minister.

In a Parliamentary form of government, the tenure of office of the virtual executive is dependent on the will of the Legislature while in a Presidential government the tenure of office of the executive is independent of the will of the Legislature. Thus, in the Presidential form, the model for which is the United States-the President is the real head of the executive who is elected by the people for a fixed term. He/she is independent of the Legislature as regards his/her tenure and is not responsible to the Legislature for his/her acts. On the other hand, in the parliamentary system represented by England, the head of the executive i.e. the Crown is a mere titular head and the virtual executive power is wielded by the Cabinet.

Being a Republic, India could not have a hereditary monarch. So an elected President is at the head of the executive power in India. The tenure of his/her office is for a fixed term of years as of the American President. But on the other hand, he/she is more akin to the English king than the American President in so far as he/she has no 'functions' to discharge on his/her own authority. While the Cabinet of the American President is responsible to himself/herself and not to the Congress, the Council of Ministers of our President shall be responsible to the Parliament. The reason why, the framers of the Constitution discarded the American model lies in the fact, that in combining stability with responsibility, they gave more importance to the latter and preferred the system of 'daily assessment of responsibility' to the theory of 'periodic assessment' upon which the American system is founded. Under the American system, conflicts are bound to occur between the Executive, Legislature and Judiciary. What was wanted by the framers of the Constitution was that India on her attaining freedom was a smooth form of government which would be conducive to the manifold development of the country without the least friction. Thus, parliamentary system was better suited than the presidential.

In due time, a serious controversy had arisen with regard to the real position of the Indian President and the relation on which he/she shares with that of the Council of Ministers. A section of constitutional experts theoretically believed that the President is the real executive. They affirm that our President is much more than the mere replica of the English Monarch, since he/she is endowed with an area of discretionary powers whereby he/she may act like an independent ruler over and above the head of the Council of Ministers and the Parliament and he/she may choose to establish what may be termed as 'constitutional dictatorship'. On the other hand, there is a second school known as the Political School who believed that the President is the mere constitutional head. Infact, they designate our President as the prototype of English Monarch and carry their argument to the extent of treating him/her as a powerless officer, virtually a constitutional non entity. Now, let us examine the logical arguments of each school one by one. the first or the legal school advanced several arguments to show that the President may enhance his/her authority to act like real executive. Such arguments may be enumerated as under :-

1. According to Article 53(1) of the Indian Constitution the executive power of the Union shall be vested on the President and shall be exercised by him/her either directly or through his/her officers subordinate to him/her and this to be exercised in accordance with the Constitution. To many constitutional experts, the subordinate officers as mentioned in Article 53 and the Council of Ministers as mentioned in Article 74 are replica of each other. So, the Council of Ministers are the officials placed under the President and it is the President who can exert his/her commands over them.

2. According to Article 75(1), it is the President who appoints the Prime Minister and other ministers. They remain in their post at the pleasure of the President. Though it is mentioned in the Constitution that the President is to act on the aid and advice of the Council of Ministers yet there still remains an area of what may be termed as prerogative powers where the President may act independently. He/she may at times use these prerogatives in the matter of appointment and dismissal of the Prime Minister and in a very limited measure in the matter of dissolution of the Lok Sabha.
3. When the Parliament is not in session, the President may promulgate an ordinance if he/she is satisfied that circumstances exist compelling him/her to take immediate action. A Presidential Ordinance has the same force and effect as an Act of Parliament. The President may also withdraw the Ordinance at any time he/she likes. Nowhere in the Constitution it is stated that such Ordinances have to be promulgated on the advice of the Council of Ministers thereby indicating his/her power of discretion.
4. The entire administration of the country is carried out in the name of the President. How the directives are to be made effective depends on the rules and regulations which are being made under his/her name. Not only that but also so far as the legal aspect of these rules are concerned, it cannot be questioned in the judiciary. So according to the Constitution, these directives as issued by the President are not created by the Council of Ministers but by the higher officials in the department of the administration.
5. Indian President is entrusted with certain constitutional powers which may fall under his/her power of prerogatives. The President may proclaim an emergency. Through such proclamation, the President may convert a democratic political system into a dictatorship in which he/she himself/herself may emerge as dictator with immense power. Again, it must at the same time be noted that the President is the supreme commander of the armed forces. All these may make out the passage for his/her despotic rule.
6. According to 42nd and 44th Constitutional Amendment Act the President is bound to act on the advice of the Council of Ministers. Such advice tendered to the President cannot be inquired in any court. Though 42nd Amendment Act has made the advice of the Council of Ministers binding upon the President, the 44th Amendment Act has retained the language of Art 74(1) and added another provision i.e. the provision of asking for recommendation of such advice by the President to the Council of Ministers. So, a new power added to the list of powers enjoyed by the President.

7. It has been argued that if, the President declines to act in accordance to the advice of the Council of Ministers then it is not clearly mentioned in either the 42nd or 44th Amendment Act the punishment which the President may entail. Though there is a provision of impeachment for the violation of the Constitution yet the required majority for an impeachment is not always available to the Union Ministry.
8. The President may want to know regarding an important decision of a minister or Council of Ministers. In this respect, it is the responsibility of the Prime Minister to make him/her acquainted with the decision and provide necessary information in this regard. This implies that he/she is not a mere titular head. He/she may seek for information with regard to the administration of the state.
9. According to Article 53(1) the Indian President has to act in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution. Besides he/she takes an oath to preserve and protect the Constitution. If at any time, the President feels that any particular decision of the Union Cabinet is likely to undermine seriously the Constitution, then the President may reject such an advice and thereby, face the consequences.
10. On several matters like dismissing the ministry, if, it loses its majority in the Parliament, enjoying his/her discretion of appointing the Prime Minister or if none of the political party exerts their majority in forming the government, or even dismissing the Prime Minister, if he/she loses his/her command over the political party, dismissing the Lok Sabha, proroguing and summoning the session of the Parliament or if there is a coalition at the Union or if there is no party demanding majority in the house – in all such cases the President has an area of discretion in which he/she may act independently of the Council of Ministers.

The above arguments show that the President is not a mere constitutional head like that of the British Crown. In contrast to the above arguments, the political school forward their arguments in establishing that he/she is a mere constitutional entity. They forwarded the following arguments in their favour.

1. It is an indisputable fact that India have adopted the parliamentary form of government on the lines of British constitutional system that places our President in the position of the dignified executive of the land. The real working head of the State is not the President but the Prime Minister who along with his/her Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha. Infact, there remained no doubt at all when Dr. B.R.Ambedkar declared that the President occupies the same position as the king in the British Constitution.

2. In carrying out the administration of the country it is the Council of Ministers that are collectively responsible to the Lok Sabha. This is in accordand with Article 75(3) of hte Indian Constitution. So, it implies that the Council of Ministers enjoys the real powers since without granting real powers the question of responsibility does not arise. Thus, it is the responsibility of the Prime Minister with the support of the Council of Ministers to govern the country while the President may be permitted now and then to seek for their aid and advice.
3. There are certain provisions in the Constitution on the basis of which the President is required in almost all the cases to act in accordance with the advice provided to him/her by the Council of Ministers headed by the Prime Minister. In fact the President may likely to execute all his/her executive powers in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution. It is pointed out that the Indian President cannot violate the Constitution. He/she is under and oath to protect and preserve it. In case the President is found guilty, he/she can be removed ty impeachment. Leaving aside his/her normal powers even his/her emergency powers can also be exercised only on the advice of the Cabinet.
4. Article 74(1) says that there shall be a Council of Ministers with Prime Minister at the head to aid and advice the President who shall in the exercise of his/her functions act in accordance with such advice, though he/she may require them to reconsider their view. It is argued that the President has no area of reserve powers where he/she may act without the aid and advice of the Union Council of Ministers.
5. Article 74(1) state that there shall be a Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head to aid and advice the President in the exercise of his/her functions. Though nowhere in the original Constitution, it has been stated that the President is bound to act in accordance to the advice provided to him/her by the Council of Ministers headed by the Prime Minister but the 42nd Amendment Act of the Constitution (1976) modified this provision to the effect that in the exercise of his/her functions, the President shall act in accordance with such advice. The 44th Amendment Act however, added further to Article 74(1) according to which the President may, if require, ask the Council of Ministers to reconsider such advice either generally or otherwise and the President shall act in accordance with the advice tendered after such recommendation. No court of law has the power to enquiry as to whether any advice was given by the Ministers and if so, what it was. So acceptance by the President of the advice tendered by the Council of Ministers has become obligatory, particularly, after the 42nd and 44th Constitutional Amendment.

6. It has been argued that the President is not directly elected by the people. So he/she cannot demand to be representative of the people. On the other hand, the Council of Ministers is constituted by the real representatives of the people. As such on the basis of people's representation, it is Council of Ministers and not the President who wield the real powers. The President has been made a formal or constitutional head of the executive and the real executive powers are vested in the Ministers or the Cabinet.
7. Again to say, that the President may go to the last extent of using his/her military powers to repudiate the control of the Cabinet and the Parliament is altogether implausible in view of his/her authority being very much tied by the Acts of the Parliament and other elaborate arrangements like those of the national Defence Committee. It is on record that President Radhakrishnan felt bewildered when he/she heard the news about the march of our armed forces into the Lahore sector in 1965. Thus, much could happen at the behest of the Prime Minister that he/she communicated to the President afterwards.
8. According to the Constitution, the decision with regard to the policy formulation and its execution is required to be intimated to the President. The President may even seek for information with regard to administration of the country. It is the responsibility of the Prime Minister to convey the decision over the policy formulation and execution to the President. The President may simply be acquainted with the decision. He/she cannot request the Prime Minister or give any advice to him. The decision are however, taken by the Council of Ministers headed by the Prime Minister thereby, making explicitly clear that the Prime Minister is the real executive while the President being the nominal head.
9. Finally, the Supreme Court through its judgements in various cases however, has asserted that the role of the President in Indian administration is mere constitutional. For instance, in several famous cases like Ram Jawaya vs. State of Punjab in 1955, Samsher Singh vs. State of Punjab in 1974, the Supreme Court gave its judgement that India has the same system of parliamentary executive as in England. So, the role of the President like the British Crown will be mere constitutional.

8.12 Vice President of India

Vice President of India is the second highest constitutional office in the country. His office therefore is highly prestigious. The founders of the Indian Constitution framed the office of Vice President of India along the lines of the office of the American Vice-President. The office of the Vice President, as outlined by the Constitution of India advocates legislative and executive responsibilities in such a way so as to ensure the smooth functioning of the Indian parliamentary system as well as the overall governance of the country. Articles 63-71 in Part V of the Constitution of India contain key provisions related to the Vice President of India.

8.13 Election of the Vice President of India

Article 66 of the Indian Constitution deals with the provisions related to the election of the Vice-President of India. The Vice President is elected by an electoral college comprising of the members of both the houses of Parliament at a joint meeting in accordance with the system of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote. In the election of the Vice-President, the voting is done by secret ballot.

8.14 Qualifications for election

To be qualified for election as the vice-President, a person must be

- a citizen of India
 - at least 35 years of age
 - qualified for election as a member of Rajya Sabha
 - must not hold any office of profit.

8.15 Term of office

Vice President is elected for a period of 5 years. The vice President may be terminated earlier than the fixed term either by resignation or by removal. He may be removed from office by a resolution passed by a majority of the then members of Rajya Sabha and agreed to by Lok Sabha (articles 67, 68, and 71). No formal impeachment is mentioned.

8.16 Salary

The Vice-President draws a salary as the Chairman of Rajya Sabha. Presently he receives Rupees four lakhs per month. In addition he is entitled to a daily tax free allowance, free furnished residence, travel, water, electricity, telephone, medical and other facilities. While acting as President or discharging the functions of the President, he gets emoluments of the President.

8.17 Powers and Functions

The power and functions of the Vice-President of India are two-fold as explained in the Constitution of India. Vice President is to act as the ex-officio Chairman of the Rajya Sabha and to preside over the proceedings of the House and functions with reference to all its matters as the counterpart of the speaker in Lok Sabha. It is to be noted that no functions have been assigned to the Vice President by the Constitution of India. By practice, he has come to have several ceremonial functions like meeting ambassadors, visiting foreign dignitaries etc.

According to article 65 Vice President shall act as the President in the event of a vacancy in the office of President by reason of his death, resignation or removal or otherwise. If for any reason President is unable to discharge his functions, Vice President shall discharge his functions. In June 1960, when President Dr. Rajendra Prasad was on a 15 day visit to the Soviet Union the Vice President Dr. Radhakrishnan acted as the president. When the then president Zakir Hussain died in office 3rd May 1969, Vice President V. V. Giri acted as president. All these indicate that the contingency functions of the Vice President are of crucial importance to the nation. Facilitated the Vice President's It should be worthwhile to mention that while Vice President acts as the President or discharges the functions of the President, the Vice President shall not perform the duties of Chairman of Rajya Sabha (article 64).

8.18 Position of Vice President

Constitution of India has not specifically facilitated Vice President's position, rather it has made it clear that vice President has to act as a Deputy President of India. But this unfamous position has significance in maintaining the political continuity of the democratic nation. Although the Constitution does not confer upon the Vice President the authority that it vests on the President as the head of the state, the office of the Vice President has nevertheless been a great dignity and prestige.

8.19 Emergency Provisions

Almost all constitutions are intended to cope with uncertain times and events, therefore, emergency provisions are highly important. In constitutional terms, an emergency is a situation that includes ‘some imminent danger to the life of the nation, requiring some immediate action’ by the government to preserve the prevailing constitutional order. The concept of emergency has passed into political theory. However, the exercise of emergency powers is oftentimes curtailed by various conditions, both in theory and in practice. To guard against the accidental emergence of dictatorship as a result of war, external aggression, or internal disturbance, it is always desirable to make specific emergency provisions in the constitution. With this end in view, the Constitution of India has allotted a separate part altogether to emergency provisions. Part XVIII, therefore, is an element of modernism in our Constitution.

8.20 Origin of emergency provisions under British rule in India

Before the independence of India, the Colonial ruler has also introduced certain emergency provisions for the Governor-General and the Governors of Indian states for managing the affairs of the Indian Colony. In the Government of India Act. 1935, various provisions established the executive’s supremacy over other branches of the government, especially through the execution of emergency provisions. The head of the executive was the Governor-General, a nominee of the British government, who had enormous powers over his dominion. emergency provisions in the 1935 Act were introduced not to preserve the constitutional order, but to provide an opportunity to the colonial rulers to declare a state of siege or to take extra-constitutional steps. Section 12(1) of the 1935 Act defines some special responsibilities of the Governor-General, including-

- (a) the prevention of any great menace to peace or tranquillity of India.
- (b) safeguarding the financial stability and credit of the Federal government.

This section is the source for granting complete freedom to the Governor-General and the Governors of Indian states for proclaiming emergency and promulgating laws accordingly.

The 1935 Act defined two types of emergencies : those emerging from a failure of constitutional machinery (Section-45); and those arising due to 'war or internal disturbance' (Section-102). In the case of failure of constitutional machinery, the Governor-General had vast discretionary powers to proclaim emergency at the Federal level. In contrast, the Federal Legislature was toothless and had no role to play in circumscribing the authority of the Governor-General either by ensuring that the emergency was proclaimed as the last resort or in checking the Governor General's law-making powers for the duration of the emergency.

Nonetheless, the proclamation of emergency had to be approved by the British Parliament within six months of its proclamation, and this extended the period of the emergency for another year from the date of such approval. Overall, an emergency could not carry on continuously for more than three years. Thus, the Governor General's emergency powers were time-bound under the first kind of emergency.

However, the laws made under the exercise of emergency powers could continue to have effect for up to two years after the emergency had expired, unless repealed or re-enacted by the Federal Legislature. Similar emergency powers vested in Governors in their respective provinces, empowering them to proclaim emergency at the provincial level (Section 93).

In the second type of emergency, emerging from war or internal disturbance, the power of proclamation of emergency once again vested in the Governor-General without any checks and balances to ensure its use only in extreme circumstances. As with the first kind of emergency, the British Parliament had to approve the proclamation within six months. However, the second kind was not time-bound and was not subject to any form of legislative approval for continuance in force.

Though, the law-making power with regards to provinces during the emergency was granted to the Federal Legislature. Still, the ultimate authority to repeal or approve a statute remained with the Governor-General.

8.21 Emergency provisions in the Indian Constitution

The Indian Constitution is one of the few constitutions which provide some provisions for dealing with extraordinary situations. In doing so it follows the Government of India Act 1935, which embodied emergency provisions in section 45 in the case of the Centre and section 93 in the case of the Provinces. Moreover, present provisions for an emergency in India are borrowed from the Weimar Constitution of Germany. Emergency Provisions in the Constitution of India are contained in Part-18 and are embodied in 9 articles (352-360). Three types of extraordinary or crises are envisioned. First, when there is a war or external aggression has been committed or there is the threat of the same, or if internal disturbances amounting to armed rebellion take place. Second, when it becomes impossible for the government of a State to be carried on in accordance with the Constitution; and third, if the credit or financial stability of the country is threatened. In each case, the Indian Constitution gives President the authority to declare three types of emergencies with varying consequences.

- a) National Emergency (Article 352)
- b) Emergency in state or president's rule (Article 356) and
- c) Financial Emergency (Article 360)

However, it's only in some of the special and pre-mentioned cases that such a huge step can be taken by the president of the country. Also, with the amendments, it has now been mandated to present the declaration of emergency in the written form.

8.21.1 National Emergency (Article 352)

Article 352 states that if the President is satisfied that a grave emergency exists whereby the security of India or any part of the territory thereof is threatened, whether, by war or external aggression or armed rebellion, he/she may, by Proclamation, make a declaration to that effect in respect of the whole of India or of such part of the territory thereof as may be specified in the Proclamation. The President can declare a national emergency even before the actual occurrence of war or armed rebellion or external aggression. The term 'armed rebellion' is inserted by the 44th amendment of the constitution, 1978. Before this term, it was known as an internal disturbance.

8.21.1.1 Parliamentary approval and duration

The proclamation of emergency must be approved by both the houses of the Parliament within one month from the date of its issue.

However, if the proclamation of emergency is issued at a time when the Lok Sabha has been dissolved or the dissolution takes place during one month without approving the proclamation, then the proclamation survives until 30 days from the first sitting of Lok Sabha after its reconstitution, provided the Rajya Sabha has in the meantime approved it.

If approved by both the houses, the Emergency continues for 6 months and can be extended to an indefinite period with an approval of the Parliament for every six months.

Every resolution approving the proclamation of emergency or its continuance must be passed by either House of Parliament by a special majority. Special majority means a majority of $\frac{2}{3}^{\text{rd}}$ members present and voting supported by more than 50% of the total strength of the house.

8.21.1.2 Revocation of proclamation

A proclamation of Emergency may be revoked by the President at any time by a subsequent proclamation. Such proclamation does not require parliamentary approval. The emergency must be revoked if the Lok Sabha passes a resolution by a simple majority disapproving its continuation.

8.21.1.3 Effects of National Emergency

A proclamation of Emergency has drastic and wide-ranging effects on the political system. These consequences can be categorised into 3 groups :

i) Effects on the centre-state relations :

While a proclamation of Emergency is in force, the normal fabric of the Centre-State relations undergoes a basic change. this can be studied under three heads :

Executive : Centre becomes entitled to give executive directions to a state on 'any' matter

Legislative : The parliament becomes empowered to make laws on any subject mentioned in the state list, the president can issue ordinances on State subjects also, if the parliament is not in session. The laws made on state subjects by the parliament become inoperative six months after the emergency has ceased to be in operation.

Financial : The president can modify the constitutional distribution of revenues between the centre and the states.

ii) Effect on the life of the Lok Sabha and State Assembly :

iii) While a proclamation of National Emergency is in operation, the life of the Lok Sabha may be extended beyond the normal term for one year at a time. However, this extension cannot continue beyond a period of six months after the emergency has ceased to operate.

Similarly, the Parliament may extend the normal tenure of a state Legislative Assembly by one year each time during a national emergency, subject to a maximum period of six months after the emergency has ceased to operate.

iv) Effect on fundamental rights :

Articles 358 and 359 describe the effect of a National Emergency on Fundamental Rights. These two provisions are explained below :

1. Suspension of Fundamental rights under Article 19 : According to Article 358, when a proclamation of National Emergency is made, the six fundamental rights under article 19 are automatically suspended. Article 19 is automatically revived after the expiry of the emergency.
2. The 44th Amendment Act laid out that Article 19 can only be suspended when the National Emergency is laid on the grounds of war or external aggression and not in the case of armed rebellion.
3. Suspension of other Fundamental Rights : Under Article 359, the President is authorised to suspend, by order, the right to move any court for the enforcement of Fundamental Rights during a National Emergency. Thus, remedial measures are suspended and not the Fundamental Rights.
 - a. The suspension of enforcement relates to only those Fundamental Rights that are specified in the Presidential Order.
 - b. The suspension could be for the period during the operation of an emergency or for a shorter period.
 - c. The Order should be laid before each House of Parliament for approval.
 - d. The 44 Amendment Act mandates that the President cannot suspend the right to move the court for the enforcement of Fundamental Rights guaranteed by Articles 20 and 21.

8.21.1.4 Uses and Reasons of National Emergency in India :

This type of emergency has been proclaimed three times so far in 1962, 1971, and 1975. All three emergencies were held between the years 1962 to 1977.

The first national emergency was imposed on the country from October 26, 1962, to January 10, 1968, by then-president, Dr. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan. It was regarding the rising external aggression during the Indo-China war.

The second time, the national emergency was imposed from December 3, 1971, to March 21, 1972. This emergency was imposed by the president, V.V. Giri. Here also, the reason was the external aggression but during the Indo-Pak war.

The third time a national emergency was imposed by the President, Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed. Indira Gandhi, then-prime minister asked for permission from the president and was successful in declaring a national emergency.

It lasted for nineteen months, that is from 25 June 1975 to 21 March 1977. Here, the reason was stated to be a clash between the legislature and the Judiciary.

8.21.2 Emergency in state or President's rule (Article 356)

When the constitutional machinery breaks down in a state, the president's rule is imposed by centre. This can be proclaimed if the president is satisfied that the governance of a state can't be carried in accordance with the constitution. In this case, the president can act with or without the governor's report. Also when a state doesn't follow any directive from the centre, the president's rule can be imposed.

8.21.2.1 Grounds of imposition :

The president's ruler can be proclaimed under Articles 355, 356 and 365. Article 355 says it shall be the duty of the union to protect every state against external aggression and internal disturbance and to ensure that the government of every state is carried on in accordance with the provision of the constitution.

Article 356 says that if the president, on receipt of a report from the Governor of a state or otherwise, is satisfied that a situation has arisen in which the Government of the state cannot be carried on in accordance with the provisions of this constitution, he/she may issue a proclamation.

Article 365 says that whenever a state fails to comply with or to give effect to any direction from the centre, it will be lawful for the President to hold that a situation has arisen in which the government of the state cannot be carried on in accordance with the provisions of the constitution.

By that proclamation, the president-

- a) may assume to him/herself all or any of the powers vested to the Governor.
- b) May declare that the powers of the legislature of the state shall be exercisable to the President.

The president cannot, however, assume to himself. Any of the power vested in the High court or suspend the operation of any provisions of the Constitution relating to the high Court.

The Parliament can confer on the President, the power to make laws for the state. The parliament may also authorise the president to delegate such power to any other authority as specified by him/herself.

If the Lok Sabha is not in session, the President may authorise expenditure from the consolidated fund of the state, pending sanction of such expenditure by the parliament.

8.21.2.2 Approval of the Parliament and duration :

- a) Under article 356, the president acts on the report of the Governor, or otherwise, the president can act even without the Governor's report. A proclamation issued under article 356 must be laid before each House of the Parliament and must be approved by both the houses of parliament by a simple majority within two months from the date of its issue. However, if the proclamation of President's rule is issued at a time when the Lok Sabha has been dissolved or the dissolution of the Lok Sabha takes place during two months without approving the proclamation, then the proclamation survives until 30 days from the first sitting of the Lok Sabha after its reconstitution, provided that the Rajya Sabha approves it in the meantime.

- b) A proclamation so approved shall, unless revoked, be in operation for six months from the date of the issue of the proclamation. It can be approved by the parliament for a future period of six months.
- c) A proclamation issued under Art. 356, can, therefore, be in force normally for a maximum period of one year. Stretch.

However, it can be extended by the parliament not beyond three years from the date of issue of the proclamation, if

- i) A proclamation of emergency under art. 352 is in operation in the whole of India or any part of the country at the time of passing of such resolution.
- ii) The Election commission certifies that the continuance in force of the proclamation beyond the one year is necessary on account of difficulties in holding the general election to the legislative assembly of the concerned state.

8.21.2.3 Revocation of proclamation

A president's proclamation can be revoked by the president anytime [this doesn't need parliament's approval]. Parliament on its own can't revoke the president's rule.

The President rule has been imposed four times in West Bengal

Term	Date of imposition	Date of revocation	Duration	Reasons to impose the President Rules
1	1 July 1962	8 July 1962	7 days	Interim Period between the death of incumbent Chief Minister and election of the new leader.
2	20 February 1968	25 February 1969	1 year, 5 days	The state was placed under the president's rule following the collapse of two successive short-lived coalition governments.
3	19 March 1970	2 April 1971	1 year, 14 days	The collapse of the United Front
4	28 June 1971	19 March 1972	265 days	The collapse of the United Front

8.21.2.4 Effects of Emergency in the state or president's rule

The President acquires the following extraordinary powers when the President's rule is imposed in a state :

The President of India assumes all executive power of the state to him/herself. The state administration is run directly by him/her or through a person the designated for the purpose by him/her. It is the Governor of state who runs the state administration on behalf of the President.

During the President's rule, the state assembly is either dissolved or kept under suspension. The State assembly is kept under suspended animation if there is hope that a new Council of Ministers can be formed within a short time. During this period, the MLAs do not lose their membership of the Assembly, nor there is an election held to the Assembly.

The President makes laws on all subjects included in the State List. It also passes the state budget. However, if the Lok Sabha is not in session, the president may authorise any expenditure from the Consolidated Fund of State.

The president can declare that the powers of the state legislature are to be exercised by the parliament.

He can take all other necessary steps including the suspension of the constitutional provisions relating to anybody or authority in the state.

During the state emergency, the High Court of the state, as before, functions independently without any of its powers being curtailed. The President has also the power to proclaim guidelines in the state.

Scope of judicial review : The 38th Amendment act of 1975 made the satisfaction of the President in invoking Article 356 final and conclusive which would not be challenged in any court on any ground.

But, this provision was subsequently deleted by the 44th Amendment Act of 1978 implying that the satisfaction of the President is not beyond judicial review. That means, Presidential proclamation imposing the president's rule is subject to judicial review

8.21.3 Financial Emergency (Art. 360)

Grounds of declaration : Article 360 empowers the president to proclaim a Financial Emergency if he is satisfied that a situation has arisen due to which the financial stability or credit of India or any part of its territory is threatened.

The authority to impose such an emergency is with the President only. However, this does not exempt the President's power from judicial review. The 44th Amendment, 1978 says that the top court has the power to review the declaration of Financial Emergency.

Parliamentary approval and duration :

A proclamation declaring financial emergency must be approved by both the Houses of Parliament by a simple majority within two months from the date of its issue.

However, if the proclamation of Financial Emergency is issued at a time when the Lok Sabha has been dissolved or the dissolution of the Lok Sabha takes place during two months without approving the proclamation, then the proclamation survives until 30 days from the first sitting of the Lok Sabha after its reconstitution, provided the Rajya Sabha has in the meantime approved it.

Once the declaration is approved by both the Houses it lasts indefinitely till it is revoked (no maximum period) without the need for further legislative approvals. This proclamation may also be revoked by the president at any time without the consent of parliament.

8.21.3.1 Effects of Financial Emergency

Extension of the executive authority of the Union over the financial matters of the States.

The President may order the States to limit the salary, and allowances of government employees or any class of persons serving in the State.

Reservation of all money bills or other financial bills for the consideration of the President after they are passed by the legislature of the State.

Direction from the President for the reduction of salaries and allowances of all or any class of persons serving the Union; and the judges of the Supreme Court and the High Courts.

8.21.3.2 Financial Crisis and Financial Emergency in India :

Financial Emergency has never been imposed in India to date. Though, India faced an economic crisis in 1991 and Covid-19 pandemic in 2020. The crisis of 1991, was the serious financial crisis in the history of India. The Indian economy was in a state of flux. The 1980s saw significant and increasing fiscal imbalances, which contributed to the economic crisis. The federal government's and states' combined cumulative fiscal deficits increased dramatically. India's foreign exchange reserves had depleted to the point that it could only fund three weeks' worth of imports, because of this, the Indian rupee was devaluated sharply. The exchange rate of India was severely adjusted in mid-1991.

But even in such a tough situation that took India to the brink of bankruptcy, the financial emergency was not declared. While this situation posed a classic cause for calling a financial emergency, it was averted by restructuring and devaluing the rupee.

During the lockdown in March 2020, the Center for Accountability and Systemic Change (CASC) filed a writ petition in the form of Public Interest Litigation, requesting that a financial emergency be declared as a result of the Covid-19 outbreak. However, the plea was rejected because though courts have special authority, the law of separation of powers mandates that the president determine the viability of a financial emergency.

The President has the authority to declare a financial emergency, the Supreme Court can only review such declaration. The petition stated that: covid-19 is the country's most serious emergency since independence, and it must be handled in accordance with constitutional laws by a joint command between the Union and state governments. It would help in the recovery of the economy after the nationwide lockdown is over.

8.22 Conclusion

Constitution of India places the President in the category of the English Monarch. The President is the head of the State. He/she is the guardian of the Constitution. But he/she is neither a real executive like the American President, nor he/she is a mere figurehead of no worth like the President of France under the Third and Fourth Republics. If the nature of Presidency is judged from a judicial perspective then the President may appear as a mere political non entity or just like a rubber stamp. But again, if we unfurl the pages of history and examine the role of different Presidents of India, then no wonder the tenure of Dr. Rajendra Prasad earmarked a difference. The way he/she acted in visiting the Somnath temple and then attending the funeral ceremony of Sardar Patel or visiting foreign countries like the Soviet Union or even showing resentment towards Nehru's China's policy when Tibet was raped and so on indicated his/her sensitivity in exercising his/her powers thereby converting the post from a mere non entity to a one with independent authority. Position of the President much depends upon the personal equation of the holder of the office and the role he/ she plays in the moments of exceptional crises. Next to the President of India the highest position in the official Warrant of Precedence of is accorded to the Vice-President. Constitution of India does not confer too much power to the Vice President. In fact, he/she acts as the Deputy Vice-President of India.

Having dealt with all the Emergency provisions, it is easy to see what the purpose was behind making such provisions available in the Constitution in the first place. But in reality, it has been seen that even if these provisions are provided for the security of the nation and also the protection of the people, the provisions in themselves give a lot of drastic discretionary powers in the hands of the Executive. It affects the federal structure of the nation essentially turning it into a unitary one while it seeks to safeguard the interests of the state and the people. It should be a system of check and balance brought into place so that unlike in the 1975 emergency, there is no misuse of power by the ruling party and the executive.

8.23 Summing up

- At the head of the union executive stands the President of India.
- The President of India is elected by indirect election, that is, by an electoral college, in accordance with the system of proportional representation by means of a single transferable vote.

9.1 Objective

The present lesson introduces the learners with :

- The selection, appointment and term of office of the Prime Minister
- A detailed analysis of the powers and functions of the Indian Prime Minister
- The constitutional and real position of the Prime Minister
- Composition and classification of the Union Council of Ministers
- The powers and functions of the Union Council of Ministers

9.2 Introduction

Inspired by the British parliamentary model, India has constituted its administrative system. The framers of our Constitution intended that though formally all executive powers were vested in the President, he/she should act as the constitutional head of the Executive like the English Crown, acting on the advice of Ministers responsible to the popular house of the legislature. In England, the Prime Minister is the keystone of Cabinet arch. Infact the position of the Prime Minister has been described by Lord Morley as primus inter pares i.e., 'first among equals'. In theory, all Ministers or members of the Cabinet have an equal position, all being advisors of the Crown, and all being responsible to Parliament in the same manner. However, just like in England, in India too, the Prime Minister has a pre eminence, by convention and usage. Art 74(1) of the Constitution expressly states that the Prime Minister shall be at the head of the Council of Ministers. Almost all the powers enjoyed by the British Prime Minister through the conventions are in as much in general applicable to the Indian Prime Minister as well. The power of advising the President as regards the appointment of the other Ministers is, thus, embodied in Article 75(1).

As to the function of acting as the channel of communication between the President and the Council of Ministers, Art.78 provides that it shall be the duty of the Prime Minister to communicate to the President all decisions of the affairs of the Union and proposals for legislation. The written provisions of our Constitution in this regard are extremely sketchy. They do not cover the area of entire authority that the Prime Minister has to exercise. Moreover, like in England, the Indian Prime Minister is expected to play the role of the efficient executive in view of the paramount fact that the President constitutes the dignified part of the Union Executive. It should also be borne in mind that there are four important factors that either circumscribe the authority of the Prime Minister or force him/her to push back the barriers in order to play the role of a great national leader. These are written constitution, federal system, judicial review and multi-party system. The functions of the Prime Minister, thus, should be examined in the light of several limitations hedged around his/her office and the ability and the courage with which he/she discharges them for the ultimate good of the people without violating the provisions of the Constitution.

Even then, over the years, the way the Prime Ministers have acted have surely pointed to the direction that the Office of the Prime Minister is significant as well as commands great respect and authority in relation to his/her Cabinet, Council of Ministers, Parliament as well as the President of India.

9.3 Selection and Appointment

The Prime Minister is selected by the party commanding clear majority in the Lok Sabha and appointed by the President. Normally selection by the party comes first and appointment by the President afterwards. What really matters is not the action of the President in issuing invitation to form the government but the role of the party commanding absolute majority in the Lok Sabha that has to deal with the crucial issue of choosing its nominee. In such a situation, the President is expected to act very cautiously. He/she should either invite the leader of the majority party in case he/she is sure that the party has no other possible contestant. He/she must wait till the decision of the party in clear majority is available to him/her in case he/she finds that the battle for selection is impending. As an instance, it is worth to note that President S. Radhakrishnan appointed Gulzarilal Nanda as the officiating Prime Minister after the death of Nehru in response to the recommendations of the Emergency Committee of the cabinet. A new practice started henceforth, that in case of sudden vacancy, the senior most member of the cabinet shall have the chance to act as the officiating Prime Minister until the decision of the majority party is available. A fundamental change, in this direction, occurred in March 1977, when the acting President (B.D. Jatti) appointed Morarji Desai as the fourth Prime Minister of India. The election results registered thumping victory for the Janata Party (a combination of four parties namely, Bharatiya Lok Dal, Congress O, Bharatiya Jana Sangh and Socialists and also in alliance with the CFD, CPM, Akali Dal and the DMK). Infact, the problem of appointing the Prime Minister found its manifestation in the political development of July, 1979 when Morarji Desai, instead of facing the no-confidence motion tabled against his/her ministry by the then leader of the Opposition, Mr. Y. B. Chavan of the Congress (S) resigned. A section of the erstwhile Janata Party formed the Janata (S) and thus, under the leadership of Charan Singh staked its claim. The President gave the first opportunity to the leader of the Opposition. Since, Chavan regretted his/her inability, the claims of the Janata leader (Desai) and of the Janata (S) (Charan Singh) were carefully studied. Both leaders submitted lists of their supporters. Since the side of Charan Singh became heavier the chance of forming an alternative government was given to him by the President with a word of advice that he would seek the confidence of the Lok Sabha at the earliest possible date. However, this government failed to secure the vote of confidence. It fell after 24 days, when the Congress (I) decided not to support the confidence motion tabled by the Prime Minister. Once again, the war of succession ensued. The newly elected leader of the Janata Party (Jagjivan Ram) staked his claim without agreeing to submit a list of his supporters. The President thought mid-term poll as the only way out to solve the tangled issue. So, we see the President, for the first time, exercised his/her discretion and then won the applause of the people for taking the best possible action under the obtaining circumstances. On 31st October 1984, President Zail Singh took a different step by appointing Rajib Gandhi within hours of Mrs. Gandhi's assassination on the advice of some very senior Cabinet Ministers. Subsequently, his name was approved by the CPP. Undoubtedly, the language of Art 75 (1) is quite vague in regard to the appointment of the Prime Minister by the President. It simply says that the Prime Minister shall be appointed by the President. It therefore, says nothing about the discretionary authority of the Head of the Stat in this regard, nor does it lay down anything about the Prime Minister's being a member of the Parliament at the time of appointment. It is further inferable from the said illustration that the President may perhaps be in a position to exercise his/her individual judgement under abnormal conditions, that is, in case no party secures absolute majority in the Lok Sabha. In fact an examination of the whole arrangement leaves an impression that the President may appoint anyone as the Prime Minister provided (i) he/she is able to carry the majority of the members of the Lok Sabha with him/her and (ii) in the event of being the non member of the Parliament, he/she is able to get his/her seat preferably in the Lok Sabha within the period of next six months as happened in the case of P.V.Narasimha Rao.

9.4 Term of Office

Generally the Prime Minister stays in his/her office for a period of five years i.e. from one General election of the Lok Sabha till the next parliamentary election.

However, at the time of extraordinary or emergency situation the period may enhance and so accordingly is enhanced the tenure of the Prime Minister. Again, if Lok Sabha is dissolved by the President before normal terms of five years then that too brings an end to the tenure of the Prime Minister. In other words, the term of Prime Minister actually depends on the term of the Lok Sabha.

9.5 Powers and Functions

There is no doubt that the Indian Constitution confers a position of importance upon the Prime Minister but the Constitution does not confer on the Prime Minister of India any specific powers and functions. Actually, the powers and functions of the Prime Minister can be derived from two major sources. They are firstly, some through the constitutional provisions assigned for the Council of Ministers headed by the Prime Minister and secondly, the norms and conventions of the Parliamentary democracy. To analyse the real powers and functions of the Prime Minister we need to examine the relation which the Prime Minister shares with that of the President, Council of Ministers, Parliament, Political Party to which he/she belonged and the popular masses. For our convenience, let us discuss them in the following manner :

● Prime Minister and the President

As a chief advisor the Prime Minister is the leader of the Council of Ministers. By virtue of his/her position he/she is the chief advisor of the President. On the basis of the advice provided to the President by the Prime Minister the entire administration of the country is carried out. It is on the advice of the Prime Minister that the President makes appointment of several important posts like the Governors of the State, Comptroller and Auditor General, Attorney General, the Chairman of Election Commission and so on. Again, the decision to proclaim an emergency is also done by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister. Art 74(1) of the Constitution mentioned about the advice of the Council of Ministers but in effect, it has virtually turned out to be the advice of the Prime Minister. For instance, it was on the advice of Mrs. Indira Gandhi that in 1975 the controversial decision to proclaim an emergency was made.

Prime Minister is the sole channel of communication between the President and the Council of Ministers. The Constitution enjoins upon him/her to communicate to the President all decisions taken by his/her cabinet and to furnish him/her information relating to the administration of the country as well as the proposals for legislation as the President may call for. It indicates that, like the British Monarch, our President has no official means of knowing anything about cabinet's decision except what the Prime Minister may choose to tell him. Infact the President has the right to be kept informed. Though the cabinet meeting is never presided over by the President, it is the duty of the Prime Minister to communicate to the President either personally or through his/her ministers all decisions of his/her Council of Ministers relating to the administration of affairs to the Union and proposals for legislation. It is, indeed, by meeting the ministers individually that the President knows about the decision taken by them relating to the departments and, if he/she does not agree with any of them, he/she may ask the Prime Minister to submit a matter for the consideration of the Council of Ministers provided it has not already been considered by it.

- Prime Minister and the Council of Ministers

Conventionally, the position of the Prime Minister within the Council of Ministers is usually first amongst equals but in India this is not entirely true. According to Art. 74 of the Indian Constitution the Prime Minister is the leader of the Council of Ministers. So his/her position is at the top. The first and foremost function even the most difficult of all functions, of the Prime Minister relates to the composition of the Council of Ministers. The text of Art 75(1) is very sketchy. It says that all ministers shall be appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister. The selection of the names and the distribution of portfolios among them is a matter of exclusive concern of the Prime Minister and the appointment of the ministers by the President is just mere observance of a technical formality. In a real sense, the function of the President is to accept the lists of the ministers with their portfolios submitted to him/her by the Prime Minister. While forming the Council of Ministers the Prime Minister enjoys the prerogative of selecting his/her colleagues so that he/she can retain his/her strong position within the party and also preserving comfortable majority in the popular chamber of the Parliament. The Indian Prime Ministers, authority in this respect is also circumscribed by various considerations like administrative, political, territorial, religious and the like. Again, there are instances when we find the Prime Minister keen to experiment in forming a Cabinet of all talents. Such had happened in India at the initial stages when Pandit Nehru included in his cabinet leading Non- Congressman like Shanmukham Chetty (a man of parochial disposition by virtue of his intimate association with the Justice Party of Madras), Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (a leader of the depressed classes and highly critical of the Congress policies towards the untouchables), Dr. S. P. Mookerjee (a man of alleged Hindu communalist disposition by virtue of his long association with the Hindu Mahasabha), and John Mathai (an advocate of free enterprise). Again some of the ministers consider and claim themselves to be specially cut out for certain jobs and the Prime Minister has to take their claims into consideration in view of his/her awareness of the political fact that their exclusion may be a source of embarrassment. Some instances are available in our country like Sardar Patel insisted and got the portfolio of Home in the interim Government. Again, T.T. Krishnamachari declined the offer of Nehru to rejoin the cabinet after the third general elections of 1962 unless he was given the portfolio of Economic Coordination. Further, sometimes even the Prime Minister may be compelled by the demands of the senior members of the Party at a particular situation while forming the Council of Ministers. Infact, Mrs. Gandhi's preparedness to take Morarji Desai as her deputy Prime Minister with the portfolio of Finance instead of Home after the Fourth General election of 1967 may be cited as the most glaring case where a powerful party leader could tighten the hands of the Prime Minister resulting in the materialization of a package deal after a lot of intense and tough political bargaining. However, the authority of the Prime Minister with regard to the selection of his/her colleagues and distribution of portfolios among them however, ought to be studied in a very careful manner. True that the hands of the Prime Minister are sometimes tightened by the factors of party politics, it does not imply that his/her colleagues may have very much to say about their political assignments at every turn of movement. Authentic evidence illustrates the point that the party stalwarts, who stake their claims are not unaware of the fact that any serious point of difference with the Prime Minister must not be taken to an unpatchable extent as their dropping out from the first selection might entail their exclusion from office not merely for that term of the Parliament but for the good of all.

Now if the Prime Minister enjoys the prerogative of making his/her Council of Ministers, he/she has the complementary power, equally discretionary in character to a quite large extent, of making changes in it subject to the political considerations before him/her and the circumstances in which he/she is caught up. He/she has the undisputed right to get appointed, reshuffled or even removed his/her colleagues in the interest of his/her effective and efficient administration. He/she may keep any department under his/her control or bifurcate even trifurcate a department to be placed under the charge of a different minister. He/she may, in a direct or indirect manner, demand the resignation of his/her ministers or even advise the President to dismiss one if he/she forfeits his/her confidence. Further, there may arise a situation when a reluctant minister may have no better course than to resign in order to save the position of the Prime Minister feeling equally reluctant to allow his/her colleague to go. It happened in the case of Defence Minister Menon in Jan, 1963 when Nehru yielded to the pressure of circumstances in first demoting and then removing his blue eyed son from his government. As the cabinet is a team of very important ministers the Prime Minister carefully includes only those who are his/her best confidants. Besides, as the element of confidence is quite unstable, changes in the ministerial assignments take place from time to time. However, this is not applicable to a coalition government in the like manner. The way Morarji Desai and V.P.Singh formed Council of Ministers in two installments' is a clear testimony to this fact that the hands of the leader of a coalition government are very much tied by the tugs and pulls of the intra party politics.

● Prime Minister and the Party

The leader of the political party having a majority in the Parliament is appointed as the Prime Minister of the country. So, the party commanding a majority in the Lok Sabha is the very basis of his/her significant position. Practically, the powers of the President and his/her party are interrelated to each other. The Prime Minister is always very careful in retaining the dignity and image of the party both within the house and also outside it. He/she plays a special role in preserving the unity and fraternity amongst the party members. The party provides the Prime Minister with the required support and so in return the party expects a responsible leadership and also expects effort to fulfill the promises it had made to the masses before the election.

To a great extent the fate of the party depends on his/her potential to provide able leadership. The power of the party also depends on the personality and dignity of the concern individual who occupies the office of the Prime Minister. In fact the future of the party depends on several issues, such as, how the Prime Minister carries out the administration of the country, how far he/she succeeds in fulfilling the promises made before the people, formulating and implementing policies in this regard, how far could he/she popularize the governmental programmes and so on. He/she is required to play a lead role in the General Lok Sabha election so that his/her party could manage to win majority seats and thereby, form the Government. Here, it may also be noted that the personality, dignity and popularity of the Prime Minister are used as a means for propaganda for the upcoming elections.

The relationship between the Prime Minister and the Political Party remains incomplete if we do not take into account the relation which the Prime Minister shares with that of the Party President. Although the two great offices of the President of the Party and the Prime Minister seem to be essentially complimentary in theory, the case is quite different in practice. Sometimes the Party President acts as a king maker. Such an incident was evident when the Congress President Mr. Kamraj played the role of a king maker in selecting Mrs. Indira Gandhi for the candidature of the third Prime Minister. However, this trend proved a short lived affair, as the influence of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi did not take long to overshadow the influence of the king maker. It confirmed that the influence of the Congress President will depend upon not only upon her own leadership capacities but also upon the degree to which she enjoys the confidence of the Prime Minister. Again at times the party President surrenders all his/her authority in favour of the Prime Minister thereby, playing the role of an obedient student subservient to the Prime Minister. In this respect, the role played by Congress Party President Mr. Debhanta Barua at the time, when Mrs. Gandhi was the Prime Minister of India is worth mentioning. Again, there are times when the Party President and the Prime Minister are found to be in constant confrontation with each other thereby, balancing the political power to a great extent. As an illustration one can cite the relation between Mr. Kripalani and Pt. Nehru, Nehru and Tandon, Indira Gandhi and Nijlingappa and so on. Moreover, there are occasions when the same individual occupies both the post that is the post of the Party President and that of the Prime Minister. For instance Nehru shortly after the defeat of his candidate, Kripalani in the party elections of 1949, by all means became the centre of power in his party as well as in his government after he virtually grabbed the highest office of the party by the apparently unanimous resolve of the AICC in its meeting held in New Delhi in Oct, 1951. Mrs. Gandhi in her second phase of Prime Ministership became very influential and established her authority over both the party and the government. Again, Prime Minister Rajib Gandhi also held the post of the President in the Party.

● Prime Minister and the Lok Sabha

By virtue of being the leader of the majority party, the Prime Minister functions as the leader of the Lok Sabha as well. In this regard two practices have developed. First, in case the Prime Minister does not belong to the Lok Sabha (as Mrs. Indira Gandhi was a member of the Rajya Sabha at the time of her first appointment in Jan. 1966). Second, it has been the practice that during the protracted absence of the Prime Minister as in the event of his/her going abroad, the minister for Parliamentary Affairs in consultation with the Prime Minister intimates to the Speaker as to who would act as the leader of the house. Thus, the office of the leader of the house has a significance of its own as the Prime Minister is privileged with a dual capacity—leader of the Parliamentary Party and of the Lok Sabha- that makes him/her the central figure in the Parliamentary business.

The functions of the Prime Minister as the leader of the house is very important. He/she makes proposals for the dates of summoning and proroguing the session for the approval of the Speaker. He/she has to draw up the programme of official business to be transacted in a session of Parliament- bills, motions, discussions on various important activities of the government and the like. He/she is the member of the Business Advisory Committee that determines the allocation of time for official bills and other business on the basis of suggestions made by him/her from time to time. He/she shapes the course and content of legislation in as much as often his/her is the final voice in deciding as to what amendments will be acceptable, what private members bill will receive support of the government and whether question should be left to a free vote or a whip be issued invariably. Though it is true, that the President alone can dissolve the house, but it can happen only on the advice of the Prime Minister. However, two important points are taken for consideration by the Prime Minister and the President before resorting to this drastic measure. These are firstly; President must accept the advice of the Prime Minister only when he/she is not a defeated leader of the Council of Ministers and that there are no prospects of forming an alternative ministry. Second, having a multi – party system, the President should be guided more by the practices of the dominions than by the English convention alone.

As the leader of the house, the Prime Minister deals with the procedural matters relating to the business of the house, and advises the house in moments of some difficulty or crisis. He/she can request the Speaker to fix a date for the closed session of the house or move a resolution that a seat of such a member be declared vacant under clause (4) of Art 101 or that the proceedings of the house of a secret session be no longer treated as secret. Two important points should be noted in this direction. First, while acting as the leader of the house, the Prime Minister not merely behaves like the leader of the majority party, it is also expected that he/she should behave like the leader of the house having other parties as well. Thus, the words of the leader of the house are sometimes taken as the voice of the mouthpiece of the whole house. Second, the Prime Minister by virtue of being the leader of the house, in a way becomes the guardian of the legitimate rights of the Opposition. He/she is expected to see as to what the Opposition leaders are really striving for and how far their demands can be conceded.

It is therefore, clear that the Prime Minister by virtue of holding the office of the leader of the house functions vis-à-vis three important counts namely The Speaker, the Government and the Opposition. He/she assists the Speaker in maintaining order and discipline in the house so that parliamentary business is conducted smoothly.

● The Prime Minister and the People

The Prime Minister is the real chief of the executive in India. In this respect he/she is recognized as the mass leader. It is his/her responsibility to realize and understand the public mind and accordingly control it in his/her favour. It is through print and electronic media that propaganda regarding the personality, dedication to truth, bravery and popularity of the Prime Minister is highlighted. Accordingly, the image of the Prime Minister is brightened. All these campaigns create a feeling of trust and attraction towards the Prime Minister. His/her political activity, public speeches, comments over various, issues even his/her dress code, attitude creates an impression in the minds of the people. The success and popularity of the Government to a great extent depends on the role played by the Prime Minister. His ability to lead the country at critical juncture of crisis helps him/her to strengthen his/her position as the Prime Minister. Infact, it is on the popularity of the Prime Minister that the popularity of his/her Government and his/her political party depends. As such he/she is always eager to create a favourable image for his/her Government as well as for his/her political party. The Prime Minister uses the mass media to meet this end. Through television, radio and public meetings the speeches of the Prime Minister reaches the masses. The Prime Minister made the people aware over important governmental socio economic policies of the country. At the time of socio-economic or political crisis the governmental concern over the issues, effort taken at the governmental level to resolve it and employment of governmental mechanisms in this regard is intimated to the public so that they are not panic stricken and feel relieved. Practically, it is the sole responsibility of the Prime Minister to communicate to the people, the governmental opinion over important national and international issues.

9.6 Position of the Prime Minister

The powers and responsibility of the Prime Minister are quite wide in a parliamentary democratic system of India. In reality, it is the Prime Minister who is the leader of the people. The success and failure of the Indian Government to a great extent depends on the leadership provided by the Prime Minister. It is argued, that, over the years the powers and position of the Prime Minister has been enhanced with the centralization of bureaucracy which is placed mainly at the disposal of the Prime Minister. As such many were of the opinion in calling Indian administrative system, instead of a cabinet system as the Prime Ministerial Government. However, in this regard, it is also essential to point out that the Indian Prime Minister cannot convert himself/herself into a dictator since not only the constitutional provisions but there are certain political limitations of his/her powers and authority as well. First of all, public opinion can serve as an important check on the powers of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister cannot ignore the desires and demands of the citizens, since it is on their electoral support that the future existence to political power will depend on. Again, the interest and pressure groups of our country are also eager in carrying out the demands in their favour. Similarly, the criticisms of the governmental policies by the opposition and mass media further checks and balance the powers and authority of the Prime Minister. What are perhaps more interesting lies in the fact that since nineties, due to the formation of coalition government at the centre, the role played by the regional parties has assumed a greater significance. Infact, these regional parties has opened a new vista of an era of political bargain which further restricted the powers of the Prime Minister.

9.7 Union Council of Ministers

According to Article 74, of the Indian Constitution there shall be a Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head to aid and advice the President. The President appoints the leader of the Party having a majority in the Lok Sabha as the Prime Minister. While the Prime Minister is selected by the President, the other Ministers are appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister [Art 75 (1)] and the allocation of portfolios amongst them is also made by him/her. Further, the President's power of dismissing an individual minister is virtually a power in the hands of the Prime Minister. Ministers may be chosen from members of either house and a minister who is a member of one house has a right to speak in and to take part in the proceedings of the other house though he/she has no right to vote in the house of which he/she is not a member (Art 88). Under our Constitution, there is no bar to the appointment of a person from outside the Legislature as Minister. But he/she cannot continue as Minister for more than six months unless he/she secures a seat in either house of the Parliament (by election or nomination as the case may be). By virtue of this provision, Pandit Pant, who was not a member of Parliament, was appointed Minister for the Union and, subsequently, he secured a seat in the Upper house, by election. Even Dr.Manmohan Singh, when he assumed the office of the Prime Minister in 2004 was not a member of the Lok Sabha but that of the Rajya Sabha. Thus, the convention that the Prime Minister belongs to the Lok Sabha has not always strictly been followed.

Earlier the number of members of the Council of Ministers was not specified in the Constitution. By the Constitution 91st Amendment Act, 2003, the total number of ministers, including the Prime Minister, shall not exceed 15% of the total number of the members of the House of the People.

Term of the Council of Ministers

Generally the term of the Council of Ministers is same as that of the term of the Lok Sabha i.e. of 5 years. But, if the Lok Sabha is dissolved before the tenure of 5 years then the term of Council of Ministers will also come to an end. Again if, the tenure is enhanced then the tenure of the Council of Ministers will also enhance. Again, if a vote of No Confidence is passed then in the Lok Sabha, then the Council of Ministers shall be under a constitutional obligation to resign as soon as it loses the confidence of the popular house of the legislature. The collective responsibility is to the House of the People even though some of the ministers may be members of the Council of States. This indicates that their tenure depends upon the support of the majority members within the Lok Sabha. So, long as they could retain their majority in the Lok Sabha the term of their office is ensured and secured.

9.8 Composition and Classification

At this juncture of our discussion, it is essential for us to know what exactly is meant by the term Council of Ministers. According to Prof. D. D. Basu the Council of Ministers is a composite body, consisting of different categories. The Constitution does not classify the members of the Council of Ministers into different ranks. All this has been done informally, following the English practice. It has now got legislative sanction, so far as the Union is concerned, in Section 2 of the Salaries and Allowances of the Ministers Act 1952. Mr. Gopalswami Ayyenger in his report presented in the year 1949, classified the Ministers into three broad categories namely (1) Cabinet Ministers, (2) Ministers of State and (3) the Deputy Ministers.

The rank of different ministers is determined by the Prime Minister according to whose advice the President appoints the ministers and also allocates business amongst them. While the Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the House of the People, Art 78 (c), enjoins the Prime Minister, when required by the President, to submit for the consideration of the Council of Ministers any matter on which a decision has been taken by a minister but which has not been considered by the council. In practice, the Council of Ministers seldom meets as a body. It is the cabinet, an inner body within the council, which shapes the policy of the Government. While cabinet ministers attend meetings of the cabinet of their own right, ministers of state are not members of the cabinet and they can attend only if, invited to attend any particular meeting. A Deputy Minister assists the Minister in Charge of a Department of Ministry and takes no part in Cabinet deliberations. Let us examine these three types in the following manner :-

- Cabinet Ministers

The first categories of ministers are the Cabinet Ministers. They are the members of the cabinet and are in charge of important ministries. They play a major role in the formulation and implementation of governmental policies. Generally, a cabinet is composed of the Prime Minister and the experienced members of the Council of Ministers.

- Ministers of State

The second categories of ministers are known as the Ministers of State. They are not the members of the Cabinet. However, despite being non members of the cabinet they were called upon for attending cabinet meeting in case there is a discussion with related to their concerned department at the cabinet meeting. The Minister of State can be either entrusted with independent charge of a particular department or can be placed under a cabinet minister.

- Deputy Minister

So far as importance and position is concerned, the deputy ministers occupies the third category of ministries. They help the departmental minister in carrying out the administration of the department. They never could attend the cabinet meeting.

Accordingly, as observed by Prof. Pylee a three tier ministerial hierarchy was established, with the cabinet Ministers at the top, Ministers of State in the middle and Deputy Ministers in the lowest rung of the ladder. A clear distinction was drawn between Ministers who were members of the cabinet and others. The cabinet was composed of senior most ministers who were not mere departmental chiefs but whose responsibilities transcended departmental boundaries into the entire field of administration. It was, naturally, a smaller body and the most powerful body in the Government. Thus, the growth of the cabinet as a separate body from the Council of Ministers was only a natural product of the application of the administrative theory of organization. Soon, the cabinet became not only a distinct entity, different from the Council of Ministers, but also an institution with its own detailed organization. In the process, it has also taken over functions assigned by the Constitution to the Council. For instance, the constitutional responsibility of advising the President is the Council's. But this function, today, is exercised exclusively by the cabinet.

Here, it must be noted that in recent years the authority of the cabinet is well established in India. Though theoretically, the real powers and responsibility of the executive are entrusted to the Council of Ministers's but in reality it is the cabinet who wields the actual power. Many describe the dominance of the cabinet as the cabinet dictatorship. Consequently, Lok Sabha controlling the Council of Ministers has been converted into a mere myth. Lok Sabha cannot control the Council of Ministers instead it is the cabinet who regulates the Parliament. So, the first line of leaders belonging to a political party having a majority in the Lok Sabha together constitutes the cabinet who established their supremacy and dominance in the executive.

The strength of the Indian cabinet today, is the result of support that it receives from the party to which it belongs and the overwhelming strength of the party in Parliament. With a stable parliamentary support, the cabinet, in reality, becomes the leader of Parliament. The initiatives for all the policies and programmes of the Government are in the hands of the cabinet. Nevertheless, it must be pointed out that the Indian cabinet has been treating Parliament with greater consideration and respect than is usual elsewhere under conditions of overwhelming parliamentary majorities. This has been mainly due to two reasons. First, on some occasions, on questions of great importance which vitally affect the nation as a whole, the cabinet itself has given over the initiative to Parliament. The best example of this is provided by the initiative taken by Parliament in settling the question of reorganization of the state of Bombay at the time of adoption of the States Reorganization Act of 1956. Secondly, members of Parliament have often evinced a willingness to forget party affiliation when questions of purity in administration are brought before it. On such occasions, the Indian Parliament has shown that it is the mirror and custodian of public opinion in the country and a true representative of the electorate. The manner in which Parliament dealt with the allegations brought before it against a State enterprise like the Life Insurance Corporations in 1957 is a classic example in point. Parliamentary pressure has also brought about perceptible changes in later years in the policies of the government towards industry, labour, taxation, defence, etc.

However, despite the threefold classification of the ministers, it is the Prime Minister who has the final say with regard to the composition, reorganization, distribution of portfolios and dismissal of a minister within the council. In the Indian Constitution there is no mention of the post of Deputy Prime Minister. But in the tenure of different Prime Minister a number of cabinet Minister has been appointed as the Deputy Prime Minister. Even in the report of the Administrative Reforms Commission the post of the deputy Prime Minister was supported. While unfurling the pages of history, we find that when Nehru was the Prime Minister, Sardar Patel was appointed as the Deputy Prime Minister. Again, at the time of Indira Gandhi, Morarji Desai was appointed as the Deputy Prime Minister, when Morarji Desai became the Prime Minister of the Janata Government there were two Deputy Prime Ministers namely Mr. Charan Singh and Mr. Jagjivan Ram and so on.

9.9 Powers and Functions

Today the functions of the cabinet, for all practical purposes, are identified with those assigned to the council under the Constitution. For our convenience they can be summed up in the following manner :-

- Determination and implementation of the policies

Theoretically in a Parliamentary administrative system, it is the Parliament which determines the policy. On the basis of such policies the cabinet takes the official decision and accordingly directs the governmental works. So, cabinet is expected to act as a functional committee of the Parliament. But the real situation is somewhat different from the theoretical position. It is the cabinet who determines the policies. Such policies are recognized and ratified in the Parliament. The cabinet ministers are usually the first rank of leaders of the Party. That too of a party having a majority in the Parliament. So the policies as determined by the cabinet have therefore, the assurance of acceptance and getting ratified in the Parliament. In other words, the policies as determined by the cabinet are therefore, final and their ratification in the Parliament is a mere routine or official function.

- Formulation of Laws

The Parliament is empowered to formulate laws but in reality it is on the initiative of the Council of Ministers that laws are being made. The number of Private Bills by an individual member is hardly any placed before the Lok Sabha. Infact, most of the bills are Governmental and are placed before the Parliament by the Minister. Even with regard to the formulation of the bills the primary role is being played by the cabinet members. The draft of the bills is made under the direction and supervision of the union cabinet. Since the cabinet members enjoyed the support of the majority in the Lok Sabha, so they hardly face any difficulty in passing the bill into a law.

- Administrative Responsibility

The most important role of the cabinet is in the field of administration. Though the Indian Constitution has granted the executive power to the President of the country yet it is the Council of Ministers more particularly the cabinet who carries out the administration of the country. Through the permanent government officials of the various department the concerned ministers discharges the executive functions of the Government. So, the cabinet is the real administrative authority of India. Not only that, the cabinet also plays an active role in implementing the laws passed in the Parliament.

- Financial Responsibility

One of the primary responsibilities of the cabinet is to determine the income and expenditure of the Indian Government. At the beginning of a financial year, an annual budget is presented before the Parliament. In this respect, the primary responsibility of the budget lies with the Finance Minister. But all the major financial issues like imposition of Income Tax, allocation of funds and so on are determined by the cabinet members.

- Ensuring coordination

The cabinet coordinates between the Executive and the Legislature in the Parliament. The role played by the cabinet in this respect is highly significant. All the cabinet ministers are in charge of one and sometimes even more than one departments. Through the officials of the department the ministers discharge their responsibilities. Such a situation demands inter departmental coordination for the smooth functioning of the Government. It is the cabinet who takes serious initiative in retaining coordination amongst the department. For example, it can be cited that the cabinet creates opportunities for consultation and discussion amongst the departments, appoint inter departmental committees and so on. Here, the role played by cabinet Secretariat particularly the role of the Cabinet Secretary deserves a special mention.

- Powers related to Appointment

Article 74 of the Constitution lays down that the President, in the exercise of his/her functions, acts in accordance with the advice tendered by the Council of Ministers. The President appoints Governors, Ambassadors and other diplomatic representatives, the Chief Justice and other Judges of the Supreme Court, High Courts, Attorney General and Auditor General of India and various Commissions such as the Finance Commission of India, and the Election Commission of India. All these appointments are suggested by the cabinet which is the main body of the Council of Ministers and on the basis of such recommendations the President makes all appointments to the posts mentioned above. The President has a power to remove the Attorney-General of India, the Governors of the States, etc. but in removing these officers he/she has to act on the advice of the Council of Ministers.

- Powers related to Foreign States

One of the principal responsibilities of the cabinet is to determine, control and execute the foreign policies. On the basis of political ideology of the existing ruling party at the union, the foreign policy of India is formulated and thereby executed. The External Affairs Department plays a crucial role and this department occupying an important position is placed under a cabinet minister. However, the Prime minister also takes eager interest in supervising and providing leadership in the formulation of foreign policies. Infact, the executive power relating to foreign affairs is exercised by the Council of Ministers in reality. All treaties and international agreements are negotiated and concluded by the Council of Ministers in the name of the President. Declaration of war and conclusion of peace are performed by the Council of Ministers in the name of the President.

- Power related to Emergency

Though constitutionally it is the President who is empowered to declare an emergency yet he/she does so mostly on the advice of the Council of Ministers particularly the Prime Minister. So, the decision of declaration of emergencies, whether arising out of war, aggression or armed rebellion, emergency arising out of failure of constitutional machinery in a State and financial emergency are done or are exercised by the cabinet in the name of the President. Infact, the President can declare emergency only under the written advice of the cabinet specially the Prime Minister.

The above discussion on the powers and functions of the Council of Ministers particularly, the cabinet suggests that the cabinet is the steering wheel of the ship of the State. The cabinet is in practice the Government of India. The voice of the State at a given time, to all intents and purposes, is a voice of the cabinet. That is why S.L. Sikri in his Indian Government and Politics wrote that the cabinet is the core of the Indian Constitutional system. It is also the most powerful organ of the Union Government. Its functions are numerous and as varied as the functions performed by a country's Government.

9.10 Conclusion

Despite several limitations, the Prime Minister need not always be constrained and guided by the political situation of a time. Infact, much depends on the personal equation of the holder of the office of the supreme ruler along with the nature of the prevailing political situation. In case, the Prime Minister has been able to establish his/her legitimacy independently of his/her constitutional and institutional power structure he/she would be in a safe position to exercise more powers than a person whose support structure is coterminous with the legal and constitutional boundaries of the political system. Keeping in view the position of Mrs. Indira Gandhi, one may observe that, in case the Prime Minister succeeds in earning legitimacy from the people and establishes a sort of direct rapport with them then she would enjoy a comfortable situation of less constraints over her authority.

9.11 Summing Up

- Just like in England, in India too, the Prime Minister has a pre eminence, by convention and usage. Art 74(1) of our Constitution expressly states that the Prime Minister shall be at the head of the Council of Ministers.
- According to Article 74 of the Indian Constitution, there shall be a Council of Ministers with the Prime Minister at the head to aid and advice the President. The President appoints the leader of the party having a majority in the Lok Sabha as the Prime Minister. While the Prime Minister is selected by the President, the other ministers are appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister [Art 75 (1)] and the allocation of portfolios amongst them is also made by him/her.
- Generally the Prime Minister stays in his/her office for a period of five years i.e. from one General election of the Lok Sabha till the next Parliamentary election. However, if Lok Sabha is dissolved by the President before normal terms of five years then that too brings an end to the tenure of the Prime Minister.
- The powers and functions of the Prime Minister can be derived from two major sources. They are firstly, some through the constitutional provisions assigned for the Council of Ministers headed by the Prime Minister and secondly, the norms and conventions of the parliamentary democracy.

- The real powers and functions of the Prime Minister can be examined through the relations which the Prime Minister shares with that of the President, Council of Ministers, Parliament, Political Party to which he/she belong and the popular masses.
- The Prime Minister is selected by the President, the other ministers are appointed by the President on the advice of the Prime Minister [Art 75 (1)] and the allocation of portfolios amongst them is also made by him/her.
- Mr. Gopalswami Ayyenger in his/her report presented in the year 1949 classified the Ministers into three broad categories namely (1) cabinet Ministers, (2) Ministers of State and (3) the Deputy Ministers.
- The functions of the cabinet, for all practical purposes, are identified with those assigned to the council under the Constitution.

10.2 Introduction

Judicial System in India is one of the most positive and effective systems in the world. Like many other countries, the constitution of India also maintained mainly three independent organs which work in parallel and independently for protecting the rights of its citizen and making law and order system in the country. The legislative organ (The Parliament) makes laws for the country, the executive organ of the government enforces those laws, and the Judiciary act as the guardian of the constitution of India. The judiciary guarantees fairness and justice and protects the citizen from the despotism of the Government. There is no such democracy without an efficient and independent judiciary. Because judicial independence serves as a safeguard for the rights and privileged by a limited constitution and prevents executive and legislative encroachment upon those rights of the citizen. It also serves as a foundation for the rule of law and democracy.

There are various levels of judiciary in India – different types of courts, each with varying powers depending on the tier and jurisdiction bestowed upon them. They form a strict hierarchy of importance, in line with the order of the courts in which they sit, with the Supreme Court of India at the top, followed by High Courts of respective states with district judges sitting in District Courts and Magistrates of Second Class and Civil Judge (Junior Division) at the bottom. Courts hear criminal and civil cases, including disputes between individuals and the government. The Indian judiciary is independent of the executive and legislative branches of government according to the Constitution.

10.3 The expansion of Judicial process in India

The Government of India Act.1935 introduced the federal principle into Indian constitutional law. It also made necessary a Federal Court decide constitutional matters. Appeals lay from the Federal Court to the Judicial Committee. Under the constitution of India, 1950, and preceding Indian legislation, the Supreme Court succeeded to the jurisdiction of the Federal Court and the Judicial Committee. The constitution of India, with its chapters on Fundamental Rights and Directive Principles coupled with the federal system, inevitably threw new burdens on the Indian judiciary. The Indian Judiciary has, during the last few decades, acted extensively in the case where protection of fundamental rights or basic human rights is concerned.

10.4 The Supreme Court

The Constitution of India has established an integrated judicial system. Supreme Court at the apex of the Indian Judiciary is the highest authority to uphold the constitution of India, to protect the rights and liberties of citizens, and to uphold the values of rule of law. Hence it is known as the guardian of our Constitution. On 26 January 1950, the day India's constitution came into force, the Supreme Court of India was formed in Delhi. On January 28, 1950, the Supreme Court of India was inaugurated by the president, Babu Rajendra Prasad, Present on the occasion were Chief Justice Harilal Kania, along with Justice Fazal Ali, Patanjali Sastri, Mehr Chand Mahajan, B.K. Mukherjee and S.R. Das, Attorney General Setalvad, and Advocate Generals of different states. Also, present the first prime minister of India, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, his Cabinet colleagues, and members of the diplomatic corps.

10.4.1 Composition and appointment

The constitutional provisions related to the Supreme Court are contained in part V from articles 124 to 147.

The Indian constitution under Article 124(1) states that there shall be a Supreme Court of India consisting of a Chief justice of India and 32 other judges. The original Constitution of 1950 envisaged a Supreme Court with a Chief Justice and 7 puisne Judges-leaving it to Parliament to increase this number. In the early years, all the Judges of the Supreme Court sit together to hear the cases presented before them. As the work of the Court increased and arrears of cases began to accumulate, Parliament increased the number of Judges from 8 in 1950 to 11 in 1956, 14 in 1960, 18 in 1978, and 26 in 1986. As the number of Judges has increased, they sit in smaller Benches of two and three-coming together in larger Benches of 5 and more only when required to do so or to settle a difference of opinion or controversy.

10.4.2 Tenure and qualifications for judges of the Supreme Court

According to article 124(3), a person for appointment as a judge of the Supreme court requires qualifications as follow :

- He or she must be a citizen of India.
- He or she must a judge in the high court for at least 5 years. or.
- He or she should have worked as an advocate of a high court for at least 10 years.
or.
- He or she must be a distinguished jurist in the opinion of the president of India.

Article 124(2) states that every judge of the Supreme Court shall be appointed by the President by warrant under his hand and seal after consultation with such of the judges of Supreme Court and the High Courts in the states.

Appointment of ad hoc Judges (Art 127) states that if at any time there is a lack of quorum of Judges of Supreme Court, the Chief justice of India may with the previous consent of the President and Chief Justice of High Court concerned request in writing the attendance of Judge of High Court duly qualified to be appointed as Judge of Supreme Court.

Appointment of retired judges of the supreme court or high court (Art 128). The Chief justice of India at any time with the previous consent of the President

Here the collegium system (appointment of judges to the courts) was followed also known as the three judges cases, which comprises of the Chief Justice of India and four senior-most judges of the Supreme Court. However, due to lack of transparency and delay in appointment, a new article 124 A was incorporated in the constitution [through the ninety-ninth Constitution Amendment Act-2014] under which the National Judiciary Appointments Commission (NJAC) replaced the collegium system for the appointment of judges as mandated in the existing pre-amended constitution by a new system. However, the amendment was nullified by the Supreme Court. Hence, the existing collegium system continues.

Tenure :

According to article 124, every judge of the Supreme Court holds office till the age of 65 years. To be appointed as a Judge of the Supreme Court, a person must be a citizen of India and must have been, for atleast five years, a Judge of a high court or two or more such Courts in succession, or an advocate of a high court or two or more such Courts in succession for at least 10 years or he/she must be, in the opinion of the president, a distinguished jurist.

10.4.3 Removal of Judges

According to article 124(A), A judge of the Supreme Court can be removed only from the office by the President based on a resolution passed by both the Houses of parliament with a majority of the total membership and a majority of not less than two-thirds of the members present and voting in each house, on the grounds of proved misbehavior or incapacity of the judge in question.

Hence, a democratic country like India needs a judiciary because democratic values tend to lose their prominence without proper checks and balances.

10.4.4 Powers and Jurisdictions

The Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of India can broadly be categorised into :

- a) Original jurisdiction (Article–131)
- b) Appellate jurisdiction (Article–132-134) and
- c) Advisory jurisdiction (Article–143)

However, there are other multiple powers of the Supreme Court.

Original jurisdiction : This jurisdiction extends to cases originating in Supreme Court only and states that Indian Supreme Court has original and exclusive jurisdiction in cases between :

- i) Government of India on one hand and one or more states on the other
- ii) Government of India and any state or more states on one side and one or more states on the other
- iii) Two or more states

Apart from those cases if and insofar as the dispute involves any question (whether of law or fact) on which the existence or extent of a legal right depends. In addition, Article 32 of the Constitution gives an extensive original jurisdiction to the Supreme Court regarding enforcement of Fundamental Rights. It is empowered to issue directions, orders, or writs, including writs like habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, and certiorari to enforce them. The Supreme Court has been conferred with power to direct transfer of any civil or criminal case from one State.

Appellate Jurisdiction (Art 132, 133, 134)

The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court can be invoked by a certificate granted by the High Court concerned under Article 132(1), 133(1) or 134 of the Constitution in respect of any judgment, decree, or final order of a High Court in both civil and criminal cases, involving substantial questions of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution.

Appeals also lie to the Supreme Court in civil matters if the High Court concerned certifies :

- (a) that the case involves a substantial question of law of general importance, and
- (b) that, in the opinion of the High Court, the said question needs to be decided by the Supreme Court.

In criminal cases, an appeal lies to the Supreme Court if the High Court :

- (a) has on appeal reversed an order of acquittal of an accused person and sentenced him to death or to imprisonment for life or a period of not less than 10 years, or
- (b) Has withdrawn for trial before itself any case from any Court subordinate to its authority and has in such trial convicted the accused and sentenced him to death or imprisonment for life or a period of not less than 10 years, or
- (c) Certified that the case is a fit one for the appeal to the Supreme Court. Parliament is authorised to confer on the Supreme Court any further powers to entertain and hear appeals from any judgment, final order, or sentence in a criminal proceeding of a High Court.

The Supreme Court has also a very wide appellate jurisdiction over all Courts and Tribunals in India in as much as it may, in its discretion, grant special leave to appeal under Article 136 of the Constitution from any judgment, decree, determination, sentence, or order in any cause or matter passed or made by any Court or Tribunal in the territory of India.

Advisory Jurisdiction

Article 143 of the Indian Constitution confers upon the Supreme Court advisory jurisdiction. The President may seek the opinion of the Supreme Court on any question of law or fact of public importance on which he thinks it expedient to obtain such an opinion. On such reference from the President, the Supreme Court, after giving it such hearing as it deems fit, may report to the President its opinion thereon. The opinion is only advisory, which the President is free to follow or not to follow. However, even if the opinion given in the exercise of advisory jurisdiction may not be binding, it is entitled to great weight.

The first reference under Article 143 was made in the Delhi Laws case, (1951) SCR 747. In almost sixty years, only twelve references have been made under Article 143 of the Constitution by the President for the opinion of the Supreme Court.

Enlargement of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court

The Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court may also be enlarging concerning any matter in the Union List by a parliamentary law. The Parliament may confer on the court the power to issue directions, orders, or write for any other purpose in addition to the enforcement of Fundamental Rights. it may also invest the court with additional power, not consistent with the Constitution, to enable it to discharge its duties more effectively. (Art. 138)

10.5 The High Courts

The High Court stands at the head of a State's judicial administration. The Constitution provides for a High Court for each state. However, the Parliament can by law establish a common High Court for two or more states and a Union Territory. At present Punjab, Haryana and Chandigarh have a common High Court. Besides this, there is a common High Court for seven North-eastern states- Assam, Nagaland, Manipur, Tripura, Meghalaya, Arunachal Pradesh, and Mizoram. Tamil Nadu and Pondicherry also have a common High Court. All 21 High Courts are working in India. These are next only to the Supreme Court of India.

10.5.1 Composition and Appointment

The constitution says that there shall be a High Court for each State. Every High Court shall consist of one chief justice and such other judges as the President may from time deem it necessary to appoint. Since the number of the judge of the state High Courts has not been fixed by the constitution. It varies from court to court. The Chief Justice of the High Court is appointed by the president of India in consultation with the Chief justice of India and the Governor of the state. In appointing other judges of the High Court, the President, besides consulting the Chief Justice of India and the Governor, also consults the Chief justice of the High Court.

Besides, the President has the power to appoint

- (a) Additional Judges for a temporary period not exceeding two years, for the clearance of areas of work in a High Court;

- (b) an acting judge, when a permanent judge of a High Court (other than Chief Justice) is temporarily absent or unable to perform his duties or is appointed to act temporarily as Chief Justice.

10.5.2 Qualifications and Tenure of judges

The qualifications for appointment as a judge of a High Court are that–

- i) A person must be a citizen of India.
- ii) He/she has for at least ten years held for a judicial office or
- iii) Has for at least 10 years been an advocate of a High Court in any State. or

Tenure

A Judge of the High Court shall hold office until the age of 62 years.

Every Judge, permanent, additional, or acting, may vacate his office earlier in any of the following ways;

- a) by resignation in writing addressed to the President;
- b) by being appointed a Judge of the Supreme Court or being transferred to any other High Court, by the President;
- c) by removal by the President on an address of both Houses of Parliament (supported by the vote of 2/3 of the members present) on the ground of proved misbehaviour or incapacity, the mode of removal of a Judge of the High Court shall thus be the same as that of a judge of the Supreme Court.

10.5.3 Powers and Jurisdictions of High Court

The constitution does not attempt detailed definitions or classification of the different types of jurisdiction of the High Courts. It was presumed that the High Courts which were functioning with well-defined jurisdiction at the time of the framing of the Constitution would continue with it and maintain their position as the highest courts in the States.

The Constitution, accordingly, provided that the High Courts would retain their existing jurisdiction and any future law that was to be made by the Legislatures.

Besides, the original and appellate jurisdiction, the Constitution vested in the High Court's four additional powers :

- (1) The power to issue writs or orders for the enforcement of Fundamental Rights or any other purpose.
- (2) The power of superintendence over subordinate courts.
- (3) The power to transfer cases to themselves pending in the subordinate courts involving interpretation of the Constitution; and
- (4) The power to appoint officers.

A) Original Jurisdiction

The Constitution does not attempt detailed definitions and classification of the different types of the jurisdiction of the High Court as it has done in the case of the supreme court. This is mainly because most of the High Courts at the time of the framing of the constitution had been functioning with well-defined jurisdictions whereas the Supreme Court was a newly-created institution necessitating a clear definition of its power and functions.

The High Courts are primarily courts of appeal. Only in matters of admiralty, probate, matrimonial, contempt of Court, enforcement of Fundamental Rights, and cases ordered to be transferred from a lower court involving the interpretation of the Constitution to their file, they have original jurisdiction.

Formally, the High Court of Bombay, Calcutta, and Madras had both Original and Appellate jurisdictions. They could hear civil cases involving an amount exceeding Rs. 2000 (two thousand). They had original jurisdiction regarding criminal cases referred to as presidency magistrates. The new constitution has not withdrawn their rights. Every high Court has original jurisdiction regarding admiralty, will, divorce, marriage laws, fall outside their pale of influence. According to the Art. 225 the present Constitution has extended their original jurisdiction to revenue cases also. Besides passing the right to issue a writ of habeas corpus, High Courts have now been empowered to issue a mandamus, writ of prohibition, quo warranto, and certiorari to protect the fundamental rights of the citizen.

B) Appellate Jurisdiction

The Courts, as stated earlier also, in the highest court of appeal in any State. It entertains appeals against the judgments of the subordinate courts. If a Sessions Judge awards death sentence, an appeal lies to High Court. On the civil side, it entertains appeals involving an amount exceeding rupees five thousand. It also hears cases relating to patent and designs, succession, land acquisition, insolvency, and guardianship.

C) Power of Superintendence and Transfer

Every High Court has a power of superintendence over all courts and tribunals throughout the territory concerning which it exercises jurisdiction, excepting military tribunals [Art. 227]. This power of superintendence is very wide in as much as it extends to all courts as well as tribunals within the State, whether such court or tribunal is subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court or not.

Further, this power of superintendence would include a revisional jurisdiction to intervene in case of gross injustice or non-exercise of abuse of jurisdiction, even though no appeal or revision against the orders of such tribunal was otherwise available.

However, this jurisdiction of the High Court has been taken away in respect of Administrative Tribunals set up under Article 323A, by the Administrative Tribunals Act. 1985. If the High Court is satisfied that a case pending in a court subordinate to it involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution, it may transfer the case of itself.

After the case has come to the file of the High Court, it may dispose of the whole case itself or may determine the constitutional questions involved and return the case to the court from which it has been withdrawn together with a copy of its judgment on such question and direct it to dispose of the case in conformity with such judgment.

The Constitution, thus, denies subordinate courts the right to interpret the Constitution so that there may be the maximum possible uniformity as regards constitutional decisions. It is accordingly, the duty of the subordinate courts to refer to the High Court a case that involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution and the case cannot be disposed of without the determination of such question. The High Court may also transfer the case to itself upon the application of the party in the case.

D) Writ jurisdiction

Article 226 of the Constitution empowers every High Court, throughout the territories about which it exercises jurisdiction to issue to any person or authority, including in appropriate cases, any Government, within those territories, directions, orders or writs, including writs like habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition, quo warrantor and certiorari, or any of them, for the enforcement of any of the Fundamental Rights and for any other purpose.

The Constitution by 42nd. amendment omitted the provision “for any other purpose”, but the Forty-fourth amendment has restored it. The peculiarity of this jurisdiction is that as conferred by the Constitution, it cannot be taken away or abridged by anything short of an amendment of the Constitution itself.

Although the Supreme Court and the High Courts have concurrent jurisdiction in the enforcement of Fundamental Rights, the Constitution does not confer to the High Court’s the special responsibility of protecting Fundamental Rights as the Supreme Court is vested with such a power.

Under Article 32 the Supreme Court is made the guarantor and protector, of Fundamental Rights whereas in the case of the High Court the power to enforce Fundamental Rights as part of their general jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction to issue writs under these Articles is larger in the case of High Court in as much as while the Supreme Court can issue them only where a fundamental right has been infringed, a High Court can issue them not only in such cases but also where an ordinary legal right has been infringed, provided a writ is a proper remedy in such cases, according to well-established principles.

E) Court of record

The High Court is a court of record and has all the powers of such a court including the power to punish for contempt of itself. The two characteristics of a court of record are that the records of such a Court are admitted to be of evidentiary value and that they cannot be questioned when produced before any court and that it has the power to punish for contempt of itself. Neither the Supreme Court nor the Legislature can deprive a High Court of its power of punishing contempt of itself.

The High Court of India has been given full freedom and independence in imparting justice to the people and ensure that the executive and legislature shall in no way interfere in the day-to-day life of the people. As a Court of record, the High Court has the power to punish those who are adjudged as guilty of contempt of court. All its decision is binding and cannot be questioned in the lower court. As the Judiciary has a vital role in the working of the constitution and in the maintenance of the balance of authority and liberty and as a safeguard against the abuse of power by the executive, its independence is secured by the permanence of tenure and the conditions of service of the judges.

10.6 Judicial Activism : Meaning

Judicial Activism means the rulings of the court based on political and personal rational and prudence of the Judges presiding over the issue. It is a legal term referring to court rulings based, in part or in full, on the political or personal factors of the Judge, rather than current or existing legislation. According to Black's Law Dictionary judicial activism is a philosophy of judicial decision-making whereby judges allow their personal views about public policy, among other factors, to guide their decisions.

The judicial activism was evolved through the process of judicial review which can be pursued from the unwritten constitution of Britain during the period of Stuart (1603-1688). In the year 1610, the power of Judicial Review was acknowledged for the first time in Britain through the activism of Justice Coke. The then Chief Justice Coke stated that if a law made by Parliament breached the principles of common law; and reason, then it could be reviewed and adjudicated as void by the judiciary.

In the modern age, the concept of Judicial activism was reshaped in the US in 1947. It has been seen in India since the Emergency days. Judicial activism in India implies the authority of the Supreme Court and the high courts, but not the subordinate courts, to declare the regulations unconstitutional and void if they breach or if the legislation is incompatible with one or more of the constitutional clauses.

A judiciary is an independent body that is even-handed, unbiased, and unprejudiced. It functions within the framework of the constitution, defined under the concept of the separation of powers. It interprets the supreme constitution and at times needed, supports the rule of law and the standards laid down in the constitution. The Supreme Court of India is considered the sentinel quiver and protects the fundamental and constitutional rights of the people.

The Supreme Court of India in its initial years was more technocratic but slowly began to become more active through constitutional interpretation. The court became an activist through its involvement and interpretation of law and statutes but the whole transformation took years and it was a gradual process. The origins of Judicial activism can be seen in the court's premature and early assertion regarding the essence and nature of Judicial Review.

India's Judicial activism can be positive as well as negative

1. A court engaged in altering the power relations to make them more equitable is said to be positively activist and
2. A court using its ingenuity to maintain the status quo in power relations is said to be negatively activist.

Judicial activism reflects the suggested patterns in the administrative namely : expansion of hearing privileges over administrative lapses, the extension of judicial control over discretionary forces, expansion of judicial review over the administration, and extending the conventional translation guidelines in its quest for financial, cultural, and academic goals.

10.6.1 Methods of judicial Activism

Various methods of judicial activism are followed in India. They are :

1. Judicial review (power of the judiciary to interpret the constitution and to declare any such law or order of the legislature and executive void, if it find them in conflict with the Constitution).

2. PIL (The person filing the petition must not have any personal interest in the litigation, this petition is accepted by the court only if there is an interest of large public involved; the aggrieved party does not file the petition).
3. Constitutional interpretation.
4. Access to international statute for ensuring constitutional rights.
5. Supervisory power of the higher courts on the lower courts.

10.6.2 Some examples of Judicial Activism

After the independence, Judicial activism was almost silent for the first decade. The executive and legislative organs of the government actively dominated and intervened in the working of the judiciary. It was started in 70s when the Allahabad High Court rejected the candidature of Indira Gandhi in 1973.

- In 1979, The Supreme Court of India ruled that undertrials in Bihar had already served time for more period than they would have, had they been convicted.
- Golaknath case : The questions, in this case, were whether the amendment is a law; and whether Fundamental Rights can be amended or not. SC contended that Fundamental Rights are not amendable to the Parliamentary restriction as stated in Article 13 and that to amend the Fundamental rights a new Constituent Assembly would be required. Also stated that Article 368 gives the procedure to amend the Constitution but does not confer on Parliament the power to amend the Constitution.
- Kesavananda Bharati case : In the landmark Keshvananda Bharti case, just two years before the emergency declaration the apex court of India declared that the executive had no right to intercede and tamper with the basic structure of the constitution. Though the exigency imposed by the then Prime Minister Indira Gandhi could not be prevented by the Judiciary, the concept of judicial activism started gaining more power from there.
- In the 2G scam, the Supreme Court cancelled 122 telecom licenses and spectrum allocated to 8 telecom companies because the process of allocation was flawed.

- The Supreme Court rolled out a blanket ban on firecrackers in the Delhi–NCR area with certain exceptions in 2018.

Judicial activism is an effective tool for upholding citizens' rights and implementing constitutional principles when the executive and legislature fail to do so. Citizens have the judiciary as the last faith for protecting their rights when all other doors are closed. The Judiciary of India has also been considered as the guardian of the Indian Constitution. There are provisions in the constitution itself for the judiciary to adopt a proactive role. Article 13 read with Articles 32 and 226 of the Constitution provides the power of judicial review to the higher judiciary to declare any executive, legislative or administrative action void if it is in contravention with the Constitution.

Judicial activism has also faced criticism several times. In the name of judicial activism, the judiciary often mixes personal bias and opinions with the law. Another criticism is that the theory of separation of powers between the three arms of the State goes for a toss with judicial activism. So many times, the judiciary, in the name of activism, interferes in an administrative domain, and undertakings into judicial adventurism. In many cases, no fundamental rights of any group are involved. In this context, judicial restraint is talked about.

10.7 Conclusion

India, since independence, has remained firmly embedded in rule of law and democracy. In addition to devotion to the rule of law and principles of democracy, the presence of a strong and independent judiciary, free press, and the growth of a wide network of NGOs has contributed greatly to the awareness of human rights and the protection of human rights of individuals, groups, minorities, and others. Indian Constitution has given special status to the Supreme Court and High Courts. Indian higher judiciary has the power to review any legislative, executive, and administrative activities of the State. The Higher Courts in India entertain the petitions which are being filed by the public-spirited persons in the public interest. It is also true that it is all because of the judicial activism that the needy persons, members belonging to socially and educationally backward classes, victims of human trafficking or victims of a beggar, transgender, etc. have somehow been provided with adequate legal assistance in the process of the enforcement of their fundamental rights. Moreover, Article 142 of the Indian Constitution gives the Supreme Court the power to pass a suitable decree or order for doing complete justice in any pending matter. It is no exaggeration to say that the ability, wisdom, and patriotism of our future judges depends to some extent on the future of the rule of the law and parliamentary democracy in India.

10.8 Summing up

- One of the basic principles of democracy is the presence of a strong and independent judiciary.
- India has a strong independent judiciary.
- Indian Constitution has given special status to the judiciary.
- Article 142 of the Indian Constitution assigns the Supreme Court, the power to pass a suitable decree or order for doing complete justice in any pending matter.
- The judicial activism also supports needy persons, to provide adequate legal assistance.

11.2 Introduction

The inheritance of the Indian government and administration was influenced by the different foreign rulers like French, Portuguese, Dutch, Shaka, Hunas, Kushanas, Mughals, and Britishers. After Independence, the Indian Parliamentary Democracy was established by the constituent assembly (1946-1950). This assembly was influenced by the various Acts of British Government ever passed to rule India from the Regulating Act 1773 to the Government of India Act, 1935. The act of 1935 became the most influencing act for the constituent assembly as well as the Constitution of India; this was quoted by W.S. Mauris Jhons in his various research and findings. The constitution of free India comes into effect on January 26, 1950. One of the most important features of the Indian Constitution included the distribution of powers between the union and different state governments. It was considered prudent not to introduce the Unitary Government but only the Federal Government which was widely welcomed by all shades of opinion. The elements of the federation are present in the Indian Constitution, although the word 'federation' does not find a place in the whole text of the Indian Constitution. Article 1 of the Indian Constitution describes India as a Union of States instead of a federation, though in India Federal form of Government has been adopted. The federal features which influenced the founding fathers of the Indian Constitution were mainly from American, Canadian, and Australian Federations. The framers of the Constitution were influenced by the federal principles, with exceptions and modifications of the US and Canadian constitutions. On the other hand, Indian Leaders like Jawaharlal Nehru who was a staunch supporter of liberal democracy was committed to democratic socialism and agrarian redistribution. For their policies to be successful, they believed that there should be a centralised direction for the establishment of a federal system in India. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar wrote "It will be noticed that the committee has used the term Union instead of Federation. Nothing much turns on the name, but the committee has preferred to follow the language of the Preamble to the British North America Act, 1867, and considered that there are advantages in describing India as a Union although its Constitution may be Federal in Character."

11.3 Federalism : Meaning

The term federation is derived from the Latin word "Foedus" meaning 'Treaty or Agreement'. Hence it is the result of an agreement between two sets of governments, which is the Central or Federal government and State government. Historically, a federation means a union of some states brought about through the instrumentality of a treaty. Federation has come to mean a union of two or more states. In such a union there is a central government and there are state governments. Thus, there is a state authority, and the powers of the state are divided between the central and regional governments.

The term ‘federalism’ has been used in a variety of contexts. Indeed, the extent of terminological and conceptual abuse has obscured its meaning. Like the word ‘democracy, federalism stands to mean different things to different people. In principle, by federal concept is meant the idea of organization of state whereby a compromise is achieved between concurrent demands for union and territorial diversity within a society, by the establishment of a single political system, within which, general (Central) and regional (State) governments are assigned coordinate authority so that neither level of government is legally or politically subordinate to the others.

11.3.1 Definition :

KC. Wheare, an authority on federalism says that “Federation is a system which consists of two sets of governments that are independent, co-ordinate, and distinct.

Prof. A.V. Dicey, says : “Federation is a political contrivance intended to reconcile national unity with the maintenance of State Rights.”

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, “The partition of legislative and executive power of the centre and units is the main criteria of the federation.”

In 1961, M.J.C. Vile, attempted to substitute the idea of interdependence in the place of independence, and according to him, “Federalism is a system of government in which neither level of a government is wholly dependent on the other not wholly independent of the other.”

In 1964, W.H. Riker, pointed out that, “A constitution is federal if (i) two levels of government rule the same land and people and (ii) each level has at least one area of action in which it is autonomous, and (iii) there is some guarantee of the autonomy of each government in its own sphere.”

According to A.H. Birch, “A federal system of government is one in which there is a division of powers between one general and several regional authorities, each of which, in its sphere, is coordinate with the other, and each of which acts directly on the people through its administrative agencies.”

However, by ‘federation’, we mean, in short, a type of polity operating a constitution that works on two levels of government as a nation and as a collection of related, but self-standing units. And the main objective of a federation is to form a government for the people and by the people.

11.4 Features of Indian Federalism

The Constitution of India is unique concerning its extreme detail and substance. It is the longest constitution in existence in the world totaling three hundred ninety-five articles and eight supporting schedules embraced in two hundred and seventy-two pages. Its uniqueness is attested to by its emphasis on constitutional detail, covering legislative procedure, administrative relationships between the Centre and the component states, and the inclusion of a constitution for the states with equal detail as that for the national political organism. The essential reason for this phenomenon is the basic distrust of the members of the Constituent Assembly of human beings, the communal ill-will prevailing between Muslims and Hindus, the fear of provincialism in the nation, and the need to empower the national government with sufficient strength to develop a national, industrialized economy from a backward state.

The character of the Indian Constitution is in a federal form. Federalism involves the distribution of sovereignty between the national government and the constituent member states. Within each sphere, each government is supreme. The Indian Constitution itself does not characterise the form of government as federal, but rather, describes India (Bharat), as a Union of States (Article-1). However, the Drafting Committee of the Constituent Assembly referred to this when it reported the draft constitution to the Constituent Assembly stating that the committee preferred to follow the language found in the preamble of the British North America Act, 1867.

The main features of the Indian Federal system are as follows :

- i) Division of Powers : One of the most important features in any federal system is the division of powers between two levels of government is an essential feature of federalism. Federalism means the distribution of powers of the state between the central and the state governments. The basis of such distribution of power is that in matters of national importance, in which a uniform policy is desirable in the interest of the units, authority is entrusted to the centre and matters of local concern remain with the states. In a Federation, there should be a clear division of powers so that the units and the centre are required to enact and legislate within their sphere of activities and none violates its limits and tries to encroach upon the functions of others. The Seventh schedule contains three legislative lists which enumerate subjects of administration and legislation viz., Union, State, and Concurrent lists. The union list consists of 100 subjects, the more important of which are defines, railway, posts and telegraph, currency, etc. The state list consists of 61 subjects, including public order, police, administration of justice, public health, education, agriculture, etc. The concurrent list embraced 52 subjects including criminal law, marriage, divorce, trade unions, electricity, etc. The residuary powers have been vested in the central government.

- ii) Supremacy of the Constitution : A federal-state derives its existence from the constitution. The constitution in a federal state constitutes the supreme law of the land. As Prof. K. C. Wheare rightly says, “these two institutions the supremacy of the constitution and the written constitution are, then essential institutions to a federal government. The Supremacy of the Constitution is essential if the government is to be federal; the written constitution is essential if the federal government is to work well.” In a federation, the constitution should be the supreme source of strength, both for the centre as well as the federating units. Accordingly, the Indian constitution is also supreme and not the handmaid of either the centre or of the states. If for any reason, any organ of the state dares to violate any provision of the constitution, the court of law is there to ensure the dignity of the constitution, which is upheld at all cost.
- iii) A Written Constitution : A Federal constitution must almost be a written constitution. It will be practically impossible to maintain the supremacy of the constitution and division of powers between the centre and the states unless the terms of the constitution have been reduced into writing. Accordingly, the Indian constitution is a written document containing 395 Articles and 12 Schedules and therefore fulfills this basic requirement of a federal government. The Indian constitution is the most elaborate in the world. All the modern federations like the U.S.A., Australia, Switzerland, and Canada have hammered their constitutions, and they are 'written' in nature. However, it should be noted that in the U.S.A., in addition to the federal constitution, each state has its constitution. The Indian constitution demarcates the powers between the centre and the state. Dual polity and a clear written constitution are essential for the functioning of federalism. In a written constitution the central government will not encroach upon the state powers, and both have to work within their jurisdiction. The United States of America, Australia, Switzerland, Canada, and India are examples of a federal constitution.

- iv) Rigid Constitution : A natural corollary of a written constitution is its rigidity. In a rigid constitution, the procedure of amendment is complicated and difficult. But this does not mean that the constitution should be legally unalterable. A rigid constitution, as we know, cannot be changed easily. The Indian constitution is partly rigid. All the provisions of the constitution concerning federal-state relations can be amended only by the joint actions of the state legislatures and the union parliament. Such provisions can be amended only if the amendment is passed by a two-thirds majority of the members present and by voting in the parliament, and is ratified by at least one-half of the states. However, in India, the constitution prescribes three different methods for amending the different provisions of the constitution. In the first category, it can be amended by a majority of the total membership in each house, and by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the members present, and voting in each house of parliament. In the second category, it requires a majority of the total membership in each house, and a majority not less than two-thirds of the members present, and voting in each house of parliament, and ratification by at least one-half the state legislatures. The third category requires a simple majority in each house of the parliament.
- v) Independent Judiciary : Impartial and independent judiciary is essential for a federation. A Federal court is indispensable to a federation. It acts as the guardian of the constitution. Especially, this principle has been playing an important and key role in the working of the federal government. The judiciary has occupied a very important status in federal countries like the United States, Switzerland, Australia, Canada, and India. The constitution has provided for a Supreme Court, and every effort has been made to see that the judiciary in India is independent and supreme. The Supreme Court of India can declare a law unconstitutional if it contravenes any provisions of the constitution. To ensure the impartiality of the judiciary, our judges are not removable by the executive and their salaries cannot be curtailed by the Parliament.

- vi) Bicameral Legislature : A bicameral system is considered essential in a federation because it is in the Upper House alone that the units can be given equal representation. The Constitution of India also provides for a bicameral legislature at the Centre consisting of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha. While the Lok Sabha consists of the elected representatives of people, the Rajya Sabha mainly consists of representatives elected by State Legislative Assemblies.

11.5 Nature of Indian Federal System

The Indian constitution adopts the strict application of the federal principles, as a result, some of the political events would reveal that the states are not the agents or instrumentalities of the center. Despite the strong central tendency the states have been able to assert their rights. There have been territorial disputes between Karnataka and Maharashtra; and Punjab and Haryana. Disputes, over sharing of water, took place between Karnataka and Tamil Nadu. Nagaland, Tripura, and Manipur have laid claims to each other's territory. A more stark fact supporting the existence of federalism is the spectacle of different parties in power in different states. In West Bengal and Kerala, the left front has formed the government several times. In Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra, Uttar Pradesh, Himachal Pradesh, and Rajasthan the Bhartiya Janta Party-led governments enjoyed power. In Tamil Nadu and Andhra Pradesh, the local parties have been in the seat of government for a long time. And all this when a different party or coalition was ruling at the center. It is the success of federalism in giving effect to the aspiration of the people that there is a never-ending demand for the creation of new states. In the constitution of 1950, there were 9 Part A and 5 Part B states. As of today (after the abolition of Part B states), the total number of states is 28. Another piece of evidence is the loud clamor for obtaining more grants from the center and assertion of autonomy in matters about law and order (especially in West Bengal and Bihar). The central government has been paying more to the State government than recommended by the Finance Commissions appointed under Article 280.

But at the same time, some principles of Indian federalism may be characterised as a prefectural federal system. some important constitutional provisions substantiate this idea.

Under the Indian federal system, the Union is indestructible and the states are destructible. In other words, a “state’s” identity can be altered or even obliterated, and 20 acts have been passed by Parliament under Articles 3 and 4 of the Constitution to bring about changes in the areas, boundaries, and names of states. Ascertaining the views of the concerned states by the President is not mandatory because he is competent to fix a time limit within which states must express their opinion. Moreover, Parliament is not bound to accept or act upon the views of the state legislature even if those views are received in time.

According to Article 200 of the Constitution, certain bills passed by state legislatures may be reserved by the governors for the consideration of the President of India. A governor’s action in this regard has been held to be non-justiciable. Under Article 201, the President may give his assent to such state bills at any time, without time limit, or exercise his veto power over them. Ambedkar’s argument that “the States under our Constitution are in no way dependent upon the centre for their legislative or executive authority” is only a federal myth. Granville Austin has rightly pointed out that “in theory Articles 200 and 201 invalidate the division of powers for there is no means of overriding a President’s veto in the case of State legislation.” This un- federal provision has been used extensively by the Union government and thereby has undermined the legislative autonomy of the states.

Through the office of the state governor, the central government can control and command the state governments. As nominees of the center, the governors act as their agents to send periodic reports to the President, dismiss unwanted state governments, and reserve state bills for the consideration of the President.

Article 254(1) empowers the Union Parliament to exercise its “pre-emptive power” overstate legislation if any provision of a law made by the legislature of a state is repugnant to any provision of a law made by Parliament or to any provision of existing law concerning matters enumerated in the Concurrent List. In such cases, the parliamentary law shall prevail, whether passed before or after the law enacted by the state legislature, and the state law shall, to the extent of the repugnancy, be void. Although Clause (2) of this article grants the states permission to legislate under the Concurrent List even if some provisions of the law are repugnant to the Union law, the state is subject to two conditions : first, that the state legislature should have received presidential assent, and second, that nothing in this clause shall prevent Parliament from enacting a law concerning the same matter, including a law adding to, amending, varying, or repealing the state law.

Articles 248 and 249 give further scope to the Union Parliament to establish its legislative supremacy. Under Article 248, Parliament has residual powers of legislation, and under Article 249 there is a possibility of its “big intrusion” into state legislative jurisdiction in the name of national interest based on a resolution passed by the upper chamber (Council of States). The arguments advanced by some state governments for the abrogation of Article 249 are worthy of consideration. The article short-circuits the amending process prescribed in Article 368 and enables one house to transfer unilaterally any subject from the State List to the Concurrent List. Also, the two-thirds majority in the Council of States may not necessarily reflect the consent of the majority of states through their representatives. Finally, the initial life of the law, though limited to one year, maybe extended indefinitely through successive resolutions of the upper house.

Articles 256 and 257 place a mandatory duty on the states regarding the exercise of their executive power. Article 256 states that the executive power of every state shall be exercised in such a manner as to ensure compliance with the laws made by Parliament, and if necessary, the central government can give directions to a state for this purpose.

Article 355 empowers the central government to intervene in the affairs of states under three circumstances : external aggression, internal disturbance, and when a state government cannot be carried on by the provisions of the Constitution.

The state emergency power or President's Rule provision of Article 356 empowers the Union government to use it as a bludgeon to threaten or supersede unwanted state governments. Instead of keeping it as a last resort, as visualised by the constitution-makers, to be used as a salvage operation in an ailing state, the Article has been wantonly and brazenly employed for partisan purposes on most occasions. The word "otherwise" in Article 356 gives wide scope to the center to dismiss any state government even without the governor's report.

Emergency powers of the President contemplated under Articles 352, 356, and 360 can transform the federal system into a unitary system. While a proclamation of national emergency under Article 352 is in operation, the Union Parliament has the power to make laws for the whole or any part of the territory of India concerning any of the matters enumerated in the State List, under the terms of Clause (1) of Article 250.

The provision for All-India Services under Article 312 is another federal aberration. Based on the recommendation of the Council of States, the Parliament may by law create All-India Services. At present three such services are working.

Inequality of representation in Rajya Sabha-the US Senate accords equal representation to all the states irrespective of their size, the Indian constitution accords representation to various states in the Rajya Sabha based on their population. Emergency Provisions-under emergency, the normal distribution of powers between the Center and states undergo a vital change, and the center becomes all-powerful. In the opinion of Prof. Wheare, the Indian constitution is almost "quasi-federal" a unitary state with subsidiary federal features, rather than a federal state with subsidiary unitary features. Jennings has characterised it as "a federation with a strong centralizing tendency." Austin and A.H. Birch used the term "Cooperative federalism" for the Indian system, i.e., it is neither purely federal nor purely unitary, but a combination of both. Dicey holds that the extent of federalism in India is largely watered down by the needs or progress and development of a country that has to be nationally integrated, politically, and economically coordinated and socially, intellectually, and spiritually uplifted.

Although Dr. Ambedkar thought that our constitution is federal “in as much as it establishes a dual polity,” he also said in the constituent assembly, that our Constitution makers had avoided the “tight mold of federalism” in which the American constitution was forged. Dr. Ambedkar, one of the principal architects of our constitution considered our constitution to be “both unitary as well as federal according to the requirements of time and circumstances.” He said that rigidity and legalism were the two serious weaknesses of federalism. India adopted a federal structure as the different parts of the country were at different stages of development, and it would have been different to control from one center and to ensure minorities their due place.

However, Indian federalism is unique because of its mode of formation, i.e., from union to states (creation of autonomous units and then combining them into a federation), and not vice versa. It is to be noted that the term “Union of States” and not “federation of states” is used in the constitution (the term “federal” or “federation” is not used anywhere in the constitution). In addition, the units have no right to secede (as in a confederation). In a classic federation, the federal government enjoys only those powers that are by an agreement surrendered to it by the units. Neither the parliament nor the state legislation is “sovereign” because each being limited by the constitutional provisions affecting the distribution of powers. The constitution enshrines the principle that despite federalism, the national interest ought to be paramount. Thus, the Indian constitution is mainly federal with unique safeguards for enforcing national unity and growth.

11.6 Conclusion

The theory and practice of Indian federalism substantiate that the Union government functions under prefectural federalism that gives it a commanding position and overriding powers. The existence of states and the very survival of their elected governments is dependent upon the will of the Union government. The single Constitution for the whole country (except Jammu and Kashmir), the unilateral power of Parliament to amend it, the provision for supersession of state governments and centrally appointed state governors, the discretionary powers of governors to reserve state bills for the consideration of the President and his veto power over such bills, the prosperity of the Union government, the vertical planning system, and the centralised party system have been mainly responsible for the aberration, distortion, and perversion of Indian federalism. During the period of one-party rule (Congress dominance) from 1951 to 1967, center-state differences, if any, were resolved within the party. Jayaprakash Narayan observed :

“Center-State relations were mainly a reflection of relations between the State branches of the Congress party and Central leadership. The federal structure never had a chance to operate.... If a particular state succeeded in enlarging its autonomy, it was because the local Congress leadership was in a position to browbeat the High Command...”

The breakdown of Congress dominance in 1967 led to the emergence of strong regional parties and the formation of non-Congress governments in some states. Since 1967, center-state relations and state autonomy have become the cardinal issues of Indian federalism. An overcentralized federal system is incapable of dealing effectively with socioeconomic challenges and strengthening national unity. Hence, it is appropriate to restructure Indian federalism to make it more effective and promote center-state partnership.

11.7 Summing up

- One of the most important features of the Indian Constitution included the distribution of powers between the union and different state governments.
- The elements of the federation are present in the Indian Constitution, although the word ‘federation’ does not find a place in the whole text of the Indian Constitution.

- The framers of the Constitution were influenced by the federal principles of the US and Canadian Constitutions.
- Indian federalism is quasi federal in nature and that is why is often regarded as unique.

12.1 Objective

This unit deals with the composition, power and functions of the state legislature. After studying this unit, the learner will be able to - Understand the composition of government in the state.

- Explain the powers and functions of the state legislature.
- Discuss the differences between the two houses of the state legislatures.
- Understand the position of the state legislature in the Indian Parliamentary system.

12.2 Introduction

The most important role of the State legislatures is to represent the people. It is, however, important to remember that in parliamentary polity the legislature has also to provide from within itself a representative, responsible and responsive government to the people. One way to judge whether the system is working well or not is to see whether it has brought into being governments that last their terms and succeed in providing good governance to the community. The overriding objective has to be to make both government and legislature relevant to meet today's challenges which bear little comparison to those faced by our society in the middle decades of the twentieth century. The fundamental challenges are economic and technological. The legislature has a decisive role in refashioning the national economy, keeping in the forefront the ideas of a self-reliant economy that serves the real needs and aspirations of our vast masses. State Legislature can play this historic role only if it consciously reforms its procedures and priorities its work. India is a Union of States. It means that there is one Union Government and several State Governments, it also means that Union (Centre) is more powerful than States. At present, there are 28 States in the Indian Union and each one of them has a Legislature. The State Legislature is a law-making body at the state level.

12.3 Composition of State Legislature

In most of the States, the Legislature consists of the Governor and the Legislative Assembly (Vidhan Sabha). This means that these states have unicameral legislature. In a few states, there are two houses of the Legislature namely, Legislative Assembly (Vidhan Sabha) and Legislative Council (Vidhan Parishad) besides the Governor. Where there are two Houses, the Legislature, is known as bicameral. Six states have a bicameral, legislature (Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka, Telengana, Maharashtra, Bihar and Uttar Pradesh). The Legislative Assembly is known as the lower house or popular house. The Legislative Council is known as the upper house. Just as Lok Sabha has been made powerful at the Union level, the Legislative Assembly has been made a powerful body in the States.

12.3.1 The Legislative Assembly (Vidhan Sabha) :

Composition : There is a Legislative Assembly (Vidhan Sabha) in every State. It represents the people of the State. The members of Vidhan Sabha are directly elected by people based on the universal adult franchise. They are directly elected by all adult citizens registered as voters in the State. All men and women who are 18 years of age and above are eligible to be included in the voters' List. They vote to elect members of the State Assembly. Members are elected from territorial constituencies. Every State is divided into as many (single member) constituencies as the number of members to be elected. As in the case of Lok Sabha, a certain number of seats is reserved for Scheduled Castes and in some States for Scheduled Tribes also. This depends on the population of these weaker sections in the State.

The number of Vidhan Sabha members cannot be more than 500 and not less than 60. However, very small States have been allowed to have a lesser number of members. Thus Goa has only 40 members in its Assembly. Uttar Pradesh (is a big state even after the creation of Uttaranchal from this state in 2002) has 403 seats in the Assembly. As in the case of the Lok Sabha, some seats are reserved for the members of Scheduled Castes and Schedule Tribes.

Qualifications for members : To become a Member of Vidhan Sabha a person must: be a citizen of India; have attained the age of 25 years; his/her name must be in voters' list; must not hold any office of profit i.e.; should not be a government servant.

Tenure : The tenure of Vidhan Sabha is five years, but the Governor can dissolve it before the completion of its term on the advice of the Chief Minister. It may be dissolved by the President in case of a constitutional emergency proclaimed under Article 356 of the Constitution. In case of a proclamation of national emergency (under Article 352) the Parliament can extend the term of the Legislative Assemblies for a period not exceeding one year at a time.

12.3.1.1 Speaker and Deputy Speaker of Legislative Assembly :

The members of Vidhan Sabha elect their presiding officer. The Presiding officer is known as the Speaker. The Deputy Speaker presides over the meeting during the absence of the Speaker. He is also elected by the Assembly from amongst its

12.3.1.2 Powers and Functions of the Speaker

There is a need for a head or a supreme authority of every legislative part. The Speaker and Deputy Speaker perform the same purposes in the Legislative Assembly. Therefore, Article 178 of the Indian Constitution has provisions about the same. The Constitution contains identical provisions relating to the Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the Lok Sabha and their counterparts in the state legislative assemblies. It lays down only the main duties and power of the Speaker. Which are as follows :

1. To permit a member who cannot adequately express himself in Hindi or English or the official language of the state, to address the House in his mother tongue.
2. To exercise a casting vote in the case of an equality of votes.
3. To determine whether a Bill is a Money Bill and to certify a Money Bill.
4. To preside over the House, whenever he is present in the House, excepting when a resolution for his removal from office is under consideration.
5. To adjourn the House when there is no quorum.

The detailed duties and responsibilities of the Speaker are laid down in the Rules of Procedure which each House is empowered to make under Article 208 of the Constitution with, of course, the condition that such rules shall be “subject to the provisions of the Constitution”. Though the Rules of Procedure vary from state to state, the position regarding the powers and functions of the Speaker is more or less identical, as generally the rules of the assemblies on this behalf are modeled on the Lok Sabha Rules. The more important powers and functions of the Speakers of state assemblies, in general, are briefly noted below.

As the principal spokesman of the House, the Speaker represents its collective voice and is its sole representation to the outside people. His position as the presiding officer of the House is one of essential authority :

- He regulates the debates and proceedings of the House
- He is charged with the maintenance of order in the House and is equipped with all powers necessary for enforcing his decisions.
- He also works on points of order raised by members and his decision is final.

Various powers are conferred on the Speaker about asking questions to Ministers. Though the guiding principles regarding admissibility of questions are prescribed in the rules and its interpretation is vested in the Speaker. He/she has a general discretion regarding the admissibility of resolutions and motions also, similar to the one relating to the admissibility of questions. He/she decides whether a motion expressing want of confidence in the Council of Ministers is in order. The Speaker has also the power to select amendments concerning Bills and motions and can refuse to propose an amendment which in his opinion is trivial.

It is the fundamental duty of the Speaker to maintain order in the house. He derives his disciplinary powers from the rules, and the decisions taken by him in matters of discipline are not to be challenged except on a substantive motion. He/she may direct any member guilty of disorderly conduct to withdraw from the House, and name a member for suspension if the member disregards the authority of the chair and persists in obstructing the proceedings of the House. The Speaker also has the power that he/she may also adjourn or suspend the business of the House in case of grave disorder.

To enable the Speaker to deal with unexpected situations and regulate matters of detail, the rules expressly vest “residuary powers” in him/her.

In fine, the Rules of Procedure and Conduct of Business in the state assemblies confer wide discretionary powers on the Speaker. The rules have been codified on the premise that the Speaker’s chair would be occupied by scrupulously dispassionate and impartial persons. The Speaker’s supreme authority inside the House is based on his absolute and unvarying impartiality and all the powers vested in him are intended to enable him to ensure the smooth functioning of the House. Therefore, in no case would it be justified for a Speaker to use his powers arbitrarily or in such a manner as to prevent the House from functioning.

12.3.2 The Vidhan Parishad (Upper House of the State Legislature)

Vidhan Parishad is the upper House of the State Legislature. It is not in existence in every State. Very few States have a bicameral Legislature that means having two Houses. Legislative Councils are the legacy of the British period. The Parliament can create Vidhan Parishad in a State where it does not exist, if the Legislative Assembly of the State passes a resolution to this effect by a majority of the total membership of the Assembly and by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the members of the Assembly present and voting, and sends the resolution to the Parliament. Similarly, if a State has a Council and the Assembly wants it to be abolished, it may adopt a resolution by a similar majority and send it to Parliament. In this situation, Parliament resolves to abolish the concerned Legislative Council. Accordingly, Councils of Punjab, Andhra Pradesh, Tamil Nadu and West Bengal were abolished.

Qualifications for members

In order to be a member of the Legislative Council the person concerned should

- i) be a citizen of India.
- ii) have attained the age of 30 years.
- iii) be a registered voter in the State.
- iv) not hold any office of profit.

Composition

According to the Constitution, the total number of members in the Vidhan Parishad of a State should not exceed one-third of the total number of members of Vidhan Sabha but this number should not be less than 40. The Vidhan Parishad is partly elected and partly nominated. Most of the members are indirectly elected in accordance with the principle of proportional representation using single transferable vote system. Different categories of members represent different interests. The composition of the Legislative Council is as follows :

- a) One-third of members of the Council are elected by the members of the Vidhan Sabha.
- b) One-third of the members of the Vidhan Parishad are elected by the electorates consisting of members of Municipalities, District Boards and other local bodies in the State.
- c) One-twelfth members are elected by the electorate consisting of graduates in the State with a standing of three years.
- d) One-twelfth members are elected by the electorate consisting of teachers of educational institutions within the State not lower in standard than a secondary school who have teaching experience of at least three years.

- e) The remaining, i.e. about one-sixth members are nominated by the Governor from amongst the persons having special knowledge in the sphere of literature, science, arts, co-operative movement and social service.

The Vidhan Parishad, like Rajya Sabha, is a permanent House. It is never dissolved. The tenure of its members is six years. One-third of its members retire after every two years.

The retiring members are eligible for re-election. In case of a vacancy arising out of resignation or death by-election is held for the remaining period of such members' tenure.

Chairman : The presiding officer of the Vidhan Parishad (Legislative Council) is known as the Chairman, who is elected by its members. The business of Vidhan Parishad is conducted by the Chairman. He presides over the meetings and maintains discipline and order in the House. In addition to his vote as a member, he can exercise his casting vote in case of a tie. In his absence, Deputy Chairman presides over the House. He is also elected by the members of the Parishad from amongst themselves.

Sessions

The State Legislature meets at least twice a year and the interval between two sessions cannot be more than six months. The Governor summons and prorogues the sessions of State Legislature. He addresses the Vidhan Sabha or both Houses (if there is a bi-cameral Legislature) at the commencement of the first session after each general election and at the commencement of the first session of the year. This address reflects the policy statement of the government which is to be discussed in the Legislature, and the privileges and immunities of the members of the State Legislature are similar to that of members of Parliament.

The privileges of the members of State Assembly

The members of a state Assembly enjoy the same privileges and immunities as the members of the Parliament. They have freedom of speech in the House and they cannot be tried in any court in respect of anything said by them on the floor of the house. They are entitled to receive such salaries and allowances as re-fixed by the Legislature of the state.

12.4 Powers and Functions of State Legislature

The functions of the state legislature are legislative, financial, and relating to control over administration.

Legislative powers

The primary function of the State Legislature, like the Union Parliament, is law-making. The State Legislature is empowered to make laws on State List and Concurrent List. The Parliament and the Legislative Assemblies have the right to make the laws on the subjects mentioned in the Concurrent List. But in case of contradiction between the Union and State law on the subject, the law made by the Parliament shall prevail. Bills are of two types—(a) Ordinary bills and (b) Money bills. Ordinary bills can be introduced in either of the Houses (if the State Legislature is bicameral), but the Money bill is first introduced in the Vidhan Sabha. After the bill is passed by both Houses, it is sent to the Governor for his assent. The Governor can send back the bill for reconsideration. When this bill is passed again by the Legislature, the Governor has to give his assent. You have read when the Parliament is not in session and if there is a necessity of certain law, the President Issues Ordinance. Similarly, the Governor can issue an Ordinance on the State subjects when the legislature is not in session. The Ordinances have the force of law. The Ordinances issued are laid before the State Legislature when it reassembles. It ceases to be in operation after the expiry of six weeks unless rejected by the Legislature earlier. The Legislature passes a regular bill, to become a law, to replace the ordinance. This is usually done within six weeks after the reassembly of Legislature.

Financial powers

The State Legislature keeps control over the finances of the State. A money bill is introduced first only in the Vidhan Sabha. The money bill includes authorisation of the expenditure to be incurred by the government, imposition or abolition of taxes, borrowing, etc. The bill is introduced by a Minister on the recommendations of the Governor. The money bill cannot be introduced by a private member. The Speaker of the Vidhan Sabha certifies that a particular bill is a money bill. After a money bill is passed by the Vidhan Sabha, it is sent to the Vidhan Parishad. It has to return this bill within 14 days with, or without, its recommendations. The Vidhan Sabha may either accept or reject its recommendations. The bill is deemed to have been passed by both Houses. After this stage, the bill is sent to the Governor for his assent. The Governor cannot withhold his assent, as money bills are introduced with his prior approval.

Control over the Executive

The control of the legislative Assembly over the Council of Ministers is real and complete. The Minister is drawn from the majority party in the assembly over the Council of Minister is real and complete. The Ministers are drawn from the majority party in the Assembly. Constitution holds them collectively responsible to the legislature. The term responsibility implies that the Ministry can remain in the office during the pleasure of the Assembly. It can make its influence felt by accepting adjournment motion, censure motion, a cut in the Minister's salary, or by rejecting a Government Bill. By expressing its lack of confidence, it can obtain the resignation of the Ministry. The Council of Ministers has only one weapon to use against the Assembly. It can have recommended the dissolution of the House leading to fresh elections.

Electoral Powers

The elected members of the Vidhan Sabha are members of the Electoral College for the election of the President of India. Thus they have to say in the election of the President of the Republic. The members of the Vidhan Sabha also elect members of the Rajya Sabha from their respective States. One-third of members of the Vidhan Parishad (if it is in existence in the State) are also elected by the members of the Vidhan Sabha. In all these elections, members of the Vidhan Sabha (Assembly) cast their votes in accordance with a single transferable vote system.

12.5 Comparison of Two Houses of State Legislature

Legislative Assembly (Vidhan Sabha) like the Lok Sabha, occupies a dominant position.

Legislative Council (Vidhan Parishad) enjoys much fewer powers as compared to the powers of Vidhan Sabha even in relation to ordinary bills. The Rajya Sabha at the Centre enjoys equal powers in consideration of bills other than money bills, but Vidhan Parishad enjoys much lesser powers as compared to the Rajya Sabha. The relative position of the Vidhan Sabha and Vidhan Parishad is as under. In the case of the Parliament, if there is a disagreement between the two Houses over an ordinary bill, the President summons a joint sitting of both the Houses and if the bill is passed there by the majority of votes, the bill is taken as passed by both Houses of the Parliament. But this provision of joint sitting does not exist in the States. Although an ordinary bill can originate in either House of the State Legislature, yet both Houses have unequal powers. If a bill is passed in the Vidhan Sabha, it is transmitted to the Vidhan Parishad for consideration. When it is passed by Vidhan Parishad without any amendment, the bill is sent to the Governor for his assent. In case, the bill is (a) rejected by the Parishad or (b) more than three months elapsed without the bill being passed by the Parishad, or (c) bill is passed with an amendment to which the Vidhan Sabha does not agree, the Vidhan Sabha may pass the bill again in the same or the subsequent session. After that, the bill is again sent to the Vidhan Parishad. If the Vidhan Parishad does not return the bill within one month, the bill is deemed to have been passed by both Houses of the State Legislature and is sent to Governor for his assent. Thus the Vidhan Parishad can delay the bill for a maximum period of four months. On the other hand, if the bill is first passed by the Vidhan Parishad and rejected by the Vidhan Sabha, the bill is rejected and cannot become a law.

Like in the Lok Sabha, the money bill is introduced first in Vidhan Sabha. It cannot be initiated in the Vidhan Parishad. The Speaker of the Vidhan Sabha certifies whether a particular bill is a money bill. After the bill is passed in the Vidhan Sabha, it is sent to the Vidhan Parishad. The Vidhan Parishad gets 14 days to consider the bill. If the Parishad passes the bill, it is sent to the Governor for his assent. If the bill is not returned by the Vidhan Parishad within 14 days, it is deemed to have been passed by the Vidhan Parishad. If it suggests certain changes in the bill and sends to Vidhan Sabha, the Vidhan Sabha may accept or reject the changes suggested by the Parishad. The bill is then sent to the Governor for his assent who is bound to give his assent.

Only the elected members of the Vidhan Sabha are entitled to participate in the election of the President of India. The members of the Vidhan Sabha do so in their capacity as members of the Electoral College. But the members of the Vidhan Parishad are not entitled to vote in the election of the President. Members of the Rajya Sabha from each State are elected only by the members of the Assembly and not of the Council. The above discussion makes it clear that the Vidhan Parishad is a powerless and non influential House. It has become a secondary House. Thus many States prefer to have a unicameral Legislature. But the Vidhan Parishad is not superfluous. It serves as a check on hasty Legislation made by Vidhan Sabha by highlighting the short bills coming or defects of the bill. It lessens the burden of the Vidhan Sabha, as some bills are initiated in the Vidhan Parishad.

12.6 Conclusion

The State Legislature consists of the Governor, the Legislative Council (Vidhan Parishad) and the Legislative Assembly (Vidhan Sabha). In most states, there are unicameral Legislatures. These State Legislatures consist of the Governor and the Legislative Assembly. The Parliament is empowered to set up or abolish the Vidhan Parishad in a State. The Vidhan Parishad is partly indirectly elected and partly nominated. It is a permanent House like the Rajya Sabha. It is never dissolved. The tenure of its members is six years. One-third of members retire after every two years. The minimum age for the membership of the Vidhan Parishad is 30 years, it is 25 years for Vidhan Sabha. Members of the Vidhan Sabha are directly elected by the people of the State based on universal adult franchise. Its tenure is five years, but the Governor can dissolve it earlier on the advice of the Chief Minister. In case of constitutional breakdown, it may be dissolved by the President. The powers of the State Legislature are law-making, control over the finances, and the executive, electoral functions and constitutional functions

13.2 Introduction

Every citizen in India is related to and influenced by the governments functioning at both levels ,Union and the State. We are all guided by the laws made by state and union legislatures, administered by both the governments and get justice from courts at both levels. All the three branches of government, executive, legislature and judiciary exist and function at both levels. The executive is the branch of government responsible for the implementation of laws and policies adopted by the legislature. The executive is often involved in the framing of policy. India has adopted a Parliamentary form of Government, the structure and institutions of the state executive have been framed as that of union executive. The state executive consists of the Governor and the Council of Ministers with the Chief Minister as its head. Every executive action can be taken by the state government only in the name of the Governor. The rules for authenticating the executive decision taken by the state government are specified by the Governor.

13.3 The State Executive

The State executive consists of the Governor, the Chief Minister, and the Council of Ministers and Advocate-General of State.

13.4 The Governor

The Governor, as President, heads the state government. Article 153-167 in the Indian Constitution deal with the provisions related to the state governments of the country. Governor is a titular head or nominal executive head and also the constitutional head of the state. He/she forms an important part of the state executive where he acts as the chief executive head. Central Government nominates the Governor for each state. Normally, the Governor exercises all his/her powers on the advice of the Council of Ministers.

13.4.1 Appointment

There was widespread discussion in the Constituent Assembly over the mode of selection of the Governor. Several proposals were considered and rejected before a final decision was reached. It was finally decided that the Governor be appointed by the President for a period of five years but in conformity with the Principles of parliamentary discipline. In parliamentary democracy executive will be divided into two parts a) constitutional and nominal executive b) real or working executive. Here Governor will be constitutional executive and Council of Ministers with Chief Minister at its head will be real executive.

Unlike election of the President there is no direct or indirect election for the post of Governor. At President's discretion Chief Justice of High Court of the concerned state can also be appointed as the Governor on a temporary basis. Constitution of India lays down for the office the Governor of each State." However, one person can also function as a Governor of two or more states (Article 153). The President of India appoints the Governor of each state and while doing so he acts upon the advice of the Prime Minister.

Two important practices regarding the appointment of a Governor :

- The first practice is that the person being appointed as the Governor is mostly not a resident of the state for which he is appointed.
- Before appointing a Governor, the Union Government consults the concerned State Government particularly the Chief Minister of that State. It is now a respected rule. Along with these two healthy practices, an unhealthy practice has also developed. Sometimes 'defeated' or very old political leaders are appointed as Governors. Further, sometimes the unhealthy practice of wholesale transfers or removals of Governors takes place after a change of government at the Centre.

13.4.2 Term of office of the Governor (Art. 156)

- The Governor shall hold office during the pleasure of the President.
- The Governor may, by writing under his hand addressed to the President, resign his office.

- Subject to the foregoing provisions of this Article, a Governor shall hold office for a term of five years from the date on which he enters upon his office. Provided that a Governor shall, notwithstanding the expiration of his term, continue to hold office until his successor enters upon his office.

13.4.3 Qualifications for appointment as Governor (Art. 157)

No person shall be eligible for appointment as Governor unless he is a citizen of India and has completed the age of thirty-five years. He must not hold any office of profit. He can not be member of Union or the State legislatures during the tenure of his/her office.

13.4.4. Tenure

The Governor is appointed for five years. However, he holds office during the pleasure of the President. The President can remove or transfer him at any time.

13.4.5 Oath or Affirmation by the Governor

Every person appointed as Governor has to take the oath of his office. It has to be taken in the presence of the Chief Justice of the concerned State High Court.

13.4.6 Immunities

Parliament decides the emoluments, allowances and privileges of the Governor. This can not be diminished by parliament during his term of office. He is given immunity from any criminal proceedings . Arrest or imprisonment of the Governor can not take place. Only civil proceedings can be initiated for his personal acts that too after giving two months of prior notice.

13.5 Powers and Functions of the Governor

The Constitution has vested the executive power of a State in the Governor who is to exercise either directly or indirectly in accordance with the Constitution (Article 153) At the same time, it also provides for a "Council of Ministers with the Chief Minister at its head to aid and advise the Governor in the exercise of his functions(Article 163). He exercises executive, legislative, financial, judicial and discretionary powers.

13.5.1 Executive Powers

The governors of India have similar powers and functions at the state level as those of the president of India at central level. He appoints the Chief Minister and other Ministers on the advice of the Chief Minister. Ministers hold office during the pleasure of the Governor. The Governor can remove the Chief Minister of the province in case he feels that his government does not enjoy the confidence of the majority in the State Legislative Assembly or is not working according to the provisions of the Constitution. All major appointments (Advocate General, Chairman and Members of Public Service Commission, Vice-Chancellors) in the state are made by the Governor. But in doing so, the Governor depends upon the advice of the State Chief Minister and the State Council of Ministers. The Chief Minister of the State has to keep the Governor informed about the state administration and the decisions taken by his ministry. Governor can seek from the Chief Minister any information about the state administration. He may call upon the Chief Minister to place the decision of an individual Minister before the Council of Ministers for consideration. The President consults the Governor while appointing the judges of the State High Court. The Governor acts as the Chancellor of the state universities. Normally, the Governor exercises all his executive powers in accordance with the advice of the State Council of Ministers and the Chief Minister. The Ministers are responsible for all the acts of the Governor. But during a constitutional emergency in the state the Governor becomes a real executive head of the state uses all executive powers with the help of some advisors. All executive actions of the state are to be taken in the name of the Governor. Any decision of the Council of Ministers becomes operative as a Government order only when it is expressed in the Governor's name and authenticated (Article 166).

Governor is an essential part of the constitutional machinery, fulfilling an important purpose and rendering an essential service. Although he is appointed by the President, he is not a servant of the centre. He should act as an independent constitutional authority as the Head of the State and discharge his functions assigned to him under the Constitution.

13.5.2 Legislative Powers

The Governor is not a member of the state legislature but under Article 168 he is a part of it like the President who is a part of Parliament. The Governor can summon or prorogue the state legislature (Article 174). He can dissolve the State Legislative Assembly. The Governor addresses the members of the legislature and may send messages (Article 175, 176). All bills passed by the state legislature become laws only after the signatures of the Governor. Normally he is to perform these powers on the advice of the Chief Minister having confidence of the Vidhan Sabha. After a bill is passed by the State Legislature, it is placed before the Governor. In regard to non money bills Governor can assent to, withhold assent from, or reserve a bill for the consideration of the president. The Governor should follow constitutional propriety and should not veto a legislation. If a bill is returned by the Governor, making suggestions with a request for reconsideration and if legislature passes the bill again, with or without amendment he must give his assent. Under Article 202, the Governor shall in respect of every financial year cause to be laid before the House or Houses of the Legislature the budget or the Annual Financial Statement. He nominates 1/6 members of the Legislative Council from persons having distinguished careers in the field of science, art, literature, or social service, normally all these functions are performed by the Governor under the advice of the State Chief Minister.

The Governor inaugurates the legislature by addressing it after assembly elections and at the start of the first session each year. In extraordinary circumstances the Governor can use his discretionary powers. If he has the reason to believe that the Chief Minister and his Council of Ministers has lost the majority in the Bidhan Sabha the Governor can ask the Chief Minister to convene the meeting of the Bidhan Sabha on a stipulated date to prove his majority. It is expected that the Governor should use his power in a non partisan manner. But it appears from history that some Governors have failed to do so and thus faced criticisms. In 1984 the Governor of Sikkim played a very suspicious role. He did not allow Chief Minister Bhandari to summon Bidhan Sabha and to prove his majority in the State Assembly. In a similar way, the Andhra Pradesh Governor, Ramlal, dismissed the Telugu Desam ministry headed by N T Rama Rao and immediately administered the oath of office of Chief Minister to the former finance minister, N Bhaskara Rao. Thus the Governors of several states usurped the power of Bidhan Sabha in order to make and unmake the Government.

According to Article 213 Governor has the power to issue ordinances when the state's legislative assembly is not in session. The governor's ordinance-making power is related to the similar power of the president. (Article 123). However, there are the restrictions on the governor's power. The governor cannot issue ordinances without the president's instructions if:

- A bill with the same provisions would require the president's sanction to be introduced into the legislature
- The governor would have reserved a bill with the same provisions for the president's consideration

- An act with the same provisions would be invalid unless the President assented to it after it was reserved for his consideration.

An Ordinance promulgated under this article shall have the same force and effect as an Act of the Legislature of the State assented to by the Governor. Every ordinance proclaimed by the Governor shall be laid before the Legislative Assembly of the State, and shall cease to operate at the expiration of six weeks from the reassembly of the Legislature, or if before the expiration of that period a resolution disapproving it is passed by the Legislative Assembly. Under Article 213 such ordinance may be withdrawn by the Governor at any moment. Misuse of ordinance making powers of the Governor has been highlighted by the eminent judges, writers and scholars. The Bihar Governors proclaimed 256 ordinances during 1967-1981. The court remarked that it was a "subversion of the democratic process" and a "fraud on Constitution."

In regard to the dissolution of State Legislature normally according to the Constitution Governor should act in respect of advice of the Chief Minister though he is not bound to follow the such advice. In 1973 the Orissa Governor issued order for dissolution of Bidhan Sabha on the advice of the then Chief Minister Mrs. Nandini Satpathi without giving an opportunity to the opposition leader Biju Patnaik to form an alternative Government. However, Orissa High Court criticised the action of the Governor for his hasty decision.

All things taken together, the emphasis on the Governor's office seems to be on his role as an adviser. On the one hand, he is to act as a non partisan adviser to the Ministry. He has a right to be consulted, the right to encourage and the right to warn and the right to warn. On the other hand he is the agent of the President, his adviser in regard to matters of the state and the representative of the Union in the State.

13.5.3 Financial Powers

A money bill can be introduced in the state legislature only with the prior permission of the Governor. He orders that the annual budget be placed before the state legislature. The contingency fund of the state is at his disposal and he can order expenditure out of it to meet any unforeseen expenditure. The Governor causes the report of the Comptroller and Auditor- General relating to the accounts of the state to be placed before the State Legislature. In reality, these powers are also exercised by him under the advice of the Chief Minister and his State Council of Ministers.

13.5.4 Judicial Powers

The Governor of the state has some judicial powers. He can influence the appointments, postings and promotions of the district judges and other judicial officials. He has the power to grant pardon, reprieve or remission of punishment or to suspend, remit or commute the sentences of any person, convicted of any offense against any law. While appointing the Chief Justice and other judges of the State High Court, the President of India consults the Governor of the Concerned State.

13.5.5 Discretion Powers

In addition to these powers and functions as mentioned above, Governor has some discretionary powers. He can exercise these powers without the advise of his ministers. These powers can be discussed in the following way :

- At the time when President appoints the Governor of a state as the administrator of an adjoining Union Territory , the Governor shall exercise his functions independently.
- Special responsibilities have been conferred to some states . At the time of discharge of these responsibilities the Governor of a states is to consult his Council of Ministers but the final decision will be in individual judgement judgment and no court can question it. These special responsibilities are given to the Governors of the following states:
- The Governors of Assam, Meghalaya, Tripura and Mizoram have discretionary powers with regard to the administration of Tribal areas in the States.
- The Governor of Nagaland has been entrusted with the special responsibility in respect of violent activities of the hostile Nagas.
- The governors of Maharashtra and Gujrat have the special responsibilities for taking steps in the development of certain areas in their respective state.
- The Governor of Sikkim has a special responsibility for maintaining peace and for ensuring the social and economic advancement of different sections of the population of the state.

Further, though distinctly not mentioned in the Constitution ,Governor of a state can act according to his discretion at the time of confused political situation. These situations may arise in the circumstances:

- On the question of appointing a Chief Minister When no party commands majority support in the Legislative Assembly.
- Dismissing a ministry which is reluctant to resign even after losing majority support
- Dissolution of the Legislative Assembly on the advice of a defeated legislature.
- Preserving any bill passed by the state legislature for the consideration of the President.
- Reporting to the President under article 356 in regard to the breakdown of the constitutional machinery of the state.
- Permitting initiation of legal proceedings against the serving or ex Chief minister in connection with involvement in an alleged scandal or criminal act.
- Seeking instructions from the President before promulgating an ordinance dealing with some important matters.

However, according to political experts Governor at the time of using such discretionary powers should act with caution. Otherwise, he /she may face political controversy. It is to be noted that Governor is expected to look at problems of the state with a detached view and if a particular situation arises which demands the exercise of certain powers which he can use in his discretion no one can prevent him in doing so.

13.6 Governor's Role and Position in Practice

One of the major tension areas of the Indian constitution is the role of the Governor. Even in the Constituent Assembly a great debate took place among the members like T.T.Krishnamachari, K.M.Munshi as to what should be the role of a Governor in a parliamentary democracy having a federal structure. In 1955 Supreme Court declared in a case (Ramjawaya Vs. the State of Punjab) that "We have the same system of parliamentary executive as in England...". As per the norms of parliamentary democracy President at centre and Governor in a state are constitutional executive. Real executive power is vested in the hands of Council of Ministers. Governor exercises his powers on the advice of his council of ministers. He is just a titular head. But the problem is that the Governor has to play a dual role. On the one hand, he is the constitutional head of the state administration and on the other, he is the representative of the President or the central government in the state. This sometimes gives rise to conflict.

In pre-1967 era there was practically one party dominant system (Congress) both at the centre and the states. We do not find much controversy regarding the role of the Governor during that period. But a new situation developed after fourth general election in 1967 when non-congress governments came into power in a number of states. The office of the Governor became crucial in the sense that side by side playing the role of the constitutional head of the state administration, governor came to be looked upon as the chief agent of the central government. At present the situation is far more complicated with the coming of BJP led NDA government at the centre and state governments led by different parties. On 16th February, 2021 Kiran Bedi, the Lieutenant governor of Puducherry has been replaced. Telangana Governor, Tamilisai Soundararajan has been given the additional charge as the LG of Puducherry. There has been constant dissatisfaction between the Maharashtra state government and its Governor, Bhagat Singh Koshyari. In West Bengal friction between Governor and the state government has been a regular feature. Governors namely Jagdip Dhankar had a very strained relation with the state government.

The debate which mostly centers around Governor's role is the question as to what extent he can be considered as just a mere constitutional or nominal head of the state. According to some scholars, Governor is a really powerful ruler in the state. Constitution has clearly vested power in the hands of the Governor and he can exercise this power either directly or through the officers subordinate to him (Article 154(1)). Article 163 provides that there shall be a Council of Ministers with the Chief Minister at its head to aid and advise the Governor in the exercise of his functions except in so far as he is by or under this constitution required to exercise his functions or any of them in his discretion. It does not mean that governor is bound to accept the advice of his council of ministers. In fact the question whether any, and if so what advice was tendered by ministers to the Governor shall not be inquired into any court (Art 163(1)).

Again after 42nd constitutional amendment President is bound to act on the advice of his council of ministers. But this is not applicable for Governor. He is not bound to act on the advice of his council of ministers.

According to constitution, Governor has certain discretionary powers on the exercise of which he is not bound to consult his Council of Ministers. Article 163(2) of the constitution of India states that Governor's decision is final on whether to act in his discretion. This means that the validity of any action taken by the Governor cannot be questioned in any court of law.

The power of the Governor with regard to the appointment and dismissal of Chief Minister and his Council of Ministers is both limited as well as unlimited depending upon the nature of political situation. It is limited when a single party enjoys absolute majority in Vidhan Sabha. Then it is binding for the Governor to call its leader to form the government. But in case no party gets a clear majority Governor has virtually unlimited authority or options in a matter relating to the appointment of Chief Minister. In 1952 the then Governor of Madras invited Sri Rajagopalachaari to form the government. In 1984 Governor of Sikkim, Talwar Khan removed Narbahadur Bhandari and appointed B.B.Gurung as Chief Minister of Sikkim. In the same year Governor of Jammu and Kashmir, Jagmohan Reddy removed Faruq Abdullah and appointed Gulam Muhammad Shah in the post of Chief Minister.

So far as the tenure of the Council of Ministers is concerned Article 164(1) states that all ministers hold office during the pleasure of the Governor. Here also we find that in a situation where one single party enjoying absolute majority in Vidhan Sabha Governor has hardly any option to remove or dismiss the Chief Minister or his Council of Ministers. But there are ample evidences where it has been found that Governor has dismissed the Council of Ministers on the ground that it has lost majority in the house and there is constitutional crisis in the state. Administration cannot be run according to the constitutional norms . Here Governor can send report to the President or central government and recommend for the imposition of President's rule in the state. It is on the basis of report of the Governor President may impose state emergency (Article 356). While sending report to the President Governor is not supposed to consult Chief Minister. This particular article has been widely criticised by the political leaders and constitutional experts. But all the parties who have come to power at the centre, has used (misused) this power. In post independence period President's rule has been imposed for more than 134 times.

Constitution has assigned some specific discretionary powers to the Governor. But outside those specific areas , Governor can exercise his discretion in several other fields starting from the appointment and removal of Chief Minister, dissolution of Vidhan Sabha, withholding assent to a bill passed by the state legislature, sending report to the President for the imposition of President's rule etc.

From the above discussion it becomes clear that Governor is not just a titular head of the state, but something more than that. He can play a crucial role in state administration depending on the prevailing political situation.

But it has been established in all constitutional provisions, conventions and judicial decisions that in a parliamentary democracy Governor is supposed to act as a constitutional head. Even in our Constituent Assembly founding fathers had expressed the same opinion. In a parliamentary democracy it is the Council of Ministers who would be the real executive. And on the advice of his council of ministers Governor will exercise his powers and functions. Parliamentary democracy demands that real power should be vested in the hands of the elected representatives of the people. Ministers are elected by the people. Governor, on the other hand, is just nominated by the President. He is not elected. This clearly expresses the intention of the constitution makers. Moreover, it is the Council of Ministers who is responsible and accountable to the state legislature. Governor is in no way responsible to the state Legislative Assembly. There cannot be any power without responsibility.

It is true that constitution has bestowed certain discretionary powers in the hands of the Governor. But here also he cannot exercise such powers as per his own wish without consulting his Chief Minister. Arbitrary use of such powers cannot go with the democratic spirit of the constitution. Dr. Ambedkar also gave warning against such tendency where he differentiated between the duties and functions of Governor. No special significance is attached to his 'discretionary powers'. In a number of judgements Court has repeatedly insisted on the constitutional role of the Governor and that he should exercise his powers on the advice of his Council of Ministers. In cases like Sunilkumar Bose and others Vs. Chief Secretary to the Government of West Bengal (1950), Ram J. Kapoor Vs. the State of Punjab (1955) court had clearly gave its verdict in favour of the constitutional role of the Governor. In 1968 All India Speakers Conference reiterated the same opinion.

Barring a few instances, in the last seven decades of the constitutional history of India Governors have mostly played a constitutional role. Sarojini Naidu described Governor as "a bird in a golden cage". In fact, the issue of the role of the Governor in an Indian state is highly controversial. Constitutional provisions are also not clear. There is no unanimous opinion. When there is one party both at the centre as well as in State Governor has not much to do. Here Chief Minister is all powerful. But when there are two different political parties, situation gets difficult. Governor depends on the centre. He consults Prime Minister and home minister regularly. There is friction between the Governor and Chief Minister. Sometimes it appears that our founding fathers intentionally created such a post to keep control over the state administration.

13.7 Conclusion.

The office of the Governor has been created with a view to maintain federal integrity, to maintain a balance and coordination between the state and the centre. Again it becomes the duty of the Governor to implement the policies of the union properly. But practically speaking, since seventies most Governors have been acting as the agent of the Central Government rather than as watchdog of the constitution. Governors have failed to set up a standard behaviour. Under more or less similar constitutional situations they have behaved differently. As a result, the sanctity of the office of the Governor as well as the constitution has seriously been jeopardized by their activities. Particularly, the misuse of power by the Governor at the behest of the party in power at the centre has become alarming. The partisan interest and political motives have come to play a vital role in the misuse of powers by the Governor.

13.8 Summing Up

- The Governor is the Constitutional head of a state.
 - President appoints a Governor by a warrant under his hand and seal for a period of five years.
 - Governor performs executive, legislative, financial, judicial and discretionary functions.
 - Constitution of India confers some special powers upon the Governor .
 - In some extraordinary circumstances Governor can act according to his/her discretion.
 - In a real sense Governor acts as an agent or representative of the Centre.

14.1 Objective

This unit deals with the state executive. After studying this unit, the learner will be able to - Understand the role of the state executive in the state administration.

- Explain the powers, functions and the role of the Governor.
- Explain the functions and the role of the Chief Minister of a state.
- Understand the functions of the state Council of Ministers.
- Discuss the relation between the Chief Minister and the Council of Ministers.

14.2 Introduction

The legislature, executive and judiciary are the three organs of government. Together, they perform the functions of the government, maintain law and order and look after the welfare of the people. The Constitution ensures that they work in coordination with each other and maintain a balance among themselves. In a parliamentary system, the executive and the legislature are interdependent : the legislature controls the executive, and, in turn, is controlled by the executive. In this unit, we shall discuss the composition, structure and function of the executive organ of the state government. India is a federation having governments at two levels : state level and union or central level.

14.3 The State Executive

14.4 The Chief Minister

Each State has a Council of Ministers to aid and advise the Governor in the exercise of his functions. Chief Minister is the head of the government in the State. The Council of Ministers with the Chief Minister as its head exercises real authority at the State level.

Qualifications : The Constitution does not prescribe any qualifications for the office of the Chief Minister. Although it is expected that he/she must be a member of the legislative assembly. It may be noted that there is no constitutional bar to the appointment of the outsider of a non-member of the assembly Chief Minister. On several occasions, a person has been appointed as Chief Minister even though they were not members of the state legislature. There have been instances where the leaders defected at the poll were appointed as a Chief Minister. However, such person on appointment as Chief Minister must become the members of the state legislature within six months, otherwise, they cease to be Chief Ministers.

Tenure : Under normal circumstances, the term of the Chief Minister is five years. The term of the Chief Minister is automatically extended, if, the life of the State legislature is extended. The term of Chief Minister can be cut short by his/her resignation, death, or removal from party leadership.

Appointment of Chief Minister

The Chief Minister of a state is appointed by the Governor of that state. The leader of the political party/coalition that gets the majority of the seats of the Legislative assembly, is appointed as the Chief Minister of the state. In case, no party gets a majority, then the Governor uses his discretion and appoints a Chief Minister.

14.5 Powers and Functions of the Chief Minister

The Chief Minister plays an important role in the administration of the State. We can discuss its functions as follows :

Head of the Council of Ministers

The Chief Minister is the head of the Council of Ministers. The Ministers are appointed by the Governor on the advice of the Chief Minister and he also has a free hand in making a list of his colleagues. The Chief Minister can reconstruct his Ministry as and when the need arises.

He/she further has the right to demand the resignation of any of the Ministers under him. The Chief Minister also controls the agenda for the Cabinet meetings. Furthermore, he supervises and coordinates the policies of several Ministers and Departments.

Chief Minister presides over the Cabinet meetings. He/she coordinates the functioning of different ministries. He/she guides the functioning of the Cabinet.

Aids and Advises the Governor

- The Constitution provides that the Chief Minister shall communicate to the Governor all decisions of the Council of Ministers relating to the administration and the affairs of the State and proposals for legislation.
- The Chief Minister is the sole link of communication between the Cabinet and the Governor. The Governor has the right to be informed by the Chief Minister about the decisions taken by the Council of Ministers.
- He/she also needs to furnish any information relating to the administration of the State as the Governor may call for.
- If the Governor so requires, the Chief Minister submits for consideration of the Council of Ministers any matter on which a decision has been taken by a Minister but which has not been considered by the Cabinet.

Leader of the House

- a) Being the leader of the house, he gets to make all the announcements concerning the new or amended policies. Maintaining discipline of the Members of his/her party also comes under his hat. Adding to this, the Chief Minister can appoint a whip whose directive must be obeyed by all the legislators.

- b) Chief Minister plays a key role in framing the laws and policies of the State Government.
- c) Bills are introduced by the Ministers in the State legislature with his/her approval.
- d) He/she is the chief spokesman of the policies of his government both inside and outside the State Legislature. All the policies are announced by him/her on the floor of the house.
- e) He/she recommends the dissolution of the legislative assembly to the Governor.
- f) He/she advises the Governor regarding summoning, proroguing the sessions of the State Legislative Assembly from time to time.

Other Functions

- At the ground level, he is the authority to be in contact with the people regularly and knows about their problems to bring about policies on the floor of the assembly.
- He/she acts as the chairman of the State Planning Commission.
- He/she is the vice-chairman of the concerned zonal council in rotation for a period of one year.
- During the crisis in the state, he/she acts as the crisis manager in the state.

The above functions show that the real authority is vested with the Council of Ministers headed by the Chief Minister. The Council of Ministers is the real executive in the State. The position of the State Council of Ministers largely depends upon the strength of the ruling party in the State Assembly and the personality of the Chief Minister. The position of the Chief Minister is more powerful when his party is in power in the Centre as well. As long as the Chief Minister and his Council of Ministers enjoy the confidence of a majority in the Legislative Assembly, he exercises the real executive power in the State.

14.6 The State Council of Ministers

According to article 163(1) There shall be a Council of Ministers with the Chief Minister at the head to aid and advise the Governor in the exercise of his functions, except in so far as he is by or under this Constitution required to exercise his functions or any of them in his discretion.

The Governor appoints the Chief Minister and other Ministers on the advice of the Chief Minister. The Ministers included in the Council of Ministers must belong to either House of the State legislature. A person who is not a member of the State legislature may be appointed a Minister, but he/she ceases to hold office if he/she is not elected to the State legislature within six months of his appointment. The portfolios to the members of the Council of Ministers are allocated by the Governor on the advice of the Chief Minister. Chief Minister is the head of the Council of Ministers of his State. The constitutional position of the Chief Minister is more or less similar to that of the Prime Minister.

The Council of Ministers constitutes the real executive in the State. Although the administration is carried on in the name of the Governor, actual decisions are normally made by Ministers. Under ordinary circumstances, the Governor has to follow their advice. The Chief Minister of a State has to communicate to the Governor regarding administration and the affairs of the State. Thus, in theory, the Governor may dismiss a Minister if he so likes, but because of the collective responsibility of the Council of Ministers to the State Legislative Assembly, he /she is not likely to use this power in actual practice.

The Constitution defines the position of the Council of Ministers about the State Legislature by providing that the Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the Legislative Assembly of the State. This means that they can remain in office only if they enjoy the support of a majority of members of the State Legislative Assembly. The only constitutional requirement is that in the States of Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, and Orissa the Council of Ministers must have a Minister in charge of Tribal welfare and the same Minister may also be entrusted with the welfare of the Scheduled Castes and Backward Classes in the State.

14.6.1 Powers and functions of the State Council of Ministers :

The Council of Ministers performs the following functions :

Legislative functions : Most of the bills passed by the legislature are government bills, prepared by the ministries. They are introduced, explained and defended in the State Legislature by the Ministers. The Cabinet prepares the Governor's Address in which it sets forth its legislative programme at the commencement of the first session of the Legislature each year. For weeks at a stretch, the Cabinet's proposals take over every working moment of the House. The Cabinet makes sure that all government bills will be translated into laws.

Executive functions : The executive power is to be exercised in such a way as to ensure compliance with state laws. The Constitution empowers the Governor to make -rules for the more convenient transaction of the business of the Government. All such rules are made on the advice of the Council of Ministers.

Formulation of the Policies : The Ministers formulate the policies of the government. The Cabinet takes decisions on all major problems—public health, relief to the disabled and unemployed, prevention of plant diseases, water storage, land tenures and production, supply and distribution of goods. When it has formulated a policy, the appropriate department carries it out.

Financial Functions : The State budget containing the estimates of income and expenditure for the ensuing year is placed by the Finance Minister before the State Legislature. The Legislature cannot take the initiative in the case of a Money Bill. Such a Bill must be recommended by the Governor and can be introduced only by a Minister. The initiative in financial matters lies with the Executive.

Functions about the execution of Union laws : The Union Government is empowered to give directions to the State-governments in certain matters. The States should exercise their executive power to ensure compliance with the laws made by Parliament. They should not do anything which would hamper the executive power of the Union. Railways, for instance, is a Union subject, but police, including railway police, is a State Subject. The Union Government can give directions to the State Executive as to the measures to be taken for the protection of railways within the State.

Appointment-related functions : The Governor has the power to appoint the Advocate-General and the Members of the State Public Service Commission. The Vice-Chancellors of the State Universities and members of various Boards and Commissions are all appointed by the Governor. The Governor cannot make these appointments at his will. He must exercise these functions on the advice of his Ministers.

14.7 Conclusion

The Chief Minister is the real head of the Government at the State level. The Governor appoints the Chief Minister. The person who commands the support of a majority in the State Legislative Assembly is appointed as the Chief Minister by the Governor. Other Ministers are appointed by the Governor on the advice of the Chief Minister. The Chief Minister presides over the Cabinet meetings. He/she lays down the policies of the State Government. He/she is the sole link between his Ministers and the Governor. He/she coordinates the functioning of different ministries. During normal times, the Governor exercises his/her powers on the advice of the Chief Minister but when there is a breakdown of constitutional machinery in the State, the Governor sends a report to the President whenever he is satisfied that a situation has arisen in which the Government of the State cannot be carried on in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution and thereby inviting the President to impose President's rule in the concerned State.

14.8 Summing up

- In a parliamentary system, the executive and the legislature are interdependent.
- The executive is the branch of government responsible for the implementation of laws and policies adopted by the legislature.
- The Governor, like the President who heads the country, heads the state government. This is in accordance Article 153-167.
- Governor is a titular head or nominal executive and is regarded as mere constitutional head of the state.

- Each State has a Council of Ministers to aid and advice the Governor in the exercise of his functions.
- Chief Minister is the head of the government in the State.
- According to article 163(1) there shall be a Council of Ministers with the Chief Minister at the head to aid and advise the Governor.
- The Council of Ministers constitutes the real executive in the State.
- The Constitution defines the position of the Council of Ministers about the State Legislature by providing that the Council of Ministers is collectively responsible to the Legislative Assembly of the State.

15.1 Objective

This unit deals with the objectives and the procedure of the amendment of the Indian Constitution. After studying this unit the learner will be able to—

- Understand the objectives of the amendment of the Indian constitution
- Explain the procedure of the amendment of the Indian constitution.
- Identify the special features of the amendment of the Indian constitution.
- Understand the needs for amendment of the constitution.
- Explain the differences between the rigid and flexible constitution.

15.2 Introduction

A Constitution is the supreme law of a country. In contrast to ordinary legislation, a Constitution embodies the fundamental choices made by a country and its people that establish the basis for political and social, and economic life. Constitutions establish the system of government, distribute and constrain power, protect the rights of citizens and deal with various additional issues of identity or substantive policy that are considered foundational in the specific context of a particular country. But the question is whether it should be rigid or flexible. Generally, constitutions are classified as 'flexible' or 'rigid' depending upon the process through which they can be amended. Prof. A.V. Dicey defines two types of constitutions—the flexible as 'one under which every law of every description can legally be changed with the same ease and in the same manner by the same body, and the rigid constitutions as 'one under which certain laws generally known as constitutional or fundamental laws, cannot be changed in the same manner as ordinary laws 'The United Kingdom having an unwritten constitution, is the best example of an extremely flexible constitution. As opposed to the U.K. system, the constitutional amendment has an important place under a written constitution like that of the U.S.A. Its importance increases where the system is federal. In most of the written constitutions, the power to amend the constitutions is either vested in a body other than the ordinary legislature or it is vested in the ordinary legislature, subject to a special procedure. In a federal system, additional safeguards like the involvement of legislatures at the state level, are also provided to ensure that the federal setup does not get altered only at the will of the federal legislature. In the case of the Indian Constitution, neither purely flexible India

15.3 Flexibility of the Constitution

Explaining why it was necessary to introduce an element of flexibility in the Constitution, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru observed in the Constituent Assembly : "While we want this Constitution to be as solid and as permanent a structure as we can make it, nevertheless there is no permanence in Constitutions. There should be certain flexibility. If you make anything rigid and permanent, you stop a nation's growth, the growth of a living, vital, organic people. Therefore, it has to be flexible.... In any event, we should not make a Constitution, such as some other great countries have, which are so rigid that they do not and cannot be adapted easily to changing conditions. Today especially, when the world is in turmoil and we are passing through a very swift period of transition, what we may do today may not be wholly applicable tomorrow. Therefore, while we make a Constitution which is sound and as basic as we can, it should also be flexible....”

15.4 Constituent Assembly and the Constitutional Amendment Procedure in India

The makers of the Indian Constitution were neither in favour of the traditional theory of federalism, which entrusts the task of a constitutional amendment to a body other than the legislature nor in prescribing a rigid special procedure for such amendments. Similarly, they never wanted to have an arrangement like the British set-up where the Parliament is supreme and can do everything humanly possible. Adopting the combination of the ‘theory of fundamental law’, which underlies the written Constitution of the United States with the ‘theory of parliamentary sovereignty as existing in the United Kingdom, the Constitution of India vests constituent power upon the Parliament subject to the special procedure laid down therein. During the discussion in the Constituent Assembly on this aspect, some of the members were in favour of adopting an easier mode of amending procedure for the initial five to ten years.

Dr. P.S. Deshmukh was of the view that the amendment of the Constitution should be made easier as there were contradictory provisions in some places which would be more and more apparent when the provisions are interpreted. If the amendment to the Constitution was not made easy, the whole administration would suffer. Shri Brajeshwar Prasad was also in favour of a flexible Constitution to make it survive the test of time.

On the other hand, Shri H.V. Kamath was in favour of providing procedural safeguards to avoid the possibility of a hasty amendment to the Constitution. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, speaking in the Constituent Assembly on 4th. November 1948, made certain observations in connection with the provisions relating to the amendment of the Constitution. To him,

It is said that the provisions contained in the Draft make amendment difficult. It is proposed that the Constitution should be amendable by a simple majority at least for some years. The argument is subtle and ingenious. It is said that this Constituent Assembly is not elected on adult suffrage while the future Parliament will be elected on adult suffrage and yet the former has been given the right to pass the Constitution by a simple majority while the latter has been denied the same right. It is walked as one of the absurdities of the Draft Constitution.

I must repudiate the charge because it is without foundation. To know how simple are the provisions of the Draft Constitution in respect of amending the Constitution one has only to study the provisions for amendment contained in the American and Australian Constitutions. Compared to them those contained in the Draft Constitution will be found to be the simplest. The Draft Constitution has eliminated the elaborate and difficult procedures such as a decision by a convention or a referendum.... It is only for amendments of specific matters—and they are only a few—that the ratification of the State Legislatures is required. All other Articles of the Constitution are left to be amended by Parliament. The only limitation is that it shall be done by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the members of each House present and voting and a majority of the total membership of each House. It is difficult to conceive a simpler method of amending the Constitution.

Categories of Constitutional Amendments in India

We have had the benefit of a galaxy of visionaries who were definitive about the path we should chart out for ourselves and were fully conscious of the enormity of the task involved in drafting the Constitution for a newborn nation. It is due to their sagacity and statesmanship that special provisions for ‘amendment to the Constitution’ were incorporated in the Constitution. These provisions enabled Parliament to amend periodically the Constitution to meet the changing needs of the time. In our Constitution, Parliament has been empowered to amend any provision in compliance with the procedure laid down in article 368. Besides procedural limitations under article 368, the Supreme Court has, by judicial innovation, enunciated the ‘Basic Structure Doctrine’, i.e., if a Constitution amendment seeks to alter, take away or destroy the basic structure or framework of the Constitution, the Court has the power to declare it void or ultra vires. The basic features are not finite and have been spelled out in different rulings, with the Supreme Court itself asserting that the claim of any particular feature of the Constitution to be a basic feature would be determined by the Court in each case that comes before it.

The Constitution of India provides for a distinctive amending process as compared to the leading Constitutions of the world. It may be described as partly flexible and partly rigid. The Constitution of India provides for a variety in the amending process—a feature which has been commended by Prof. K.C. Wheare for the reason that uniformity in the amending process imposes “quite unnecessary restrictions” upon the amendment of parts of a Constitution.

The Constitution of India provides for three categories of amendments namely—

First, those that can be affected by Parliament by a simple majority such as that required for the passing of any ordinary law the amendments contemplated in articles 4, 169, para 7(2) of Schedule V and para 21(2) of Schedule VI fall within this category and are specifically excluded from the purview of article 368 which is the specific provision in the Constitution dealing with the power and the procedure for the amendment of the Constitution.

Second, those amendments that can be effected by Parliament by a prescribed ‘special majority; and Third, those that require, in addition to such ‘special majority’, ratification by at least one-half of the State Legislatures.

The last two categories being governed by article 368. In this connection, it may also be mentioned that there are, as pointed out by Dr. Ambedkar, “innumerable articles in the Constitution” which leave the matter subject to the law made by Parliament. For example, under article 11, Parliament may make any provision relating to citizenship notwithstanding anything in articles 5 to 10. Thus, bypassing ordinary laws, Parliament may, in effect, provide, modify or annul the operation of certain provisions of the Constitution without actually amending them within the meaning of article 368. Since such laws do not make any change whatsoever in the letter of the Constitution, they cannot be regarded as amendments of the Constitution nor categorised as such.

15.5 Amendment to the Constitution of India : Procedure

In so far as the constituent power to make formal amendments is concerned, it is article 368 of the Constitution of India which empowers Parliament to amend the Constitution by way of addition, variation, or repeal of any provision according to the procedure laid down therein, which is different from the procedure for ordinary legislation. Article 368, which has been amended by the Constitution (Twenty-fourth Amendment), Act, 1971 and the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976, reads as follows :

368 : Power of Parliament to amend the Constitution and Procedure, therefore :

- (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution, Parliament may in the exercise of its constituent power amend by way of addition, variation or repeal any provision of this Constitution in accordance with the procedure laid down in this article.
- (2) An amendment of this Constitution may be initiated only by the introduction of a Bill for the purpose in either House of Parliament, and when the Bill is passed in each House by a majority of the total membership of that House and by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the members of that House present and voting, it shall be presented to the President who shall give his assent to the Bill and thereupon the Constitution shall stand amended in accordance with the terms of the Bill :

Provided that if such amendment seeks to make any change in : (a) article 54, article 55, article 73, article 162 or article 241, or (b) Chapter IV of Part V, Chapter V of Part VI, or Chapter I of Part XI, or (c) any of the lists in the Seventh Schedule, or (d) The representation of States in Parliament, or (e) the provisions of this article, the amendment shall also require to be ratified by the Legislatures of not less than one-half of the States... by resolutions to that effect passed by those Legislatures before the Bill making provision for such amendment is presented to the President for assent.

- (3) Nothing in article 13 shall apply to the amendment made under this article.
- (4) No amendment of this Constitution (including the provisions of Part III) made or purporting to have been made under this article [whether before or after the commencement of section 55 of the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976] shall be called in question in any court on any ground.

- (5) For the removal of doubts, it is hereby declared that there shall be no limitation whatever on the constituent power of Parliament to amend by way of addition, variation, or repeal the provisions of this Constitution under this article.

An analysis of the procedure prescribed by article 368 for amendment of the Constitution shows that :

- (i) An amendment can be initiated only by the introduction of a Bill in either House of Parliament;
- (ii) The Bill so initiated must be passed in each House by a majority of the total membership of that House and by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the members of that House present and voting. There is no provision for a joint sitting in case of disagreement between the two Houses;
- (iii) When the Bill is so passed, it must be presented to the President who shall give his assent to the Bill;
- (iv) Where the amendment seeks to make any change in any of the provisions mentioned in the proviso to article 368, it must be ratified by the Legislatures of not less than one-half of the States;
- (v) Such ratification is to be by resolution passed by the State Legislatures;
- (vi) No specific time limit for the ratification of an amending Bill by the State Legislatures is laid down; the resolutions ratifying the proposed amendment should, however, be passed before the amending Bill is presented to the President for his assent;
- (vii) The Constitution can be amended:
 - a) Only by Parliament; and
 - b) In the manner provided. Any attempt to amend the Constitution by a Legislature other than Parliament and in a manner different from that provided for will be void and inoperative.

Whether the entire Constitution Amendment is void for want of ratification or only an amended provision required to be ratified under clause (2) of Article 368, is a very significant point. In a case as decided in 1992, this issue was debated before the Supreme Court and is now popularly known as the Anti-Defection case, in which the constitutional validity of the Tenth Schedule of the Constitution was inserted by the Constitution (Fifty-second Amendment) Act, 1985 was challenged. In this case, the decisions of the Speakers/Chairmen on disqualification, which had been challenged in different High Courts through different petitions, were heard by a five-member Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court. The Constitution Bench in its majority judgment upheld the validity of the Tenth Schedule but declared Paragraph 7 of the Schedule invalid because it was not ratified by the required number of the Legislatures of the States as it brought about in terms and effect, a change in articles 136, 226 and 227 of the Constitution. While doing so, the majority treated Paragraph 7 as a severable part of the rest of the Schedule. However, the minority of the Judges held that the entire Constitution Amendment Act is invalid for want of ratification.

15.6 Constitutional Amendment : Some Important Cases

Article 368 is not a “complete code” in respect of the legislative procedure to be followed at various stages. There are gaps in the procedure as to how and after what notice a Bill is to be introduced, how it is to be passed by each House and how the President’s assent is to be obtained. This point was decided by the Supreme Court in Shankari Prasad’s case. Shankari Prasad Singh Deo vs. Union of India, (1951) Hence, barring the requirements of special majority, ratification by the State Legislatures in certain cases, and the mandatory assent by the President, a Bill for amending the Constitution is dealt with the Parliament following the same legislative process as applicable to an ordinary piece of legislation. L.C. Golak Nath vs. State of Punjab (1967) the Court held that an amendment of the Constitution is a legislative process.

A Constitution amendment under article 368 is “law” within the meaning of article 13 of the Constitution and therefore if a Constitution amendment “takes away or abridges” a Fundamental Right conferred by Part III, it is void. The Court was also of the opinion that Fundamental Rights included in Part III of the Constitution are given a transcendental position under the Constitution and are kept beyond the reach of Parliament. The incapacity of Parliament to modify, restrict or impair Fundamental Freedoms in Part III arises from the scheme of the Constitution and the nature of the freedoms. In His Holiness Kesavananda Bharati Sripadagalvaru vs. State of Kerala (1971), the Supreme Court reviewed the decision in the Golak Nath's case and went into the validity of the 24th, 25th, 26th and 29th Constitution Amendments. The case was heard by the largest ever Constitution Bench of 13 Judges. The Bench gave eleven judgments, which agreed on some points and differed on others. The Court held that the expression 'amendment' of this Constitution in article 368 means any addition or change in any of the provisions of the Constitution within the broad contours of the Preamble and the Constitution to carry out the objectives in the Preamble and the Directive Principles of State Policy. Applied to Fundamental Rights, it would be that while Fundamental Rights cannot be abrogated, a reasonable abridgment of Fundamental Rights could be effected in the public interest. The true position is that every provision of the Constitution can be amended provided the basic foundation and structure of the Constitution remain the same. The theory of the basic structure of the Constitution was reaffirmed and applied by the Supreme Court in Smt. Indira Nehru Gandhi vs. Raj Narain (1975) case and certain amendments to the Constitution were held void. Subsequently, on the basis of the Court's view in Kesavananda Bharati's case, upholding the concept of the basic structure, the Supreme Court in Minerva Mills Ltd. vs. Union of India (1980) declared section 55 of the Constitution (Forty-second Amendment) Act, 1976 as unconstitutional and void.

The power and procedure for the constitutional amendment in India have some special points of interest :

- (i) There is no separate constituent body for the purposes of amendment of the Constitution; constituent power also being vested in the Legislature.
- (ii) Although Parliament must preserve the basic framework of the Constitution, there is no other limitation placed upon the amending power, that is to say, there is no provision of the Constitution that cannot be amended.
- (iii) The role of the States in the Constitution amendment is limited. The State Legislatures cannot initiate any Bill or proposal for amendment of the Constitution. They are associated in the process of the Constitution amendment by the ratification procedure laid down in article 368 in case the amendment seeks to make any change in any of the provisions mentioned in the proviso to Article 368. Besides, all that is open to them is

- (1) to initiate the process for creating or abolishing Legislative Councils in their respective Legislatures and
- (2) to give their views on a proposed Parliamentary Bill seeking to affect the area, boundaries or name of any State or States which has been referred to them under the proviso to article 3 a reference which does not fetter the power of Parliament to make any further amendments of the Bill.

15.8 Conclusion

Although constitutional amendments require the support of a two-thirds majority in both houses of Parliament (with some amendments requiring ratification by a majority of state legislatures), the Indian Constitution is the most amended national constitution in the world. The Constitution spells out governmental powers with so much detail that many matters addressed by statute in other democracies must be addressed via constitutional amendment in India. As a result, the Constitution is amended roughly twice a year.

15.9 Summing up

- Generally, Constitutions are classified as ‘flexible’ or ‘rigid’ depending upon the process through which they can be amended.
- The United Kingdom has an unwritten Constitution, which is the best example of an extremely flexible Constitution.
- In most of the written Constitutions, the power to amend the Constitutions is either vested in a body other than the ordinary legislature or it is vested in the ordinary legislature, subject to a special procedure.
- The Constitution of India provides for a distinctive amending process as compared to the leading Constitutions of the world.
- The Parliament has been empowered to amend any provision in compliance with the procedure laid down in article 368.
- The Constitution of India provides for three categories of amendments
- Besides procedural limitations under article 368, the Supreme Court has, by judicial innovation, enunciated the ‘Basic Structure’ doctrine.
