TH

Partitioned Lands, Histories, and Memories

This paper will provide a historiographical survey of the developments in Partition Studies. It will further attempt to critique some of the recent developments as the field has greatly expanded. At the heart of this development and its discussion is the use of Oral History, which presents an 'authentic' testimonial by first, second and now third generation from those who experienced the migration, mayhem and murder accompanying the birth of India and Pakistan. In doing so, I will explore the role of power and new technologies in the new Partition historiography.
